F

F. The sixth letter of the alphabet. A fighter or maker of frays, if he had no ears, and a felon on being admitted to clergy, was to be branded in the cheek with this letter. Cowell; Jacob. Those who had been guilty of falsity were to be so marked. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. L. 392.

F. O. B. Free on board. A term frequently inserted in contracts for the sale of goods to be conveyed by ship, signifying that the buyer will be responsible for the cost of shipment. In London, when goods are so sold, the buyer is considered as the shipper and the goods are shipped at his risk; 3 Hurlst. & N. 484; 4 id. 822; 29 L. J. C. P. 213; Knapp Electrical Works v. Wire Co., 157 Ill. 456, 42 N. E. 147.

Its use extends to all carriers.

The ordinary effect is to pass title on delivery to the carrier; Hoffman v. Gosline, 172 Fed. 113, 96 C. C. A. 318; Murphy v. Lumber Co., 125 Wis. 363, 103 N. W. 1113; the railroad is the buyer's agent; Blakeslee Mfg. Co. v. Hilton, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 184. Where machinery is sold f. o. b. cars at place of manufacture, title passes on delivery to the railroad; Dentzel v. Island Park Ass'n, 229 Pa. 403, 78 Atl. 935, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 54. Otherwise when f. o. b. at destination; Havens v. Fuel Co., 41 Neb. 153, 59 N. W. 681.

See FRAIS JUSQU'À BORD.

FABRIC LANDS. In English Law. Lands given for the repair, rebuilding, or maintenance of cathedrals or other churches.

It was the custom, says Cowell, for almost every one to give by will more or less to the fabric of the cathedral or parish church where he lived. These lands so given were called fabric lands, because given ad fabricam ecclesiæ reparandam (for repairing the fabric of the church). Called by the Saxons timber-lands. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

FABRICARE (Lat.). To make. Used in an indictment for forging a bill of lading; 1 Salk. 341.

FABRICATE. To invent; to devise falsely. Invent is sometimes used in a bad sense, but fabricate never in any other. To fabricate a story implies that it is so contrary to probability as to require the skill of a workman to induce belief in it. Crabbe, Syn. The word implies fraud or falsehood; a false or fraudulent concoction, knowing it to be wrong. L. R. 10 Q. B. 162.

FABULA. In old European law, a contract or covenant. Also, in the laws of the Lombards and Visigoths, a nuptial contract; a will. Burrill.

FACE. The outward appearance or aspect of a thing.

The words of a written paper in their apparent or obvious meaning, as, the face of a note, bill, bond, check, draft, judgment, record, or contract, which titles see. The face of a judgment is the sum for which it was rendered, exclusive of interest. Osgood v. Bringolf, 32 Ia. 265.

FACIAS (Lat. facere, to make, to do). That you cause. Occurring in the phrases scire facias (that you cause to know), fieri facias (that you cause to be made), etc. Used also in the phrases Do ut facias (I give, that you may do), Facio ut facias (I do that you may do), two of the four divisions of considerations made by Blackstone, 2 Com. 444.

FACILITIES. A name formerly given to certain notes of some of the banks in the state of Connecticut, which were made payable in two years after the close of the war of 1812. President, etc., of Springfield Bank v. Merrick, 14 Mass. 322.

As to facilities in transportation, see INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

FACIO UT DES (Lat. I do that you may give). An expression applied in the civil law to the consideration of that species of contract by which a person agrees to perform anything for a price either specifically mentioned or left to the determination of the law to set a value on it; as, when a servant hires himself to his master for certain wages or an agreed sum of money. 2 Bla. Com. 445. See CONSIDERATION.

FACIO UT FACIAS (Lat. I do that you may do). An expression used in the civil law to denote the consideration of that species of contract by which I agree with a man to do his work for him if he will do mine for me; or if two persons agree to marry together, or to do any other positive acts on both sides; or it may be to forbear on one side in consideration of something done on the other. 2 Bla. Com. 444. See CONSIDERATION.

FACSIMILE. An exact copy or accurate imitation of an original instrument.

In England, where the construction of a will may be affected by the appearance of the original paper, the court will order the probate to pass in facsimile as it may possibly help to show the meaning of the testator; 1 Wms. Ex. (7th ed.) 331, 386, 566. See PROBATE.

FACT (Lat. factum). An action; a thing done. A circumstance.

Fact (factum, fait) stands in lawbooks for: 1. An act; 2. For a completed and operative transaction brought about by sealing and executing a certain sort of writing, and so for the instrument itself, a deed (factum); 3. As designating what exists, in contradistinction to what should exist (de facto as contrasted with de jure); 4. As indicating things, events, actions, conditions, as happening, existing, really taking place. Thayer, Evid. 190.

Material facts are those which are essential to the right of action or defence. See Boggs & Leathe v. Ins. Co., 30 Mo. 68; Clark v. Ins. Co., 40 N. H. 338, 77 Am. Dec. 721.

Immaterial facts are those which are not essential to the right of action or defence. Material facts must be shown to exist; immaterial facts need not. As to what are questions of law for the court and of fact for the jury, see Wells, Law and Fact. As to pleading material facts, see Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 28.

Facts constituting a cause of action are those facts which the evidence upon the trial will prove, and not the evidence which will be required to prove the existence of such facts. Clay County v. Simonsen, 1 Dak. 403, 46 N. W. 592.

See Ram; Moore, Facts.

FACTIO TESTAMENTI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The power of making a will, including right and capacity. Also, the power of receiving under a will. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FACTOR. An agent employed to sell goods or merchandise consigned or delivered to him, by or for his principal, for a compensation, commonly called factorage or commission. Pal. Ag. 13; Sto. Ag. § 33; Com. Dig. Merchant, B; Malynes, Lex Merc. 81; Beawes, Lex Merc. 44; 3 Chit. Com. L. 193; 2 Kent 622; 1 Bell, Comm. 385, § 408; 2 B. & Ald. 143.

An agent for the sale of goods in his possession or consigned to him. Lawson, R. & Rem. § 227.

A factor or commission merchant is one who has the actual or technical possession of goods or wares of another for sale. A merchandise broker is one who negotiates the sale of merchandise without having it in his possession or control. He is simply an agent with very limited powers; J. M. Robinson, Norton & Co. v. Cotton Factory, 124 Ky. 435, 99 S. W. 305, 102 S. W. 869, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474, 14 Ann. Cas. 802.

When the agent accompanies the ship, taking a cargo aboard, and it is consigned to him for sale, and he is to purchase a return cargo out of the proceeds, such agent is properly called a factor; he is, however, usually known by the name of a supercargo (q. v.). Beawes, Lex Merc. 44; Livermore, Ag. 69; 1 Domat, b. 1, t. 16, § 3, art. 2.

A factor differs from a broker in some important particulars: namely, he may buy and sell for his principal in his own name, as well as in the name of his principal; on the contrary, a broker acting as such should buy and sell in the name of his principal; 2 B. & Ald. 143; 3 Kent 622; Slack v. Tucker, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 321, 23 L. Ed. 143; Ward v. Brandt, 11 Mart. O. S. (La.) 331, 13 Am. Dec. 352. Again, a factor is intrusted with possession, management, disposal, and control of the goods to be bought and sold, and has a special property and a lien on them; the broker, on the contrary, has usually no such possession, management, control, or disposal of the goods, nor any such special property or lien; Paley, Ag. 13; 1 Bell, Com. 385. The business of factors in the United States is usually done by commission merchants, who are known by that name, and the term factor is but little used; 1 Pars. Contr. 78. The term factor, however, is largely used in the Southern States in the cotton business, and in a different sense from commission merchant; Fordyce v. Peper, 16 Fed. 516. He not only sells cotton, but makes advances to the merchant or planter, in cash or goods, to be paid when the crop comes in. He thus has a lien upon the crop before it is shipped to him. In Alabama the term "commission merchant" as used in the revenue laws is synonymous with "factor"; Perkins v. State, 50 Ala. 154.

A domestic factor is one who resides in the same country with his principal.

By the usages of trade, or intention of law, when domestic factors are employed in the ordinary business of buying and selling goods, it is presumed that a reciprocal credit among the principal and the agent and third persons has been given. When a purchase has been made by such a factor, he, as well as his principal, is deemed liable for the debt; and in case of a sale the buyer is responsible both to the factor and principal for the purchase-money; but this presumption may be rebutted by proof of exclusive credit; Story, Ag. § 267, 291, 293; Paley, Ag. 243, 371; 9 B. & C. 78; 15 East 62.

A foreign factor is one who resides in a different country from his principal. 1 Term 112; 4 Maule & S. 576.

Foreign factors are held personally liable upon all contracts made by them for their employers, whether they describe themselves in the contract as agents or not. In such cases the presumption is that the credit is given exclusively to the factor. But this presumption may be rebutted by proof of a contrary agreement; Story, Ag. § 268; Mech. Ag. 1051; Bull, N. P. 130; 1 B. & P. 398; 9 B. & C. 78.

His duties. He is required to use reasonable skill and ordinary diligence in his vocation; 1 Ventr. 121; De Bavier v. Funke, 66 Hun 633, 21 N. Y. Supp. 410; Foster v. Bush, 104 Ala. 662, 16 South. 625. If for any reason not tortious, he delays selling the goods consigned to him, he is not liable for a subsequent loss occurring through an act of God; Dunbar v. Gregg, 44 Ill. App. 527. He is bound to obey his instructions; Marfield v. Goodhue, 3 N. Y. 62; Clark v.

Cumming & Co., 77 Ga. 64, 4 Am. St. Rep. 72; 5 C. B. 895; but when he has none he may and ought to act according to the general usages of trade; Brown v. McGran, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 479, 10 L. Ed. 550; 7 Taunt. 164; Judson v. Sturgis, 5 Day (Conn.) 556; Liotard v. Graves, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 226; Forrestier v. Bordman, 1 Story, 43, Fed. Cas. No. 4,945; to sell for cash when that is usual, or to give credit on sales when that is customary; Daylight Burner Co. v. Odlin, 51 N. H. 56, 12 Am. Rep. 45. He is bound to render a just account to his principal, and to pay him the moneys he may receive for him. The mere fact that one sells products as a factor, does not impose upon him the burden of proving due diligence in the sale; Govan v. Cushing, 111 N. C. 458, 16 S. E. 619.

His rights. He has the right to sell the goods in his own name; and, when untrammelled by instructions, he may sell them at such times and for such prices as, in the exercise of a just discretion, he may think best for his employer; 3 C. B. 380; Bessent v. Harris, 63 N. C. 542; but he must obey instructions if given; Ernest v. Stoller, 5 Dill. 438, Fed. Cas. No. 4,520; Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676; but when the instructions are to wait until a certain law has produced its effect on the market, a certain discretion as to time may be exercised; Milbank v. Dennistoun, 21 N. Y. 386. He may sell on credit when such is the usage of the market; Forrestier v. Bordman, 1 Sto. 43, Fed. Cas. No. 4,945; but if he sell on change he is held to a high degree of diligence to ascertain the solvency of the purchaser; Foster v. Waller, 75 Ill. 464. In the absence of instructions he may give a warranty; Schuchardt v. Allens, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 359, 17 L. Ed. 642; and he may insure the goods of the principal in his own name; Johnson v. Campbell, 120 Mass. 449.

He is, for many purposes, between himself and third persons, to be considered as the owner of the goods. He may, therefore, recover the price of goods sold by him in his own name, and, consequently, he may receive payment and give receipts, and discharge the debtor, unless, indeed, notice has been given by the principal to the debtor not to pay. But the title to goods consigned to a factor to be sold remains in the principal until sold, and may not be sold on execution to pay debts of the factor; Barnes Safe & Lock Co. v. Tobacco Co., 38 W. Va. 158, 18 S. E. 482, 22 L. R. A. 850, 45 Am. St. Rep. 846. He has a lien on the goods for advances made by him, and for his commissions; this exists by law and apart from any agreement; Plattner Implement Co. v. International Harvester Co., 133 Fed. 376, 66 C. C. A. 438; but he is not to be considered as the owner, beyond the extent of his lien; id.; Haebler v. Luttgen, 61 Minn. 315, 63 N. W. 720; U. S. v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 35, 23 L. Ed. 64. He has no right to barter the goods of his principal; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Givan, 65 Mo. 89; Victor Sewing Mach. Co. v. Heller, 44 Wis. 265; nor to pledge them for the purpose of raising money for himself, nor to secure a debt he may owe; Odiorne v. Maxcy, 13 Mass. 178; Berry v. Allen, 59 Ill. App. 149; Bowie v. Napier, 1 McCord (S. C.) 1, 10 Am. Dec. 641; Van Amringe v. Peabody, 1 Mas. 440, Fed. Cas. No. 16,825; Rodriguez v. Heffernan, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 429; Macky v. Dillinger, 73 Pa. 85; L. R. 10 C. P. 354. See FACTOR'S ACTS. But he may pledge them for advances made to his principal, or for the purpose of raising money for him, or in order to reimburse himself to the amount of his own lien; 2 Kent 625; Urquhart v. McIver, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 103; 7 East 5; Story, Bailm. § 325; Field v. Farrington, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 141, 19 L. Ed. 923. He may raise money by pledging the goods for the payment of duties or any other charge or purpose allowed or justified by the usages of the trade; Evans v. Potter, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 13, Fed. Cas. No. 4,569; Laussatt v. Lippincott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 386, 9 Am. Dec. 440; 3 Esp. 182. A custom in the diamond trade, that it is not usual for agents employed to sell diamonds to pledge them, cannot be set up to prevent the application of the factors act to a pledge by such an agent; [1907] 1 K. B. 510. See PLEDGE. He has a lien upon the goods of his principal in his possession, to protect himself against unpaid drafts drawn and accepted in the course of the agency; State v. Thompson, 120 Mo. 12, 25 S. W. 346; and such lien is personal to the factor; Barnes S. & L. Co. v. Tobacco Co., 38 W. Va. 158, 18 S. E. 482, 22 L. R. A. 850, 45 Am. St. Rep. 846. Where a factor disobeys instructions in selling grain which he has bought for his principal, he thereby loses his lien on money deposited with him as security; Jones v. Marks, 40 Ill. 313.

It may be laid down as a general rule that when the property is found distinguishable in the hands of the factor, capable of being traced by a clear and connected chain of identity, in no one link of it degenerating from a specific trust into a general debt, the creditors of the factor who has become bankrupt have no right to the specific property; 2 Stra. 1182; 3 Maule & S. 562; even where it is money in the factor's hands; 2 Burr. 1369; Hall v. Boardman, 14 N. H. 38; Price v. Ralston, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 60, 1 L. Ed. 289; Denston v. Perkins, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 86. He may sell to reimburse advances; Brown v. McGran, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 479, 10 L. Ed. 550; unless restrained by an agreement with his principal, but if he has agreed to hold for a given time he is bound to do so; Fordyce v. Peper, 16 Fed. 516. And where the factor dies insolvent, before remitting to the shipper, the latter is entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds of the sale or deposit in bank, as against the claim of the bank on an unmatured note; Ewart v. Bank, 70 Hun 90, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1124. And see 1 B. & P. 539, 648, for the rule as to promissory notes. Stock ordered of a broker on margin contracts belongs not to the broker, but to the customer, and may be redeemed by him from an assignee of the broker for benefit of creditors; Skiff v. Stoddard, 63 Conn. 198, 26 Atl. 874, 28 Atl. 104, 21 L. R. A. 102.

But the rights of third persons dealing bona fide with the factor as a principal, where the name of the principal is sunk entirely, are to be protected; 7 Term 360; 3 Bingh. 139; 6 Maule & S. 14.

See, generally, 58 Am. Dec. 156, note; Lawson, Rights & Rem. §§ 227–230; 3 Wait, Act. & Def. 289; 2 Sm. L. Cas. 118; 1 Am. L. Cas. 788; Fordyce v. Peper, 16 Fed. 516, note; LIEN; AGENT; STOCK BROKER; REAL ESTATE BROKER; DEL CREDERE COMMISSION.

FACTOR'S ACTS. A name given to legislative enactments in England and the United States designed to mitigate the hardships of the common-law rule governing dealings with factors, and especially with respect to pledges made by them of the goods of the principal. The object of the English legislation known under this general designation is the protection of persons dealing with those having possession of goods or documents representing the title thereto. The first acts were 4 Geo. IV. c. 84 and 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, and these were confined to persons entrusted with documents of title, not with the goods themselves. This defect was remedied by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, of which the Ontario act is merely a copy; R. S. Ont. c. 121. The subject was again dealt with in 40 & 41 Vict. c. 39, under which many of the decisions under the former acts were practically set aside. As to the provisions of the English acts and decisions thereunder, see 5 Can. L. T. 145.

In the United States the rule of the common law that a factor cannot pledge the property of his principal has been largely altered by statute in many of the states, founded generally it is said upon the statutes of 6 Geo. IV. c. 94; 3 Wait, Act. & Def. 300. See, as to legislation in this country, 58 Am. Dec. 165, note. See also FACTOR.

FACTORAGE. The wages or allowances paid to a factor for his services; it is more usual to call this commissions.

FACTORIZING PROCESS. A process for attaching effects of the debtor in the hands of a third party. It is substantially the same process known as the garnishee process, trustee process, process by foreign attachment; Drake, Attach. § 451.

FACTORY. A building or group of buildings appropriated to the manufacture of goods, including the machinery necessary to produce the goods, and the engine or other power by which the machinery is propelled; the place where workers are employed in fabricating goods, wares, or utensils. Cent. Dict. The term includes the fixed machinery when used in a policy of insurance; Mayhew v. Hardesty, 8 Md. 479.

FACTORY ACTS. Laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the hours of work, and the sanitary condition, and preserving the health and morals, of the employés, and promoting the education of young persons employed at such labor. See LABOR LAWS; EIGHT HOUR LAWS; EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY.

FACTORY PRICES. The prices at which goods may be bought at factories, as distinguished from the prices of those bought in the market, after they have passed into the hands of third parties or shopkeepers. Whipple v. Levett, 2 Mas. 90, Fed. Cas. No. 17,518.

FACTUM. A deed; a man's own act and deed. A culpable or criminal act; an act not founded in law. A deed; a written instrument under seal: called, also, charta. Spelman, Gloss.; 2 Bla. Com. 295.

The difference between factum and charta originally would seem to have been that factum denoted the thing done, and charta the evidence thereof; Co. Litt. 9 b. When a man denies by his plea that he made a deed on which he is sued, he pleads non est factum (it is not his deed).

In wills, factum seems to retain an active signification and to denote a making. See Weatherhead's Lessee v. Baskerville, 11 How. (U. S.) 358, 13 L. Ed. 717.

A fact. Factum probandum (the fact to be proved). 1 Greenl. Ev. § 13.

A portion of land granted to a farmer; otherwise called a hide, bovata, etc. Spelm.

See FACT.

In French Law. A memoir which contains concisely set down the fact on which a contest has happened, the means on which a party founds his pretensions, with the refutation of the means of the adverse party. See Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FACULTY. In Canon Law. A license; an authority. For example, the ordinary, having the disposal of all seats in the nave of a church, may grant this power, which when it is delegated is called a faculty, to another.

Faculties are of two kinds: first, when the grant is to a man and his heirs in gross; second, when it is to a person and his heirs as appurtenant to a house which he holds in the parish; 1 Term 429, 432; 12 Co. 106.

In Scotch Law. Ability or power. The term faculty is more properly applied to a power founded on the consent of the party from whom it springs, and not founded on property; Kames, Eq. 504.

FACULTY OF ADVOCATES. See ADVOCATES.

FACULTIES, MASTER OF THE. An official in the archdiocese of Canterbury who granted dispensations. 4 Inst. 337. See COURT OF THE ARCHES.

FADERFIUM. A marriage gift coming from the father or brother of the bride. Spelman, Gloss.

FAEDERFEOH. The portion brought by a wife to her husband, and which reverted to a widow in case the heir of her deceased husband refused his consent to her second marriage. Cyclopedic L. Dict.

FAESTING-MEN. Approved men who were strong-armed. Subsequently the word seems to have been used in the sense of rich, and hence it probably passed into its later and common meaning of pledges or bondsmen, which, by Saxon custom, were bound to answer for each other's good behavior. Cowell; Du Cange.

FAGGOT. A badge, worn in medieval times by persons who had recanted their heretical opinions, designed to show what they considered they had merited but had escaped. Cowell.

FAGGOT VOTE. A term applied to votes manufactured by nominally transferring land to persons otherwise disqualified from voting for members of parliament.

FAIDA. In Saxon Law. Great and open hostility which arose on account of some murder committed. The term was applied only to that deadly enmity in deference to which, among the Germans and other northern nations, if murder was committed, punishment might be demanded from any one of kin to the murderer by any one of the kin of the murdered man. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

FAIL. To leave unperformed; to omit; to neglect, as distinguished from refuse, which latter involves an act of the will, while the former may be an act of inevitable necessity. Taylor v. Mason, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 344, 6 L. Ed. 101.

FAILLITE (Fr.). In French Law. Bankruptcy; failure. The condition of a merchant who ceases to pay his debts. 3 Massé, Droit Comm. 171; Guyot, Répert.

FAILURE. In legal parlance, the neglect of any duty may be a failure, and the commission of any fault a delinquency. When applied to a mercantile concern, it means an inability to meet its debts from insolvency. It is synonymous with insolvency, which see. Boyce v. Ewart, 1 Rice (S. C.) 126.

FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

FAILURE OF EVIDENCE. A failure to offer proof, either positive or inferential, to establish one or more of the many facts, the establishment of all of which is indispensable to the finding of the issue for the plaintiff. Cole v. Hebb, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 28.

FAILURE OF ISSUE. A want of issue to take an estate limited over by an executory devise.

Failure of issue is definite or indefinite. When the precise time for the failure of issue is fixed by the will, as in the case of a devise to Peter, but, if he dies without issue living at the time of his death, then to another, this is a failure of issue definite. An indefinite failure of issue is a general failure whenever it may happen, without fixing any time, or a certain and definite period, within which it must happen. 4 Kent 275. An executory devise in fee, with remainder over, to take effect on an indefinite failure of issue is void for remoteness, and hence courts are astute to devise some construction which shall restrain the failure of issue to the term of limitation allowed; id. 276, n. See Appeal of Bedford, 40 Pa. 18; 2 Redf. Wills 276, n.; EN VENTRE SA MERE; SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN.

FAILURE OF JUSTICE. An expression used to denote the deprivation of a right or the loss of reparation for an injury as the result of the lack or inadequacy of a legal remedy. It is also colloquially applied to the miscarriage of justice which occurs when the result of a trial is so palpably wrong as to shock the moral sense.

FAILURE OF RECORD. The neglect to produce the record after having pleaded it. When a defendant pleads a matter and offers to prove it by the record, and the plaintiff pleads nul tiel record, a day is given to the defendant to bring in the record; if he fails to do so, he is said to fail of his record, and, there being a failure of record, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment. Termes de la Ley. See the form of entering it; 1 Wms. Saund. 92, n. 3.

FAILURE OF TITLE. The entire or partial loss of title suffered by a grantee or one who has contracted to purchase property, resulting from failure or inability of the grantor or vendor to pass a satisfactory title.

FAILURE OF TRUST. The lapse or inability to execute a trust, whether from the legal insufficiency or defective execution of the instrument creating it, the uncertainty of the object, or the lack of a person to take as cestui que trust. It is a doctrine of equity that a trust shall not fail for want of a trustee. See TRUST.

FAINT PLEADER. A false, fraudulent, or collusory manner of pleading, to the deception of a third person.

FAIR. A public mart or place of buying or selling. 1 Bla. Com. 274. A greater species of market, recurring at more distant intervals.

Though etymologically signifying a market for buying and selling exhibited articles, it includes a place for the exhibition of agricultural and mechanical products. State v. Long, 48 Ohio St. 509, 28 N. E. 1038.

Where a fair association maintains on its grounds a track for horse racing, it must use reasonable care to keep such track free from danger to patrons when they are invited or permitted to cross and while they are thus crossing; Higgins v. Agricultural Society, 100 Me. 565, 62 Atl. 708, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1132.

Where a city authorized the use of a street for a carnival or street fair, it was held liable for injurious consequences to one injured by a defective structure therein; Van Cleef v. City of Chicago, 240 Ill. 318, 88 N. E. 815, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 636, 130 Am. St. Rep. 275.

A fair is usually attended by a greater concourse of people than a market, for the amusement of whom various exhibitions are gotten up. McCulloch, Comm. Dict.; Wharton, Dict.

A solemn or greater sort of market, granted to any town by privilege, for the more speedy and commodious provision of such things as the subject needeth, or the utterance of such things as we abound in above our own uses and occasions. Cowell; Cunningham, Law Dict. A privileged market.

A fair is a franchise which is obtained by a grant from the crown. 2d Inst. 220; 3 Mod. 123; 1 Ld. Raym. 341; 2 Saund. 172; 1 Rolle, Abr. 106; Tomlin; Cunningham, Law Dict.

In the Middle Ages, the right to hold a fair meant the right to hold a court of pie-powder for the fair. Sometimes these courts were held by the mayor of a corporate town; sometimes they belonged to a lord. The law merchant was administered in addition to many other kinds of jurisdiction, civil and criminal. Of these, the Lord Mayor's Court in London, the Tolzey Court, and a branch of it sitting in fair time as a pie-powder court, at Bristol, are examples of survivals. There are many others: Derby, Exeter, Newark, Norwich, etc.; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 308.

Fairs are usually recognized and regulated by statute. See AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY; FRANCHISE.

FAIR ABRIDGMENT. See COPYRIGHT.

FAIR COMMENT. See LIBEL.

FAIR CRITICISM. See CRITICISM.

FAIR KNOWLEDGE OR SKILL. A reasonable degree of knowledge or measure of skill. Jones v. Angell, 95 Ind. 382.

FAIR-PLAY MEN. A local irregular tribunal which at one time existed in Pennsylvania.

About the year 1769 there was a tract of country in Pennsylvania, situate between Lycoming creek and Pine creek, in which the Proprietaries prohibited the making of surveys, as it was doubtful whether it had or had not been ceded by the Indians. Although settlements were forbidden, yet adventurers settled themselves there. Being without the pale of ordinary authorities, the inhabitants annually elected a tribunal, in rotation, of three of their number, whom they denominated fair-play men, who had authority to decide all disputes as to boundaries. Their decisions were final, and enforced by the whole community en masse. Their decisions are said to have been just and equitable. 2 Smith, Pa. Laws 195; Sergeant, Land Laws, 77.

FAIR PLEADER. The name of a writ given by the statute of Marlebridge, 52 Hen. III. c. 11. See BEAU PLEADER.

FAIR PREPONDERANCE. Of evidence, a preponderance which is apparent upon fair consideration. State v. Grear, 29 Minn. 225, 13 N. W. 140; Bryan v. R. Co., 63 Ia. 466, 19 N. W. 295; City Bank's Appeal, 54 Conn. 274, 7 Atl. 548.

FAIR SALE. A sale conducted with fairness as respects the rights of all parties affected. Lalor v. McCarthy, 24 Minn. 419. A sale at a price sufficient to warrant confirmation or approval when it is required. See SALE.

FAIR VALUE. In a contract by a city to purchase a waterworks plant at "fair and equitable value," the amount is to be determined not by capitalization of the earnings nor limited to the cost of reproducing the plant, but allowance should be made for the additional value created by connection with and supply of buildings, although the company did not own the connections. National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City, 62 Fed. 863, 10 C. C. A. 653.

FAIRLY. Reasonably; justly; equitably. It is not synonymous with "truly," and the latter should not be substituted for it in a commissioner's oath to take testimony fairly. Language may be "truly," yet unfairly, reported, and it may be fairly reported, yet not in accordance with strict truth; Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N. J. Eq. 234; but it may be deemed synonymous with "equitably"; Satcher v. Satcher's Adm'r, 41 Ala. 40, 91 Am. Dec. 498. "Fairly merchantable" conveys the idea of mediocrity in quality, or something just above it; Warner v. Ice Co., 74 Me. 479.

FAIRWAY. Used to indicate the middle and deepest or most navigable channel. See THALWEG.

FAIT. Anything done.

A deed lawfully executed. Comyns, Dig. Fait. See FACT.

Femme de fait. A wife de facto.

FAIT ENROLLE. A deed of bargain and sale, etc. 1 Keb. 568.

FAIT JURIDIQUE. In French Law. A judicial fact. One of the factors or elements constitutive of an obligation.

FAITH. A term used in the law only in connection with the adjectives good and bad, as expressing the belief, intent, or purpose with which a transaction has been entered into or completed. See GOOD FAITH.

FAITH AND CREDIT. See CONFLICT OF LAWS; FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

FAITHFUL. As respects temporal affairs, diligently, and without unnecessary delay; but it does not include the idea of impartiality. Den v. Thompson, 16 N. J. L. 72.

FAITOURS. Idle persons; idle livers; vagabonds. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Blount; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FAKIR. A term applied among the Mohammedans to a kind of religious ascetic or beggar, whose claim is that he "is in need of mercy, and poor in the sight of God, rather than in need of worldly assistance." Hughes, Dict. of Islam. Sometimes spelled Faqueer or Fakeer. It is in common use to designate a person engaged in some useless or dishonest business. Fake is also so used and also to designate the quality of such business.

FALCARE (Lat.). To cut or mow down. Falcare prata, to cut or mow down grass in meadows hayed (laid in for hay), was a customary service for the lord by his inferior tenants. Kennett, Gloss.

Falcator. The tenant performing the service.

Falcatura. A day's mowing. Falcatura una. Once mowing the grass.

Falcatio. A mowing.

Falcata. That which was mowed. Kennett, Gloss; Cowell; Jacobs.

FALCIDIA. In Spanish Law. The fourth portion of an inheritance, which legally belongs to the heir, and for the protection of which he has the right to reduce the legacies to three-fourth parts of the succession, in order to protect his interest.

FALCIDIAN LAW. In Roman Law. A statute or law restricting the right of disposing of property by will, enacted by the people during the reign of Augustus, on the proposition of Falcidius, who was a tribune, in the year of Rome 714.

Its principal provision gave power to fathers of families to bequeath three-fourths of their property, but deprived them of the power to give away the other fourth, which was to descend to the heir. Inst. 2. 22. This fourth was termed the Falcidian portion.

A similar principle exists in Louisiana.

See LEGITIME.

As to the early history of testamentary law, see Maine, Ancient Law.

In some of the states the statutes authorizing bequests and devises to charitable corporations limit the amount which a testator may give, to a certain fraction of his estate.

FALDAGE. The privilege which anciently several lords reserved to themselves of setting up folds for sheep in any fields within their manors, the better to manure them, and this not only with their own but their tenants' sheep. Called, variously, secta faldare, fold-course, free-fold, faldagii. Cunningham, Law Dict.; Cowell.

FALDFEY. A compensation paid by some customary tenants that they might have liberty to fold their own sheep on their own land. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FALDISDORY. The bishop's seat or throne within the chancel.

FALDSOCA. Liberty or privilege of foldage.

FALDSTOOL. A folding seat similar to a camp stool, made either of wood or metal, sometimes covered with silk or other material. It was used by a bishop when officiating in other than his own cathedral church. Encyc. Dic.

FALDWORTH. A person reckoned old enough to become a member of the decennary, and so subject to the law of frankpledge. Spelm.

FALESIA. In Old English Law. A hill or down by the sea-side. Co. Litt. 5 b; Domesday.

FALK-LAND. See FOLC-LAND.

FALL. In Scotch Law. To loose. To fall from a right is to loose or forfeit it. 1 Kames, Eq. 228.

FALL OF LAND. In English Law. A quantity of land six ells square.

FALLO. In Spanish Law. The final decree or judgment given in a lawsuit.

FALLOW LAND. Land ploughed, but not sown, and left uncultivated for a time, after successive crops; land left untilled for a year or more.

FALLUM. In Old English Law. An unexplained term for some particular kind of land. Jacob, L. Dic.

FALSA DEMONSTRATIO. In Civil Law. False designation; erroneous description of a person or a thing in a written instrument. Inst. 2, 20, 30.

In construing a deed purporting to assure a property, if there be a description of the property sufficient to render certain what is intended, the addition of a wrong name or of an erroneous statement as to quantity, occupancy, locality, or an erroneous enumeration of particulars, will have no effect; [1898] 2 Ch. 551.

See DEMONSTRATION; LATENT AMBIGUITY; WILL.

FALSA DEMONSTRATIO NON NOCET. See MAXIMS; DEMONSTRATIO.

FALSA MONETA. In the Civil Law. Counterfeit money. Cod. 9, 24.

FALSARE. In Old English Law. To counterfeit. Bract. fol. 276 b. Falcarious, a counterfeiter.

FALSE. Applied to the intentional act of a responsible being, it implies a purpose to deceive. State v. Smith, 63 Vt. 201, 22 Atl. 604; 18 U. C. C. P. 19. In a statute prescribing punishment for false statements in making an entry of imported goods, "false" means more than incorrect or erroneous. It implies wrong or culpable negligence, and signifies knowingly or negligently untrue; United States v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds, 139 Fed. 961, 72 C. C. A. 9, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185.

FALSE ACTION. See FEIGNED ACTION.

FALSE AND PRETENDED PROPHECIES. When made with intent to disturb the public peace they are punishable under 33 Hen. VIII. c. 14, 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 15, and 5 Eliz. c. 15. These statutes, although unrepealed, are not likely to be enforced.

FALSE CHARACTER. To personate the master or mistress of a servant or his or her representative and give a false character to the servant, is an offence punishable by fine, by 32 Geo. III. c. 56. See PERSONATE.

FALSE CLAIM. A claim made by a man for more than his due. An instance is given where the prior of Lancaster claimed a tenth part of the venison in corio as well as in carne, where he was entitled to that in carne only. Manw. For. Laws, cap. 25, num. 3.

FALSE DECRETALS. A collection of canon law, dated about the middle of the 9th century, probably by a Frankish ecclesiastic who called himself Isadon. It continued to be the chief repertory of the canon law till the 15th century when its untrustworthy nature was demonstrated.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT. Any unlawful restraint of a man's liberty, whether in a place made use of for imprisonment generally, or in one used only on the particular occasion, or by words and an array of force, without bolts or bars, in any locality whatever. 1 Bish. Cr. Law § 553; Webb's Poll. Torts 259; State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550; Smith v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 43; Floyd v. State, 12 Ark. 43, 54 Am. Dec. 250; 7 Q. B. 742; Wood v. Kinsman, 5 Vt. 588; Adams v. Freeman, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 117; Webber v. Kenny, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 345; Fotheringham v. Express Co., 36 Fed. 252, 1 L. R. A. 474; Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498, 52 N. W. 1000; Callahan v. Searles, 78 Hun 238, 28 N. Y. Supp. 904.

The total, or substantially total, restraint of a man's freedom of locomotion, without authority of law, and against his will. Big. Torts 113. Partial and conditional restraint is held not to constitute false imprisonment; Crossett v. Campbell, 122 La. 659, 48 South. 141, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 967, 129 Am. St. Rep. 362; 7 Q. B. 742; Sullivan v. R. Co., 148 Mass. 119, 18 N. E. 678, 1 L. R. A. 513; as where the restraint was voluntary, in that it rested with the plaintiff to terminate it by desisting from the doing of an unlawful act; Crossett v. Campbell, 122 La. 659, 48 South. 141, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 967, 129 Am. St. Rep. 362; but where one is restrained until he shall make certain promises; Hildebrand v. McCrum, 101 Ind. 61; Bonesteel v. Bonesteel, 28 Wis. 245; or statements; McNay v. Stratton, 9 Ill. App. 215; or payments; Smith v. State, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 43; it is usually held an imprisonment.

Arresting the wrong person under a warrant constitutes false imprisonment; F. Moo. 457; so if there is a misnomer in the warrant, even though the person actually intended was arrested; Scott v. Ely, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 555; and if the officer makes the arrest out of his bailiwick, or detains the person unduly; 4 B. & C. 596; an arrest under a void writ constitutes a false imprisonment; Deyo v. Van Valkenburgh, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 242. A writ may be void because defective in language, because the court had no jurisdiction of the proceedings, or because the court had no jurisdiction to issue the writ; Big. Torts 122; Nixon v. Reeves, 65 Minn. 159, 67 N. W. 989, 33 L. R. A. 506. The clerk of the court who issues a defective writ, or one not authorized by the court, is liable; and so is a judge who orders a writ which he had no right to issue, or where he had no jurisdiction. Both the attorney and his client may be liable if the former ordered the arrest, and even when the arrest has been ordered by a judge, i. e. in a case where they participate in making the arrest; Big. Torts 128; or where the writ was issued by the misconduct of the attorney; id. 129.

A judge of a superior court can never be liable for an act done by him in his official capacity; [1895] 1 Q. B. 668. Otherwise of a judge of an inferior court, if he acted beyond his jurisdiction; 1 B. & C. 169; and it must appear that he knew or had means of knowing that he was doing so; 3 Bing. 78; a mistake of law will not protect him; 19 L. J. Q. B. 70.

If the writ be voidable it must be set aside before an action for false imprisonment will lie, but otherwise if it be void; id. 131.

Every imprisonment of a man is prima facie a trespass, and in an action to recover damages therefor, if the imprisonment is admitted or proved, the burden of justifying it is on the defendant; Bassett v. Porter, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 418; Jackson v. Knowlton, 173 Mass. 94, 53 N. E. 134; McCarthy v. De Armit, 99 Pa. 63; McAleer v. Good, 216 Pa. 473, 65 Atl. 934, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303, 116 Am. St. Rep. 782; Franklin v. Amerson, 118 Ga. 860, 45 S. E. 698; Barker v. Anderson, 81 Mich. 508, 45 N. W. 1108. Where the arrest was under a warrant lawfully issued and by a person entitled to issue it, then a justification is made out and the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the warrant was wrongly issued; Snow v. Weeks, 75 Me. 105; Petit v. Colmery, 4 Pennewill (Del.) 266, 55 Atl. 344.

An arrest and detention, without a warrant, of one acting in a disorderly manner in a public place, by one clothed with the authority of a police officer, is not a false imprisonment; Erie R. Co. v. Reigherd, 166 Fed. 247, 92 C. C. A. 590, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 295, 16 Ann. Cas. 459. Where the accused pleads guilty, his right to recover for false arrest is barred; Billington v. Hoverman, 18 Ohio C. P. 637; Williamson v. Wilcox, 63 Miss. 335; Howe Mach. Co. v. Lincoln, 24 Kan. 123; Williams v. Shillaber, 153 Mass. 541, 27 N. E. 767; Ilsley v. Harris, 10 Wis. 96; Jones v. Foster, 43 App. Div. 33, 59 N.

Y. Supp. 738; Maxwell v. Deens, 46 Mich. 35, 8 N. W. 561.

Malice is not an element of false imprisonment; Hewitt v. Newburger, 66 Hun 230, 20 N. Y. Supp. 913; Gillingham v. R. Co., 35 W. Va. 588, 14 S. E. 243, 14 L. R. A. 798, 29 Am. St. Rep. 827; except so far as it affects the measure of damages; Johnson v. Bouton, 35 Neb. 898, 53 N. W. 995.

In order to be restored to liberty, the remedy is, by writ of habeas corpus. An action of trespass vi et armis lies. To punish the wrong done to the public by the false imprisonment of an individual, the offender may be indicted; 4 Bla. Com. 218; 2 Burr. 993. See Bacon, Abr. Trespass (D, 3); Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491; State v. Guest, 6 Ala. 778; Click v. State, 3 Tex. 282; Allen v. Shed, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 375.

One cannot maintain an action for false imprisonment where he is arrested by a proper officer, under a warrant lawful on its face, and issued by proper authority; Leib v. Shelby Iron Co., 97 Ala. 626, 12 South. 67; Johnson v. Morton, 94 Mich. 1, 53 N. W. 816. Justification is not available as a defence unless pleaded; Wilson v. R. Co., 2 Misc. 127, 20 N. Y. Supp. 852.

Damages may be recovered against a charitable institution for false imprisonment and the question of good intention is immaterial; Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 158 Mich. 363, 122 N. W. 631, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, 133 Am. St. Rep. 387.

FALSE JUDGMENT. The name of a writ which lies when a false judgment has been given in the county court, court baron, or other courts not of record. Fitzh. N. B. 17, 18.

FALSE LATIN. When legal proceedings were conducted in Latin, if a word were significant, though not good Latin, yet an indictment, declaration, or fine should not be made void by it; but if the word were not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole vicious. 5 Coke 121.

FALSE LIGHTS AND SIGNALS. Lights and signals falsely and maliciously displayed for the purpose of bringing a vessel into danger. Exhibiting false lights or signals, with intent to bring any ship into danger, is felony, punishable, in England, with penal servitude for life; stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, § 47; and in the United States by imprisonment; U. S. R. S. § 5358.

FALSE NEWS. Spreading false news, whereby discord may grow between the queen of England and her people, or the great men of the realm, or which may produce other mischiefs, still seems to be a misdemeanor under Stat. 3 Edw. I. c. 34; Steph. Cr. Dig. § 95.

FALSE OATH. See PERJURY.

FALSE PERSONATION. See PERSONATION.

FALSE PLEA. See SHAM PLEA.

FALSE PRETENCES. False representations and statements, made with a fraudulent design to obtain "money, goods, wares, and merchandise," with intent to cheat. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2308.

A representation of some fact or circumstance calculated to mislead, which is not true. Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 184.

Such a fraudulent representation of fact by one who knows it not to be true as is adapted to induce the person to whom it is made to part with something of value. It may relate to quality, quantity, the nature or other incident of the article offered for sale, whereby the purchaser buying it, is defrauded; Jackson v. People, 126 Ill. 139, 18 N. E. 286.

They must relate to the past or present; Biddle v. U. S., 156 Fed. 764, 84 C. C. A. 415; People v. Miller, 169 N. Y. 339, 62 N. E. 418, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546; Cook v. State, 71 Neb. 243, 98 N. W. 810. Any representation or assurance in relation to a future transaction may be a promise, or covenant, or warranty, but cannot amount to a statutory false pretence; Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 185; 3 Term 98; but one will be guilty if there are false representations of a past or existing fact, although a promise be also a part of the inducement to the person defrauded to part with his property; Pearce v. State, 115 Ala. 115, 22 South. 502; State v. Gordon, 56 Kan. 64, 42 Pac. 346; Taylor v. Com., 94 Ky. 281, 22 S. W. 217; Thomas v. People, 34 N. Y. 351; Holton v. State, 109 Ga. 127, 34 S. E. 358; State v. Fooks, 65 Ia. 196, 452, 21 N. W. 561, 773. It must be such as to impose upon a person of ordinary strength of mind; State v. Simpson, 10 N. C. 620; Com. v. Wilgus, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 178; People v. Haynes, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 557. But, although it may be difficult to restrain false pretences to such as an ordinarily prudent man may avoid, yet it is not every absurd or irrational pretence which will be sufficient. See Cowen v. People, 14 Ill. 348; State v. Mills, 17 Me. 211; Russ. & R. 127. Where the statements were absurd or irrational, the offence is not made out; State v. Cameron, 117 Mo. 641, 23 S. W. 767; State v. Jackson, 128 Ia. 543, 105 N. W. 51; Com. v. Beckett, 119 Ky. 817, 84 S. W. 758, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 265, 68 L. R. A. 638, 115 Am. St. Rep. 285; State v. Stewart, 9 N. D. 409, 83 N. W. 869; unless the defrauded person was weak and ignorant; People v. Bird, 126 Mich. 631, 86 N. W. 127; State v. Southall, 77 Minn. 296, 79 N. W. 1007; People v. Cole, 137 N. Y. 530, 33 N. E. 336; Bowen v. State, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 45, 40 Am. Rep. 71. It is not necessary that all the pretences should be false, if one of them, per se, is sufficient to constitute the offence; People v. Haynes, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 547, 28 Am. Dec. 530. And although other circumstances may have induced the credit, or the delivery of the property, yet it will be sufficient if the false pretences had such an influence that without them the credit would not have been given or the property delivered; People v. Haynes, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 557; People v. Haynes, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 547, 28 Am. Dec. 530. The false pretences must have been used before the contract was completed; People v. Gates, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 311. Extra-judicial admissions and statements of the defendant alone as to the falsity of the statement are not sufficient to warrant a conviction, as the falsity is in the nature of a corpus delicti which requires other proof; People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345, 40 Pac. 440.

If the person defrauded was deceived by false statements, it is no defence that he might have ascertained by investigation that they were false; State v. Keyes, 196 Mo. 136, 93 S. W. 801, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 369, 7 Ann. Cas. 23; Crawford v. State, 117 Ga. 247, 43 S. E. 762; Jenkins v. State, 97 Ala. 66, 12 South. 110; State v. Trisler, 49 Ohio St. 583, 31 N. E. 881; State v. Penley, 27 Conn. 589; contra, Com. v. Grady, 13 Bush (Ky.) 285, 26 Am. Rep. 192; Cowan v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 617, 56 S. W. 751.

The question is modified in the different states by the wording of the statutes, which vary from each other somewhat. It may be laid down as the general rule of the interpretation of the words "by any false pretence," which are in the statutes, that wherever a person fraudulently represents as an existing fact that which is not an existing fact, and so gets money, etc., that is an offence within the acts. See 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 559; 3 C. & K. 98; Com. v. Henry, 22 Pa. 253; People v. Wieger, 100 Cal. 352, 34 Pac. 826.

It is a false pretence where a man falsely represents himself to be in a situation or business in which he is not; Higler v. People, 44 Mich. 299, 6 N. W. 664, 38 Am. Rep. 267; Taylor v. Com., 94 Ky. 281, 22 S. W. 217; Com. v. Stevenson, 127 Mass. 446; Pearce v. State, 115 Ala. 115, 22 South. 502; Thomas v. People, 34 N. Y. 351; Boscow v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 390, 26 S. W. 625; State v. Briggs, 74 Kan. 377, 86 Pac. 447, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 278, 10 Ann. Cas. 904; or that he possesses the power to produce the spirits of the dead; Com. v. Keeper of County Prison, 15 W. N. C. (Pa.) 282; or that he possesses extraordinary and supernatural power to cure; Jules v. State, 85 Md. 305, 36 Atl. 1027; or to wear a badge or emblem of an order or society to which he does not belong; Hammer v. State, 173 Ind. 199, 89 N. E. 850, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 795, 140 Am. St. Rep. 248, 21 Ann. Cas. 1034; for a minor to state falsely that he is over twenty-one years of age, for the purpose of inducing one to enter into a contract with him; Com. v. Ferguson, 135 Ky. 32, 121 S. W. 967, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101, 21 Ann. Cas. 434; to obtain money as a charity upon false statements; Com. v. Whitcomb, 107 Mass. 486; Bink v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 445, 98 S. W. 863; Baker v. State, 120 Wis. 135, 97 N. W. 566; State v. Matthews, 91 N. C. 635; State v. Styner, 154 Ind. 131, 56 N. E. 98; contra, People v. Clough, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 351, 31 Am. Dec. 303. To induce one to cash a check on a bank in which the maker has no funds, is obtaining money under false pretences; State v. Hammelsy, 52 Or. 156, 96 Pac. 865, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244, 132 Am. St. Rep. 686; People v. Wasservogle, 77 Cal. 173, 19 Pac. 270; Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 179; although the drawer did not expressly say the check was good; id.; but where the statute provides that before a conviction for false pretences can be had there must be a distinct and certain representation of an existing fact, the mere drawing and passing a check on a bank in which the drawer has no funds is held not a representation that such check is good; Ayers v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 1, 38 S. W. 792. So it was not a false pretence where a bank cashier drew and certified a check on his bank which he exchanged for property, when he told the seller that such check was not collectible; State v. Miller, 47 Or. 562, 85 Pac. 81, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 365; it is essential that the person injured must have relied upon a false representation in parting with his property; id.; Therasson v. People, 82 N. Y. 238; People v. Baker, 96 N. Y. 340; People v. Turpin, 233 Ill. 452, 84 N. E. 679, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 276; Baker v. State, 120 Wis. 135, 97 N. W. 566; Mitchell v. State, 70 Ark. 30, 65 S. W. 935; Stifel v. State, 163 Ind. 628, 72 N. E. 600; State v. Cameron, 117 Mo. 641, 23 S. W. 767.

There must be an intent to cheat or defraud some person; 1 Russ. & R. 317; State v. Garris, 98 N. C. 733, 4 S. E. 633; State v. Jackson, 112 Mo. 585, 20 S. W. 674. This may be inferred from a false representation; People v. Herrick, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 87. The intent is all that is requisite; it is not necessary that the party defrauded should sustain any loss; People v. Genung, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 18, 25 Am. Dec. 594; 1 C. & M. 516, 537; Com. v. Wilgus, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 177. The offence is not proven where the representations were not relied on; People v. Gibbs, 98 Cal. 661, 33 Pac. 630.

See DECEIT; FRAUD.

FALSE REPRESENTATION. A representation which is untrue, wilfully made to deceive another to his injury. See DECEIT; MISREPRESENTATION; FRAUD; FALSE PRETENCES.

FALSE RETURN. A return made by the sheriff, or other ministerial officer, to a writ, in which is stated a fact contrary to the truth, and injurious to one of the parties or some one having an interest in it.

In this case the officer is liable for damages to the party injured; 2 Esp. 475. When the sheriff has levied on property sufficient to satisfy an execution, and yet returns it unsatisfied, he is prima facie liable to the plaintiff for the full amount of the judgment, and he must show such facts as will exonerate or excuse him; Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. v. Babbitt, 74 N. Y. 395. In some states, every return of process, untrue in fact, is held to expose the sheriff to all the penalties of a false return; Peebles v. Newsom, 74 N. C. 473; Finley v. Hayes, 81 N. C. 368. But when the actual damage is the result of the negligence of the party complaining, the sheriff will only be liable for nominal damages; Tutein v. Hurley, 98 Mass. 211, 93 Am. Dec. 154; Carter v. Towne, 103 Mass. 507; Parker v. City of Cohoes, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 531. See RETURN OF WRITS.

FALSE SWEARING. In English Law. The misdemeanor committed by a person who swears falsely before any person authorized to administer an oath upon a matter of public concern, under such circumstances that the false swearing would have amounted to perjury if committed in a judicial proceeding; as where a person makes a false affidavit under the Bills of Sale Acts. Steph. Cr. Dig. 84.

FALSE TOKEN. A false document or sign of the existence of a fact,—in general used for the purpose of fraud. See 3 Term 98; 2 Starkie, Ev. 563; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 585; People v. Gates, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 311; People v. Haynes, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 570, 28 Am. Dec. 530; People v. Stone, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 182. See FALSE PRETENCES.

FALSE VERDICT. One obviously opposed to the principles of right and justice.

The false verdict of jurors, whether occasioned by embracery or not, was anciently considered as criminal, and, therefore, exemplarily punished by attaint, but by 6 Geo. IV. c. 50 the writ of attaint was wholly abolished and superseded by the practice of setting aside the first verdict and granting new trials; 3 Bla. Com. 402.

FALSE WEIGHTS AND MEASURES. Weights and measures which do not conform to those established by law.

In the laws of King Edgar, nearly a century before the Conquest, we find an injunction that one measure kept at Winchester should be observed throughout the realm. In England the prerogative of fixing the standard anciently vested in the crown; in Normandy in the duke. "The regulation of weights and measures cannot, however, with propriety be referred to the king's prerogative; for from Magna Carta to the present time there are about twenty acts of parliament to fix and establish the standard and uniformity of weights and measures." 1 Bla. Com. 274, n. In a case before the Court of King's Bench it was held that although it was the custom of the town to sell eighteen ounces in a pound of butter, yet the jury of the court-leet were not justified in seizing the butter of a person who sold pounds less than that, but more than sixteen ounces each, the statutable weight; 3 T. R. 271; and it has been determined that no practice or usage could countervail the statutes 22 Car. II. c. 8 and 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 12, which enact that if any person shall either buy or sell salt or grain by any other measure than the Winchester bushel, he shall forfeit forty shillings and also the value of the grain or salt so sold or bought; one-half to the poor, the other to the informer; 4 T. R. 750; 5 id. 353. In this country the power to fix the standard of weights and measures is in congress; Const. U. S. art. 1, c. 8. See WEIGHTS; MEASURES.

FALSEHOOD. Any untrue assertion or proposition. A wilful act or declaration contrary to the truth. See Putnam v. Osgood, 51 N. H. 207.

It has been said that the use of the term falsehood does not always and necessarily imply a lie or wilful untruth, but is generally used in the second sense here given. It is committed either by the wilful act of the party, or by dissimulation, or by words. It is wilful, for example, when the owner of a thing sells it twice, by different contracts to different individuals, unknown to them; for in this the seller must wilfully declare the thing is his own when he knows that it is not so. It is committed by dissimulation when a creditor, having an understanding with his former debtor, sells the land of the latter, although he has been paid the debt which was due to him. Falsehood by word is committed when a witness swears to what he knows not to be true.

Crabbe thus distinguishes between falsehood and untruth: "The latter is an untrue saying, and may be unintentional, in which case it reflects no disgrace on the agent. A falsehood and a lie are intentional false sayings, differing only in degree of the guilt of the offender; falsehood being not always for the express purpose of deceiving, but a lie always for the worst of purposes." See Rosc. Cr. Ev. 362; DECEIT; FRAUD; MISREPRESENTATION.

FALSELY. Under a statute making it a misdemeanor "wilfully to make a false answer," an indictment charging that one "falsely and fraudulently answered," is bad for omitting "wilfully;" 1 Den. C. C. 157.

In an indictment for forgery the averment that defendant swore falsely was held insufficient, without the additional words "corruptly and wilfully;" Cro. Eliz. 201; and "falsely and corruptly" were held insufficient without "wilfully;" id. 143; and falsely and maliciously were held insufficient without "wilfully and corruptly," with a quere whether one of the last two words would suffice without the other; 7 D. & R. 665; but in Cox's Case, Leach 69, it was held that wilfully was not required at common law but was necessary under stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9. An indictment for perjury was held good without the averment that the defendant did falsely, corruptly, and wilfully swear, etc., and the court said: "The words falsely, corruptly, and wilfully . . . are mere expletives to swell the sentence, in the language of Lord Hardwicke, 1 Atk. 50;" Respublica v. Newell, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 407, 413, 2 Am. Dec. 381. In obtaining money under false pretences it is not enough to charge that the defendant falsely pretended by certain pretences set forth, without specially averring the falsity of the pretences; 2 M. & S. 379.

The use of the word falsely in a statute (against counterfeiting) implies that there must be a fraudulent or criminal intent in the act; U. S. v. King, 5 McLean 208, Fed. Cas. No. 15,535. See also 4 B. & C. 329; 6 Com. Dig. 58; Stark. Cr. Pl. 86.

In an action for libel, "wrongfully and falsely published" will, it seems, amount to maliciously published, but it is better to add falsely and maliciously; 1 Chit. Pl. 421; the word falsely must have great stress laid on it in an action for slander; 2 Wils. 300, 301. Case will lie for falsely and maliciously suing out a commission in bankruptcy; 2 Wils. 145; or for falsely, maliciously, and without probable cause procuring a search warrant; 1 D. & R. 97. In an action on the case for conspiracy or for malicious prosecution, the allegation that the prosecution was false and malicious is not sufficient without averring a want of probable cause; Kirtley v. Deck, 2 Munf. (Va.) 10, 5 Am. Dec. 445; contra as to conspiracy; Griffith v. Ogle, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 172.

FALSI CRIMEN. See CRIMEN FALSI.

FALSIFICATION. In Equity Practice. The showing an item in the debit of an account to be either wholly false or in part erroneous. 1 Sto. Eq. Jur. § 525.

FALSIFY. To prove that an item in an account before the court, which is inserted to the debit of the person falsifying, should have been omitted.

When a bill to open an account has been filed, the plaintiff is sometimes allowed to surcharge and falsify such account; and if anything has been inserted that is a wrong charge, he is at liberty to show it; and that is a falsification. 2 Ves. 565; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 237, 6 L. Ed. 468. See SURCHARGE.

In Criminal Law. To alter or make false.

The alteration or making false of a record is punishable at common law or by statute in the states, and, if of records of the United States courts, by act of congress of April 30, 1790; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5394.

In Practice. To prove a thing to be false. Co. Litt. 104 b.

FALSIFYING A RECORD. A crime against public justice punishable in England by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, and by statute in the several states and District of Columbia. See ALTERATION.

FALSIFYING JUDGMENTS. A term sometimes used for reversing judgments. See 4 Steph. Com. 553.

FALSING OF DOOMS. In Scotch Law. Protesting against a sentence and taking an appeal to a higher tribunal. Bell, Dict.

An action to set aside a decree. Skene.

FALSO RETORNO BREVIUM (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. The name of a writ which might have been sued out against a sheriff for falsely returning writs. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FALSONARIUS. A person guilty of forgery; a counterfeiter.

FALSUS. Deceiving; fraudulent; erroneous. In the first two senses it is applied to persons in respect to their acts and conduct, as well as to things; and in the third sense it is applied to persons on the question of personal identity.

FAMACIDE. A killer of reputation; a slanderer.

FAMILIA (Lat.). In Roman Law. A family.

This word had four different acceptations in the Roman law. In the first and most restricted sense it designated the pater-familias,—his wife, his children, and other descendants subject to his paternal power. In the second and more enlarged sense it comprehended all the agnates,—that is to say, all the different families who would all be subject to the paternal authority of a common chief if he were still living. Here it has the same meaning as agnatio. In a third acceptation it comprises the slaves and those who are in mancipio of the chief,—although considered only as things, and without any tie of relationship. And, lastly, it signifies the whole fortune or patrimony of the chief. See PATER-FAMILIAS; 1 Ortolan 28.

In Old English Law. A household. All the servants belonging to one master. Du Cange; Cowell. A sufficient quantity of land to maintain one family. The same quantity of land is called sometimes mansa (a manse), familia, carucata. Du Cange; Cunningham, Law Dict.; Cowell; Creasy, Church Hist. See MANSIO.

FAMILIÆ EMPTOR. In Roman Law. An intermediate person who purchased the aggregate inheritance when sold per æs et libram, in the progress of making a will under the twelve tables. The purchaser was merely a man of straw, transmitting the inheritance to the hæres proper. Brown.

FAMILIÆ ERCISCUNDÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. An action which lay for any of the coheirs for the division of what fell to them by inheritance. Stair, Inst. l. 1, tit. 7, § 15.

FAMILIARES REGIS. Persons of the king's household. The ancient titles of the six clerks of chancery in England. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 249, 251.

FAMILY. Father, mother, and children. All the individuals who live under the authority of another, including the servants of the family. Poor v. Ins. Co., 2 Fed. 432. All the relations who descend from a common ancestor or who spring from a common root. La. Code, art. 3522, no. 16; 9 Ves. 323. The primary meaning of a testator's "family" in a will is children; 3 Ch. Div. 672.

In common parlance it consists of those who live under the same roof with the pater-familias. When they branch out and become the heads of new establishments, they cease to be part of the father's family. 4 Term 797; Dodge v. R. Co., 154 Mass. 299, 28 N. E. 243, 13 L. R. A. 318.

While usually importing a household, including parents, children, and servants, it is not necessary, to sustain the family relation between parents and children, that they should reside together; Putman v. Southern Pac. Co., 21 Or. 230, 27 Pac. 1033.

Where the mother of an insured person did not live with him and was not dependent upon him for support, it was held she was not a member of his family; Western Commercial Travelers' Ass'n v. Tennent, 128 Mo. App. 541, 106 S. W. 1073.

It is said to mean, in the Texas constitution, "every collective body of persons living together within the same curtilage, subsisting in common, directing their attention to a common object—the promotion of their mutual interests and social happiness." Wilson v. Cochran, 31 Tex. 680, 98 Am. Dec. 553. "A family is the collective body of persons who live in one house, under one head or manager." Tyson v. Reynolds, 52 Ia. 431, 3 N. W. 469; Arnold v. Waltz, 53 Ia. 706, 6 N. W. 40, 36 Am. Rep. 248.

Those members of the household who are dependent on the householder to whom he owes some duty. Brokaw v. Ogle, 170 Ill. 115, 48 N. E. 394.

The meaning of the term is frequently a matter of statutory or constitutional interpretation. An unmarried woman keeping house and taking care of two children of a deceased sister is the head of a family; Arnold v. Waltz, 53 Ia. 706, 6 N. W. 40, 36 Am. Rep. 248; a widower without children, who takes his mother to live with him; Parsons v. Livingston, 11 Ia. 104, 77 Am. Dec. 135; an unmarried man who succeeds his father in taking care of his minor sisters may be deemed the head of a family; Greenwood v. Maddox, 27 Ark. 658; an unmarried man supporting his widowed sister and her small children; Wade v. Jones, 20 Mo. 75, 61 Am. Dec. 584; an unmarried man whose widowed sister lived with him and kept his house; Bailey v. Comings, Fed. Cas. No. 733; an unmarried woman with her illegitimate child; Ellis v. White, 47 Cal. 73. But not a man who has no family; Abercrombie v. Alderson, 9 Ala. 981; Woodworth v. Comstock, 10 Allen (Mass.) 425. A single person in the actual occupancy of a homestead, although not the head of a family, is entitled to a homestead exemption as a family; Hesnard v. Plunkett, 6 S. D. 73, 60 N. W. 159.

Husband and wife constitute a family under homestead and exemption laws; Williams v. Young, 17 Cal. 403; Oppenheim v. Myers, 99 Va. 582, 39 S. E. 218; Chafee v. Rainey, 21 S. C. 11; Dye v. Cooke, 88 Tenn. 275, 12 S. W. 631, 17 Am. St. Rep. 882; Trotter v. Dobbs, 38 Miss. 198; Miller v. Finegan, 26 Fla. 29, 7 South. 140, 6 L. R. A. 813; Cox v. Stafford, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 519; Kitchell v. Burgwin, 21 Ill. 45; a widow constitutes a family on the death of her husband, though her children were all of age; Aultman, Miller & Co. v. Price, 68 Kan. 640, 75 Pac. 1019; and a widow without children; Moore v. Parker, 13 S. C. 490; and one whose children had all reached majority, where one of them had lived in her house and was dependent on her for support; Sheehy v. Scott, 128 Ia. 551, 104 N. W. 1139, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 365; a deserted wife without children was head of a family; Berry v. Hanks, 28 Ill. App. 51; and so was a widower with whom lived his son and his son's wife and a servant; Tyson v. Reynolds, 52 Ia. 431, 3 N. W. 469; or a widower and a grown-up daughter; Cox v. Stafford, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 521; or merely a widower; In re Lamb's Estate, 95 Cal. 397, 30 Pac. 568; and where the homestead had been acquired, a widower having a son and daughter of age was entitled to the exemption; Webb v. Cowley, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 722; so where there were no children, but a widower kept house with a housekeeper; Ellis v. Davis, 90 Ky. 183, 14 S. W. 74; but a widower keeping house with a female relative, to whom he owes no duty of support, has no family; Whitehead v. Nickelson, 48 Tex. 517.

Under homestead laws: (1) Family relates to social status, not a mere contract; (2) legal or moral obligations on the head of the family to support the other members must be considered; and (3) corresponding state of dependence on the part of the other members for this support; Roco v. Green, 50 Tex. 488.

In the payment of mutual benefits to the family of the holder of a certificate, a stepfather, not a member of the insured's household, was held not a member of his family; Supreme Lodge Order of Mutual Protection v. Dewey, 142 Mich. 666, 106 N. W. 140, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334, 113 Am. St. Rep. 596, 7 Ann. Cas. 681. In mutual benefit statutes "family" is an expression of great flexibility. It may mean the husband and wife, having no children and living alone together, or it may mean children or wife and children, or blood relatives, or any group constituting a distinct domestic or social body; Carmichael v. Ben. Ass'n, 51 Mich. 494, 16 N. W. 871. It may apply to blood relatives, even though living apart from the applicant and having families of their own. It may apply to those who are neither relatives by consanguinity or affinity, provided they are of the household of the applicant and maintaining the relations usual in families united by blood; Carmichael v. Ben. Ass'n, 51 Mich. 494, 16 N. W. 871; Simcoke v. Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W. of Iowa, 84 Ia. 383, 51 N. W. 8, 15 L. R. A. 114; Spear v. Robinson, 29 Me. 531; Klotz v. Klotz, 22 S. W. 551, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 183; Appeal of Folmer, 87 Pa. 133; Danielson v. Wilson, 73 Ill. App. 287; Carpenter v. Ins. Co., 161 Pa. 9, 28 Atl. 943, 23 L. R. A. 571, 41 Am. St. Rep. 880; Norwegian Old People's Home Society v. Wilson, 176 Ill. 94, 52 N. E. 41.

In the construction of wills, the word family, when applied to personal property, is synonymous with kindred or relations. It may, nevertheless, be confined to particular relations by the context of the will, or may be enlarged by it, so that the expression may in some cases mean children, or next of kin, and in others may even include relations by marriage; Schoul. Wills 537. The primary meaning of the word family is children, and it must be so construed in all cases unless the context shows that it was used in a different sense; Phillips v. Ferguson, 85 Va. 509, 8 S. E. 241, 1 L. R. A. 837, 17 Am. St. Rep. 78. It has been more commonly held that parents are not included in the term; 8 Ves. 604; 2 Redf. Wills 73; 5 Maule & S. 126; Spencer v. Spencer, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 159; it may include a wife as well as children; Bowditch v. Andrew, 8 Allen (Mass.) 339. A statute providing that real estate shall not go "out of the family" restricts the descent to the issue of the ancestor; Den v. D'Hart, 3 N. J. L. 481. See HEAD OF A FAMILY.

FAMILY ARRANGEMENT. An agreement made between a father and his son, or children, or between brothers, to dispose of property in a different manner to that which would otherwise take place.

In these cases, frequently, the mere relation of the parties will give effect to bargains otherwise without adequate consideration. 1 Chitty, Pr. 67; 1 Turn. & R. 13; Boyd v. Robinson, 93 Tenn. 1, 23 S. W. 72; De Hatre v. De Hatre, 50 Mo. App. 1.

Such an arrangement may be upheld, although there were no rights in dispute at the time of making it, and the court will not be disposed to scan with much nicety the quantum of the consideration; L. R. 2 Ch. 294. It is said that a family arrangement is not by itself a valuable consideration; Brett, L. C. in Mod. Eq. 294. Wherever doubts and disputes have arisen with regard to the rights of different members of a family (especially when relating to legitimacy) and fair compromises have been entered into to preserve harmony, they have been sustained, though, perhaps, resting upon grounds which would not have been considered satisfactory if the transaction had occurred between mere strangers; 2 Dr. & War. 503. The impossibility of estimating money considerations in family arrangements has led to their exemption from the rules which affect other arrangements; 7 Cl. & F. 280.

In ordinary cases a father's dealings with his child who has just come of age are open to suspicion, and so are dealings with a reversioner, but if these are in the nature of a family arrangement, the court will regard them, not with suspicion, but with favor; 2 Giff. 232. It is not essential that the son should have independent advice, nor will inquiry be made as to how far the father's influence was exerted. At the same time any unusual benefit secured to the father will be scrutinized and perhaps expunged; 41 Ch. D. 200; and only the usual provisions should be inserted. It seems that resettlements under a family arrangement will justify the execution of a power under which the donee retains some benefit, which would otherwise be a fraud on the power. See 1 Swans. 129. An agreement between the children of a testator that the shares of the children shall be considered as vesting at the death of the testator divested of the survivorship clause contained in the will, will be upheld in equity; Ralston's Estate, 172 Pa. 104, 33 Atl. 273.

Evidence of circumstances to show a family arrangement at the execution of deeds is admissible, and a deed otherwise invalid would be good evidence if it formed a component part of such arrangement; Jourdan v. Jourdan, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 268, 11 Am. Dec. 724. See FAMILY MEETING.

FAMILY BIBLE. A Bible containing a record of the births, marriages, and deaths of the members of a family.

An entry by a father, made in a Bible, stating that Peter, his eldest son, was born in lawful wedlock, of Maria, his wife, at a time specified, is evidence to prove the legitimacy of Peter; 4 Campb. 401. But the entry in order to be evidence must be an original entry; and, when it is not so, the loss of the original must be proved before the copy can be received; Curtis v. Patton, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 135. See Carskadden v. Poorman, 10 Watts (Pa.) 82, 36 Am. Dec. 145.

A family Bible, containing entries of family incidents, where the parties who made the entries are dead, will be received in evidence; Whart. Ev. § 219; Tayl. Ev. 572; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 104; L. R. 1 Ex. 255; Greenleaf v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 301; Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 53 Ga. 535. See 11 Cl. & F. 85; Town of Union v. Town of Plainfield, 39 Conn. 563. In order to make an entry evidence as to the birth or death of a child, it must be shown that the entry is in the handwriting of a parent; Greenleaf v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 301. But it is held that entries in a family Bible are admissible in evidence without proof that they have been made by a parent or relative; Weaver v. Leiman, 52 Md. 709.

FAMILY COUNCIL. See FAMILY ARRANGEMENT; FAMILY MEETING.

FAMILY EXPENSES. Obligations incurred for something intended for the use or comfort of the collection spoken of as the family, as distinguished from individual or personal expenses. Vose v. Myott, 141 Ia. 506, 120 N. W. 58, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 277. Medical services furnished to a member of the family are such; Mueller v. Kuhn, 59 Ill. App. 353; Russell v. Graumann, 40 Wash. 667, 82 Pac. 998, 5 Ann. Cas. 830; Murdy v. Skyles, 101 Ia. 549, 70 N. W. 714, 63 Am. St. Rep. 411; wages of servants and domestics; Perkins v. Morgan, 36 Colo. 360, 85 Pac. 640; the rent of a house; Houghteling v. Walker, 100 Fed. 253; an article of jewelry is held not, though sometimes worn by members of the family; Hyman v. Harding, 162 Ill. 357, 44 N. E. 754; but contra Neasham v. McNair, 103 Ia. 695, 72 N. W. 773, 38 L. R. A. 847, 64 Am. St. Rep. 202; nor is the cost of keeping an insane husband in an asylum; Blackhawk County v. Scott, 111 Ia. 190, 82 N. W. 492.

FAMILY MEETING (called, also, family council). In Louisiana. Meetings of at least five relations of minors or other persons on whose interest they are called upon to deliberate, or, in default of relations, then of the friends of such minors or other persons. See Lemoine v. Ducote, 45 La. Ann. 857, 12 South. 939.

The appointment of the members of the family meeting is made by the judge. The selection must be from among those domiciliated in the parish in which the meeting is held: the relations are selected according to their proximity, beginning with the nearest. The relation is preferred to the connection in the same degree; and among relations of the same degree the eldest is preferred. The undertutor must also be present. Commaux v. Barbin, 6 Mart. La. (N. S.) 455.

The family meeting is held before a justice of the peace, or notary public, appointed by the judge for the purpose. It is called for a fixed day and hour, by citations delivered at least three days before the day appointed for that purpose.

The members of the family meeting, before commencing their deliberations, take an oath before the officer before whom the meeting is held, to give their advice according to the best of their knowledge touching the interests of the person respecting whom they are called upon to deliberate. The officer before whom the family meeting is held must make a particular procès-verbal of the deliberations, cause the members of the family meeting to sign it, if they know how to sign, and must sign it himself, and deliver a copy to the parties that they may have it homologated.

FAMILY PHYSICIAN. A physician who regularly attends and is consulted by the members of the family as their medical adviser; but he need not attend in all cases or be consulted by all the members of the family. Price v. Ins. Co., 17 Minn. 519 (Gil. 473), 10 Am. Rep. 166; Reid v. Ins. Co., 58 Mo. 424. See PHYSICIAN.

FAMILY USE. That use ordinarily made by and suitable for the members of a household whether as individuals or collectively. Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 120. The supply of water in a municipal corporation for family use includes the supply of gaols, hospitals, almshouses, schools, and other municipal institutions; id. See GROCERIES.

FAMOSUS (Lat.). Defamatory; slanderous; scandalous. Used in civil and old English law to express that which affected injuriously the character or reputation.

FAMOSUS LIBELLUS (Lat.). Among the civilians these words signified that species of injuria which corresponds nearly to libel or slander.

FANATIC. A religious enthusiast; a bigot; a person entertaining wild and extravagant notions, or affected by zeal or enthusiam, especially upon religious subjects.

The word was formerly defined in English law as a person pretending to be inspired, and was said to be a term applied to "Quakers, Anabaptists, and all other sectaries, and factious dissenters from the church of England." Jac. L. Dict. See Stat. 13 Car. II. c. 6.

FANEGA. In Spanish Law. A measure of land, which is not the same in every province. Diccionario de la Acad.; 2 White, Recop. 49. In Spanish America, the fanega consisted of six thousand four hundred square varas, or yards. 2 White, Recop. 138.

FARDEL. The fourth part of a yardland. Spelman, Gloss. According to others, the eighth part. Noy, Complete Lawyer 57; Cowell. See Cunningham, Law Dict.

FARDING-DEAL. The fourth part of an acre of land. Spelm. Gloss.

FARE. A voyage or passage. The money paid for a voyage or passage. The latter is the modern signification. See Chase v. R. Co., 26 N. Y. 526; TICKET; PASSENGER.

In case of a water company it means the tax or compensation which the company may charge for furnishing a supply of water. McNeal Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Howland, 111 N. C. 615, 16 S. E. 857, 20 L. R. A. 743. See RATES.

FARLEY or FARLEU. Money paid in lieu of a heriot (q. v.). Applied also to the best chattel as distinguished from heriot,—the best beast. Cowell.

FARLINGARII. Whoremongers; adulterers.

FARM. A certain amount of provision reserved as the rent of a messuage. Spelman, Gloss.

Rent generally which is reserved on a lease; when it was to be paid in money, it was called blanche firme. Spelman, Gloss.; 2 Bla. Com. 42.

A term. A lease of lands; a leasehold interest. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 17; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 301, n.; 2 Chit. Pl. 879, n. e. The land itself, let to farm or rent. 2 Bla. Com. 368.

A portion of land used for agricultural purposes, either wholly or in part. Winn v. Cabot, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 553; Com. v. Carmalt, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 238.

A body of land, usually under one ownership, devoted to agriculture; either to the raising of crops, or pasturage, or both. It is not understood to have any necessary relation to, or to be circumscribed by, political subdivisions. A farm may consist of any number of acres, of one quarter section or less, or many quarter sections; of one field, or many fields; may lie in one township and county, or in more than one; People v. Caldwell, 142 Ill. 434, 32 N. E. 693. See Kendall v. Miller, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 446.

Usually the chief messuage in a village or town whereto belongs a great demesne of all sorts. Cowell; Cunningham, Law Dict.; Termes de la Ley.

A large tract or portion of land taken by a lease under a yearly rent payable by the tenant. Tomlin, Law Dict.

From this latter sense is derived its common modern signification of a large tract used for cultivation or other purposes, as raising stock, whether hired or owned by the occupant, including a messuage with out-buildings, gardens, orchard, yard, etc. Plowd. 195; Touchst. 93.

In American law, the word has almost exclusively this latter meaning of a portion of land used for agricultural purposes, either wholly or in part. Com. v. Carmalt, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 238; Winn v. Cabot, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 553; Wheeler v. Randall, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 529.

By the conveyance of a farm will pass a messuage, arable land, meadow, pasture, wood, etc., belonging to or used with it; Co. Litt. 5 a; Shepp. Touchst. 93; 4 Cruise, Dig. 321; Plowd. 167.

In a will, the word farm may pass a freehold, if it appear that such was the intention of the testator; 6 Term 345; 9 East 448. See 6 East 604, n.; 8 id. 339.

FARM LET. Technical words in a lease creating a term for years. Co. Litt. 45 b; 1 Washb. R. Pr. Index, Lease.

FARM OUT. To rent for a certain term. The collection of the revenue among the Romans was farmed out to persons called publicani. The same system existed in France before the revolution of 1789; and in England the excise taxes were farmed out, and thereby their evils were greatly aggravated. The farming of the excise was abolished in Scotland by the union, having been before that time abandoned in England. In all these cases the custom gave rise to great abuse and oppression of the people, and in France most of the farmers-general, as they were called, perished on the scaffold.

Charter authority to a railroad company to farm out the right of transportation authorizes a lease of the road; Hill v. R. Co., 143 N. C. 539, 55 S. E. 854, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 606.

FARMER. The lessee of a farm. It is said that every lessee for life or years, although it be but of a small house and land, is called farmer. This word implies no mystery, except it be that of husbandman. Cunn. Law Dict.; Cowell; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 318.

In common parlance, and as a term of description in a deed, farmer means one who cultivates a farm, whether he owns it or not. There may also be a farmer of the revenue or of other personal property as well as lands. Plowd. 195; Cunn. Law Dict.

FARMER GENERAL. See FARM OUT.

FARRAGO LIBELLI (Lat.). An ill-composed book containing a collection of miscellaneous subjects not properly associated or scientifically arranged. Whart.

FARRIER. One who takes upon himself the public employment of shoeing horses.

Like an innkeeper, a common carrier, and other persons who assume a public employment, a farrier is bound to serve the public as far as his employment goes, and an action lies against him for refusing, when a horse is brought to him at a reasonable time for such purpose, if he refuses; Oliph. Horses 131; and he is liable for the unskilfulness of himself or servant in performing such work; 1 Bla. Com. 431; but not for the malicious act of the servant in purposely driving a nail into the foot of the horse with the intention of laming him; 2 Salk. 440; Hanover, Horses 215.

FARTHING. In English Law. The one-fourth part of a penny (q. v.).

FARTHING OF GOLD. An ancient coin of the value of one-fourth part of a noble. 9 Hen. V. c. 7.

FARTHING OF LAND. A great quantity of land, differing much from farding-deal, q. v.

FARVAND. Standing by itself, this word signifies "passage by sea or water." In charter-parties, it means voyage or passage by water. 18 C. B. 880.

FARYNDON INN. The ancient designation of Serjeants' Inn, Chancery Lane, London. See INNS OF COURT.

FAS (Lat.). Right; justice. 3 Bla. Com. 2. See PER FAS ET NEFAS.

In primitive times it was the will of the gods, embodied in rules regulating not only ceremonials but the conduct of all men. Taylor, Science of Jurispr. 65.

FAST BILL OF EXCEPTIONS. One which may be taken in Georgia in injunction cases and the like, in time and manner to secure speedy hearing. It is certified within twenty days after the decision. Sewell v. Edmonston, 66 Ga. 353.

FAST-DAY. A day of penitential observance and religious abstinence. As to counting it in legal proceedings, see 1 Chit. Archb. Pr., 12th ed. 160; HOLIDAY.

FAST ESTATE. Real property. A term sometimes used in wills. Jackson v. Merrill, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 185, 5 Am. Dec. 213; Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. 502, 61 Am. Dec. 706.

FASTERMANNES. Securities. Bondsmen. Spelman, Gloss. Men fast bound as sureties of the peace for each other under the Saxon law. Encyc. Lond.

FASTI. See DIES FASTI.

FATHER. He by whom a child is begotten. See PARENT AND CHILD; INFANT.

FATHER-IN-LAW. The father of one's spouse.

FATHOM. A measure of length, equal to six feet. Used as a nautical measure.

The word is probably derived from the Teutonic word fad, which signifies the thread or yarn drawn out in spinning to the length of the arm, before it is run upon the spindle. Webster; Minsheu.

FATUA MULIER. A whore. Du Fresne.

FATUM. In Civil Law. Fate. An overruling power. An event which can neither be anticipated nor prevented. See DAMNUM FATALE.

FATUOUS PERSON. In Scotch Law. One entirely destitute of reason; is qui omnino desipit. Erskine, Inst. b. 1, tit. 7, s. 48. An idiot. Jacob. One who is incapable of managing his affairs, by reason of a total defect of reason. He is described as having uniform stupidity and inattention of manner and childishness of speech. Bell's Law. Dict.

FATUUM JUDICIUM. A foolish judgment or verdict. As applied to the latter it is one rather false by reason of folly than criminally so as amounting to perjury. Bract. f. 289.

FATUUS. An idiot or fool. Bract. f. 420 b. Silly; ill-considered; foolish; indiscreet.

FAUBOURG. A district or part of a town adjoining the principal city; as a faubourg of New Orleans. City Council of Lafayette v. Holland, 18 La. 286.

FAUCES TERRÆ (Lat. jaws of the land). Projecting headlands or promontories, including arms of the sea. Such arms of the sea are said to be inclosed within the fauces terræ, in contradistinction to the open sea. 1 Kent 367. See ARM OF THE SEA; KING'S CHAMBER; TERRITORIAL WATERS; 16 Yale L. J. 471.

FAULT. An improper act or omission, which arises from ignorance, carelessness, or negligence. The act or omission must not have been meditated, and must have caused some injury to another. Leç. Elém. § 783.

In legal literature it is the equivalent of "negligence." An error or defect of judgment or conduct; any deviation from prudence, rectitude, or duty; any shortcoming or neglect of care or performance resulting from inattention, incapacity, or perversity; a wrong tendency, course, or act. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Berry, 2 Ind. App. 427, 28 N. E. 714.

Gross fault or neglect consists in not observing that care towards others which a man the least attentive usually takes of his own affairs. Such fault may, in some cases, afford a presumption of fraud, and in very gross cases it approaches so near as to be almost undistinguishable from it, especially when the facts seem hardly consistent with an honest intention. But there may be a gross fault without fraud; 2 Stra. 1099; Story, Bailm. § 18; Toullier, l. 3, t. 3, § 231.

Ordinary fault consists in the omission of that care which mankind generally pay to their own concerns; that is, the want of ordinary diligence.

A slight fault consists in the want of that care which very attentive persons take of their own affairs. This fault assimilates itself to, and in some cases is scarcely distinguishable from, mere accident or want of foresight.

This division has been adopted by common lawyers from the civil law. Although the civilians generally agree in this division, yet they are not without a difference of opinion. See Pothier, Observation générale sur le précédent Traité et sur les suivants, printed at the end of his Traité des Obligations, where he cites Accussus, Alciat, Cujas, Duaren, D'Avezan, Vinnius, and Heineccius, in support of this division. On the other side the reader is referred to Thomasius, tom. 2, Dissertationem, page 1006; Le Brun, cited by Jones, Bailm. 27; and Toullier, Droit Civil Francais, liv. 3, tit. 3, § 231.

These principles established, different rules have been made as to the responsibilities of parties for their faults in relation to their contracts. They have been reduced to three. See BAILMENT; DOLUS; NEGLIGENCE.

See 2 Sto. Bailm. 24, for a discussion of the definition and classification of fault from Ayliffe, Pand.

FAUTOR. In Spanish Law. Accomplice; the person who aids or assists another in the commission of a crime.

FAUX. In French Law. A falsification or fraudulent alteration or suppression of a thing by words, by writings, or by acts without either. Biret, Vocabulaire des Six Codes.

Toullier says (tom. 9, n. 188), "Faux may be understood in three ways: in its most extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, with or without intention; it is nearly synonymous with lying; in a less extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, accompanied with fraud, mutatio veritatis cum dolo facta; and lastly, in a narrow, or rather the legal, sense of the word, when it is a question to know if the faux be a crime, it is the fraudulent alteration of the truth in those cases ascertained and punished by the law." See CRIMEN FALSI.

FAVOR. Bias; partiality; lenity; prejudice.

The grand jury are sworn to inquire into all offences which have been committed and into all violations of law, without fear, favor, or affection. See GRAND JURY. When a juror is influenced by bias or prejudice, so that there is not sufficient ground for a principal challenge, he may nevertheless be challenged for favor. See CHALLENGE; Bac.

Abr. Juries, E; Queen v. Hepburn, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 290, 3 L. Ed. 348.

FEAL. Truthful; true. The tenants by knight's service used to swear to their lords to be feal and leal. Feal homager, faithful subject.

FEAL AND DIVOT. A right in Scotland, similar to the right of turbary in England for fuel, etc. Wharton.

It is a predial servitude peculiar to the law of Scotland, in virtue of which the proprietor of the dominant tenement possesses the right of turning up and carrying off turf from the servient tenement for the purpose of building fences, roofing houses, and the like. This, as well as the servitude of fuel, implies the right of using the nearest ground of the servient tenement on which to lay and dry the turf peats or fuel. These servitudes do not extend beyond the ordinary uses of the actual occupants of the dominant tenements, and cannot be taken advantage of for such a purpose as to burn limestone for sale. They are not included in the servitude of pasturage, but must be constituted either by express grant, or by possession following on the usual clause of parts and pertinents; Ersk. ii. tit. ix. s. 17. The etymology of these words has been much disputed. Feal or fail is said to come from the Sulo-Gothic wall, any grassy part of the surface of the ground; and Jamieson derives divot from delve (Sax. delfan or delvan), or, as another alternative, says that it may have been formed by the monkish writers of old charters from defodere, to dig the earth. The former is the more probable conjecture. Int. Cyc.

FEALTY. That duty which every man who holds lands of another owes to him of whom he holds.

Under the feudal system, every owner of lands held them of some superior lord, from whom or from whose ancestors the tenant had received them. By this connection the lord became bound to protect the tenant in the enjoyment of the land granted to him; and, on the other hand, the tenant was bound to be faithful to his lord and to defend him against all his enemies. This obligation was called fidelitas or fealty; 1 Bla. Com. 263; 2 id. 86; Co. Litt. 67 b.

This fealty was of two sorts: that which is general, and is due from every subject to his prince; the other special, and required of such only as in respect of their fee are tied by this oath to their landlords; 1 Bla. Com. 367; Cowell.

The oath or obligation of fealty was one of the essential requisites of the feudal relation; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 45, 86; Littleton §§ 117, 131; Wright, Ten. 35; Termes de la Ley; 1 Washb. R. P. 19; see 1 Poll. & Maitl. 277-287, and was as follows: "Hear this ye good people that I (such a one by name) faith will bear to our lord King Edward from this day forward of life and limb, of body and chattels and earthly honor, and the services which belong to him for the fees and tenements which I hold of him will lawfully perform to him as they become due to the best of my power, so help me God and the saints." Stubbs, Const. Hist. § 462 n. Fealty was due alike from freeholders and tenants for years as an incident to their estates to be paid to the reversioner; Co. Litt. 67 b. Chal. R. P. 13. Tenants at will did not have fealty; 2 Burton, R. P. 395, n.; 1 Washb. R. P. 371. It has now fallen into disuse, and is no longer exacted; 3 Kent 510; Wright, Ten. 35, 55; Cowell.

FEAR. Dread; consciousness of approaching danger.

Fear in the person robbed is one of the ingredients required to constitute a robbery from the person; and without this the felonious taking of the property is a larceny. It is not necessary that the owner of the property should be in fear of his own person; but fear of violence to the person of his child; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 718; or to his property; id. 731; 2 Russ. Cr. 72; is sufficient; 2 Russ. Cr. 71. See Bonsall v. State, 35 Ind. 460; State v. Howerton, 58 Mo. 581; DURESS; PUTTING IN FEAR; THREAT.

FEASANCE. A doing; a performing or performance. Feasant, doing or making,—as damage feasant (q. v.). Feasor, doer, maker,—as feasors del estatute, makers of the statute; Dyer 3 b.

FEASTS. Certain established periods in the Christian church. Formerly the days of the feasts of saints were used to indicate the dates of instruments and memorable events; 8 Toullier, n. 81. The feasts of the English church were formerly used to divide the terms of the legal year, but this division was abolished by the judicature act. See TERMS.

FECIAL LAW. A branch of Roman jurisprudence concerned with embassies, declarations of war, and treaties of peace; so called from feciales (q. v.), who were charged with its administration. It more nearly resembles the international law of modern times than any other department of the Roman law.

FECIALES. Amongst the ancient Romans, that order of priests who discharged the duties of ambassadors. Subsequently their duties appear to have related more particularly to the declaring war and peace. Calvinus, Lex.

FEDERAL. A term commonly used to express a league or compact between two or more states.

In the United States the central government of the Union is federal. The constitution was adopted "to form a more perfect union" among the states, for the purpose of self-protection and for the promotion of their mutual happiness. Freeman's Hist. Fed. Govt.; Austin, Jurispr. Lect. 6; see U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588.

FEDERAL COURTS. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT. A union or confederation of sovereign states, created either by treaty, or by the mutual adoption of a federal constitution, for the purpose of presenting to the world the appearance of a single state, while retaining the rights and power of internal regulation and administration, or at least of local self-government.

The more extended the renunciation of individual sovereignty, the more powerful does the new government become and the more nearly does it approach to a substantial union. No real diminution of sovereignty is necessarily involved except the relinquishment of the power of conducting independent relations with foreign powers.

"There are two different modes of organizing a federal union. The federal authorities may represent the governments solely, and their acts may be obligatory only on the governments as such, or they may have the power of enacting laws and issuing orders which are binding directly on individual citizens. The former is the plan of the (old) German so-called confederation, and of the Swiss constitution previous to 1847. It was tried in America for a few years immediately following the war of independence. The other principle is that of the existing constitution of the United States, and has been adopted within the last dozen years by the Swiss confederacy. The federal congress of the American union is a substantive part of the government of every individual state. Within the limits of its attributions, it makes laws which are obeyed by every citizen individually, executes them through its own officers, and enforces them by its own tribunals. This is the only principle which has been found, or which is even likely to produce an effective federal government. A union between the governments only is a mere alliance, and subject to all contingencies which render alliances precarious." Mills, Representative Government 301.

A primary difficulty, it has been said, in framing a federal government and a source of danger to its permanence, is liability to disagreements between the constituent governments or between one or more of the local governments and the federal government as to the limits of their respective powers. The scheme adopted in the American system as a provision for such cases has been thus described: "Under the more perfect mode of federation, where every citizen of each particular state owes obedience to two governments—that of his own state, and that of the federation—it is evidently necessary not only that the constitutional limits of the authority of each should be precisely and clearly defined, but that the power to decide between them in any case of dispute should not reside in either of the governments, or in any functionary subject to it, but in an umpire independent of both. There must be a supreme court of justice, and a system of subordinate courts in every state of the union, before whom such questions shall be carried, and whose judgment on them, in the last stage of appeal, shall be final. Every state of the union, and the federal government itself, as well as every functionary of each, must be liable to be sued in those courts for exceeding their powers, or for non-performance of their federal duties, and must in general be obliged to employ those courts as the instruments for enforcing their federal rights. This involves the remarkable consequence, actually realized in the United States, that a court of justice, the highest federal tribunal, is supreme over the various governments, both state and federal, having the right to declare that any new law made, or act done by them, exceeds the powers assigned to them by the federal constitution, and in consequence has no legal validity." "The tribunals which act as umpires between the federal and state governments naturally also decide all disputes between two states, or between a citizen of one state and the government of another. The usual remedies between nations, war and diplomacy, being precluded by the federal union, it is necessary that a judicial remedy should supply the place. The supreme court of the federation dispenses international law, and is the first great example of what is now one of the most prominent wants of civilized society, a real international tribunal." Id. 305. See Freeman, Fed. Gov't.

The American union is the most striking illustration of federal government in existence, and its permanent character was settled by the civil war which finally determined its indestructibility by action of individual states. In Europe, the empire of Germany and the republic of Switzerland are instances of the operation of successful federal governments, as are most of the South American States; while in the British Empire the Dominion of Canada, the Australian federation, and South Africa, as also the Greater Republic of Central America, are indications of a tendency in that direction which existing conditions are likely to increase very rapidly. See these several titles, and also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA; GOVERNMENT.

FEDERAL QUESTION. A term used to designate a case of which the federal court has jurisdiction because it requires a construction of the constitution or some law of the United States or of a treaty made under its authority. Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 190, 5 Sup. Ct. 407, 28 L. Ed. 908.

The existence or non-existence of a federal question determines the original jurisdiction in many cases of the district court, now the only federal court of first instance, and the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court in cases from the state courts.

The judiciary act of March 3, 1887, as amended Aug. 13, 1888, conferred jurisdiction upon the federal courts in "cases arising under the constitution or laws of the United States," or, as commonly expressed by the profession, in cases involving a "federal question"; In re Sievers, 91 Fed. 366. And the same jurisdiction is conferred by the Judicial Code of March 3, 1911, in section 24 as to the district court, and in section 237 as to cases taken to the supreme court from the state courts; U. S. Comp. Laws (1911) p. 135.

If, from the questions involved in a case, it appears that some title, right, privilege, or immunity, on which the recovery depends, will be defeated by one construction of the constitution, or of a law or treaty of the United States, or sustained by the opposite construction, the case will be one arising under the constitution or laws of the United States, and involves a federal question; Starin v. New York, 115 U. S. 257, 6 Sup. Ct. 28, 29 L. Ed. 388; Provident Sav. Life Assur. Society v. Ford, 114 U. S. 641, 5 Sup. Ct. 1104, 29 L. Ed. 261; Kansas P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 112 U. S. 416, 5 Sup. Ct. 208, 28 L. Ed. 794; Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 462, 4 Sup. Ct. 437, 28 L. Ed. 482. Where it does not appear from the record that a federal question was actually presented or in any way relied on before final judgment below, the supreme court is without jurisdiction; Simmerman v. Nebraska, 116 U. S. 54, 6 Sup. Ct. 333, 29 L. Ed. 535; as it must appear on the record that it was raised and decided, or that its decision was necessary to the judgment or decree rendered; Detroit City R. Co. v. Guthard, 114 U. S. 133, 5 Sup. Ct. 811, 29 L. Ed. 118; McManus v. O'Sullivan, 91 U. S. 578, 23 L. Ed. 390; Chouteau v. Gibson, 111 U. S. 200, 4 Sup. Ct. 340, 28 L. Ed. 400; Harrison v. Morton, 171 U. S. 38, 18 Sup. Ct. 742, 43 L. Ed. 63. See Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Canal Co., 142 U. S. 254, 12 Sup. Ct. 173, 35 L. Ed. 1004.

Spencer v. Silk Co., 191 U. S. 526, 24 Sup. Ct. 174, 48 L. Ed. 287; Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. R. Co., 192 U. S. 371, 24 Sup. Ct. 325, 48 L. Ed. 484; and the supreme court cannot indulge in presumptions to supply omissions from the record; Downham v. Alexandria, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 173, 19 L. Ed. 929; nor can it resort to judicial knowledge to raise controversies not presented by the record; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 188 U. S. 291, 23 Sup. Ct. 375, 47 L. Ed. 480; nor can the court resort to forced inferences and conjectural reasonings, or possible or even probable suppositions of the points raised in and decided by the state courts; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 157, 10 L. Ed. 105; nor is it bound to search the statutes to find one violating the obligation of a contract, when none is set up in pleadings or opinion; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 41, 21 Sup. Ct. 256, 45 L. Ed. 415.

Where the record discloses that no authority was cited or argument advanced in support of an alleged constitutional objection and the decision was based upon other than legal grounds the decision of the state court will not be reversed; Harding v. Illinois, 196 U. S. 78, 25 Sup. Ct. 176, 49 L. Ed. 394.

No particular form of words or phrases in which a claim of federal rights must be asserted in the state court has ever been declared necessary by the supreme court, but it is sufficient if it appears from the record that such rights were specially set up or claimed there in such a way as to bring the subject to the attention of the state court; Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Paper Co., 172 U. S. 66, 19 Sup. Ct. 97, 43 L. Ed. 364; as where the constitutionality of a state statute is directly attacked in the answer; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 193 U. S. 53, 24 Sup. Ct. 396, 48 L. Ed. 614. The federal question must be distinctly raised in the state court, and a mere claim, which amounts to no more than a vague and inferential suggestion that a right under the constitution of the United States had been denied, is not sufficient; Thomas v. Iowa, 209 U. S. 258, 28 Sup. Ct. 487, 52 L. Ed. 782; and it is too late to raise it for the first time in the petition for writ of error to the state court, or in the assignment of errors in the supreme court; id.; Montana v. Rice, 204 U. S. 291, 27 Sup. Ct. 281, 51 L. Ed. 490; Mallers v. Trust Co., 216 U. S. 613, 30 Sup. Ct. 438, 54 L. Ed. 638; so also in a petition for rehearing in the state court of last resort, unless (and it must so appear) that court actually entertains the motion and passes upon the federal question; Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 21 Sup. Ct. 730, 45 L. Ed. 1015; Leigh v. Green, 193 U. S. 79, 24 Sup. Ct. 390, 48 L. Ed. 623; McCorquodale v. Texas, 211 U. S. 432, 29 Sup. Ct. 146, 53 L. Ed. 269; Forbes v. State Council of Virginia, 216 U. S. 396, 30 Sup. Ct. 295, 54 L. Ed. 534; but it is sufficient if this appears in a motion for a new trial and in an assigment of error in the state supreme court; San Jose Land & Water Co. v. Ranch Co., 189 U. S. 177, 23 Sup. Ct. 487, 47 L. Ed. 765, where also it appeared from the opinion of the court that a federal question was raised. Such question, not raised by the pleadings, cannot be availed of on a motion to dismiss; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 28, 21 Sup. Ct. 251, 45 L. Ed. 410. The federal question is raised in time when the plaintiff in error, defendant below, after filing the general issue, moves to amend, claiming rights under the XIVth amendment, and at the trial asks an instruction based thereon; National Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Brahan, 193 U. S. 635, 24 Sup. Ct. 532, 48 L. Ed. 823.

One who relies upon a federal right must specially set it up, and the certificate of the presiding judge of the state court may make more certain and specific what is too general and indefinite in the record, but cannot give jurisdiction where there is nothing in the record by way of a federal question; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith Co., 204 U. S. 551, 27 Sup. Ct. 401, 51 L. Ed. 612; but such certificate that a federal question was raised, though insufficient to give jurisdiction, may be resorted to, in the absence of an opinion, to show that a federal question, which is otherwise raised in the record, was actually passed upon by the court; Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Hewes, 183 U. S. 66, 22 Sup. Ct. 26, 46 L. Ed. 86.

Notwithstanding the claim that a federal question was set up in the state court, if it appears to the supreme court to have no foundation or substance, there is no jurisdiction; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336, 22 Sup. Ct. 691, 46 L. Ed. 936.

Where a federal question is raised in the state courts, the party who brings the case to the supreme court cannot raise there another question which was not raised below; Chapin v. Fye, 179 U. S. 127, 21 Sup. Ct. 71, 45 L. Ed. 119.

In an action in a state court for taxes, where a federal question was not set up in defense until after judgment and reversal by the supreme court of the state, and a new trial was had below in which the question was raised, it was held too late; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 240, 45 L. Ed. 395.

"Whenever the highest court of a state, by any form of decision, affirms or denies the validity of a judgment of an inferior court, over which it by law can exercise appellate authority, the jurisdiction of this court to review such decision, if it involve a federal question will upon a proper proceeding attach. . . . And when this court has once acquired jurisdiction, it may send its process, in the enforcement of its judgment, to the appellate court of the state, or to the inferior court whose judgment is reversed;"

The court will not disturb the judgment of a state court resting on federal and non-federal grounds if the latter are sufficient to sustain the decision; Berea College v. Kentucky, 211 U. S. 45, 29 Sup. Ct. 33, 53 L. Ed. 81; McQuade v. Trenton, 172 U. S. 636, 19 Sup. Ct. 292, 43 L. Ed. 581; White v. Leovy, 174 U. S. 91, 19 Sup. Ct. 604, 43 L. Ed. 907; Harrison v. Morton, 171 U. S. 38, 18 Sup. Ct. 742, 43 L. Ed. 63; Hammond v. Ins. Co., 150 U. S. 633, 14 Sup. Ct. 236, 37 L. Ed. 1206; nor where the decision is upon non-federal ground sufficient to sustain it; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 112, 29 Sup. Ct. 227, 53 L. Ed. 431; nor will it review the final judgment of the highest court of a state, even if it denied some title of right, privilege, or immunity of the unsuccessful party, unless it appear from the record that such right, privilege or immunity "was specially set up or claimed" in the state court by force of the constitution or some treaty, statute, commission or authority of the United States; and in order to comply with the condition that the right invoked must have been specially set up or claimed it must appear that such claim was made unmistakably; Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Kirchoff, 169 U. S. 111, 18 Sup. Ct. 260, 42 L. Ed. 677; F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler County, 166 U. S. 648, 17 Sup. Ct. 709, 41 L. Ed. 1149; Capital Nat. Bank v. Bank, 172 U. S. 425, 19 Sup. Ct. 202, 43 L. Ed. 502.

The state courts are competent to decide federal questions arising before them and it is their duty to do so and there is a presumption that they will do what the constitution and laws require of them; if error intervenes the remedy is a writ of error to the state court, and the federal courts cannot be called on to interpose in a controversy properly pending in the state courts on the ground that the state court might so decide as to render their final action unconstitutional; Defiance Water Co. v. Defiance, 191 U. S. 184, 24 Sup. Ct. 63, 48 L. Ed. 140.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court to review a judgment of a state court depends upon the assertion of a right, privilege, or immunity under the federal constitution or laws set up and denied in state courts, and the latter are not amenable to review for the administration of the common law according to their own understanding and interpretation thereof; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 477, 24 Sup. Ct. 132, 48 L. Ed. 268, affirming Hughes v. R. Co., 202 Pa. 222, 51 Atl. 990, 63 L. R. A. 513, 97 Am. St. Rep. 713. Although a federal right may not have been specially set up in the original petition or earlier proceedings, if it clearly and unmistakably appears from the opinion of the state court under review that a federal question was assumed by the highest court of the state to be in issue and was actually decided against the federal claim and such decision was essential to the judgment rendered, the decision is reviewable by the United States supreme court; Montana v. Rice, 204 U. S. 291, 27 Sup. Ct. 281, 51 L. Ed. 490. It has been held that federal questions are involved in suits brought by corporations created by acts of congress; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Myers, 115 U. S. 2, 5 Sup. Ct. 1113, 29 L. Ed. 319; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Amato, 144 U. S. 465, 12 Sup. Ct. 740, 36 L. Ed. 506; to determine the validity of a railroad consolidation authorized by act of congress; Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 449, 4 Sup. Ct. 437, 28 L. Ed. 482; to enjoin the erection of a bridge across a navigable river authorized by act of congress; Miller v. New York, 13 Blatch. 479, Fed. Cas. No. 9,585; whether full faith and credit were given to a judgment in another state; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; where the supreme court of a state failed to give proper effect to a decree of the circuit court of the United States; Dowell v. Applegate, 152 U. S. 327, 14 Sup. Ct. 611, 38 L. Ed. 463; where a federal officer is sued in trespass to real estate which he claims to have possession for and under authority of the United States; Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 508, 13 Sup. Ct. 418, 37 L. Ed. 259. So, of course, are suits for infringement of patents and copyrights. (For a discussion of the jurisdiction in patent cases, see Henry v. A. B. Dick Co., 224 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 364, 56 L. Ed. 645.) So also of cases in which it is claimed that a state law is invalid because in conflict with the constitution or laws of the United States or as depriving one of some right, privilege, or immunity thereby guaranteed, and criminal prosecutions for violations of federal laws.

A federal question arises in a case in which the correct decision depends upon the construction of a section of the federal constitution; New Orleans, M. & T. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 135, 26 L. Ed. 96; New Orleans Water-Works Co. v. Water-Works Co., 14 Fed. 194; or where it is to be decided whether a judgment of the federal court was a lien on land when the state law was changed after the enactment of the federal law making such judgments liens in all cases where they were such by the laws of the state; Cooke v. Avery, 147 U. S. 375, 13 Sup. Ct. 340, 37 L. Ed. 209; or where on the whole record there is a controversy involving the construction of either the federal constitution or laws; Van Allen v. R. Co., 3 Fed. 545; Leonard v. City of Shreveport, 28 Fed. 257; or where the defence depends wholly on the federal constitution and laws; Hodgson v. Millward, 3 Grant Cas. 418, Fed. Cas. No. 6,568; and cases arising out of legislation of congress whether constituting a right or privilege, or claim or protection, or defence, in whole or in part, of the party by whom it is asserted; Ellis v. Norton, 16 Fed. 4; when the controversy turns upon the existence, effect or operation of a law of the United States, as a suit by a riparian owner to enjoin the construction of a bridge, upon the ground that the defendant was not authorized to build it by an act of congress under which it claimed the right; Hughes v. Ry. Co., 18 Fed. 106; whether by force of the Ordinance of 1787 and treaties with the Miami Indians certain lands were exempt from taxation; Wau-pe-man-qua v. Aldrich, 28 Fed. 489; an action to enforce the trusts of a will bequeathing property situated on a United States reservation at Fortress Monroe, where the question was whether the federal constitution and law had segregated the territory from the state of Virginia and conferred jurisdiction over it on the federal courts; Woodfin v. Phoebus, 30 Fed. 289; when the complainant invokes the protection of a federal law and the case depends on the construction of that law; Richards v. Town of Rock Rapids, 31 Fed. 505; where the case involves the validity of a state tax alleged to be in violation of the federal constitution; U. S. Exp. Co. v. Allen, 39 Fed. 712; whether the marshal's proceedings to enforce a lien under the state law, adopted by rule of the federal court under R. S. § 916, were in conformity with the rule; Sowles v. Witters, 46 Fed. 497; a claim for damages for conspiracy to disbar an attorney from practicing in the state court because he had filed a bill in the federal courts charging defendants with misconduct and corruption in certain litigations pending in the state courts; Green v. Rogers, 56 Fed. 220; a municipal ordinance attacked as unconstitutional because of unreasonable rates, even though their reasonableness cannot be decided from the inspection of the ordinance but needs extrinsic testimony; Capital City Gas Co. v. City of Des Moines, 72 Fed. 818; where the title in litigation involved an examination of the government survey of a lake whose meander line was a part thereof; French-Glenn Live Stock Co. v. Springer, 185 U. S. 47, 22 Sup. Ct. 563, 46 L. Ed. 800; where the bill set up a contract with the state in a railway charter and averred that it had been impaired by subsequent legislation; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 28, 21 Sup. Ct. 251, 45 L. Ed. 410; where a state court denied the contention of the plaintiff in error that a state statute as applied to interstate commerce was in conflict with the commercial clause of the constitution; Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 214 U. S. 218, 29 Sup. Ct. 633, 53 L. Ed. 972; Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg, 204 U. S. 359, 27 Sup. Ct. 384, 51 L. Ed. 520; where the plaintiff in error claimed and set up a right under the constitution of the United States and the decision of the supreme court of the state was tantamount to a denial of that right; Detroit, Ft. W. & B. I. R. Co. v. Osborn, 189 U. S. 383, 23 Sup. Ct. 540, 47 L. Ed. 860; and where the answer in an action in the state court to enforce a lien created by a reassessment of taxes sets up that notice of the reassessment was insufficient and thereby property would have been taken without due process of law; Bellingham Bay & B. C. R. Co. v. New Whatcom, 172 U. S. 314, 19 Sup. Ct. 205, 43 L. Ed. 460.

Whether executors in one state of a testator there domiciled are bound by the decree of the court of another state against an administrator c. t. a. in a case submitted to arbitration before the testator's death under the full faith and credit clause is a federal question; Brown v. Fletcher's Estate, 210 U. S. 82, 28 Sup. Ct. 702, 52 L. Ed. 966; where it was held that they were not bound. Such question also exists where the state court expressly decides adversely to the contention of the plaintiff in error, that a United States statute does not preclude others from asserting rights against him but does preclude him from asserting rights against them; Hammond v. Whittredge, 204 U. S. 538, 27 Sup. Ct. 396, 51 L. Ed. 606; and where not only the scope and applicability of the doctrine of subrogation is involved, but also the extent to which a common carrier is protected by the laws of the United States in paying customs duties on goods in transit over its own lines; Wabash R. Co. v. Pearce, 192 U. S. 179, 24 Sup. Ct. 231, 48 L. Ed. 397.

Where a state court refuses to give effect to a judgment of a federal court which adjudicates that one of the parties has a contract within the protection of the federal constitution, it denies a right secured by the judgment of the federal court upon matters wherein its decision is final; Deposit Bank v. Frankfort, 191 U. S. 499, 24 Sup. Ct. 154, 48 L. Ed. 276.

It has been held that there was no federal question in cases involving questions of property rights established by the Ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory; Menard v. Aspasia, 5 Pet. 505, 8 L. Ed. 207; an action for damages for conspiracy to disbar an attorney from the state courts, his right to practice in the federal courts not being affected thereby; Green v. Elbert, 63 Fed. 308, 11 C. C. A. 207; an action to recover possession of an office from which plaintiff has been ejected after his title was established by election, except when the sole question as to title to office arises out of the denial to citizens of a right to vote on account of race, etc.; Johnson v. Jumel, 3 Woods, 69, Fed. Cas. No. 7,392; a creditor's bill to enforce the collection of an admiralty judgment in the district court; Winter v. Swinburne, 8 Fed. 49; whether the objectionable part of a state local option law having been separated, the rest may stand alone; Ex parte Kinnebrew, 35 Fed. 52; the liability for an assessment for the improvement of a street before the complainant became owner of abutting property; Murdock v. City of Cincinnati, 44 Fed. 726; the arrest by order of the president of a person not subject to military law is not warranted by law so far as to give federal courts jurisdiction of a case arising thereupon; Clark v. Storrs, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 563; the question who is entitled to the alluvion caused by the recession of the Mississippi river; Sweringen v. St. Louis, 185 U. S. 38, 22 Sup. Ct. 569, 46 L. Ed. 795; an action for personal injuries in which it was sought to draw in question the question of the constitutionality of the act of congress incorporating the defendant; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Amato, 144 U. S. 465, 12 Sup. Ct. 740, 36 L. Ed. 506; where the only question is the construction of a charter or contract and subsequent statutes which might have been, but were not, relied on as impairing its obligation; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 41, 21 Sup. Ct. 256, 45 L. Ed. 415. The mere construction of a state statute does not itself present a federal question, nor is there one where the constitutionality of a state statute is admitted and only its applicability to the fact is denied; Knop v. Coke Co., 211 U. S. 485, 29 Sup. Ct. 188, 53 L. Ed. 294; nor when a state statute was assailed in the state court as invalid under the constitution of the state, upon grounds that might have been urged as to its validity under the United States constitution, where the latter objection was first stated on taking the writ of error; Osborne v. Clark, 204 U. S. 565, 27 Sup. Ct. 319, 51 L. Ed. 619.

The mere construction by a state court of a statute of another state and its operation elsewhere, without questioning its validity, does not necessarily involve a federal question or deny to the statute full faith and credit in order to give jurisdiction for a review by the United States supreme court; Allen v. Alleghany Co., 196 U. S. 463, 25 Sup. Ct. 311, 49 L. Ed. 551; nor does a mere contest over a state office depending for its solution exclusively upon the application of the constitution of the state or the construction of a state law; Elder v. Colorado ex rel. Badgley, 204 U. S. 85, 27 Sup. Ct. 223, 51 L. Ed. 381, where it was said that the fact that a state court has considered a federal question may serve to elucidate whether a federal issue properly arises, but that doctrine has no application where the controversy is inherently not federal and is incapable of presenting a federal question.

A quo warranto to forfeit the charter of a corporation for an abuse of its privileges involves no federal question; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336, 22 Sup. Ct. 691, 46 L. Ed. 936.

The amount of benefits resulting from an improvement and assessed under a state statute which the United States supreme court has declared to be constitutional, is a question of fact and a decision of the board making the assessment raises no federal question; Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 310, 24 Sup. Ct. 88, 48 L. Ed. 195; and there is none in a suit for damages for the loss of a registered mail package wherein the plaintiff relied on the general law of negligence; Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. Ry. Co., 192 U. S. 371, 24 Sup. Ct. 325, 48 L. Ed. 484.

Where the state court has construed a state statute so as to bring it into harmony with the federal and state constitutions, there is no power given to the supreme court to review the decision on the ground that the state court exercised legislative power in construing the statute in that manner and thereby violated that amendment; Londoner v. City & County of Denver, 210 U. S. 373, 28 Sup. Ct. 708, 52 L. Ed. 1103; and the construction of a state statute as to whether a contract is created by it and whether the statute is constitutional under the state constitution, is not, in the absence of any claim that the contract, if any, has been impaired by subsequent state action, a federal question; Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 210 U. S. 187, 28 Sup. Ct. 650, 52 L. Ed. 1016. The right of the accused under the Missouri law to an endorsement of the names of witnesses against him on the indictment is not a common-law right, but rests on the state statute, and whether the provision is complied with is not a federal question; Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483, 27 Sup. Ct. 582, 51 L. Ed. 890.

The federal courts cannot, on habeas corpus, inquire into the truth of an allegation presenting mixed questions of law and fact in the indictment on which the demand for the petitioner's interstate extradition is based; and quære whether it may inquire whether such indictment was or was not found in good faith; Pierce v. Creecy, 210 U. S. 387, 28 Sup. Ct. 714, 52 L. Ed. 1113.

Where the plaintiff claims on no federal right, a defence that the transaction was prohibited by federal law does not make a case of federal jurisdiction; Williams v. Bank, 216 U. S. 582, 30 Sup. Ct. 441, 54 L. Ed. 625; nor does the fact that the court of one state construes a statute of another raise a federal question; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 30 Sup. Ct. 676, 54 L. Ed. 921; nor does one arise in an action against a receiver of a state corporation simply because he was appointed by a federal court; Gableman v. Ry. Co., 179 U. S. 335, 21 Sup. Ct. 171, 45 L. Ed. 220, where the subject of actions against receivers appointed by those courts is considered at large.

A federal question may have been so explicitly decided as to afford no basis for a writ of error from the supreme court to a state court; Leonard v. R. Co., 198 U. S. 416, 25 Sup. Ct. 750, 49 L. Ed. 1108; and the question must be a real and not a fictitious federal question; Millingar v. Hartupee, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 258, 18 L. Ed. 829; New Or-

Where the questions raised are frivolous and without merit, assumption of jurisdiction by the supreme court will not be justified by the mere assertion of a federal right; American R. Co. v. Castro, 204 U. S. 453, 27 Sup. Ct. 466, 51 L. Ed. 564; Deming v. Packing Co., 226 U. S. 102, 33 Sup. Ct. 80, 57 L. Ed. 140; Gring v. Ives, 222 U. S. 365, 32 Sup. Ct. 167, 56 L. Ed. 235; nor by the mere fact that a constitutional question is alleged in order to secure a direct appeal from the lower federal court; Goodrich v. Ferris, 214 U. S. 71, 29 Sup. Ct. 580, 53 L. Ed. 914; Farrell v. O'Brien, 199 U. S. 100, 25 Sup. Ct. 727, 50 L. Ed. 101.

A merely colorable claim under a federal statute, or the necessity of referring to a federal statute to explain a contract or local law, does not give federal jurisdiction; St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 68 Fed. 2, 15 C. C. A. 167; such a question cannot be raised in the supreme court if it did not arise below, and where no federal question is otherwise raised, and the only provision of the constitution referred to in the assignment of errors in the state court has no application, an averment of its violation creates no real federal question; Winous Point Shooting Club v. Caspersen, 193 U. S. 189, 24 Sup. Ct. 431, 48 L. Ed. 675; there is no original jurisdiction in the federal court in an action arising out of a contract or dealings of parties, although on the trial questions may arise respecting the construction of a law of the United States; Dowell v. Griswold, 5 Sawy. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 4041.

A circuit court has jurisdiction without regard to the citizenship of the parties; Fischer v. Neil, 6 Fed. 89; Crescent City Live Stock, Landing & Slaughter House Co. v. Slaughter House Co., 12 Fed. 225; Sawyer v. Parish of Concordia, 12 Fed. 754; where the federal questions raised by the bill are not merely colorable but are raised in good faith and not in a fraudulent attempt to give jurisdiction to the circuit court, that court has jurisdiction and can decide the case on local or state questions only, and it will not lose its jurisdiction of the case by omitting to decide the federal questions or deciding them adversely to the party claiming their benefit; Siler v. R. Co., 213 U. S. 175, 29 Sup. Ct. 451, 53 L. Ed. 753.

A federal court should not, unless plainly required so to do by the constitution, assume a duty the exercise of which might lead to a miscarriage of justice prejudicial to the interest of a state; Pierce v. Creecy, 210 U. S. 387, 28 Sup. Ct. 714, 52 L. Ed. 1113.

Where judgment was given on a general demurrer entered for the defendant, and a motion was made to set aside the judgment on the ground that the ordinance of the state upon which it rested was unconstitutional as in conflict with the XIVth Amendment, the constitutional question so raised was set up in time and the supreme court had jurisdiction; Meyer v. Richmond, 172 U. S. 82, 93, 19 Sup. Ct. 106, 43 L. Ed. 374; where the cases are reviewed.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court in cases brought up by writ of error to a state court does not extend to questions of fact or of local laws, which are merely preliminary to or the possible basis of a federal question; Telluride Power Transmission Co. v. Ry. Co., 175 U. S. 639, 20 Sup. Ct. 245, 44 L. Ed. 305. Where rights based on a judgment obtained in one state are asserted in the courts of another under the full faith and credit clause, the power exists in the latter courts to look back of the judgment and ascertain whether the claim which had entered into it was one susceptible of being enforced in another state; Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 21 L. Ed. 897; and where such rights are in due time asserted, the power to decide whether the federal question was raised was rightly disposed of in the court below exists in and involves the exercise of jurisdiction of the supreme court; Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 23 Sup. Ct. 237, 47 L. Ed. 366. When the question of the validity of a state statute, with reference to the federal constitution, has been first raised in a federal court, that court has a right to decide it to the exclusion of all other courts; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 764.

See UNITED STATES COURTS.

FEE. A reward or wages given to one for the execution of his office, or for professional services, as those of a counsellor or physician. Cowell.

Fees differ from costs in this, that the former are, as above mentioned, a recompense to the officer for his services; and the latter, an indemnification to the party for money laid out and expended in his suit; Musser v. Good, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 248. See Lyon v. McManus, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 167. Fees are synonymous with charges; McPheters v. Morrill, 66 Me. 124.

See CHAMPERTY; ETHICS, LEGAL; ATTORNEY.

That which is held of some superior on condition of rendering him services.

A fee is defined by Spelman (Feuds, c. 1) as the right which the tenant or vassal has to the use of lands while the absolute property remains in a superior. But this early and strict meaning of the word speedily passed into its modern signification of an estate of inheritance; 2 Bla. Com. 106; Cowell; Termes de la Ley; 1 Washb. R. P. 51; Co. Litt. 1 b; 1 Prest. Est. 420; 3 Kent 514. The term may be used of other property as well as lands; Old Nat. Brev. 41.

The term is generally used to denote as well the land itself so held, as the estate in the land, which seems to be its stricter meaning. Wright, Ten. 19, 49; Cowell. The word fee is explained to signify that the land or other subject of property belongs to its owner, and is transmissible, in the case of an individual, to those whom the law appoints to succeed him, under the appellation of heirs; and, in the case of corporate bodies, to those who are to take on themselves the corporate function, and, from the manner in which the body is to be continued, are denominated successors; 1 Co. Litt. 271 b; Wright, Ten. 147, 150; 2 Bla. Com. 104, 106.

The compass or circuit of a manor or lordship. Cowell.

A fee-simple is an estate limited to a man and his heirs absolutely. See FEE-SIMPLE.

A fee-tail is one limited to particular classes of heirs. See FEE-TAIL.

A determinable fee is one which is liable to be determined, but which may continue forever. See DETERMINABLE FEE.

A qualified fee is an interest given to a man and certain of his heirs at the time of its limitation. See QUALIFIED FEE; Kelso v. Stigar, 75 Md. 397, 24 Atl. 18.

A conditional fee includes one that is either to commence or determine on some condition; 10 Co. 95 b; Prest. Est. 476; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 9. See CONDITIONS; SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN.

FEE AND LIFE-RENT. In Scotch Law. Two estates in land—the first of which is the full right of proprietorship, the second the limited right of usufruct during life—may be held together, or may co-exist in different persons at the same time. See Bell, Prin. § 1712; Ersk. Prin. 420; FIAR.

FEE-BILL. A schedule of the fees to be charged by clerks of courts, sheriffs, or other officers, for each particular service in the line of their duties.

FEE EXPECTANT. A name sometimes applied to an estate created where lands are given to a man and his wife and the heirs of their bodies. See also FRANK MARRIAGE.

FEE-FARM. Land held of another in fee, —that is, in perpetuity by the tenant and his heirs at a yearly rent, without fealty, homage, or other services than such as are specially comprised in the feoffment. Cowell. Fealty, however, was incident to a holding in fee-farm, according to some authors. Spelman, Gloss.; Termes de la Ley.

Land held at a perpetual rent. 2 Bla. Com. 43.

"This term (fee-farm) has difficulties of its own, for it appears in many different guises. A feoffee is to hold in feofirma, in feufirmam, in fei firmam, in feudo firmam, in feudo firma, ad firmam feodalem, but most commonly in feodi firma. The old English language had both of the words of which this term is compounded, both feoh (property) and feorm (rent). (But the latter seems to be derived from Low Latin, in which firma came to mean a fixed rent or tribute. Skeat, s. v. farm). So in the language of France, and in Norman documents, the term may be found in various shapes, firmam fedium, feudi firmam. But whatever may be the precise history of the phrase, to hold in fee-farm means to hold heritably at a rent. The fee, the inheritance, is let to farm. This term long struggled to maintain its place by the side of socage. The victory of the latter was not complete even in Bracton's day. The complete merger of fee-farm in socage may be due to a statute of Edward I., though the way for it had long been prepared." 1 P. & M. Hist. E. L. 293.

It appears as a separate tenure in Magna Carta and in Bracton and Britton; in the course of the 14th and 15th centuries it became merged in socage. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 46.

FEE-FARM RENT. The rent reserved on granting a fee-farm. It might be one-fourth the value of the land, according to Cowell; one-third, according to other authors. Spelman, Gloss.; Termes de la Ley.

FEE-SIMPLE. An estate of inheritance. Co. Litt. 1 b; 2 Bla. Com. 106. The word simple adds no meaning to the word fee standing by itself. But it excludes all qualification or restriction as to the persons who may inherit it as heirs, thus distinguishing it from a fee-tail, as well as from an estate which, though inheritable, is subject to conditions or collateral determination. 1 Washb. R. P. 51; Wright, Ten. 146; 1 Prest. Est. 420; Littleton § 1.

It is the largest possible estate which a man can have, being an absolute estate. It is where lands are given to a man and to his heirs absolutely, without any end or limitation put to the estate. Plowd. 557; 2 Bla. Com. 106; Chal. R. P. 191. See Brackett v. Ridlon, 54 Me. 426; Haynes v. Bourn, 42 Vt. 686.

Where the granting clause of a deed conveys an estate in fee-simple, a subsequent proviso that the grantee shall not convey without the consent of the grantor is void as a restriction or alienation, general as to time and person, and therefore repugnant to the estate created; Murray v. Green, 64 Cal. 363, 28 Pac. 118; Wilkins v. Norman, 139 N. C. 40, 51 S. E. 797, 111 Am. St. Rep. 767.

In modern estates the terms fee, fee-simple, and fee-simple absolute are substantially synonymous; Jecko v. Taussig, 45 Mo. 170.

The word "heirs" is necessary, in a conveyance, to the creation of a fee-simple, and no expression of intention, in substituted terms, will have an equivalent effect; Sisson v. Donnelly, 36 N. J. L. 434; Edwardsville R. Co. v. Sawyer, 92 Ill. 377; Merritt v. Disney, 48 Md. 344; but see Cole v. Woolen Mfg. Co., 54

N. H. 290; Cromwell v. Winchester, 2 Head (Tenn.) 389; but it is otherwise in a will; Hill v. Hill, 74 Pa. 173, 15 Am. Rep. 545; Arnold v. Brown, 7 R. I. 188.

In the absence of statute, a conveyance of property to a trustee, with power to sell and convey the fee, vests in such trustee an estate in fee-simple, without the use of the word "heirs;" Ewing v. Shannahan, 113 Mo. 188, 20 S. W. 1065. The common-law rule that a fee-simple cannot be conveyed without the word "heirs" does not apply to an exception, or an easement appurtenant to other land of the grantor or of the right to take profit in the soil; Engel v. Ayer, 85 Me. 448, 27 Atl. 352.

FEE-TAIL (Fr. tailler, to shorten). An inheritable estate which can descend to certain classes of heirs only. It is necessary that they should be heirs "of the body" of the ancestor, and these are proper words of limitation. It corresponds with the feudum talliatum of the feudal law. The estate itself is said to have been derived from the Roman system of restricting estates. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 21; 1 Washb. R. P. 66; 2 Bla. Com. 112, n. See, also, Co. 2d Inst. 333; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 607; 4 Kent 14; Chal. R. P. 259; and it is said to exist by virtue of the statute de donis; Crabb, R. P. § 971. See, generally, Wight v. Thayer, 1 Gray (Mass.) 286; Jewell v. Warner, 35 N. H. 176; Bone v. Tyrrell, 113 Mo. 175, 20 S. W. 796; Durant v. Muller, 88 Ga. 251, 14 S. E. 612; Brown v. Addison Gilbert Hospital, 155 Mass. 323, 29 N. E. 625; Ray v. Alexander, 146 Pa. 242, 23 Atl. 383.

An estate-tail may be general, i. e. limited to the heirs of the body merely; or special, i. e. limited to a special class of such heirs, e. g. heirs male or heirs female, or those begotten of a certain wife named; Newton v. Griffith, 1 H. & G. (Md.) 111. In the last case specified, if the wife died without issue, the husband was called tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct.

The restrictions against alienation could be evaded at common law by levying a fine, suffering a recovery. In this country, an entail can generally be barred by deed.

In Pennsylvania, by statute, words which, at common law, would create a fee tail, are to be taken to create a fee simple.

FEED. This word is used in its ordinary sense with reference to cattle and hogs which are said to be made marketable by feeding. Brockway v. Rowley, 66 Ill. 102.

It is also used in the sense of lending additional strength or subsequent support, as "the estate which becomes vested feeds the estoppel;" 5 Man. & Ry. 202, 207; so a subsequent title acquired by the mortgagor is said "to feed the mortgage." See GRAFT.

It is also used in the phrase feeding of a cow by and on the land to signify from the land while there is food on it, and with hay by the owner of the land at other times; 2 Q. B. Div. 49.

FEGANGI. An escaping thief caught with stolen goods in his possession. Spel. Gloss.

FEHMGERICHTE. An irregular tribunal which existed and flourished in Westphalia during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

From the close of the fourteenth century its importance rapidly diminished; and it was finally suppressed by Jerome Bonaparte in 1811. See Bork, Geschichte der Westphalichen Vehmgerichte; Paul Wigand, Das Fehmgericht Westphaleus.

FEIGNED ACTION. An action brought on a pretended right, when the plaintiff has no true cause of action, for some illegal purpose. In a feigned action the words of the writ are true; it differs from false action, in which case the words of the writ are false. Co. Litt. 361, § 689. See FICTITIOUS ACTIONS.

FEIGNED DISEASES. Simulated maladies. Diseases are generally feigned from one of three causes—fear, shame, or the hope of gain. Thus a man engaged in the military or naval service may pretend to be afflicted with various maladies, in order to escape the performance of military duty; the mendicant, to avoid labor and to impose on public or private beneficence; the criminal, to prevent the infliction of punishment. The spirit of revenge, and the hope of receiving exorbitant damages, have also induced some to magnify slight ailments into alarming illness. On this subject, Fodere (vol. ii, 452) observes, at the time when the conscription was in full force in France, "that it is at present brought to such perfection as to render it as difficult to detect a feigned disease as to cure a real one." Zacchias has given five rules for detecting feigned diseases. (1) Inquiry should be made of the relatives and friends of the suspected individual as to his physical and moral habits, and as to the state of his affairs and what may possibly be the motive for feigning disease, particularly whether he is not in immediate danger of some punishment, from which this sickness may excuse him. (2) Compare the disease under examination with the causes capable of producing it; such as the age, temperament, and mode of life of the patient. (3) The aversion of persons feigning disease to take proper remedies. This indeed will occur in real sickness; but it rarely happens when severe pain is present. (4) Particular attention should be paid to the symptoms present, and whether they necessarily belong to the disease. (5) Follow the course of the complaint, and attend to the circumstances which successively occur. Wharton.

FEIGNED ISSUE. An issue brought by consent of the parties, or by the direction of a court of equity, or of such courts as possess equitable powers, to determine before a jury some disputed matter of fact which the court has not the power or is unwilling to decide. A series of pleadings was arranged between the parties, as if an action had been commenced at common law upon a bet involving the fact in dispute. 3 Bla. Com. 452. This is still the practice in most of the states retaining the distinction between the procedure in law and in equity. Under the reformed codes of some states issues may be framed in certain exceptional cases. In England, the practice has been disused since the passing of the stat. 8 and 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 19, permitting any court to refer any question of fact to a jury in a direct form. The act 21 and 22 Vict. c. 27, provided for trial by jury in the court of chancery.

FELAGUS (Lat.). One bound for another by oath; a sworn brother. Du Cange. A friend bound in the decennary for the good behavior of another. One who took the place of the deceased. Thus, if a person was murdered, the recompense due from the murderer went to the father or mother of the deceased; if he had none, to the lord; if he had none, to his felagus, or sworn brother. Cunningham, Law Dict.; Cowell; Du Cange.

FELE. See FEAL.

FELLOW. A co-worker. A partaker or sharer of. A companion; associate; comrade. One united in a legal relation. An incorporated member of a college or collegiate foundation (whether in a university or otherwise).

FELLOW-HEIR. A co-heir.

FELLOW-SERVANTS. Those engaged in the same common pursuit, under the same general control. Cooley, Torts 541.

All who serve the same master, work under the same control, derive authority and compensation from the same common source, are engaged in the same general business, though it may be in different grades or departments of it, are fellow-servants who take the risk of each other's negligence. Thomp. Negl. 1026. As to the rights and liabilities growing out of this relation, see MASTER AND SERVANT; EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

FELO DE SE (Lat.). A felon of himself; a self-murderer. See SUICIDE.

FELON. One convicted and sentenced for a felony.

A felon is infamous, and cannot fill any office or become a witness in any case unless pardoned, except in cases of absolute necessity for his own preservation and defence: as, for example, an affidavit in relation to the irregularity of a judgment in a cause in which he is a party; 2 Stra. 1148; ——— v. Kimborough, 1 N. C. 25; Stark. Ev. pt. 2, tit. Infamy. A conviction in one state where the witness is offered in another does not affect his competency; see Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515; State v. Ridgely, 2 H. & McH. (Md.) 120, 1 Am. Dec. 372; Clark's Lessee v. Hall, 2 H. & McH. (Md.) 378; Cole's Lessee v. Cole, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 572.

A person who has committed a felony, been convicted, served his sentence, and been discharged, has been held to be no longer a felon; 3 Exch. Div. 352.

FELONIA (Lat.). Felony. The act or offence by which a vassal forfeited his fee. Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex. Per feloniam, with a criminal intention. Co. Litt. 391.

Felonice was formerly used also in the sense of feloniously. Cunningham, Law Dict. See next title.

FELONICE. Feloniously. Cun. Dict. Anciently it was said that this word must be used in all indictments for felony; 4 Bla. Com. 407; and Lord Coke includes it among the voces artis,—words of art, which cannot be dispensed with by any periphrasis or circumlocution. 4 Coke 39; Co. Litt. 391 a. See FELONIOUSLY.

FELONIOUS. Having the quality of a felony; malignant; malicious; villainous; perfidious. In a legal sense, done with intent to commit a crime, of the nature of a felony; done with deliberate purpose to commit a crime; in a felonious manner, with deliberate intention to commit a crime. State v. Bush, 47 Kan. 201, 27 Pac. 834, 13 L. R. A. 607.

FELONIOUS HOMICIDE. The killing of a human creature, of any age or sex, without justification or excuse. It may include killing oneself as well as any other person; 4 Bla. Com. 188. The mere intention to commit homicide was anciently held to be equally guilty with the commission of the act; Foster, Cr. L. 193; 1 Russ. Cr. 46, note; but it is said that in ancient law the mere attempt to commit a crime was not punishable; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 507. See HOMICIDE; ATTEMPT.

FELONIOUSLY. This is a technical word which at common law was essential to every indictment for a felony, charging the offence to have been committed feloniously; no other word nor any circumlocution could supply its place; Com. Dig. Indictment (G 6); Bac. Abr. Indictment (G 1); 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 172, 184; 1 Ben. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 154. It is still necessary in describing a common-law felony, or where its use is prescribed by statute; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 260; Bowler v. State, 41 Miss. 570; Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 387; State v. Feaster, 25 Mo. 324; State v. Rucker, 68 N. C. 211; Carder v. State, 17 Ind. 307; State v. Gove, 34 N. H. 510. An indictment for burglary which does not allege that the breaking and entering was "feloniously and burglariously" done is bad, and the defect is not cured by verdict; State v. McClung, 35 W. Va. 280, 13 S. E. 654. In an indictment it is equivalent to purposely or unlawfully; State v. Bush, 47 Kan. 201, 27 Pac. 834, 13 L. R. A. 607.

FELONY. An offence which occasions a total forfeiture of either lands or goods, or both, at common law, to which capital or other punishment may be superadded, according to the degree of guilt. 4 Bla. Com. 94; 1 Russ. Cr. 78; Co. Litt. 391; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 37; U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 153, 5 L. Ed. 57. The essential distinction between felony and misdemeanor is lost in England since the Felony Act of 1870. The distinction there is perfectly arbitrary. At the present day in this country it simply denotes the degree or class of crime committed; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 616.

Blackstone derives it from the Saxon peo or peoh, fee or feud, and the German lon, price, as being a crime punishable with the loss of the feud or benefice. 4 Com. 95. But it is observed that this Saxon word originally signified money or goods, and only in a translated sense feud or inheritance; Lye, Sax. Dict.; and another commentator remarks, "as in petit larceny the lands are not liable to escheat, and petit larceny has always been ranked among felonies, a later writer seems inclined to derive it from pœlen in the sense of offending. 2 Wooddes. 510." Bac. Abr. Felony. In 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 302, it is said to be derived, probably, from the Latin fell or fel, meaning gall—an offence which is venomous or poisonous, citing 2 Poll. & Maitl. 463. Pothier defines felony as an atrocious wrong committed by a vassal towards his lord, by which the former forfeited his fief to the latter.

In American law the word has no clearly defined meaning at common law, but includes offences of a considerable gravity; People v. Van Steenburgh, 1 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 39; Matthews v. State, 4 Ohio St. 542. In general, what is felony under the English common law is such under ours; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 617; Clark, Cr. L. 33. A crime is not a felony unless so declared by statute, or it was such at the common law; State v. Murphy, 17 R. I. 698, 24 Atl. 473, 16 L. R. A. 550. If a statute creates a non-capital offence, not declaring it to be felony, the law will give it the lower grade of misdemeanor; State v. Hill, 91 N. C. 561.

The United States Revised Statutes contain no definition of the word, and the meaning of § 4090, referring to "offences against the public peace amounting to felony under the laws of the United States," is not altogether clear. But in the United States Criminal Code, § 335, all offences punishable by death or by imprisonment for over one year are felonies; all other offenses are misdemeanors. It is defined by statute in many of the states, usually, in effect, that all offences punishable either by death or imprisonment in the state prison shall be felonies. People v. Hughes, 137 N. Y. 29, 32 N. E. 1105; Territory v. Godfrey, 6 Dak. 46, 50 N. W. 481; U. S. v. Coppersmith, 4 Fed. 198, 2 Flip. 551. Express words or necessary implication are required and doubtful words will not suffice; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 622. "When an act of congress makes punishable a crime which under the common law is felony, a fortiori when directly or by necessary implication, it declares a thing to be felony, it is felony; but where a national statute creates a non-capital offence, and is silent as to its grade, it is misdemeanor." 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 671. See U. S. v. Wynn, 9 Fed. 886, which holds that common-law felonies are not within the purview of the constitution unless congress so enacts.

Where a statute permits a milder punishment than imprisonment or death, this discretion does not prevent the offence being felony; People v. War, 20 Cal. 117; State v. Melton, 117 Mo. 618, 23 S. W. 889. See Benton v. Com., 89 Va. 570, 16 S. E. 725; State v. Harr, 38 W. Va. 58, 17 S. E. 794; contra in Illinois; Lamkin v. People, 94 Ill. 501. It has also been held that common-law felonies, punishable less severely than the statutory standard, do not, therefore, cease to be felonies; Drennan v. People, 10 Mich. 169; Ward v. People, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 395; but see Carpenter v. Nixon, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 260; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 620.

Receiving stolen goods was a felony so as to justify arrest without a warrant; Rohan v. Sawin, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 281; Wakely v. Hart, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 316, 2 Term 77. The following have been held not: Adultery; State v. Brunson, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 149; Anderson v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 627, 16 Am. Dec. 776; State v. Cooper, 16 Vt. 551; assault with intent to murder; State v. Boyden, 35 N. C. 505; impeding an officer in the discharge of his duty; State v. Noyes, 25 Vt. 415; involuntary manslaughter by negligence; Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349, 60 Am. Dec. 698; Com. v. Gable, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 423; mayhem; Adams v. Barrett, 5 Ga. 404; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 245; perjury; A. v. B., 1 R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 228; 5 Exch. 378; piracy; 1 Salk. 85; Manro v. Almeida, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 495, 6 L. Ed. 369. In England none of the maritime crimes were felony; Story, Const. § 1162.

One may be guilty of misprision of felony, but not of a misdemeanor. In misdemeanor or treason one may commit the crime of a principal by procuring another to do the action in his absence; but in felony such person is only an accessory before the fact. A person against whose property a misdemeanor has been committed may sue the offender at once, but in case of felony he must by the better opinion first begin prosecution; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 609. Felonies cannot be prosecuted by information; U. S. v. Wynn, 9 Fed. 893. See COMPOUNDING A FELONY.

FELONY ACT. The stat. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, abolishing forfeitures for felony, and sanctioning the appointment of interim curators and administrators of the property of felons. 4 Steph. Com. 10, 459.

FEMALE. The sex which bears the young. It is a general rule that the young of female animals which belong to us are ours; fœtus ventrem sequitur. Inst. 2. 1. 19; Dig. 6. 1. 5. 2. The rule was, in general, the same with regard to slaves; but when a female slave came into a free state, even without the consent of her master, and was there delivered of a child, the latter was free.

FEME COVERT. A married woman. See MARRIED WOMAN; COVERTURE.

FEME, FEMME. A woman.

FEME SOLE. A single woman, including those who have been married, but whose marriage has been dissolved by death or divorce, and, for most purposes, those women who are judicially separated from their husbands. 2 Steph. Com. 250.

FEME SOLE TRADER. A married woman, who, by the custom of London, trades on her own account, independently of her husband; so called, because, with respect to her trading, she is the same as a feme sole. Jacob, Dict.; 1 Cro. 63; 3 Keb. 902; 2 Bish. M. W. § 528. The custom was recognized as common law in South Carolina, but did not extend beyond trading in merchandise; McDaniel v. Cornwell, 1 Hill (S. C.) 429; Newbiggin v. Pillans, 2 Bay (S. C.) 164; under it a woman could not be a feme sole carrier; Ewart v. Nagel, 1 McMullan (S. C.) 50. By statute in several states a similar custom is recognized; thus in Pennsylvania, by act of Feb. 22, 1718, the wives of mariners who had gone to sea were recognized as feme sole traders when engaged in any work for their livelihood, and by act of May 4, 1855, the benefits of this act are extended to all those wives whose husbands, from drunkenness, profligacy, or other cause, neglect or refuse to provide for them, or desert them; 2 P. & L. Dig. 2895. By the latter act she may make application to the court of common pleas and obtain a decree and certificate that she is authorized to do business under said act; id. The act is remedial, and to be construed benignly; Black v. Tricker, 59 Pa. 13; People's Sav. Bank v. Denig, 131 Pa. 241, 18 Atl. 1083. She may convey her real estate by deed in which her husband does not join; Elsey v. McDaniel, 95 Pa. 472. The husband is liable for necessaries. Actual residence with her husband does not take away her privileges under the act; Appeal of Ewing, 101 Pa. 371; and so in South Carolina; Newbriggin v. Pillans, 2 Bay 162.

In North Carolina the doctrine has been rejected; McKinnon v. McDonald, 57 N. C. 1, 72 Am. Dec. 574. In an appeal from the District of Columbia it was said that "the law seems to be settled that when a wife, left by her husband, without maintenance and support, has traded as a feme sole, and has obtained credit as such, she ought to be liable for her debts," whether the husband was banished for crime or abandoned her; but her deed of real estate acquired while a feme sole trader was held void; Rhea v. Rhenner, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 105, 7 L. Ed. 72. In California under a sole trader act, excluding from the benefits of the act a married woman carrying on business in her own name, but managed by her husband, it was held that she could not escape liability as sole trader on the ground that she permitted such management; Porter v. Gamba, 43 Cal. 105. See Swett v. Penrice, 24 Miss. 416.

A married woman, authorized by statute to carry on trade on her sole and separate account, is liable on a note given for property purchased for business purposes; the power to make contracts in such business implies the right to conduct it by the means usually employed; Bodine v. Killeen, 53 N. Y. 93; Frecking v. Rolland, id. 422; Noel v. Kinney, 106 N. Y. 74, 12 N. E. 351, 60 Am. Rep. 423.

See, generally, Husb. Married Women, c. xi.; 2 Bish. M. W. c. xlii.

FEMICIDE. The killing of a woman. One who kills a woman. See HOMICIDE.

FEMININE. Of or belonging to females.

When the feminine is used, it is generally confined to females; as, if a man bequeathed all his mares to his son, his horses would not pass. See State v. Dunnavant, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 9, 5 Am. Dec. 530.

FENATIO, or FEONATIC. In Forest Law. The fawning of deer; the fawning season. Spelm. Gloss.

FENCE. A building or erection between two contiguous estates, so as to divide them, or on the same estate, so as to divide one part from another. It may be of any material presenting a sufficient obstruction; Allen v. Tobias, 77 Ill. 169; and has been held to include a gate; Estes v. R. Co., 63 Me. 308. See 19 Can. L. J. 204.

Fences are regulated by local laws. At common law a landowner is not bound to fence against cattle; Collins v. Lundquist, 154 Mich. 658, 118 N. W. 596; Wood v. Snider, 187 N. Y. 28, 79 N. E. 858, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 912. In general fences on boundaries are to be built on the line, and the cost, when made no more expensively than is required by law, is borne equally between the parties; Norris v. Adams, 2 Miles (Pa.) 337; White v. Snyder, id. 395; Heath v. Ricker, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 72; Burrell v. Burrell, 11 Mass. 294; Holladay v. Marsh, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 142, 20 Am. Dec. 678; Sharp v. Curtiss, 15 Conn. 526; Peschongs v. Mueller, 50 Ia. 237. For modifications of the rule, see Palmer v. Silverthorn, 32 Pa. 65; Climer v. Wallace, 28 Mo. 556, 75 Am. Dec. 135. One adjoining land-owner can compel another to contribute to the expense of maintaining a partition fence only when the fence completes an inclosure which contains no other lands than those of the latter; Kingman v. Williams, 50 Ohio St. 722, 36 N. E. 667; Alma Coal Co. v. Cozad, 79 Ohio St. 348, 87 N. E. 172, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092; Bouchereau v. Guilne, 116 La. 534, 40 South. 863. A partition fence is presumed to be the common property of both owners of the land; 8 B. & C. 257; McCormick v. Tate, 20 Ill. 334; Boenig v. Hornberg, 24 Minn. 307. When built upon the land of one of them it is his; but if it were built equally upon the land of both, at their joint expense, each would be the owner in severalty of the part standing on his own land; 5 Taunt. 20; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 617. See 2 Washb. R. P. 79.

It was held in Barger v. Barringer, 151 N. C. 433, 66 S. E. 439, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831, 19 Ann. Cas. 472, and note, that maliciously to erect a fence on one's property to cut off light and air from his neighbor's property is actionable. The opinion of the court and a dissenting opinion discuss the subject on both sides very fully, the latter taking the ground that "malice disconnected with the infringement of a legal right is not actionable."

The same rule was laid down in Peek v. Roe, 110 Mich. 52, 67 N. W. 1080; and in Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 37 N. W. 838, Campbell, J., dissenting. The contrary rule was sustained in Koblegard v. Hale, 60 W. Va. 37, 53 S. E. 793, 116 Am. St. Rep. 868, 9 Ann. Cas. 732; Giller v. West, 162 Ind. 17, 69 N. E. 548. The subject is regulated by statute in some states. See Horan v. Byrnes, 72 N. H. 93, 54 Atl. 945, 62 L. R. A. 602, 101 Am. St. Rep. 670; Healey v. Spaulding, 104 Me. 122, 71 Atl. 472; Lord v. Langdon, 91 Me. 221, 39 Atl. 552; Scott v. Wilson, 82 Conn. 289, 73 Atl. 781; Brostrom v. Lauppe, 179 Mass. 315, 60 N. E. 785; Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 19 N. E. 390, 2 L. R. A. 81, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560; Smith v. Morse, 148 Mass. 407, 19 N. E. 393. Under such statutes "malevolence must be the dominant motive"; Barger v. Barringer, 151 N. C. 433, 66 S. E. 439, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831, 19 Ann. Cas. 472.

A class of cases has arisen, in this country, regarding the responsibility of railroad companies for protecting their tracks by fences. In some cases they are required by statute to do so, but unless so required they are not under any obligation to do so, having no other duty than other land-owners; 3 Wood, R. R. 1843; Carper v. Receivers of Norfolk & W. R. Co., 78 Fed. 94, 23 C. C. A. 669, 35 L. R. A. 135. A railroad company, when not required by law to fence its tracks, in doing so only exercises extraordinary diligence to prevent danger to cattle, and is not liable if it fails to maintain such fence; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Woodworth, 1 Ind. T. 20, 35 S. W. 238. When the company is required by statute to fence its track, it is only bound to the exercise of reasonable care in maintaining it; Coe v. R. Co., 101 Minn. 12, 111 N. W. 651, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 228, 11 Ann. Cas. 429; Case v. R. Co., 75 Mo. 670; Hendrickson v. R. Co., 68 N. J. L. 612, 54 Atl. 831; a failure renders it liable to an employé for an injury caused thereby; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Reesman, 60 Fed. 370, 9 C. C. A. 20, 23 L. R. A. 768; and see 25 L. R. A. 320, note.

A statutory requirement to fence railroad tracks "to prevent the entrance of cattle upon the road" imposes no duty except as to adjoining owners; Byrnes v. R. Co., 181 Mass. 322, 63 N. E. 897. In New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Price, 159 Fed. 330, 86 C. C. A. 502, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1103, it was held (following the last cited case) that in the absence of legislation there is no legal duty imposed on a railroad company to safeguard children trespassing on its land; and to the same effect, Nolan v. R. Co., 53 Conn. 461, 4 Atl. 106; Western & A. R. Co. v. Rogers, 104 Ga. 224, 30 S. E. 804; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Liidtke, 69 Ohio St. 384, 69 N. E. 653; McCabe v. Woolen Co., 124 Fed. 287. That such a statute is for the protection of persons as well as live stock is held in some jurisdictions; Rosse v. Ry. Co., 68 Minn. 216, 71 N. W. 20, 37 L. R. A. 591, 64 Am. St. Rep. 472; Nickolson v. Ry. Co., 80 Minn. 508, 83 N. W. 454, where it is said, as the duty to fence is absolute, a violation of such duty is evidence of negligence; Hayes v. R. Co., 111 U. S. 228, 4 Sup. Ct. 369, 28 L. Ed. 410.

That a landowner must fence his land, if he has reason to think that children may trespass thereon and be injured, is not an established rule of general law to be applied by federal courts, or at the discretion of a jury in such courts, even when sitting in a district where such rule of law prevails; New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Price, 159 Fed. 330, 86 C. C. A. 502, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1103.

The Virginia fence act was held to impose a duty only to the owners of stock and not to the railroad's employés; and the violation of the act was held no ground of recovery for the death of an employé, killed by the derailing of his train by cattle which came upon the track at a place where the right of way was not fenced. Carper v. R. Co., 78 Fed. 94, 23 C. C. A. 669, 35 L. R. A. 135. The court distinguished the cases of Briggs v. Ry. Co., 111 Mo. 173, 20 S. W. 32; Dickson v. R. Co., 124 Mo. 140, 27 S. W. 476, 25 L. R. A. 320, 46 Am. St. Rep. 429; Donnegan v. Erhardt, 119 N. Y. 468, 23 N. E. 1051, 7 L. R. A. 527, as arising under a special statute.

Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the performance of the statutory duty; 12 L. R. A. 180, note.

The power of the states to require such fencing by statute is fully sustained; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Rowland, 70 Tex. 298, 7 S. W. 718; 35 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 286; and the extent and manner of it are within the legislative discretion; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Dumser, 109 Ill. 402; such statutes are valid under the police power; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Dumser, 109 Ill. 402; Peoria, D. & E. Ry. Co. v. Duggan, 109 Ill. 537, 50 Am. Rep. 619; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. City of Chicago, 140 Ill. 309, 29 N. E. 1109; Emmons v. Ry. Co., 35 Minn. 503, 29 N. W. 202; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mower, 16 Kan. 573; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Riblet, 66 Pa. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 360; Gorman v. R. R.,

26 Mo. 441, 72 Am. Dec. 220; (a leading case collecting authorities and approving Thorpe v. R. Co., 27 Vt. 141, 62 Am. Dec. 625;) and are not unconstitutional as imposing expense on one for the sole benefit of another; Barnett v. R. Co., 68 Mo. 56, 30 Am. Rep. 773.

As a means of compelling railroads to fence their tracks statutes have been enacted in many states making them absolutely liable in damages for killing stock, by analogy to the similar statutes respecting damage by fires from locomotives (q. v.); but such statutes have generally been construed to require only that railroad companies should use reasonable care; Antisdel v. Ry. Co., 26 Wis. 145, 7 Am. Rep. 44; Murray v. R. Co., 3 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 339; Coe v. Ry. Co., 101 Minn. 12, 111 N. W. 651, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 228, 11 Ann. Cas. 429; Zeigler v. R. R. Co., 58 Ala. 594; Jensen v. Ry. Co., 6 Utah 253, 21 Pac. 994, 4 L. R. A. 724; Bielenberg v. Ry. Co., 8 Mont. 271, 20 Pac. 314, 2 L. R. A. 813; Thompson v. R. Co., 8 Mont. 279, 21 Pac. 25; State v. Divine, 98 N. C. 778, 4 S. E. 477; Wadsworth v. Ry. Co., 18 Colo. 600, 33 Pac. 515, 23 L. R. A. 812, 36 Am. St. Rep. 309; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mower, 16 Kan. 573; Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Smalley, 1 Wash. 206, 23 Pac. 1008, 22 Am. St. Rep. 143, 25 L. R. A. 320, note.

In some states the common law requiring the owner of cattle to keep them within a sufficient enclosure is held not to be in force; Buford v. Houtz, 133 U. S. 320, 10 Sup. Ct. 305, 33 L. Ed. 618; and in such case a railroad company, while not required to fence, and fully authorized to transact its lawful business on its track, must exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring cattle which have wandered on their premises, and is liable for accidents which by ordinary care could have been prevented; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Field, 46 Miss. 573; Alabama G. S. Ry. Co. v. McAlpine, 71 Ala. 545; Isbell v. R. Co., 27 Conn. 393, 71 Am. Dec. 78; Western Maryland R. Co. v. Carter, 59 Md. 306; Trow v. R. Co., 24 Vt. 487, 58 Am. Dec. 191; Donovan v. R. Co., 89 Mo. 147, 1 S. W. 232. Where it is the duty of the company, arising out of the contract, to fence its track, a failure to comply with the terms of such contract renders the company liable for all injuries to animals consequent thereon. See DEPOT GROUNDS.

See, generally, as to fencing railroads; 3 Wood, R. R. §§ 417, 421, where the cases are collected; 5 L. R. A. 737, note, and 8 L. R. A. 135, note, both citing statutes and decisions; 11 L. R. A. 427, note (Missouri statutes and decisions); Whart. Negl. 892; Parker v. Ry. Co., 93 Mich. 607, 53 N. W. 834; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Finch, 42 Ill. App. 90; Donnegan v. Erhardt, 119 N. Y. 468, 23 N. E. 1051, 7 L. R. A. 527; Dickson v. R. Co., 124 Mo. 140, 27 S. W. 476, 25 L. R. A. 320, 46 Am. St. Rep. 429.

It is held that one is not necessarily negligent in using a barbed wire fence, but it should be so used and cared for as not to endanger persons and property, and the use of such fences imposes upon those who use them care reasonably proportionate to their danger; Sisk v. Crump, 112 Ind. 504, 14 N. E. 381, 2 Am. St. Rep. 213; a railroad company using barbed fences must use due diligence in running its trains, not only to avoid killing stock, but to avoid precipitating them by fright against the fence to be mangled or bruised; Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Hudson, 62 Ga. 680. On his own land one may maintain such a fence, and it is not illegal; Worthington v. Wade, 82 Tex. 26, 17 S. W. 520, affirming Davis v. Davis, 70 Tex. 123, 7 S. W. 826; and expressly disapproving Williams v. Mudgett, 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 254; s. c. 2 Tex. L. Rev. 338 (commented on, 29 Alb. L. J. 23), in which it was held that "such fences are dangerous unless constructed with planks in connection with the wire." But this case was also reviewed with all analogous cases in 8 Ont. H. B. Div. 583; where it was held that it was not negligence per se to maintain such fences and they were not a nuisance. The owner is bound to keep the wires properly stretched and not hanging loose; Loveland v. Gardner, 79 Cal. 317, 21 Pac. 766, 4 L. R. A. 395; Sisk v. Crump, 112 Ind. 504, 14 N. E. 381, 2 Am. St. Rep. 213. See 10 N. J. L. J. 43. One who has allowed the use of his land by the public before stretching a barbed wire fence across the way is bound to give notice, in order to escape liability for injury resulting from ignorance of the obstruction; Carskaddon v. Mills, 5 Ind. App. 22, 31 N. E. 559. If it was negligence to maintain such a fence near a private road, it would be negligence in a person riding a horse difficult to control, to approach it; Worthington v. Wade, 82 Tex. 26, 17 S. W. 520. See ANIMAL.

In Scotch Law. To hedge in or protect by certain forms. To fence a court, to open in due form. Pitcairn, Cr. Law, pt. 1, p. 75.

FENCE-MONTH. A month in which it is forbidden to hunt in the forest. It begins fifteen days before midsummer and ends fifteen days after. Manw. For. Laws, c. 23. There were also fence-months for fish. Called, also defence-month, because the deer are then defended from "scare or harm." Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

FENDER. A guard or protection against danger. Cape May, D. B. & S. P. R. Co. v. Cape May, 59 N. J. L. 396, 36 Atl. 696, 36 L. R. A. 653. To require their use on electric cars is within the powers conferred on a city council. id. See MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE.

FENERATION. The action or practice of lending on interest; usury. In some modern dictionaries, applied to interest on money lent. See Colebrook, Dig. Hindu Law, I. 7.

FENGELD (Sax.). A tribute exacted for repelling enemies. Spelman, Gloss.

FEOD. Said to be compounded of the two Saxon words feoh (stipend) and odh (property); by others, to be composed of feoh (stipend) and hod (condition). 2 Bla. Com. 45; Spelman, Gloss. See FEE; FEUD.

FEODAL. Belonging to a fee or feud; feudal. More commonly used by the old writers than feudal.

FEODAL ACTIONS. Real actions. 3 Bla. Com. 117.

FEODAL LAW. Feodal system. See FEUDAL LAW.

FEODALITY. Fidelity or fealty. Cowell. See FEALTY.

FEODARUM, or FEUDARAM CONSUETUDINES. See FEUDAL LAWS.

FEODARY. An officer in the court of wards, appointed by the master of that court, by virtue of the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 46, to be present with the escheator at the finding offices and to give in evidence for the king as to value and tenure. He was also to survey and receive rents of the ward-lands and assign dower to the king's widows. The office was abolished by stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24; Kennett, Gloss.; Cowell.

FEODATORY, or FEUDATORY. The grantee of a feud or fee. The tenant or vassal who held an estate by feudal service. Termes de la Ley; 2 Bla. Com. 46.

FEODI FIRMA (L. Lat.). Fee-farm, which see.

FEODUM. The form in use by the old English law-writers instead of feudum, and having the same meaning. Feudum is used generally by the more modern writers and by the feudal law-writers. Littleton § 1; Spelman, Gloss. There were various classes of feoda. See FEUDUM.

FEOFFAMENTUM. A feoffment. 2 Bla. Com. 310.

FEOFFARE. To bestow a fee. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 91.

FEOFFATOR. A feoffor; he who gives or grants a fee, or who makes a feoffment. Bract. fols. 12 b, 81.

FEOFFATUS. A feoffee; one to whom a fee is given or a feoffment made. Bract. fols. 17 b, 44 b.

FEOFFEE. He to whom a fee is conveyed. Littleton § 1; 2 Bla. Com. 20.

FEOFFEE TO USES. A person to whom land was conveyed for the use of a third party. One holding the same position with reference to a use that a trustee does to a trust. 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 333. He answers to the hæres fiduciarius of the Roman law. See FEOFFMENT TO USE.

FEOFFMENT. A gift of any corporeal hereditaments to another. It operates by transmutation of possession; and it is essential to its completion that the seisin be passed. Watk. Conv. 183.

The conveyance of a corporeal hereditament either by investiture or by livery of seisin. 1 Sullivan, Lect. 143; 1 Washb. R. P. 33; Chal. R. P. 363.

A gift of a freehold interest in land accompanied by livery of seisin. In mediæval days it was the normal mode of transferring a freehold interest in land of free tenure. The essential part is the livery of seisin. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 187.

The instrument or deed by which such hereditament is conveyed.

This was one of the earliest modes of conveyance used in the common law. It signified originally the grant of a fee or feud; but it came in time to signify the grant of a free inheritance in fee, respect being had rather to the perpetuity of the estate granted, than to the feudal tenure; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 90. The feoffment was likewise accompanied by livery of seisin; 1 Washb. R. P. 33. The conveyance by feoffment with livery of seisin has become infrequent, if not obsolete, in England, and in this country has not been used in practice; Dane, Abr. c. 104; Stearn, Real Act. 2; Green v. Liter, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 229, 3 L. Ed. 545.

Formerly the use of writing was the exception; after the Conquest it became more frequent. Writing was not required until the statute of frauds; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 187.

FEOFFMENT TO USE. A feoffment of lands made to one person for the benefit or to the use of another. In such case the feoffee was bound in conscience to hold the lands according to the use, and could himself derive no benefit. Sometimes such feoffments were made to the use of the feoffer. The effect of such conveyance was entirely changed by the statute of uses. See Wms. R. P. (6th ed.) 155; USE. Since that statute, a feoffment directed to operate to the use of any other person than the feoffee, though it be a common-law conveyance, so far as it conveys the land to the feoffee, derives its effect from the statute of uses, so far as the use is limited by it to the person or persons in whose favor it is declared. Thus, if A be desirous to convey to B in fee, he may do so by enfeoffing a third person, C, to hold to him and his heirs to the use of B and his heirs, the effect of which will be to convey the legal estate in fee-simple to B. For since the statute of uses, the legal estate passes to the feoffee by means of the livery as it would have done before; but no sooner has this taken place than the limitation to uses begins to operate, and C thereby becomes seised to the use defined or limited, the consequence of which is that by force of the legislative enactment the legal estate is eo instanti taken out of him, and vests in B, for the like interest as was limited in the use. B thus becomes the legal tenant as effectually as if the feoffment had been made to himself, and without the intervention of a trustee. This method is not much practised in consequence of the livery of seisin, which has become obsolete. See 2 Sand. Us. 13; Watk. Conv. 288; FEOFFMENT.

FEOFFOR. He who makes a feoffment. 2 Bla. Com. 20; Litt. § 1.

FEOH (Sax.). A reward; wages; a fee. The word was in common use in these senses. Spelman, Feuds.

FEORME. A certain portion of the produce of the land due by the grantee to the lord according to the terms of the charter. Spelman, Feuds c. 7.

FERÆ BESTIÆ. Wild beasts.

FERÆ NATURÆ (Lat. of a wild nature; untamed). A term used to designate animals not usually tamed, or not regarded as reclaimed so as to become the subject of property.

Such animals belong to the person who has captured them only while they are in his power; for if they regain their liberty his property in them instantly ceases, unless they have animum revertendi, which is to be known only by their habit of returning; 2 Bla. Com. 386; Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 546; Brooke, Abr. Propertie 37; Com. Dig. Biens, F; 7 Co. 17 b; Inst. 2. 1. 15; [1896] 1 Q. B. 166.

Property in animals feræ naturæ is not acquired by hunting them and pursuing them; if, therefore, another person kills such animal in the sight of the pursuer, he has a right to appropriate it to his own use; Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 175, 2 Am. Dec. 264. But if the pursuer brings the animal within his own control, as by entrapping it or wounding it mortally, so as to render escape impossible, it then belongs to him; id.; though if he abandons it another person may afterwards acquire property in the animal; Buster v. Newkirk, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 75. The owner of land has a qualified property in animals feræ naturæ when, in consequence of their inability and youth, they cannot go away. See Year B. 12 Hen. VIII. (9 B, 10 A); 2 Bla. Com. 394; Bacon, Abr. Game.

A Louisiana statute was held constitutional which prescribed that dogs are only to be regarded as personal property when recorded on assessment rolls. The court said: "The very fact that they are without protection of the criminal laws shows that property in dogs is an imperfect or qualified nature, and that they stand, as it were, between animals feræ naturæ, in which until subdued there is no property, and domestic animals, in which the right of property is complete." Sentell v. R. Co., 166 U. S. 698, 17 Sup. Ct. 693, 41 L. Ed. 1169. See GAME; ANIMALS.

FERDELLA TERRÆ. A fardel land; ten acres; or perhaps a yard-land. Cowell.

FERDINGUS. Apparently a freeman of the lowest class, being named after the cotseti. Anc. Inst. Eng.

FERDWITE. An acquittance of manslaughter committed in the army; also a fine imposed on persons for not going forth on a military expedition. Cowell.

FERIA (Lat.). In Old English Law. A week-day; a holiday; a day on which process may not be served; a fair; a ferry. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 17.

FERIÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Holidays. Numerous festivals were called by this name in the early Roman empire. In the later Roman empire the single days occurring at intervals of a week apart, commencing with the seventh day of the ecclesiastical year, were so called. Du Cange.

All feriæ were dies nefasti. They were divided into two classes,—"feriæ publicæ" and "feriæ privatæ." The latter were only observed by single families or individuals in commemoration of some particular event which had been of importance to them or their ancestors. Smith, Dict. Antiq.

FERIAL DAYS. Originally and properly, days free from labor and pleading. In statute 27 Hen. VI. c. 5, working-days. Cowell.

FERLING. In English Law. The fourth part of a penny; also, the quarter of a ward in a borough.

FERLINGATA. A fourth part of a yard-land.

FERLINGUS, or FERLINGUM. A furlong. Co. Litt. 5 b.

FERM, or FEARM. A house or land, or both, let by lease. Cowell.

FERME (Sax.). A farm; a rent; a lease; a house or land, or both, taken by indenture or lease. Plowd. 195; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Cowell. See FARM.

FERMER, FERMOR. A lessee; a farmer. One who holds a term, whether of lands or an incorporeal right, such as customs or revenue.

FERMIER. In French Law. One who farms any public revenue.

FERMISONA. The winter season for killing deer.

FERNIGO. In English Law. A waste ground or place where ferns grow. Cowell.

FERRATOR. A farrier (q. v.).

FERRIAGE. The toll or price paid for the transportation of persons and property across a ferry. People v. R. Co., 35 Cal. 606.

FERRUERE. The shoeing of horses. Kelham.

FERRY. A liberty to have a boat upon a river for the transportation of men, horses, and carriages with their contents, for a reasonable toll. State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9; State v. Freeholders of Hudson County, 23 N. J. L. 206; Woolr. Ways 217. The term is also used to designate the place where such liberty is exercised; Chapelle v. Wells, 4 Mart. La. (N. S.) 426. Ferry properly means a place of transit across a river or arm of the sea; but in law it is treated as a franchise, and defined as the exclusive right to carry passengers across a river, or arm of the sea, from one vill to another, or to connect a continuous line of road leading from one township or vill to another. It is not a servitude or easement. It is wholly unconnected with the ownership or occupation of land, so much so that the owner of the ferry need not have any property in the soil adjacent on either side. 12 C. B. N. S. 32.

In a strict sense a ferry is a continuation of a highway from one side of the water to the other and is for the transportation of passengers, vehicles and other property; Mayor, etc., of New York v. Starin, 106 N. Y. 11, 12 N. E. 631; Broadnax v. Baker, 94 N. C. 675, 55 Am. Rep. 633. A boat equipped with tracks for railroad cars and exclusively used for their transportation as a part of a through railroad line is not an ordinary ferry, but is essentially a part of interstate commerce; St. Clair County v. Transfer Co., 192 U. S. 454, 24 Sup. Ct. 300, 48 L. Ed. 518.

The point of departure was held to be the home of the ferry where it crossed the river which was the boundary between Ohio and West Virginia, although the jurisdiction of West Virginia extended to low-water mark on the Ohio side; State v. Faudre, 54 W. Va. 122, 46 S. E. 269, 63 L. R. A. 877, 102 Am. St. Rep. 927, 1 Ann. Cas. 104.

An exclusive right of ferry exists where one acquires the sole and exclusive privilege of taking tolls for such service. The element of receiving payment is essential, as one may lawfully transport his own goods in a boat, where an exclusive right of ferry is held by another; Alexandria, W. & K. Ferry Co. v. Wisch, 73 Mo. 655, 39 Am. Rep. 535.

In England, ferries are established by royal grant or by prescription, which is an implied grant; in the United States, by legislative authority, exercised either directly or by a delegation of powers to courts, commissioners, or municipalities; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344; id., 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773; Wethersfield v. Humphrey, 20 Conn. 218; Day v. Stetson, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 365; Cloyes v. Keatts, 18 Ark. 19. Without such authority no one, though he may be the owner of both banks of the river, has the right to keep a public ferry; Stark v. Miller, 3 Mo. 470; Trustees of Schools v. Tatman, 13 Ill. 27; Young v. Harrison, 6 Ga. 130; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773; Willes 508; though after twenty years' uninterrupted use such authority will be presumed to have been granted; Pipkin v. Wynns, 13 N. C. 402; Stark v. McGowen, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 389; Mills v. St. Clair County Com'rs, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 53; Williams v. Turner, 7 Ga. 348; but see Scott v. Wilson, 11 S. W. 303, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 940. The franchise of a ferry will, in preference, be granted to the owner of the soil, but may be granted to another; and by virtue of the right of eminent domain the soil of another may be condemned to the use of the ferry, upon making just compensation; 6 B. & C. 703; Allen v. Farnsworth, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 189; Sparks v. White, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 86; Pipkin v. Wynns, 13 N. C. 403; Harrison v. Young, 9 Ga. 359; Harvie v. Cammack, 6 Dana (Ky.) 242; Warner v. Mfg. Co., 123 Ky. 103, 93 S. W. 650, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667; Day v. Stetson, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 365; In re Hanson, 2 Cal. 262. If the termini of the ferry be a highway, the owner of the fee will not be entitled to compensation; 3 Kent 421; Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County v. State, 24 N. J. L. 718; Somerville v. Wimbish, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 205; though in Pennsylvania and other states a different doctrine prevails; Cooper v. Smith, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 31, 11 Am. Dec. 658; Chess v. Manown, 3 Watts (Pa.) 219; Pearsall v. Post, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 111; 4 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 520; Corporation of Memphis v. Overton, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 387. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

One state has the right to establish ferries over a navigable river separating it from another state or from a foreign territory, though its jurisdiction may extend only to the middle of such river; and the exercise of this right does not conflict with the provision in the constitution of the United States conferring upon congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states," nor with any law of congress upon that subject; Corporation of Memphis v. Overton, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 387; State v. Freeholders of Hudson County, 23 N. J. L. 206; Mills v. County of St. Clair, 2 Gilm. (Ill.) 197; Tugwell v. Ferry Co., 74 Tex. 480, 9 S. W. 120, 13 S. W. 654. In Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black (U. S.) 603, 17 L. Ed. 191, a ferry franchise on the Ohio was held to be grantable under the laws of Kentucky to a citizen of that state who was a riparian owner on the Kentucky side. It was said not to be necessary to the validity of the grant that the grantee should have the right of landing on the other side. In Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 U. S. 365, 2 Sup. Ct. 257, 27 L. Ed. 419, a state was held to have the power to impose a license fee upon ferry keepers living in the state for boats which they owned and used in conveying from a landing in the state passengers and goods across a navigable river to another state, and this was not a regulation of commerce; but a tax upon persons owning and running tow boats from the Gulf of Mexico to New Orleans was held void as a regulation of commerce; Moran v. New Orleans, 112 U. S. 69, 5 Sup. Ct. 38, 28 L. Ed. 653. In Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 29 L. Ed. 158, Pennsylvania attempted to tax the capital stock of a corporation the business of which was the ferrying of passengers and freight across the Delaware river to New Jersey. The ferry boats were registered in New Jersey and were taxable there. The court held it to be an interference with interstate commerce. In Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Kentucky, 188 U. S. 385, 23 Sup. Ct. 463, 47 L. Ed. 513, a Kentucky corporation operating a ferry across the Ohio river was held to be deprived of its property without due process of law by the action of Kentucky in including for purposes of taxation in the valuation of the franchise derived by the corporation from Kentucky the value of an Indiana franchise for a ferry from the Indiana to the Kentucky shore, which such corporation had acquired. No portion of the business of a ferry which is part of an interstate railway is under the control of the state; the state authorities have no power to regulate the fares of passengers whether railroad passengers or not; New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Board of Freeholders, 227 U. S. 248, 33 Sup. Ct. 269, 57 L. Ed. —, reversing New York Cent. & H. R. Co. v. Board of Freeholders, 76 N. J. L. 664, 74 Atl. 954, 16 Ann. Cas. 858. The granting of a temporary license to operate a ferry within the city limits, is valid; Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 550, 17 S. W. 884. A state may at its pleasure erect a new ferry so near an older ferry as to impair or destroy the value of the latter by drawing away its custom, unless the older franchise be protected by the terms of its grant; In re Fay, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 243; Carter v. Kalfus, 6 Dana (Ky.) 43; Shorter v. Smith, 9 Ga. 517; West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. (U. S.) 507, 12 L. Ed. 535; Fanning v. Gregoire, 16 How. (U. S.) 524, 14 L. Ed. 1043; Mills v. St. Clair County, 2 Gil. (Ill.) 197; Green v. Ivey, 45 Fla. 338, 33 South. 711; Davis v. Police Jury, 1 La. Ann. 288; Mayor, etc., of City of Columbus v. Rodgers, 10 Ala. 37; Costar v. Brush, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 628. See Bridgewater Ferry Co. v. Bridge Co., 145 Pa. 404, 22 Atl. 1039; Wheeling & B. Bridge Co. v. Bridge Co., 138 U. S. 287, 11 Sup. Ct. 301, 34 L. Ed. 967.

A ferry franchise is not infringed by the grant of a bridge franchise, though the bridge diverts the travel from an ancient ferry; [1908] 1 Ch. 41. But if an individual, without authority from the state, erect a new ferry so near an older ferry, lawfully established, as to draw away the custom of the latter, such individual will be liable to an action on the case for damages, or to a suit in equity for an injunction in favor of the owner of the latter; 6 M. & W. 234; Nixon v. Reid, 8 S. D. 507, 67 N. W. 57, 32 L. R. A. 315; Harrell v. Ellsworth, 17 Ala. 584; City of Newport v. Taylor's Ex'rs, 16 B. Monr. (Ky.) 699; Taylor v. R. Co., 49 N. C. 277; Long v. Beard, 7 N. C. 57; but he may transport his own goods in his own boats where another has an exclusive right of ferry; Alexandria, W. & K. Ferry Co. v. Wisch, 73 Mo. 655, 39 Am. Rep. 535; Capital City Ferry Co. v. Transp. Co., 51 Mo. App. 228; Tugwell v. Ferry Co., 74 Tex. 480, 9 S. W. 120, 13 S. W. 654. He may not, however, offer the free use of his boats to his customers as an inducement to secure their trade where he thereby diverts their patronage from a lawfully established ferry; Inhabitants of Peru & Dixfield v. Barrett, 100 Me. 213, 60 Atl. 968, 70 L. R. A. 567, 109 Am. St. Rep. 494. The grant to a city by the legislature of the right of licensing ferries, does not empower the city to grant exclusive ferry privileges; Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 550, 17 S. W. 884.

The franchise of a ferry is an incorporeal hereditament, and as such it descends to heirs, is subject to dower, may be leased, sold, and assigned; 5 Com. Dig. 291; 12 East 334; Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 376, Fed. Cas. No. 1,740; Stark v. Miller, 3 Mo. 470; Garrett v. Ricketts, 9 Ala. 529; Capital City Ferry Co. v. Transp. Co., 51 Mo. App. 228; McCearly v. Swayze, 65 Miss. 351, 3 South. 657; and when created by act of the legislature can be conveyed only by deed; Gunterman v. People, 138 Ill. 518, 28 N. E. 1067; but, nevertheless, being a franchise in which the public have rights and interests, it is subject to legislative regulation for the enforcement and protection of such rights and interests; Cooley, Const. Lim. 732; Benson v. Mayor, etc., 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 223; Chosen Freeholders of Hudson Co. v. State, 24 N. J. L. 718; City of New Newport v. Taylor's Heirs, 11 B. Monr. (Ky.) 361.

The owners of ferries are common carriers, and liable as such for the carriage of the goods and persons which they receive upon their boats. They are bound to have their ferries furnished with suitable boats, and to be in readiness at all proper times to transport all who apply for a passage; Ang. High. 437; Wallen v. McHenry, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 245; Pomeroy v. Donaldson, 5 Mo. 36; Fisher v. Clisbee, 12 Ill. 344; May v. Hanson, 5 Cal. 360, 63 Am. Dec. 135; 10 M. & W. 161; Evans v. Rudy, 34 Ark. 383; Koretke v. Irwin, 100 Ala. 323, 13 South. 943, 21 L. R. A. 787. They must have their flats so made and so guarded with railings that all drivers with horses and carriages may safely enter thereon; and as soon as the carriage and horses are fairly on the drops or slips of the flat, and during their transportation, although driven by the owner or his servant, they are in the possession of the ferryman, and the owners of the ferry are answerable for the loss or injury of the same unless occasioned by the fault of the driver; Cohen v. Hume, 1 McCord (S. C.) 439; 16 E. L. & Eq. 437; Albright v. Penn, 14 Tex. 290; Richards v. Fuqua's Adm'rs, 28 Miss. 792, 64 Am. Dec. 121; Wilson v. Hamilton, 4 Ohio St. 722; White v. Winnisimmet Co., 7 Cush. (Mass.) 155; they are not required to have railings at the end of their boats when not in actual use, so as to prevent runaway teams from entering and passing over the same to the river; Evans v. Goodrich, 46 Minn. 388, 49 N. W. 188; see NEGLIGENCE; but it is also well settled that if the owner retains control of the property himself and does not surrender the charge to the ferryman, such strict liability does not attach, and he is only responsible for actual negligence; Harvey v. Rose, 26 Ark. 3, 7 Am. Rep. 595; Wyckoff v. Ferry Co., 52 N. Y. 32, 11 Am. Rep. 650; 10 M. & W. 546; 36 Am. Rep. 504, n. See Printup v. Patton, 91 Ga. 422, 18 S. E. 311. If the ferry be rented, the tenant and not the owner is subject to these liabilities, because such tenant is pro hac vice the owner; Biggs v. Ferrell, 34 N. C. 1; Norton v. Wiswall, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 618; Felton v. Deall, 22 Vt. 170, 54 Am. Dec. 61. See article in 4 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 517; 19 id. 148; Washb. Easements; Ang. Water Courses.

See COMMERCE; TAXATION; RATES.

FERRYMAN. One employed in taking persons across a river or other stream, in boats or other contrivances, at a ferry. Covington Ferry Co. v. Moore, 8 Dana (Ky.) 158.

FERTILIZERS. The manufacture of fertilizer is a lawful business. The materials necessary to its composition, though objectionable and unwholesome, are property. So long as a municipal corporation allows such an industry within its limits, it cannot forbid the importation of materials requisite for its production; Fulton v. Norteman, 60 W. Va. 562, 55 S. E. 658, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1196. But a board of health may forbid the use of certain materials for fertilizing purposes, if injurious to the public health; Naccari v. Rappelet, 119 La. 272, 44 South. 13, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 640.

FESTA IN CAPPIS. In Old English Law. Grand holidays, on which choirs were accustomed to wear caps. Jac. L. Dict.

FESTING-MAN. A bondsman; a surety; a pledge; a frank-pledge. It was one privilege of monasteries that they should be free from festing-men, which Cowell explains to mean not to be bound for any man's forthcoming who should transgress the law. Cowell.

FESTING-PENNY. Earnest (q. v.) given to servants when hired or retained. The same as arles-penny. Cowell.

FESTINUM REMEDIUM (Lat. a speedy remedy). A term applied to those cases where the remedy for the redress of an injury is given without any unnecessary delay. Bacon, Abr. Assise, A. The action of dower is festinum remedium, and so is that of assise.

FESTUCA. In Frankish Law. A rod or staff or (as described by other writers) a stick, on which imprecatory runs were cut, which was used as a gage or pledge of good faith by a party to a contract, or for symbolic delivery in the conveyance or quit-claim of land, before a court of law, anterior to the introduction of written documents by the Romans. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 86, 184, 190; Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 323.

FESTUM (Lat.). A feast, a holiday, a festival.

FETTERS. A sort of iron put on the limbs of a malefactor or a person accused of crime.

When a prisoner is brought into court to plead, he shall not be put in fetters; Co. 2d Inst. 315; Co. 3d Inst. 34; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 119; Kel. 10; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 417; 4 Bla. Com. 322; it is usual to remove them at the trial; Faire v. State, 58 Ala. 74; State v. Lewis, 19 Kan. 260, 27 Am. Rep. 113; to retain them is justifiable only where a reasonable necessity exists; 59 J. P. 393, per Russell, C. J.; or where it is necessary to prevent an escape; 4 B. & C. 596. In commenting on these cases, it is said that it is justified only with a prisoner of notoriously bad character, or dangerous, or the offense is grave, or there is an attempt to escape; 29 Chi. L. News 88.

In the first case in this country in which the old common-law doctrine was considered and enforced, the court held that to try a prisoner in shackles was to deprive him of his rights, and that a conviction, under such circumstances, would be reversed; People v. Harrington, 42 Cal. 165, 10 Am. Rep. 296, followed in State v. Kring, 64 Mo. 591 (affirming State v. Kring, 1 Mo. App. 438). A single expression on this subject seems to be opposed to these cases. An English writer, commenting on the action of a barrister who withdrew and refused to proceed with a case because the judge ordered his client fettered during the trial, considers the removal of fetters to be a mere matter of courtesy, being designed to relieve the prisoner, so far as is practicable, from all that might enlist prejudice against him or disturb his self-possession, and that such removal cannot be considered a matter of right; 43 L. T. 390.

An officer having arrested a defendant on a civil suit, or a person accused of a crime, has no right to handcuff him unless it is necessary or he has attempted to make his escape; 4 B. & C. 596. It is not conclusive on a question of escape that the arresting officer did not handcuff the prisoner; State v. Hunter, 94 N. C. 829. See PRISONER.

FEU. In Scotch Law. A holding or tenure where the vassal in place of military service makes his return in grain or money. Distinguished from wardholding, which is the military tenure of the country. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. lib. ii. tit. 3, § 7.

FEU ANNUALS. In Scotch Law. The reddendo, or annual return from the vassal to a superior in a feu holding. Wharton, Dict., 2d Lond. ed.

FEU ET LIEU (Fr.). In Old French Canadian Law. Hearth and home, meaning actual settlement by a tenant on the land.

FEU HOLDING. A holding by tenure of rendering grain or money in place of military service. Bell, Dict.

FEUAR. In Scotch Law. The tenant or vassal of a feu. Bell, Dict.

FEUD. Land held of a superior on condition of rendering him services. 2 Bla. Com. 106.

A hereditary right to use lands, rendering services therefor to the lord, while the property in the land itself remains in the lord. Spelman, Feuds c. 1.

The same as feod, fief, and fee. 1 Sullivan, Lect. 128; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 34; Dalrymple, Feud. Pr. 99; 1 Washb. R. P. 18; Mitch. R. P. 80.

In Scotland and the north of England, a combination of all the kin to revenge the death of any of the blood upon the slayer and all his race. Termes de la Ley; Whishaw. See FEUDUM.

FEUDA. Fees.

FEUDAL ACTIONS. See FEODAL ACTIONS.

FEUDAL COURTS. In the 12th century a lord qua lord, had the right to hold a court for his tenants; in the 13th century, they became of less importance and for three reasons: The feudal principle would have led to a series of courts one above the other, and the dominions of the large landowners were usually scattered, so that great feudal courts became impossible. The growth of the jurisdiction of the king's court removed the necessity for feudal courts. All the incidents of the feudal system came to be regarded in a commercial spirit—as property. Its jurisdiction became merely appendant to landowning. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 64.

FEUDAL LAW, FEODAL LAW. A system of tenures of real property which prevailed in the countries of western Europe during the Middle Ages, arising from the peculiar political condition of those countries, and radically affecting the law of personal rights and of movable property.

Although the feudal system has never obtained in this country, and is long since extinct throughout the greater part of Europe, some understanding of the theory of the system is essential to an accurate knowledge of the English constitution, and of the doctrines of the common law in respect to real property. The feudal tenure was a right to lands on the condition of performing services and rendering allegiance to a superior lord. It had its origin in the military immigrations of the Northmen, who overran the falling Roman empire. Many writers have sought to trace the beginning of the system in earlier periods, and resemblances more or less distinct have been found in the tenures prevailing in the Roman republic and empire, in Turkey, in Hindustan, in ancient Tuscany, as well as in the system of Celtic clanship. Hallam, Mid. Ag. vol. 1; Stuart, Soc. in Europe; Robertson, Hist. of Charles V.; Pinkerton, Diss. on the Goths; Montesquieu, Esp. des Lois, livre xxx. c. 2; Meyer, Esprit, Origine et Progrès des Inst. judiciaires, tom. 1, p. 4.

But the origin of the feudal system is so obvious in the circumstances under which it arose, that perhaps there is no other connection between it and these earlier systems than that all are the outgrowth of political conditions somewhat similar. It has been said that the system is nothing more than the natural fruit of conquest; but the fact that the conquest was by immigrants, and that the conquerors made the acquired country their permanent abode, is an important element in the case, and in so far as other conquests have fallen short of this, the military tenures resulting have fallen short of the feudal system. The military chieftains of the northern nations allotted the lands of the countries they occupied among themselves and their followers, with a view at once to strengthen their own power and ascendency and to provide for their followers.

Some lands were allotted to individuals as their own proper estates, and these were termed allodial; but, for the most part, those lands which were not retained by the chieftain he assigned to his comites, or knights, to be held by his permission, in return for which they assured him of their allegiance and undertook for him military service.

It resulted that there was a general dismemberment of the political power into many petty nations and petty sovereignties. The violence and disorders of the times rendered it necessary both for the strong to seek followers and for the weak to seek a protecting allegiance; and this operated on the one hand to lead the vassals to divide again among their immediate retainers the lands which they had received from the paramount lord, upon similar terms, and by this subinfeudation the number of fiefs was largely increased; and the same circumstances operated on the other hand to absorb the allodial estates by inducing allodial proprietors to surrender their lands to some neighboring chieftain and receive them again from him under feudal tenure. Every one who held lands upon a feudal tenure was bound, when called upon by his benefactor or immediate lord, to defend him, and such lord was, in turn, subordinate to his superior, and bound to defend him, and so on upwards to the paramount lord or king, who in theory of the law was the ultimate owner of all the lands of the realm. The services which the vassals were bound to render to their lords were chiefly military; but many other benefits were required, such as the power of the lord or the good will of the tenant would sanction.

This system came to its height upon the continent in the empire of Charlemagne and his successors. It was completely established in England in the time of William the Norman and William Rufus, his son; and the system thus established may be said to be the foundation of the English law of real property and the position of the landed aristocracy, and of the civil constitution of the realm. And when we reflect that in the Middle Ages real property had a relative importance far beyond that of movable property, it is not suprising that the system should have left its traces for a long time upon the law of personal relations and personal property. The feudal tenures were originally temporary, at the will of the lord, or from year to year; afterwards they came more commonly to be held for the life of the vassal; and gradually they acquired an inheritable quality, the lord recognizing the heir of the vassal as the vassal's successor in his service.

The chief incidents of the tenure by military service were: Aids,—a pecuniary tribute required by the lord in an emergency, e. g. a ransom for his person if taken prisoner, or money to make his son a knight or to marry his daughter. Reliefs,—the consideration which the lord demanded upon the death of a vassal for allowing the vassal's heir to succeed to the possession; and connected with this may be mentioned primer seisin, which was the compensation that the lord demanded for having entered upon the land and protected the possession until the heir appeared to claim it. Fines upon alienation,—a consideration exacted by the lord for giving his consent that the vassal should transfer the estate to another, who should stand in his place in respect to the services owed. Escheat.—Where on the death of the vassal there was no heir, the land reverted to the lord; also, where the vassal was guilty of treason; for the guilt of the vassal was deemed to taint the blood, and the lord would no longer recognize him or his heirs. Wardship and Maritage.—Where the heir was a minor, the lord, as a condition of permitting the estate to descend to one who could not render military service, assumed the guardianship of the heir, and, as such, exercised custody both of his person and of the property, without accounting for the profits, until the heir, if a male, was twenty-one and could undertake the military services, or, if a female, until she was of a marriageable age, when on her marriage her husband might render the services. The lord claimed, in virtue of his guardianship, to make a suitable match for his ward, and if wards refused to comply they were mulcted in damages.

As a system of government, feudalism was doomed from the day of the Great Assize of Henry II., and only dragged out a lingering existence till the legislation of Edward I. dealt it a final blow. Green, 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 131.

Feudal tenures were abolished in England by the statute 12 Car. II. c. 24; but the principles of the system still remain at the foundation of the English and American law of real property. Although in many of the states all lands are held to be allodial (see ALOD), it is the theory of the law that the ultimate right of property is in the state; and in most of the states escheat is regulated by statute. "The principles of the feudal system are so interwoven with every part of our jurisprudence," says Ch. J. Tilghman, "that to attempt to eradicate them would be to destroy the whole." Dunwoodie v. Reed, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 447; Lyle v. Richards, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 333. "Though our property is allodial," says Ch. J. Gibson, "yet feudal tenures may be said to exist among us in their consequences and the qualities which they orginally imparted to estates; as, for instance, in precluding every limitation founded on an abeyance of the fee." McCall v. Neely, 3 Watts (Pa.) 71; Ingersoll v. Sergeant, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 337; Hubley v. Vanhorne, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 188.

Many of these incidents are rapidly disappearing, however, by legislative changes of the law.

The principles of the feudal law will be found in Littleton's Ten.; Wright's Tenures; 2 Bla. Com. c. 5; Dalrymple's Hist. of Feudal Property; Sullivan's Lectures; Book of Fiefs; Spelman's Treatise of Feuds and Tenures; Cruise's Digest; Le Grand Coutumier; the Salic Laws; the Capitularies; Les Établissements de St. Louis; Assise de Jérusalem; Pothier, des Fiefs; Merlin, Rép. Féodalité; Dalloz, Dict. Féodalité; Guizot, Essais sur l'Histoire de France, Essai 5ème; Introduction to Robertson's Charles V.; Poll. & Maitl. Hist. Eng. Law; Stubbs, Const. Hist.; Round, Feudal England; Encycl. Br.; Holdsworth, History of English Law; VILLENAGE.

The principal original collection of the feudal law of continental Europe is a digest compiled at Milan in the twelfth century, Feudorum Consuetudines, which is the foundation of many of the subsequent compilations. The American student will perhaps find no more convenient source of information than Blackstone's Commentaries, Sharswood's ed., vol. 2, 43, and Greenleaf's Cruise, Dig. Introd.

FEUDARY. A tenant who holds by feudal tenure. Held by feudal service. Relating to feuds or feudal tenures. See FEODARY.

FEUDBOTE. A recompense for engaging in a feud, and the damages consequent, it having been the custom in ancient times for all the kindred to engage in their kinsman's quarrel. Jac. L. Dict.

FEUDE, or DEADLY FEUD. A German word, signifying implacable hatred, not to be satisfied but with the death of the enemy. Such was that among the people in Scotland and in the northern part of England, which was a combination of all the kindred to revenge the death of any of the blood upon the slayer and all his race. Termes de la Ley. See BLOOD-FEUD.

FEUDIST. A writer on feuds, as Cujacius. Spel. Gloss.

FEUDO. In Spanish Law. Feud or fee. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 2, c. 2.

FEUDORUM LIBRI. The Books of Feuds published during the reign of Henry III., about the year 1152. The particular customs of Lombardy as to feuds began about that time to be the standard of authority to other nations, by reason of the greater refinement with which that branch of learning had been there cultivated. This compilation was probably known in England, but does not appear to have had any other effect than to influence English lawyers to the more critical study of their own tenures, and to induce them to extend the learning of real property so as to embrace more curious matter of similar kind. "Thus, tenures in England continued a peculiar species of feuds, partaking of certain qualities in common with others; but when once established here, growing up with a strength and figure entirely their own. While most of the nations of Europe referred to the Books of Feuds as the grand code of law by which to correct and amend the imperfections in their own tenures, there is not in English law books any allusion that intimates the existence of such a body of constitutions." 2 Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law 55.

FEUDUM. A feud, fief, or fee. A right of using and enjoying forever the lands of another, which the lord grants on condition that the tenant shall render fealty, military duty, and other services. Spelman, Gloss. It is not properly the land, but a right in the land. This form of the word is used by the feudal writers. The earlier English writers generally prefer the form feodum; but the meaning is the same. There was an older word feum.

Its use by the Normans is exceedingly obscure. "Feudal" was not in their vocabulary. Usually it denoted a stretch of land, rarely a tenure or mass of rights. It came to be applied to every person who had heritable rights in land. Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 152.

Feudum antiquum. A fee descended from the tenant's ancestors. 2 Bla. Com. 212. One which has been possessed by the relations of the tenant for four generations. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum apertum. A fee which the lord might enter upon and resume either through failure of issue of the tenant or any crime or legal cause on his part. Spelman, Gloss. 2 Bla. Com. 245.

Feudum francum. A free feud. One which was noble and free from talliage and other subsidies to which the plebeia feuda (vulgar feuds) were subject. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum hauberticum. A fee held on the military service of appearing fully armed at the ban and arrière ban. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum improprium. A derivative fee.

Feudum individuum. A fee which could descend to the eldest son alone. 2 Bla. Com. 215.

Feudum laicum. A lay fee.

Feudum ligium. A liege fee. One where the tenant owed fealty to his lord against all other persons. Spelman, Gloss.; 1 Bla. Com. 367.

Feudum maternum. A fee descending from the mother's side. 2 Bla. Com. 212.

Feudum militare. A knight's fee, held by knight service and esteemed the most honorable species of tenure. 2 Bla. Com. 62.

Feudum nobile. A fee for which the tenant did guard and owed fealty and homage. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum novum. One which began with the person of the feudatory, and did not come to him by descent.

Feudum novum ut antiquum. A new fee held with the qualities and incidents of an ancient one. 2 Bla. Com. 212; Wms. R. P. 126.

Feudum paternum. A fee which the paternal ancestors had held for four generations. Calvinus, Lex.; Spelman, Gloss. One descendible to heirs on the paternal side only. 2 Bla. Com. 223. One which might be held by males only. Du Cange.

Feudum proprium. A genuine original feud or fee, of a military nature, in the hands of a military person. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 57.

Feudum talliatum. A restricted fee. One limited to descend to certain classes of heirs. 2 Bla. Com. 112, n.; 1 Washb. R. P. 66; Spelman, Gloss.

The distinction between feodum antiquum and feodum novum has had an important bearing upon the law of descent with respect to the admission of collaterals and the exclusion of ascendants. The theory of Blackstone, which is characterized by both Christian and Pollock & Maitland as "ingenious," will be found fully stated in 2 Com. 211, while for a criticism of it and other theories on the subject, see 2 Poll. & Maitl. 285.

FEUM. An older form of feudum, Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 152.

FEW. An indefinite expression for a small or limited number. In cases where exact description is required, the use of the word will not answer; Butts v. Town of Stowe, 53 Vt. 603; 2 Car. & P. 300; Black, L. Dict.

FIANCER. To pledge one's faith. Kelham.

FIANZA (Span.) Surety. The contract by which one person engages to pay the debt or fulfil the obligations of another if the latter should fail to do so.

FIAR. In Scotch Law. One whose property is charged with a life-rent. Where a right is taken to a husband and wife in conjunct fee and life-rent, the husband, as the persona dignior, is the only fiar. Ersk. Prin. 421.

FIAT. An order of a judge or of an officer whose authority, to be signified by his signature, is necessary to authenticate the particular acts. A short order or warrant of the judge, commanding that something shall be done. See 1 Tidd, Pr. 100.

FIAT IN BANKRUPTCY. An order of the lord chancellor that a commission of bankruptcy shall issue. 1 Deac. Bank. 106.

Fiats are abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 116.

FIAUNT. An order; command. See FIAT.

FICTION. The legal assumption that something which is or may be false is true.

The expedient of fictions is sometimes resorted to in law for the furtherance of justice. Corkran Oil & Development Co. v. Arnaudet, 199 U. S. 194, 26 Sup. Ct. 41, 50 L. Ed. 143. The law-making power has no need to resort to fictions: it may establish its rules with simple reference to the truth; but the courts, which are confined to the administration of existing rules, and which lack the power to change those rules, even in hard cases, have frequently avoided the injustice that their application to the actual facts might cause, by assuming, in behalf of justice, that the actual facts are different from what they really are. Thus, in English law, where the administration of criminal justice is by prosecution at suit of the crown, the courts, rather than disregard the rules under which all other parties stand in respect to their neglect to appear and prosecute their suits, adopt the fiction that the king is legally ubiquitous and always in court, so that he can never be non-suited. The employment of fictions is a singular illustration of the justice of the common law, which did not hesitate to conceal or affect to conceal the fact, that a rule of law has undergone alteration, its letter remaining unchanged.

Fictio in the old Roman law was properly a term of pleading and signified a false averment on the part of the plaintiff which the defendant was not allowed to traverse; as that the plaintiff was a Roman citizen, when in truth he was a foreigner. The object of the fiction was to give the court jurisdiction; Maine, Anc. Law 25.

Fictions are to be distinguished on the one hand from presumptions of law, and on the other hand from estoppels. A presumption is a rule of law prescribed for the purpose of getting at a certain conclusion, though arbitrary, where the subject is intrinsically liable to doubt from the remoteness, discrepancy, or actual defect of proofs.

Thus, an infant under the age of seven years is conclusively presumed to be without discretion. Proof that he had discretion the court will not listen to. In the nature of the subject, there must be a limit, which it is better should be a general though arbitrary one than be fluctuating and uncertain in each case. An estoppel, on the other hand, is the rule by which a person is precluded from asserting a fact by previous conduct inconsistent therewith on his own part or the part of those under whom he claims, or by an adjudication upon his rights which he cannot be allowed to question.

This distinction is thus expressed by a Scotch writer: A fictio juris differs from a presumption. Things are presumed which are likely to be true; but a fiction of law assumes for truth what is either false, or at least is as probably false as true. Thus, an heir is feigned or considered in law as the same person with his ancestor; thus, also, writings against which certification is obtained in a reduction-improbation are judged to be false fictione juris, though the most convincing proof shall be brought that they once existed and were genuine. Fictions of law must in all their effects be always limited to the special purpose of equity for which they were introduced. Ersk. Prin. 531.

The familiar fictions of the civil law and of the earlier common law were very numerous; but the more useful of them have either been superseded by authorized changes in the law or have gradually grown as it were into distinct principles, forming exceptions or modifications of those principles to evade which they were at first contrived. As there is no just reason for resorting to indirection to do that which might be done directly, fictions are rapidly disappearing before the increasing harmony of our jurisprudence. See 4 Benth. Ev. 300; 2 Pothier, Obl., Evans' ed. 43. But they have doubtless been of great utility in conducing to the gradual amelioration of the law; and, in this view, fiction, equity, and legislation have been named together as the three instrumentalities in the improvement of the law. They have been employed historically in the order here given. Sometimes two of them will be seen operating together, and there are legal systems which have escaped the influence of one or the other of them. But there is no instance in which the order of their appearance has been changed or inverted. Maine, Anc. Law 24.

Theoretical writers have classified fictions as of five sorts: abeyance, when the fee of land is supposed to exist for a time without any particular owner during an outstanding freehold estate; 2 Bla. Com. 107; 1 Cruise, Dig. 67; 1 Com. Dig. 175; 1 Viner, Abr. 104; the doctrine of remitter, by which a party who has been disseised of his freehold, and afterwards acquires a defective title, is remitted to his former good title; that one thing done to-day is considered as done at a preceding time by the doctrine of relation; that, because one thing is proved, another shall be presumed to be true, which is the case in all presumptions; that the heir, executor, or administrator stand by representation in place of the deceased.

Again, they have been classified as of three kinds: positive, when a fact which does not exist is assumed; negative, when a fact which does exist is ignored; and fictions by relation, when the act of one person is taken as if it were the act of a different person,—e. g., that of a servant as the act of his master; when an act at one time or place is treated as if performed at a different time or place; and when an act in relation to a certain thing is treated as if it were done in relation to another thing which the former represents,—e. g., where delivery of a portion of goods sold is treated as giving possession of the whole; Best, Pres. 27. Fictions being resorted to simply for the furtherance of justice; Co. Litt. 150; 10 Co. 42; 1 Cowp. 177; several maxims are fundamental to them. First, that that which is impossible shall not be feigned; D'Aguesseau, Œuvres, tome iv. pp. 427, 447 c, Plaidoyer; 2 Rolle 502. Second, that no fiction shall be allowed to work an injury; 3 Bla. Com. 43; Low v. Little, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 348. Third, a fiction is not to be carried further than the reasons which introduced it necessarily require; 1 Lilly, Abr. 610; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 320; Best, Pres. § 20.

Consult Dalloz, Dict.; Burg. Ins. 139; Ferguson, Moral Phil. pt. 5, c. 10, § 3; 1 Toullier 171, n. 203; 2 id. 217, n. 203; 11 id. 10, n. 2; Maine, Anc. Law; Benth. Jud. Ev.; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 469.

FICTITIOUS ACTION. A suit brought on pretence of a controversy when no such controversy in truth exists. Such actions have usually been brought on a pretended wager, for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a point of law. Courts of justice are not bound to answer impertinent questions which persons think proper to ask them in the form of an action on a wager; 12 East 248. Such an attempt has been held to be a contempt of court; and Lord Hardwicke in such a case committed the parties and their attorneys; Rep. t. Hardw. 237. A court will not consider itself bound to entertain a case stated for its opinion when there is reason to believe that the action is not brought in good faith for the purpose of determining a matter in controversy between the parties; 6 C. B. 100; or where the decision is sought upon a fictitious interest created for the express purpose of obtaining a decision; 4 Ch. D. 169. Where a contract was made between a county and a bidder to enter a feigned suit to determine the validity of the bonds prior to their issue, it was held void as against public policy, the court saying that "the practice is in every point of view vicious. It involves . . . a conspiracy to deceive the courts, by presenting cases for decision involving no real controversy;" Van Horn v. Kittitas County, 112 Fed. 1. The practice of bringing such suits has been severely condemned by the courts; Lord v. Veazie, 8 How. (U. S.) 251, 12 L. Ed. 1067; Connoly v. Cunningham, 2 Wash. T. 242, 5 Pac. 473.

See, also, Comb. 425; 1 Co. 83; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 147, 3 L. Ed. 162; FEIGNED ACTIONS; MOOT CASES.

FICTITIOUS PARTY. Where a suit is brought in the name of one who is not in being, or of one who is ignorant of the suit and has not authorized it, it is said to be brought in the name of a fictitious plaintiff. To bring such a suit is deemed a contempt of court; 4 Bla. Com. 133.

FICTITIOUS PAYEE. When a contract, such as negotiable paper, is drawn in favor of a fictitious person, and has been indorsed in such name, it is deemed payable to bearer as against all parties who are privy to the transaction; and a holder in good faith may recover on it against them; Pars. Bills & N. 591, n.; 2 H. Bla. 178, 288; 19 Ves. 311; Tittle v. Thomas, 30 Miss. 122, 64 Am. Dec. 154; Hunter v. Blodget, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 480.

The maker of such a note, by negotiating it, transfers title to it without indorsement, and it is presumed that the note came into the possession of the holder with the names of all the indorsers on it, and prima facie he is treated as a holder for value; Plets v. Johnson, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 112; provided that the acceptor or indorser be ignorant of the fact that the payee is fictitious; Forbes v. Espy, 21 Ohio St. 483; 1 Camp. 130; and to entitle the holder of such a note to a recovery it must appear affirmatively that he was ignorant of the fact that the payee was a fictitious person; Maniort v. Roberts, 4 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 83. As between the original parties who put it into circulation with a knowledge of the fiction, it might be held void as an inoperative instrument, but if money from the holder actually gets into the hands of the acceptor it may be recovered back as money had and received; 1 Camp. 130. See also Sto. Prom. Notes 39. In the hands of a bona fide holder the note or bill is good against the maker; Irving National Bank v. Alley, 79 N. Y. 536; Lane v. Krekle, 22 Ia. 404; Farnsworth v. Drake, 11 Ind. 103; Blodgett v. Jackson, 40 N. H. 21.

A bona fide holder for a valuable consideration of a bill drawn payable to a fictitious person and indorsed in that name by the drawer may recover the amount of it in an action against the acceptor for money paid or money had and received, upon the idea that there was an appropriation of so much money to be paid to the person who should become the holder of the bill; 3 Term 174; and the mere fact of the acceptance of such a bill is evidence that the value has been received for it; id. 182; in this case three judges thought that the bill was to be considered as payable to bearer, and in the leading case of Minet v. Gibson that view was taken and it was held that a recovery from the acceptor may be had upon a count upon a bill payable to bearer, where such acceptor is aware that the payee is a fictitious person; 3 Term 481. This judgment was affirmed by the House of Lords, though with a dissent by Eyre, C. B., and Heath, J., with whom Lord Thurlow concurred; 1 H. Bla. 569; s. c. 6 Bro. P. C. 235. The case has been termed "anomalous" by a text writer who quotes the dissenting opinion of Eyre, C. B., as one "whose reasoning, it is conceived, has never been refuted;" 2 Ames, Bills & Notes 864. But the same writer admits that "the doctrine of the case has been generally adopted." In an action on such a bill, to show that the acceptor is aware that the payee is a fictitious person, evidence is admissible to show the circumstances under which he had received other bills payable to fictitious persons; 2 H. Bla. 187, 288. See also 18 C. B. N. S. 694; L. R. 1 C. P. 463.

When a note is made payable to the name of some person not having any interest, and not intended to become a party to the transaction, whether a person of such a name is or is not known to exist, the payee may be deemed fictitious; Foster v. Shattuck, 2 N. H. 446; [1891] A. C. 107; [1908] 1 K. B. 13; Jordan Marsh Co. v. Bank, 201 Mass. 397, 87 N. E. 740, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250; Phillips v. Bank, 140 N. Y. 556, 35 N. E. 982, 23 L. R. A. 584, 37 Am. St. Rep. 596; Snyder v. Bank, 221 Pa. 599, 70 Atl. 876, 128 Am. St. Rep. 780.

If the maker did not know that the payee was a fictitious or non-existent person, and did not intend to make the paper payable to such person, the instrument cannot be treated as payable to bearer, for the intention of the maker or drawer is the test; Shipman v. Bank, 126 N. Y. 318, 27 N. E. 371, 12 L. R. A. 791, 22 Am. St. Rep. 821; Armstrong v. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 512, 22 N. E. 866, 6 L. R. A. 625, 15 Am. St. Rep. 655; Jordan Marsh Co. v. Bank, 201 Mass. 397, 87 N. E. 740, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250. In Kohn v. Watkins, 26 Kan. 691, 40 Am. Rep. 336, it was held that the drawer's belief that the person named was the real payee will prevent the application of the rule that an order to a fictitious payee is an order to bearer. If a check is drawn to an existing person intended by the drawer to be the payee, the latter is not "fictitious" within the Bills of Exchange act, no matter how much the drawer may have been deceived; [1906] 2 K. B. 718, affirmed [1908] 1 K. B. 13, where it is said: "The word 'fictitious' implies that the name has been inserted by the person who has put it in for some dishonest purpose, without any intention that the check should be paid to that person only."

The Uniform Negotiable Instruments act provides that where the drawee is a fictitious person, the holder of the instrument may treat it either as a bill or note.

A note payable to a company or firm having no existence legal or de facto, has been held to be such a note; Farnsworth v. Drake, 11 Ind. 101; Blodgett v. Jackson, 40 N. H. 21; Maniort v. Roberts, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 83; Stevens v. Strang, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 138; one made payable to the estate of a deceased person; Scott v. Parker, 5 N. Y. Supp. 753; checks drawn to the order of an existing person, whose indorsement is forged; Jordan Marsh Co. v. Bank, 201 Mass. 397, 87 N. E. 740, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250. See Douglass v. Wilkeson, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 637; Byles, Bills, Wood's ed. 383.

FICTITIOUS PERSON. A United States patent for land to a fictitious person is void; and a bona fide purchaser is not protected; Hyde v. Shine, 199 U. S. 62, 25 Sup. Ct. 760, 50 L. Ed. 90.

FIDE-JUBERE. In Civil Law. To become fide-jussor; to pledge one's self; to act as surety for another. Among the words designated as words of obligation or forms of stipulation. Fide-jubes? do you make yourself fide-jussor? Fide-jubeo, I do make myself fide-jussor. Inst. 3. 15. 1.

FIDE-JUSSIO. An act by which any one binds himself as an additional security for another. This giving security does not destroy the liability of the principal, but adds to the security of the surety. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Hallifax, Annals, b. 2, c. 16, n. 10.

FIDE-JUSSOR. In Civil Law. One who becomes security for the debt of another, promising to pay it in case the principal does not do so. 3 Bla. Com. 108, 291.

He differs from a co-obligor in this, that the latter is equally bound to a debtor, with his principal, while the former is not liable till the principal has failed to fulfil his engagement; Dig. 12. 4. 4; 16. 1. 13; 24. 3. 64; 38. 1. 37; 50. 17. 110; 6. 14. 20; Hall, Pr. 33; Dunl. Adm. Pr. 300; Clerke, Prax. tit. 63.

The obligation of the fide-jussor was an accessory contract; for, if the principal obligation was not previously contracted, his engagement then took the name of mandate. Lec. Elém. § 872; Code Nap. 2012.

FIDE-PROMISSOR. See FIDE-JUSSOR.

FIDEI-COMMISSARIUS (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. One who has a beneficial interest in an estate which, for a time, is committed to the faith or trust of another. This term has nearly the same meaning as cestui que trust has in the common law. 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 295; Story, Eq. Jur. § 966.

Fidei-commissary and fide-commissary, anglicized forms of this term, have been proposed to take place of the phrase cestui que trust, but do not seem to have met with any favor.

According to Du Cange, the term was sometimes used to denote the executor of a will.

FIDEI-COMMISSUM (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. A trust. A devise was made to some person (hæres fiduciarius), and a request annexed that he should give the property to some one who was incapable of taking directly under the will. Inst. 2. 23. 1; 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 295; McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. (U. S.) 367, 407, 409, 14 L. Ed. 732. A gift which a man makes to another through the agency of a third person, who is requested to perform the will of the giver. The Louisiana civil code prohibits fidei-commissa; Ducloslange v. Ross, 3 La. Ann. 432; thus abolishing express trusts, but not affecting implied trusts; Gaines v. Chew, 2 How. (U. S.) 619, 11 L. Ed. 402.

The rights of the beneficiary were merely rights in curtesy, to be obtained by entreaty or request. Under Augustus, however, a system was commenced, which was completed by Justinian, for enforcing such trusts. The trustee or executor was called hæres fiduciarius, and sometimes fide-jussor. The beneficial heir was called hæres fidei-commissarius.

The uses of the common law are said to have been borrowed from the Roman fidei-commissa; 1 Greenl. Cruise 295; Bacon, Read. 19; see Bisph. Eq. 50; 1 Madd. 446; Story, Eq. Jur. § 966. The fidei-commissa are supposed to have been the origin of the common-law system of entails; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 21; 1 Washb. R. P. 60. This has been doubted by others. See SUBSTITUTION.

FIDELITAS. Fealty; fidelity.

FIDELITY INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

FIDEM MENTIRI (Lat.). To break faith. Used when a tenant does not keep that fealty which he has sworn to the lord. Leg. Hen. I. c. 53.

FIDES. Faith; honesty; confidence. See GOOD FAITH.

FIDES FACTA. Among the Franks and Lombards undertakings were guaranteed by "making one's faith"—fides facta. This was symbolized by such formal acts as the giving of a rod; in suretyship giving the "festuca" or "vadium." 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 73.

FIDUCIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. A contract by which we sell a thing to some one—that is, transmit to him the property of the thing, with the solemn forms of emancipation—on condition that he will sell it back to us. This species of contract took place in the emancipation of children, in testaments, and in pledges. Pothier, Pand.

FIDUCIARIUS TUTOR. See PUPIL; TUTOR.

FIDUCIARY. This term is borrowed from the civil law. The Roman laws called a fiduciary heir the person who was instituted heir, and who was charged to deliver the succession to a person designated by the testament. Merlin, Répert. But Pothier, Pand. vol. 22, says that fiduciarius hæres properly signifies the person to whom a testator has sold his inheritance under the condition that he should sell it to another. Fiduciary may be defined in trust, in confidence.

The law forbids one standing in such a position making any profit at the expense of the party whose interests he is bound to protect, without full disclosure; Bisph. Eq. § 238; 10 H. L. Cas. 26, 31. 45. What constitutes a fiduciary relation is often a subject of controversy. It has been held to apply to all persons who occupy a position of peculiar confidence towards others, such as a trustee, executor, or administrator, director of a corporation or society; Carpenter v. Danforth, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 581; Appeal of Watts, 78 Pa. 392; agent; Barrow v. Rhinelander, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 550; medical or religious adviser; In re Greenfield's Estate, 24 Pa. 232; article in 10 Jur. N. S. 91; husband and wife; Appeal of Darlington, 86 Pa. 512, 27 Am. Rep. 726; or a son; 13 Ch. Div. 338. See L. R. 3 Eq. 461; Hill, Trustees 547. Many cases have arisen in New York under the laws allowing arrest for debts incurred in a fiduciary capacity. The term seems to refer rather to the good faith than the ability of the party; Stoll v. King, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 298. See Burhans v. Casey, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 707; Holbrook v. Homer, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 86; Turner v. Thompson, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 444; Ostell v. Brough, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 274; Warner v. Transp. Co., 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 502. Under the bankrupt laws of 1841, and March 2, 1867, § 33, providing that debts contracted in a fiduciary capacity should not be barred by a discharge, the following cases fall within the act; an agent who appropriates money put into his hands for a specific purpose of investment; 1 Edm. 206; collector of city taxes who retains money officially collected; Morse v. City of Lowell, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 152; one who receives a note or other security for collection; White v. Platt, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 269; commission merchant; Meador v. Sharpe, 54 Ga. 125; and it does not alter the rule that the debt has been reduced to judgment before the discharge; Wade v. Clark, 52 Ia. 158, 2 N. W. 1039, 35 Am. Rep. 262. This exception from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy relates to technical trusts, not merely such as the law implies from the contract, but those actually and expressly constituted; Mulock v. Byrnes, 129 N. Y. 23, 29 N. E. 244. In the following cases the debt has been held not a fiduciary one; a factor who retains the money of his principal; Chapman v. Forsyth, 2 How. (U. S.) 202, 208, 11 L. Ed. 236; Commercial Bank of Manchester v. Buckner, 2 La. Ann. 1023; Cronan v. Cotting, 104 Mass. 245, 6 Am. Rep. 232; an agent under an agreement to account and pay over monthly; Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co. v. Clinton, 5 Biss. 324, Fed. Cas. No. 5,845; one with whom a general deposit of money is made; Hervey v. Devereux, 72 N. C. 463; a debt created by a person acting as an attorney in fact; Woodward v. Towne, 127 Mass. 41, 34 Am. Rep. 337; Desobry v. Tête, 31 La. Ann. 809, 33 Am. Rep. 232; Treadwell v. Holloway, 46 Cal. 547. See, also, Com'rs of Wilkes County v. Staley, 82 N. C. 395; Green v. Chilton, 57 Miss. 598, 34 Am. Rep. 483; Pierce v. Shippee, 90 Ill. 371.

FIDUCIARY CONTRACT. An agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another on the condition that he will restore it to him. The following formula was employed: Ut inter bonos agier oportet et sine fraudatione. Cicero, de Offic. lib. 3, cap. 17; Leç. du Dr. Civ. Rom. § 237. See Chapman v. Forsyth, 2 How. (U. S.) 202, 11 L. Ed. 236; Fisk v. Sarber, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 18; McGinn v. Shaeffer, 7 Watts (Pa.) 415.

FIEF. A fee, feod, or feud.

FIEF D'HAUBERK. A fee held on the military tenure of appearing fully armed on the ban and arrière-ban. Feudum hauberticum. Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex.; Du Cange. A knight's fee. 2 Bla. Com. 62.

FIEF TENANT. The holder of a fief or fee.

FIEL. In Spanish Law. An officer who keeps possession of a thing deposited under authority of law. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 9, l. 1.

FIELD. A cultivated tract of land. State v. McMinn, 81 N. C. 585; Com. v. Josselyn, 97 Mass. 412; but not a one-acre lot used for cultivating vegetables; Simons v. Lovell, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 510.

FIELD-ALE, or FILKDALE. The drinking of ale by bailiffs and other officers in the field, at the expense of the hundred; an old English custom long since prohibited. Toml.

FIELDAD. In Spanish Law. Sequestration. This is allowed in six cases by the Spanish law where the title to property is in dispute. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 3, l. 1.

FIERDING COURTS. Ancient Gothic courts "in the lowest instance;" so called because four were instituted within every superior district or hundred. Their jurisdiction was limited within forty shillings, or three marks; 3 Steph. Com. 393; 3 Bla. Com. 34; Stiernhook, De Jure Goth. l. 1, c. 2.

FIERI FACIAS (Lat. that you cause to be made). A writ directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the goods and chattels of the judgment-debtor the sum or debt recovered.

It receives its name from the Latin words in the writ (quod fieri facias de bonis et catallis, that you cause to be made of the goods and chattels). It is the form of execution in common use in levying upon the judgment-debtor's personal property.

The foundation of this writ is a judgment for debt or damages; and the party who has recovered such a judgment is generally entitled to it, unless he is delayed by a stay of execution which the law allows in certain cases after the rendition of the judgment, or by proceedings in error.

The execution, being founded on the judgment, must, of course, follow and be warranted by it; 2 Saund. 72 h, k; Bingh. Judg. 186; Oakley v. Becker, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 454.

Hence, where there is more than one plaintiff or defendant, it must be in the name of all the plaintiffs against all the defendants; 6 Term 525. It is either for the plaintiff or the defendant. When it is against an executor or administrator for a liability of the testator or intestate, it is conformable to the judgment, and must be only against the goods of the deceased, unless the defendant has made himself personally liable by his false pleading, in which case the judgment is de bonis testatoris, et si non, de bonis propriis; Todd v. Todd's Ex'rs, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 453; Swearinger's Ex'r v. Pendleton's Ex'r, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 394; Lansing v. Lansing's Ex'x, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 502; Burnside v. Green, 3 N. C. 112.

At common law, the writ bound the goods of the defendant or party against whom it was issued, from the teste day; by which is to be understood that the writ bound the property against the party himself, and all claiming by assignment from or by representation under him; 4 East 538; so that a sale by the defendant of his goods to a bona fide purchaser did not protect them from a fieri facias tested before, although not issued or delivered to the sheriff till after the sale; Cro. Eliz. 174; Cro. Jac. 451; 1 Sid. 271; but by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 16, it was enacted "that no writ or fieri facias, or other writ of execution, shall bind the property of the goods of the party against whom such writ of execution issued forth, but from the time that such writ shall be delivered to the sheriff," etc., who must "indorse upon the back thereof the day of the month and year whereon he or they received the same;" and the same or similar provisions have been enacted in most of the states; Lewis v. Smith, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 157; Beals v. Guernsey, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 446, 5 Am. Dec. 348; Layton v. Steel, 3 Harr. (Del.) 512; State v. Blundin, 32 Mo. 387. The property in the goods is not altered, but remains in the defendant until the actual execution of the writ; Wats. Sher. 176.

The execution of the writ is made by levying upon the goods and chattels of the defendant or party against whom it is issued; and, in general, seizing a part of the goods in the name of the whole on the premises is a good seizure of the whole; 1 Ld. Raym. 725; Bullitt's Ex'rs v. Winston, 1 Munf. (Va.) 269; Van Wyck v. Pine, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 666; Barham v. Massey, 27 N. C. 192; Cobb v. Cage, 7 Ala. 619. But see Burchard v. Rees, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 377; Lloyd v. Wyckoff, 11 N. J. L. 218. It may be executed at any time before and on the return-day; Towns v. Harris, 13 Tex. 507; but not on Sunday, where it is forbidden by statute (29 Car. II. c. 7, which has been substantially followed in the United States); Watson, Sher. 173; 5 Co. 92; Com. Dig. Execution, C 5. After the death of the defendant, the sheriff may execute a fi. fa. tested in his lifetime, and under it seize his goods in the hands of his executor or administrator; Wats. Sher. 173.

The sheriff cannot break the outer door of a house for the purpose of executing a fieri facias; 5 Co. 92; nor unlatch an outer door; Curtis v. Hubbard, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 437, 40 Am. Dec. 292; nor can a window be broken for this purpose; W. Jones 429. He may, however, enter the house, if it be open, and, being once lawfully entered, he may break open an inner door or chest to seize the goods of the defendant, even without any request to open them; 4 Taunt. 619; 3 B. & P. 223; Cowp. 1; Troub. & H. Pr. 1116. Although the sheriff is authorized to enter the house of the party to search for goods, he cannot enter that of a stranger for that purpose, without being guilty of a trespass, unless the defendant's goods are actually in the house; Comyns, Dig. Execution (C 5). The sheriff may break the outer door of a barn; 1 Sid. 186; 1 Kebl. 689; or of a store disconnected with the dwelling-house and forming no part of the curtilage; Haggerty v. Wilbur, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 287, 8 Am. Dec. 321. See 1 Sm. L. Cas., 9th Am. ed. 228, with note on the subject; BREAKING.

At common law a fi. fa. did not authorize a sheriff to seize bank-bills, checks, or promissory notes; but it is otherwise now, by stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, § 12, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82; and this is now the law of many of the states; Steele v. Brown, 2 Va. Cas. 246; Means v. Vance, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 39; Reno v. Wilson, Hempst. 91, Fed. Cas. No. 11,700a; Spencer v. Blaisdell, 4 N. H. 198, 17 Am. Dec. 412; Appeal of Herron, 29 Pa. 240. So money may be taken; Means v. Vance, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 39; Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 117, 2 L. Ed. 53; Handy v. Dobbin, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 220. The writ applies generally to goods and chattels, but the common-law rules as to what may be taken are very much extended.

For the form of the writ, see 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. App. xxvii.; as to proceeding in equity in aid of executions at law, see CREDITORS' BILL. See, generally, Murfree; Freeman, Executions, ch. X; Watson, Sheriff; EXECUTION; LEVY; SHERIFF.

FIERI FECI (L. Lat.). In Practice. The return which the sheriff or other proper officer makes to certain writs, signifying, "I have caused to be made."

When the officer has made this return, a rule may be obtained upon him after the return-day, to pay the money into court, and, if he withholds payment, an action of debt may be had on the return, or assumpsit for money had and received may be sustained against him; Dumond's Adm'rs v. Carpenter, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 183.

FIFTEENTHS. An aid; aid granted from time to time to the crown by parliament, consisting of a fifteenth part of the personal property in every township, borough, and city in the kingdom. In the eighth year of Edward III. the valuation of the kingdom was fixed and a record made in the exchequer of the amount (twenty-nine thousand pounds). This valuation was not increased as the property in the kingdom increased in value; whence the name came in time to be a great misnomer. Co. 2d Inst. 77; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 604; 2 Bla. Com. 309; Cowell.

FIFTY DECISIONS. Ordinances of Justinian (529–532) upon the authority of which all moot points were settled in the preparation of the second edition of the Code. Taylor, Science of Jurispr. 144.

FIGHT. Does not necessarily imply that both parties should give and take blows. It is sufficient that they voluntarily put their bodies in position with that intent; State v. Gladden, 73 N. C. 155; Tate v. State, 46 Ga. 148. See PRIZE-FIGHT.

FIGHTWITE (Sax.). A mulct or fine for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace. Called also by Cowell forisfactura pugnæ. The amount was one hundred and twenty shillings. Cowell.

A payment to a lord possessing soc over a place where a wrong was done. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 35.

FIGURES. Numerals. They are either Roman, made with letters of the alphabet: for example, MDCCLXXVI; or they are Arabic, as follows: 1776.

Roman figures may be used in contracts and law proceedings, and they will be held valid; but Arabic figures, probably owing to the ease with which they may be counterfeited or altered, have been holden not to be sufficient to express the sum due on a contract; but it seems that if the amount payable and due on a promissory note be expressed in figures or ciphers, it will be valid. Story, Bills § 42, note; Story, Pr. Notes § 21.

Figures to express numbers are not allowable in indictments; but all numbers must be expressed in words at length, except in setting forth a copy of a written instrument. And complaints are governed by the same rule in cases over which magistrates have final jurisdiction. But the decisions on this point are not uniform. And in most of them the proper distinction between the use of figures in the caption and in the body of an indictment has not been observed. In America, perhaps the weight of authority is contrary to the law as above stated. But, at all events, a contrary practice is unclerical, uncertain, and liable to alteration; and the courts which have sustained such practice have uniformly cautioned against it. See 13 Viner, Abr. 210; 1 Chitty 319; State v. Tuller, 34 Conn. 280; State v. Reed, 35 Me. 489, 58 Am. Dec. 727.

Bills of exchange, promissory notes, checks, and agreements of every description are usually dated with Arabic figures; it is, however, better to date deeds and other formal instruments by writing the words at length. See 5 Toullier, n. 336; Jackson v. Schoonmaker, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 233; Serpentine v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 256; Finch v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 533; President, etc., of Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336.

FILACER. An officer of the common pleas, king's bench, and exchequer, whose duty it was to file the writs on which he made process. There were fourteen of them; and it was their duty to make out all original process. Cowell; Blount; Jacob L. Dict. It is used in 8 Mod. 284. The office was abolished in 1837.

FILARE. In Old English Practice. To file. Townsh. Pl. 67.

FILE (Lat. Filum). A thread, string, or wire upon which writs and other exhibits in courts and offices are fastened or filed for the more safe-keeping and ready turning to the same. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell; Tomlin, Law Dict. Papers put together and tied in bundles. A paper is said also to be filed when it is delivered to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file. 13 Viner, Abr. 211; 1 Littleton 113; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 7, 207. See where filed by a wife as agent; Reed v. Inhabitants of Acton, 120 Mass. 130.

The origin of the term indicates very clearly that the filing of a paper can only be effected by bringing it to the notice of the officer, who anciently put it upon the string or wire; Phillips v. Beene's Adm'r, 38 Ala. 248.

Filing a paper, in modern usage, consists in placing it in the custody of the proper official by the party charged with the duty, and the making of the proper indorsement by the officer. Stone v. Crow, 2 S. Dak. 525, 51 N. W. 335. In the sense of a statute requiring the filing of a paper or document, it is filed when delivered to and received by the proper officer to be kept on file. The word carries with it the idea of permanent preservation of the thing so delivered and received; that it may become a part of the public record. It is not synonymous with deposited; People v. Peck, 67 Hun 560, 22 N. Y. Supp. 576. The "file" in a cause includes original subpœnas and all papers belonging thereto. Jackson v. Mobley, 157 Ala. 408, 47 South. 590.

FILIATE. To declare whose child a bastard is. 2 W. Bla. 1017.

FILIATION. In Civil Law. The descent of son or daughter, with regard to his or her father, mother, and their ancestors.

Nature always points out the mother by evident signs, and, whether married or not, she is always certain: mater semper certa est, etiamsi vulgo conceperit. There is not the same certainty with regard to the father, and the mother may not know or may feign ignorance as to the paternity; the law has therefore established a legal presumption to serve as a foundation for paternity and filiation.

When the mother is or has been married, her husband is presumed to be the father of the children born during the coverture, or within a competent time afterwards, whether they were conceived during the coverture or not: pater is est quem nuptiæ demonstrant.

This rule is founded on two presumptions: one on the cohabitation before the birth of the child; and the other that the mother has faithfully observed the vow she made to her husband.

This presumption may, however, be rebutted by showing either that there has been no cohabitation, or some physical or other impossibility that the husband could be the father. See ACCESS; BASTARD; GESTATION; NATURAL CHILDREN; PATERNITY; PUTATIVE FATHER.

FILICETUM. In English Law. A ferny or bracky ground; a place where fern grows. Co. Litt. 4 b; Shep. Touch. 95.

FILIOUS. In Old Records. A godson. Spel. Glos.

FILIUS (Lat.). A son. A child.

As distinguished from heir filius is a term of nature, hæres a term of law. 1 Powell, Dev. 311. In the civil law the term was used to denote a child generally. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Its use in the phrase nullius filius would seem to indicate a use in the sense of legitimate son, a bastard being the legitimate son of nobody; though the word is usually rendered a son, whether legitimate or illegitimate. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FILIUS FAMILIAS (Lat.). A son who is under the control and power of his father. Story, Confl. Laws § 61; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FILIUS MULIERATUS (Lat.). The first legitimate son born to a woman who has had a bastard son by her husband before her marriage. Called, also, mulier, mulier puisné. 2 Bla. Com. 248.

FILIUS NULLIUS (Lat. son of nobody). A bastard. Called, also, filius populi (son of the people). 1 Bla. Com. 459; 6 Co. 65 a.

FILIUS POPULI. A son of the people; a natural child.

FILL. To occupy the whole capacity or extent of, so as to leave no space vacant.

To possess and discharge the duties of an office. The election of a person to an office constitutes the essence of his appointment, but the office cannot be considered as actually filled until his acceptance, either expressed or implied; Johnston v. Wilson, 2 N. H. 202, 9 Am. Dec. 50.

In a subscription for shares in a corporation, the word "fill" amounts to a promise to pay assessments; Bangor Bridge Co. v. McMahon, 10 Me. 478. As to the use of the word in connection with a doctor's prescription, see Ray v. Burbank, 61 Ga. 505, 34 Am. Rep. 103; DRUGGIST.

FILLY. A young mare; a female colt. An indictment charging the theft of a "filly" is not sustained by proof of the larceny of a "mare;" Lunsford v. State, 1 Tex. App. 448, 28 Am. Rep. 414.

FILTRATION. Where its franchise requires a water company to furnish filtered water, a neglect or refusal to do so entitles the municipality to a decree compelling it to comply with such requirement; City of Burlington v. Water Co., 86 Ia. 266, 53 N. W. 246; or it may annul the franchise; City of St. Cloud v. Water, Light & Power Co., 88 Minn. 329, 92 N. W. 1112; or may refuse to pay hydrant rentals until the filtering process shall be provided; Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. City of Pontiac, 212 Ill. 326, 72 N. E. 411. Where the contract was to furnish pure water, and the company had erected filtering appliances, it was required to filter it to a reasonable degree of purity; Brace Bros. v. Water Co., 7 Pa. Dist. R. 71. But where the source of supply was furnished by the municipality, and such source of supply became impure without the fault of the company, it was held the company could not be compelled to go to the additional expense of furnishing a filtering plant, the contract being silent on that subject; City of Georgetown v. Water Co., 134 Ky. 608, 121 S. W. 428, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303.

FILUM AQUÆ (Lat. a thread of water). This may mean either the middle line or the outer line. Altum filum denotes high-water mark. Blount. Filum is, however, used almost universally in connection with aquæ to denote the middle line of a stream. Medium filum is sometimes used with no additional meaning. The common-law rule was that conveyances of land bounded on streams, above tide water, extend usque ad filum aquæ. See RIVER; WATER-COURSE.

FILUM FORESTÆ (Lat.). The border of the forest. 2 Bla. Com. 419; 4 Inst. 303; Manw. Purlieu.

FILUM VIÆ (Lat.). The middle line of a road; a term used to indicate the middle line or thread of a street or road. 2 Sm. L. Cas. 98. See Peck v. Denniston, 121 Mass. 18; Motley v. Sargent, 119 Mass. 231; Spackman v. Steidel, 88 Pa. 453; Hannibal Bridge Co. v. Schaubacher, 57 Mo. 582; City of Chicago v. Rumsey, 87 Ill. 348. Where a description of land gives a street or road as a boundary, it is presumed that the title passes ad medium filum viæ; Cox v. Freedley, 33 Pa. 124, 75 Am. Dec. 584. See BOUNDARY; HIGHWAY; STREET.

FIN. End; limit; period of limitation.

FIN DE NON RECEVOIR. In French Law. An exception or plea founded on law, which without entering into the merits of the action shows that the plaintiff has no right to bring it, either because the time during which it ought to have been brought has elapsed, which is called prescription, or that there has been a compromise, accord, and satisfaction, or any other cause which has destroyed the right of action which once subsisted. Pothier, Proc. Civ. pt. 1, c. 2, s. 2, art. 2; Story, Confl. Laws § 580.

FINAL. Last; conclusive; pertaining to the end. In law it is usually employed in contrast with interlocutory (q. v.) with respect to pendency of suits.

FINAL COSTS. Such costs as are to be paid at the end of the suit; costs, the liability for which depends upon the final result of the litigation.

FINAL DECISION. One from which no appeal or writ of error can be taken. Moore v. Mayfield, 47 Ill. 167; 6 El. & Bl. 408.

FINAL DECREE. See DECREE.

FINAL DISPOSITION. Such a conclusive determination of the subject-matter embraced in a submission to arbitrators, that after the award is made nothing further remains to fix the rights and obligations of the parties, and no further controversy or litigation can arise thereon.

Such an award that the party against whom it is given may perform it without any further ascertainment of rights or obligation. See Colcord v. Fletcher, 50 Me. 401.

FINAL HEARING. The trial of an equity case upon the merits, as distinguished from the hearing of any preliminary questions arising in the cause, which are termed interlocutory. Akerly v. Vilas, 24 Wis. 171, 1 Am. Rep. 166.

FINAL JUDGMENT. See JUDGMENT.

FINAL PASSAGE. The vote on a passage of a bill or resolution in either house of the legislature after it has received the prescribed number of readings and has been subjected to such action as is required by the fundamental law governing the body or its own rule. See State v. Buckley, 54 Ala. 613.

FINAL PROCESS. Writs of execution. So called to distinguish them from mesne process, which includes all process issuing before judgment rendered. 3 Steph. Com. 489.

FINAL RECOVERY. The ultimate judgment of a court. Hunt v. Taft, 100 Mass. 91. It has also been construed as referring to the verdict, as distinguished from the judgment. Joannes v. Pangborn, 6 Allen (Mass.) 243. See DECREE.

FINAL SENTENCE. One which puts an end to a case. Distinguished from interlocutory See SENTENCE.

FINAL SETTLEMENT. The final account of an executor or administrator closing the business of the estate, with the order of the court thereon approving it and discharging the accountant. Roberts v. Spencer, 112 Ind. 85, 13 N. E. 131; Bartels v. Gove, 4 Wash. 632, 30 Pac. 675; Stevens v. Tucker, 87 Ind. 114; Sims v. Waters, 65 Ala. 442.

FINALIS CONCORDIA (Lat.). A decisive agreement. A fine. A final agreement.

A final agreement entered by the parties by permission of court in a suit actually brought for lands. Subsequently, the bringing suit, entry of agreement, etc., became merely formal, but its entry upon record gave a firm title to the plaintiff; 1 Washb. R. P. 70; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 143; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 689.

Finis est amicabilis compositio et finalis concordia ex consensu et concordia domini regis vel justiciarum (a fine is an amicable settlement and decisive agreement by consent and agreement of our lord the king or his justices). Glanville, lib. 8, c. 1.

Talis concordia finalis dicitur eo quod finem imposuit negotio, adeo ut neutra pars litigantium ab eo de cetero potcrit recidere (such concord is called final because it puts an end to the business, so that neither of the litigants can afterwards recede from it). Glanville, lib. 9, c. 3; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FINANCES. The public revenue or resources of a government or state. The income or means of an individual or corporation. It is somewhat like the fiscus of the Romans. The word is generally used in the plural.

Money resources generally. The state of the finances of an individual or corporation, being his condition in a monetary point of view. The cash he has on hand, and that which he expects to receive, as compared with the engagements he has made to pay.

FINANCIER. One who manages the finances or public revenue. Persons skilled in matters appertaining to the judicious management of money affairs.

FIND. See FINDER; FINDING.

FINDER. One who lawfully comes to the possession of another's personal property, which was then lost.

The finder of lost property at common law had a valid claim to the same against all the world except the true owner; 1 Stra. 504; Lawrence v. Buck, 62 Me. 275; Mathews v. Harsell, 1 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 393; Durfee v. Jones, 11 R. I. 588, 23 Am. Rep. 528; Tancil v. Seaton, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 601, 26 Am. Rep. 380; Sovern v. Yoran, 16 Or. 269, 20 Pac. 100, 8 Am. St. Rep. 293. Generally the place in which the property is found creates no exception to the general rule; Hoagland v. Amusement Co., 170 Mo. 335, 70 S. W. 878, 94 Am. St. Rep. 740; Weeks v. Hackett, 104 Me. 264, 71 Atl. 858, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1201, 129 Am. St. Rep. 390, 15 Ann. Cas. 1156; money or property found on the premises of another has been held, in the case of a servant in a hotel, as against the proprietor, to belong to the finder; Hamaker v. Blanchard, 90 Pa. 377, 35 Am. Rep. 664; to the same effect; Danielson v. Roberts, 44 Or. 108, 74 Pac. 913, 65 L. R. A. 526, 102 Am. St. Rep. 627, where an employee found money hidden and abandoned on his employer's premises. So a stranger who finds money in a shop may retain it as against the shop-owner; 21 L. J. Q. B. 75; unless it has been simply laid aside and left by mistake; McAvoy v. Medina, 11 Allen (Mass.) 548, 87 Am. Dec. 733; Loucks v. Gallogly, 1 Misc. 22, 23 N. Y. Supp. 126; or a conductor who finds money on the cars may retain it as against the company; New York & H. R. Co. v. Haws, 56 N. Y. 175; or an employé in a mill, who finds bank-notes among old papers bought to be manufactured over; Bowen v. Sullivan, 62 Ind. 281, 30 Am. Rep. 172. Drift-logs found on the banks of a river may be rightfully retained by the finder as against the riparian owner; Deaderick v. Oulds, 86 Tenn. 14, 5 S. W. 487, 6 Am. St. Rep. 812; but an aerolite which buries itself in the ground belongs rather to the owner of the soil on which it falls than to one who observes it and digs it out; Goddard v. Winchell, 86 Ia. 71, 52 N. W. 1124, 17 L. R. A. 788, 41 Am. St. Rep. 481. So gold-bearing quartz found buried in the earth, where it was placed by some unknown person, belongs to the owner of the soil as against the finder; Ferguson v. Ray, 44 Or. 557, 77 Pac. 600, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, 102 Am. St. Rep. 648, 1 Ann. Cas. 1. A prehistoric boat found by a gas company while excavating on land leased by it belongs to the lessor; 33 Ch. D. 566. Chattels lying upon private lands are, prima facie, in the possession of the owner of the land; [1896] 2 Q. B. 44. Money found in furniture belonging to the estate of a deceased person belongs to the administrator as against the finder; Kuykendall v. Fisher, 61 W. Va. 87, 56 S. E. 48, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, 11 Ann. Cas. 700; that the finder of a thing in a private place has no title against the owner of the place, see 39 Am. L. Rev. 922 and cases cited.

Where a workman employed by a corporation to clear out a pool on its land found two rings in the mud at the bottom of the pool, the corporation was held entitled to recover the rings in an action of detinue; [1896] 2 Q. B. 44. In that case Lord Russell, C. J., put the decision on the ground that the possession of land carried with it everything attached to it, or under it, and he expressly distinguished the last English case above cited, which, he said, stood by itself on the special ground that the notes being dropped in the public part of the shop were never in the custody of the shopkeeper; accordingly he says: "It is somewhat strange that there is no more direct authority on the question; but the general principle seems to me to be that where a person has possession of house or land, with a manifest intention to exercise control over it and the things which may be upon or in it, then, if something is found on that land, whether by an employé of the owner or by a stranger, the presumption is that the possession of that thing is in the owner of the locus in quo."

A commentator upon these cases says: "This language applies to land with respect to which the public has no easement, which differentiates the case from findings in shops and other public places. The real distinction, however, is this, that those things belong to the owner of the premises in which they are found, which, either from their nature, or from the circumstances attending the loss, become practically part and parcel of the freehold, such as the rings, covered by the water and mud, which undoubtedly belonged to the owner of the land, and the aerolite which buried itself in the ground to the depth of three feet; or, to use the language of some of the cases, those things belong to the owner which may be regarded as accretions to his land, such as the aerolite, the rings, or drift-logs; though the latter may be pursued and taken by a former finder, from whom they have escaped." 36 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 588; Ferguson v. Ray, 44 Or. 557, 77 Pac. 600, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, 102 Am. St. Rep. 648, 1 Ann. Cas. 1. The contrary view is taken by some courts, which hold that the owner of the soil acquires no title to treasure trove by virtue of his ownership; Weeks v. Hackett, 104 Me. 264, 71 Atl. 858, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1201, 120 Am. St. Rep. 390, 15 Ann. Cas. 1156 (coins found buried in the earth); Danielson v. Roberts, 44 Or. 108, 74 Pac. 913, 65 L. R. A. 526, 102 Am. St. Rep. 627 (coins secreted in an old building).

Where a man buys a chattel which, unknown to himself and the vendor, contains valuable property, he will, as to that, be considered merely as a finder. When a person purchased at a public auction a bureau, and appropriated to his own use a purse containing money, found in a secret drawer, the existence of which at the time of the sale was not known to any one, it was held that there was a delivery of the bureau but not of the purse and money, and it was a simple case of finding and subject to the law in such cases; 7 M. & W. 623. See Br. Leg. Max. 8th Am. ed. 807.

The finder is entitled to certain rights, and liable to duties which he is obliged to perform. This is a species of deposit, which, as it does not arise ex contractu, may be called a quasi deposit; and it is governed by the same general rules as common deposits. The finder is required to take the same reasonable care of the property found as any voluntary depositary ex contractu; Doctor & Stud. Dial. 2, c. 38; 2 Bulstr. 306, 312; 1 Rolle 125.

The finder is not bound to take the goods he finds; yet, when he does undertake the custody, he is required to exercise reasonable diligence in preserving the property; and he will be responsible as a bailee for gross negligence. Some of the old authorities laid down that "if a man find butter, and by his negligent keeping it putrefy, or if a man find garments, and by his negligent keeping they be moth-eaten, no action lies." So it is if a man find goods and then lose them again. Bacon, Abr. Bailment, D; and in support of this position, Leon. 123, 223; Ow. 141; 2 Bulstr. 21, are cited. But these cases, if carefully examined, will not, perhaps, be found to decide the point as broadly as it is stated in Bacon. A finder would be held responsible for gross negligence, or fraud; Story, Bailm. § 85.

On the other hand, the finder of an article is entitled to recover all expenses which have necessarily occurred in preserving the thing found; Domat, l. 2, t. 9, s. 2, n. 2. But unlike salvors by water, he can claim nothing beyond this; 2 H. Bla. 254; Marvin v. Treat, 37 Conn. 96, 9 Am. Rep. 307; Trustees of Millcreek Tp. v. Brighton Stock Yards Co., 27 Ohio St. 435; Shoul. Bailm. 28.

Where money was found upon a body floating in the water and paid into the admiralty court by the salvors, they were awarded half of the amount as salvage, and the public administrator of the county in which the court was located was held entitled to the balance as against the finders, or the United States, claiming under its prerogative rights of a sovereign; Gardner v. Ninety-Nine Gold Coins, 111 Fed. 552. The public administrator was considered to represent the true owner in like manner as would an ordinary administrator.

When the owner does not reclaim the goods lost, they belong to the finder; 1 Bla. Com. 296; 2 id. 9; 2 Kent 290; and should there be several finders, they share in common; Keron v. Cashman (N. J.) 33 Atl. 1055, 19 N. J. L. J. 54. The acquisition of treasure by the finder is evidently founded on the rule that what belongs to none naturally becomes the property of the first occupant: res nullius naturaliter fit primi occupantis. Money or goods that are lost are the only kind that can be said to be found. It is property that the owner has involuntarily parted with, and not property that he has intentionally concealed in the earth for safekeeping; Sovern v. Yoran, 16 Or. 269, 20 Pac. 100, 8 Am. St. Rep. 293.

To the same effect when property is found concealed in other property, such as bureaus, safes, machinery, stoves, etc. It is held in many cases not to be lost in the sense of abandoned, unless it appears to have been casually or accidentally placed there; Durfee v. Jones, 11 R. I. 588, 23 Am. Rep. 528; Huthmacher v. Harris's Adm'rs, 38 Pa. 491, 80 Am. Dec. 502; Warren v. Ulrich, 130 Pa. 413, 18 Atl. 618. Money found under such conditions is held to constitute treasure trove; Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 456, 43 Am. Rep. 600; Sovern v. Yoran, 16 Or. 269, 20 Pac. 100, 8 Am. St. Rep. 293; Kuykendall v. Fisher, 61 W. Va. 87, 56 S. E. 48, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, 11 Ann. Cas. 700. Money left on a desk in a bank, provided for the use of the depositors, is not lost so as to entitle the finder to the same, as against the bank; Loucks v. Gallogly, 1 Misc. (N. Y.) 22, 23 N. Y. Supp. 126. It seems that the title of the owner to property lying at the bottom of the sea is not divested, however long it may remain there, and no other person can acquire such title except by condemnation and sale in admiralty; Murphy v. Dunham, 38 Fed. 503. One who finds property at sea is only a salvor. When a ship was almost becalmed in high seas a floating chest was found and with but little trouble taken on board. It contained 70 doubloons. It was held that the finders were not entitled to the whole property, though no claims or marks of ownership, but should be compensated by a moiety as for salvage services. The other moiety was directed to be paid into court; Hollingsworth v. Seventy Doubloons, etc., Fed. Cas. No. 6,620. And to the same effect, Gardner v. Ninety-Nine Gold Coins, 111 Fed. 552, where money was found on a dead body floating in the water. See supra.

In a German case a woman, eating an oyster in a restaurant, found a pearl in it, which it was held belonged to her escort, who paid for the food; 39 Am. L. Rev. 443.

As to the criminal responsibility of the finder, the result of the authorities is that if a man finds goods that have been actually lost, or are reasonably supposed by him to have been lost, and appropriates them, with intent to take the entire dominion over them, really believing when he takes them that the owner cannot be found, it is not larceny; but if he takes them with the like intent, though lost or reasonably supposed to be lost, but reasonably believing that the owner can be found, it is larceny; Baker v. State, 29 Ohio St. 184, 23 Am. Rep. 731; 2 C. & K. 841; Wolfington v. State, 53 Ind. 343; Flemister v. State, 121 Ga. 146, 48 S. E. 910; State v. Stevens, 2 Pennewill (Del.) 486, 49 Atl. 174; State v. Hoshaw, 89 Minn. 307, 94 N. W. 873.

If a finder attempts to retain lost property as against the owner, or converts it to his own use, when he knows the owner, he will be guilty of larceny; Lawrence v. State, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 228, 34 Am. Dec. 644; Pritchett v. State, 2 Sneed. (Tenn.) 285, 62 Am. Dec.

468. See as to this rule and its qualification Broom, Com., 4th ed. 955; Porter v. State, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 226. There must be a felonious intent; Com. v. Titus, 116 Mass. 42, 17 Am. Rep. 138, and note. Though it is the duty of the finder to seek out the owner and restore the property with due diligence; State v. Hoshaw, 89 Minn. 307, 94 N. W. 873; Pen. Code N. Y. § 539; yet the want of promptness on the part of the finder does not prove felonious intent in keeping the property; Peters v. Bourneau, 22 Ill. App. 177. The question is, whether the finder, when he came into possession, believed the owner could be found; 2 Green, Cr. L. Rep. 35. In Regina v. Thurborn, Parke, B., observes that it cannot be doubted that if, at this day, the punishment of death was assigned to theft and usually carried into effect, the misappropriation of lost goods would never be held to constitute that offence. Whart. Cr. L. § 901. See LARCENY; BAILMENT; SALVAGE; TREASURE TROVE.

FINDING. The result of the deliberations of a jury or a court. Todd v. Potter, 1 Day (Conn.) 238; Denslow v. Moore, 2 Day (Conn.) 12; U. S. v. Moller, 16 Blatchf. 65, Fed. Cas. No. 15,794.

The word find or finding does not always imply the same thing in legal proceedings. Where a cause is tried by the court, the finding means the fact which the court considers the evidence establishes, but find, as used in a statute in respect to the truth of a complaint for the revocation of a license, implies that the board is satisfied from the evidence, and the conclusion may be informally expressed. State v. Beloit, 74 Wis. 267, 42 N. W. 110.

Under the Act of March 3, 1865, R. S. § 649, it was provided that issues of fact in civil cases might be tried and determined by the court without the intervention of a jury upon the filing by the parties of a stipulation in writing waiving a jury, and that the finding of the court upon the facts might be either general or special and should have the same effect as the verdict of the jury; 1 Comp. Stat. (1901) 525. This provision seems to be undisturbed by the enactment of the judicial code, and it is omitted from the list of sections of the Revised Statutes repealed by it. The supreme court, in construing the statute above cited, lays down the following principles with respect to findings as being settled (citing a number of cases to each proposition): "1. The facts found by the court below are conclusive; that the bill of exceptions cannot be used to bring up the evidence for a review of these findings; that the only rulings, upon which we are authorized to pass, are such as might be presented by a bill of exceptions prepared as in actions at law; and that the findings have practically the same effect as the special verdict of a jury. 2. That it is only the ultimate facts which the court is bound to find; and that this court will not take notice of a refusal to find the mere incidental facts, which only amount to evidence from which the ultimate fact is to be obtained. 3. If the court below neglects or refuses to make a finding one way or the other, as to the existence of a material fact, which has been established by uncontradicted evidence, or if it finds such a fact when not supported by any evidence whatever, and an exception be taken, the question may be brought up for review in that particular. In the one case, the refusal to find would be equivalent to finding that the fact was immaterial; and, in the other, that there was some evidence to prove what is found, when in truth there was none. Both of these are questions of law, and proper subjects for review in an appellate court." The City of New York, 147 U. S. 76, 13 Sup. Ct. 211, 37 L. Ed. 84.

As to the findings of a master, see MASTER IN CHANCERY.

Where a case is tried by a court without a jury, its findings upon questions of fact are conclusive, in the United States supreme court; Stanley v. Albany County, 121 U. S. 535, 7 Sup. Ct. 1234, 30 L. Ed. 1000; Allen v. Bank, 120 U. S. 20, 7 Sup. Ct. 460, 30 L. Ed. 373. Errors in the findings of fact by the court are not subject to revision if there is any evidence upon which such findings could be made; Hathaway v. Bank, 134 U. S. 494, 10 Sup. Ct. 608, 33 L. Ed. 1004.

A finding without evidence is arbitrary and useless, and an act of congress authorizing any body to make such finding would be inconsistent with justice, and an exercise of arbitrary power; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 227 U. S. 88, 33 Sup. Ct. 185, 57 L. Ed. —.

FINE. In Conveyancing. An amicable composition or agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the court, by which the lands in question become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties. Co. Litt. 120; 2 Bla. Com. 349; Bacon, Abr. Fines and Recoveries. Fines were abolished in England by stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74. Their use was not unknown in the United States, but has been either expressly abolished or become obsolete. See 1 Steph. Com. 514.

A fine is so called because it puts an end not only to the suit thus commenced, but also to all other suits and controversies concerning the same matter. Such concords, says Doderidge (Eng. Lawyer 84), have been in use in the civil law, and are called transactions, whereof they say thus: Transactiones sunt de eis quæ in controversia sunt, a lite futura aut pendente ad certam compositionem reducuntur, dando aliquid vel accipiendo. Or shorter, thus: Transactio est de re dubia et lite ancipite ne dum ad finem ducta, non gratuita pactio. It is commonly defined an assurance by matter of record, and is founded upon a supposed previously existing right, and upon a writ requiring the party to perform his covenant; although a fine may be levied upon any writ by which lands may be demanded, charged, or bound. It has also been defined an acknowledgment on record of a previous gift or feoffment, and prima facie carries a fee, although it may be limited to an estate for life or in fee-tail. Prest. Conv. 200, 202, 268, 269; 2 Bla. Com. 348.

The stat. 18 Edw. I., called modus levandi fines, declares and regulates the manner in which they should be levied and carried on; and that is as follows: The party to whom the land is conveyed or assured commences an action at law against the other, generally an action of covenant, by suing out a writ of præcipe, called a writ of covenant, that the one shall convey the lands to the other, on the breach of which agreement the action is brought. The suit being thus commenced, then follows the licentia concordandi, or leave to compromise the suit. The concord, or agreement itself, after leave obtained by the court: this is usually an acknowledgment from the deforciants that the lands in question are the lands of the complainants. The note of the fine, which is only an abstract of the writ of covenant and the concord; naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement. The foot of the fine, or the conclusion of it, which includes the whole matter, reciting the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. See Cruise, Fines; Bacon, Abr. Fines and Recoveries; Comyns, Dig. Fine.

In Criminal Law. Pecuniary punishment imposed by a lawful tribunal upon a person convicted of crime or misdemeanor. See Shepp. Touchst. 2; Bacon, Abr. Fines and Amercements; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 940. It may include a forfeiture or penalty recoverable in a civil action; Hanscomb v. Russell, 11 Gray (Mass.) 373; Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Baty, 6 Neb. 37, 29 Am. Rep. 356. A fine abates if unpaid at the death of the offender; U. S. v. Mitchell, 163 Fed. 1014.

The amount of the fine is frequently left to the discretion of the court, who ought to proportion the fine to the offence. To prevent the abuse of excessive fines, the constitution of the United States directs that "excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed." VIIIth Amendment; Cooley, Const. Lim. 377. This applies to national and not to state legislation; Pervear v. Massachusetts, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 480, 18 L. Ed. 608. The supreme court cannot, on habeas corpus, revise the sentence of an inferior court on the ground that the fine was excessive; In re Watkins, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 568, 8 L. Ed. 786.

The power to fine reposed in a court of last resort is not unlimited, but is limited by the obligation not to impose excessive fines; Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. State of Missouri, 224 U. S. 271, 32 Sup. Ct. 406, 56 L. Ed. 760.

FINE AND RECOVERY ACT. The statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74. This act abolished fines and recoveries. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 364, n.; 1 Steph. Com. 514. See FINE.

FINE CAPIENDO PRO TERRIS. An obsolete writ which lay for a person who, upon conviction by jury, had his lands and goods taken, and his body imprisoned, to be remitted his imprisonment, and have his lands and goods redelivered to him, on obtaining favor of a sum of money, etc. Reg. Orig. 142.

FINE FOR ALIENATION. A sum of money which a tenant by knight's service, or a tenant in capite by socage tenure, paid to his lord for permission to alienate his right in the estate he held to another, and by that means to substitute a new tenant for himself. 2 Bla. Com. 71, 89; De Peyster v. Michael, 6 N. Y. 467, 495, 57 Am. Dec. 470. These fines are now abolished.

FINE FOR ENDOWMENT. A fine anciently payable to the lord by the widow of a tenant without which she could not be endowed of her husband's lands. Abolished under Henry I., and by Magna Carta. Moz. & W.

FINE NON CAPIENDO PRO PULCHRE PLACITANDO. An obsolete writ to prohibit officers of court from taking fines for fair pleading.

FINE PRO REDISSEISINA CAPIENDO. An old writ which lay for the release of one imprisoned for a redisseisin, on payment of a reasonable fine. Reg. Orig. 222.

FINE ROLLS. See OBLATE ROLLS.

FINE SUR COGNIZANCE DE DROIT COME CEO QUE IL AD DE SON DONE. A fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee as that which he hath of the gift of the cognizor. By this the deforciant acknowledges in court a former feoffment or gift in possession to have been made by him to the plaintiff. 2 Bla. Com. 352; Cunningh. L. Dict.; Shepp. Touchst. c. 2; Com., Dig. Fine.

FINE SUR COGNIZANCE DE DROIT TANTUM. A fine upon acknowledgment of the right merely. Generally used to pass a reversionary interest which is in the cognizor. 2 Bla. Com. 351; Jacob, Law Dict.; Com., Dig.

FINE SUR CONCESSIT. A fine granted where the cognizor, in order to make an end of disputes, though he acknowledges no precedent right, yet grants to the consignee an estate de novo, usually for life or years, by way of a supposed composition. 2 Bla. Com. 353; Shepp. Touchst. c. 2.

FINE SUR DONE, GRANT ET RENDER. A double fine, comprehending the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo and the fine sur concessit. It may be used to convey particular limitations of estates and to persons who are strangers or not named in the writ of covenant; whereas the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, etc., conveys nothing but an absolute estate, either of inheritance, or at least freehold. Salk. 340. In this last species of fines the cognizee, after the right is acknowledged to be in him, grants back again or renders to the cognizor, or perhaps to a stranger, some other estate in the premises. 2 Bla. Com. 353; Viner, Abr. Fine; Comyns, Dig. Fine; 1 Washb. R. P. 33.

FINEM FACERE (Lat.). To make or pay a fine. Bracton 106; Skene.

FINES LE ROY. In Old English Law. A sum of money which any one is to pay the king for any contempt or offence; which fine any one that commits any trespass, or is convict that he falsely denies his own deed, or did anything in contempt of the law, shall pay to the king. Termes de la Ley; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FINGER PRINTS. See ANTHROPOMETRY.

FINIRE. In English Law. To fine, or pay a fine. Cowell. To end or finish a matter.

FINIS. End; conclusion; limit.

FINITIO. An ending; death as the end of life. Blount; Cowell.

FINIUM REGUNDORUM ACTIO. In Civil Law. An action for regulating boundaries. 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 271.

FINORS. Those that purify gold and silver, and part them by fire and water from coarser metals; and therefore in the statute of Hen. VII. c. 2, they are also called "parters." Termes de la Ley.

FIRDFARE. In English Law. A summoning forth to a military expedition (indictio ad profectionem militarem). Spelman, Gloss.

FIRDSOCNE (Sax.). Exemption from military service. Spelman, Gloss.

FIRDWITE (Sax.). A mulct or penalty imposed on military tenants for their default in not appearing in arms or coming to an expedition. Cowell. A penalty imposed for murder committed in the army. Cowell.

FIRE. The effect of combustion. Webster, Dict.

The legal sense of the word is the same as the popular. 1 Pars. Marit. Law 231.

Where an insurance policy excluded liability for damages caused by explosions, unless fire ensues, a lighted match causing an explosion is not a fire; Mitchell v. Ins. Co., 183 U. S. 42, 22 Sup. Ct. 22, 46 L. Ed. 74; nor is a lighted lamp; United Life, Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio St. 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735; and to the same effect, Transatlantic Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorsey, 56 Md. 70, 40 Am. Rep. 403; Briggs v. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 446.

Fire is not a peril of the sea. In Scotch law, however, fire is an inevitable accident. Bell, Dict.

The ordinary meaning of the word as used in an insurance policy includes the idea of visible heat or light. Damage to wool by spontaneous combustion with smoke and great heat, but without any visible flame or glow, is held not to be fire. The "fire is always caused by combustion, but combustion does not always cause fire." Western Woolen Mill Co. v. Assurance Co., 139 Fed. 637, 72 C. C. A. 1.

When a fire becomes uncontrollable and dangerous to the public, the destruction of a house is justified for the protection of the neighborhood; for the maxim salus populi est suprema lex applies in such case; 11 Co. 13. See ACCIDENT; EMINENT DOMAIN; 3 Wms. Saund. 422 a, note 2; 3 Co. Litt. 57 a, n. 1; 1 Cruise, Dig. 151, 152; 1 Rolle, Abr. 1; Bacon, Abr. Action on the Case, F; 2 Lois des Bâtim. 124; 1 Term 310; 6 id. 489; Ambl. 619.

When real estate is let, and the tenant covenants to pay the rent during the term, unless there are proper exceptions to such covenants, and the premises are afterwards destroyed by fire during the term, the rent must be paid although there be no enjoyment; for the common rule prevails, res perit domino. The tenant, by the accident, loses his term; the landlord, the residence; Story, Eq. Jur. § 102; Woodf. L. & T. 408.

The owner of property may kindle and have a fire on his own premises for any lawful purpose, such as burning waste in husbandry, without liability for injury to the property of another, if it is done with due care as to time, manner, and circumstances, and with respect to casual fires, also having due regard to the conditions of weather, wind, and proximity of inflammable material; Thomas, Negl. 640; Webb, Poll. Torts 616, and note. Even in the extreme case of one who had been warned of the danger that his haystack would take fire and endanger others, the contention that the question should have been put to the jury whether he had acted bona fide, to the best of his judgment, and that the standard of ordinary prudence was too uncertain as a criterion, was unsuccessfully pressed, and the care of a prudent man was held to be the proper measure of duty; 3 Bing. N. C. 468.

Very early in England, the duty of every man to safely keep his own fire was a stringent "custom of the realm," i. e. at common law; Y. B. 2 Hen. IV. 18, pl. 5; and this, it is said, may be founded on ancient German custom, when a man carries fire more than nine feet from his hearth, only at his peril; Ll. Langob, cc. 147, 148 (A. D. 643); Poll. Torts 616. The rule applied as well to out-door fires, and in "a case grounded upon the common custom of the realm for negligently keeping his fire"; 1 Ld. Raym. 264; s. c. 1 Salk. 13. Liability for domestic fires begun accidentally and without accident is removed in England by stats. of Anne and Geo. III.; 11 Q. B. 347. The rule of modern times is affected by the increase of uses to which fire is applied, such as for mills, railroads, and the like, and in England the leading case of Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3 H. L. 330 (which itself concerned a reservoir, but the application of which has passed far beyond the class of facts on which it was determined), laid down the rule "that the person who, for his own purposes, brings on his lands, and collects and keeps there, anything likely to do mischief if it escapes, must keep it in at his peril, and, if he does not do so, is prima facie answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape." This principle was expressly applied to railroads; L. R. 3 Q. B. 733; and to an engine brought on a highway; 5 Q. B. Div. 597.

It may be safely asserted as a rule that "a man who negligently sets fire on his own land, and keeps it negligently, is liable to an action at common law for any injury done by the spreading or communication of the fire directly from his own land to the property of another, whether through the air or along the ground and whether he might or might not have reasonably anticipated the particular manner and direction in which it is actually communicated;" Higgins v. Dewey, 107 Mass. 494, 90 Am. Rep. 63; Hays v. Miller, 70 N. Y. 112; Krippner v. Biebl, 28 Minn. 139, 9 N. W. 671; Jesperson v. Phillips, 46 Minn. 147, 48 N. W. 770; Needham v. King, 95 Mich. 303, 54 N. W. 891; Cleland v. Thornton, 43 Cal. 437. Where one negligently allows fire to escape from his premises and in an action for damages, for loss resulting therefrom, asserts that a sudden shift of the wind caused the fire to spread, he must show that it was extraordinary; Mahaffey v. Lumber Co., 61 W. Va. 571, 56 S. E. 893, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1263. One accidently but not negligently firing his house is not liable for the spread of the fire by wind; Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitlock, 99 Ind. 16, 50 Am. Rep. 71; Beckham v. Ry. Co., 127 Ga. 550, 56 S. E. 638, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 476. The spreading of a fire does not raise a presumption of negligence; Catron v. Nichols, 81 Mo. 80, 51 Am. Rep. 222; if there was none in starting it; Merchants' Wharfboat Ass'n v. Wm. Wood & Co., 64 Miss. 661, 2 South. 76, 60 Am. Rep. 76; Read v. R. Co., 44 N. J. L. 280. As to setting fire and restraining it, the rule is that ordinary prudence, honest motives, in the one, and due diligence as to the other, exempt one from liability; Hanlon v. Ingram, 3 Ia. 81; and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff; Bachelder v. Heagan, 18 Me. 32.

The owner of a threshing machine is bound to use the safest spark arrester and not merely one in common use; Martin v. McCrary, 115 Tenn. 316, 89 S. W. 324, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 530.

The right to operate a railroad includes the use of fire in locomotives; Philadelphia & R. Co. v. Schultz, 93 Pa. 341; Babcock v. R. Co., 140 N. Y. 308, 35 N. E. 596; and, if every reasonable precaution has been observed to prevent injury, the railroad company will not be liable; Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 4 Md. 242, 59 Am. Dec. 72; yet it must show the absence of negligence on its part, at least so far as concerns safety of construction and care in the operation of its locomotives, and the freedom of the track from combustibles (see infra); Webb, Poll. Torts 561, n.; Eddy v. Lafayette, 49 Fed. 807, 1 C. C. A. 441; Jefferis v. R. Co., 3 Houst. (Del.) 447; Edrington v. Ry. Co., 41 La. Ann. 96, 6 South. 19; Hagan v. R. Co., 86 Mich. 615, 49 N. W. 509. In some states this burden is put upon the company by statute; Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 115; Small v. R. Co., 50 Ia. 338; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Clampit, 63 Ill. 95; and in others by decisions adopting the rule; Campbell v. R. Co., 58 Mo. 498; Wiley v. R. Co., 44 N. J. L. 247; Lawton v. Giles, 90 N. C. 374; Burlington & M. R. R. v. Westover, 4 Neb. 268; Hull v. R. Co., 14 Cal. 387, 73 Am. Dec. 656; in other states the plaintiff must fix upon defendant both the origin of the fire, and negligence in one of the points referred to; Garrett v. Ry. Co., 36 Ia. 121; Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Paramore, 31 Ind. 143; Flinn v. R. Co., 142 N. Y. 11, 36 N. E. 1046; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. Ed. 356. But the owner is, in the absence of statute, held to the duty of ordinary care, and his negligence will defeat recovery; Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Spear, 44 Mich. 169, 6 N. W. 202, 38 Am. Rep. 242; or if the spreading of the fire was due to the negligence of the servants of the owner there is no liability; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McKay, 69 Miss. 139, 12 South. 447. It has been held that the fact that fire has been communicated by a passing locomotive is prima facie evidence of negligence; Wise v. R. Co., 85 Mo. 178; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Keller, 36 Neb. 189, 54 N. W. 420; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Gray, 62 Miss. 383; Wabash R. Co. v. Smith, 42 Ill. App. 527; Niskern v. R. Co., 22 Fed. 811. See 11 L. R. A. 506, note. The company must exercise as great a degree of care to protect the public from injury by fire as is required in favor of its patrons; Babcock v. R. Co., 67 Hun (N. Y.) 469, 22 N. Y. Supp. 449; and the failure to provide the best appliances to prevent injury to property by fire is want of ordinary care; Watt v. R. Co., 23 Nev. 154, 44 Pac. 423, 46 Pac. 52, 726, 62 Am. St. Rep. 772; contra, Paris, M. & S. P. R. Co. v. Nesbitt, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 608, 33 S. W. 280; but see Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Reagan (Tex.) 32 S. W. 846, where it was held that the rule is that the company is only bound to exercise due care with respect to providing the best appliances. See Babcock v. R. Co., 140 N. Y. 308, 35 N. E. 596; Flinn v. R. Co., 142 N. Y. 11, 36 N. E. 1046; where it was held that compliance with a statute requiring a guard against the emission of sparks, except during certain months, does not exempt the company from the exercise of that care to which they are bound in law, to avoid injuring the property of their neighbor; T. & O. C. Ry. Co. v. Wickenden, 11 Ohio Cir. Ct. 378.

A question, the settlement of which has caused much litigation, was whether a railroad company was liable for damage to property not adjoining the track, nor set on fire directly from the locomotive, but by the spreading of the fire from the property first ignited. The rule now firmly established is that the company is liable for such injury naturally and by the ordinary course of events resulting from the fire started by the locomotive; Hooksett v. R. R., 38 N. H. 242; Martin v. R. Co., 62 Conn. 331, 25 Atl. 239; Pratt v. R. Co., 42 Me. 579; Perley v. R. Co.,

98 Mass. 414, 96 Am. Dec. 645; even where the property was at a considerable distance from the track; C. P. 98; s. c. 6 id. 14; Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181; or if several owners intervene; Hart v. Western R. Corp., 13 Metc. (Mass.) 99, 46 Am. Dec. 719; Mahaffey v. Lumber Co., 61 W. Va. 571, 56 S. E. 893, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1263.

The stubborn resistance to the establishment of this rule and its extended discussion by the courts of so many jurisdictions is accounted for by the fact that early decisions in New York and Pennsylvania were made the basis of strong contention against it in every state when the question first arose. Ryan v. N. Y. C. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 210, 91 Am. Dec. 49, and Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kerr, 62 Pa. 353, 1 Am. Rep. 431, where the cases sustained the position that where the fire communicated from the sparks to a house near the track, and thence extended to another at a distance, the company was not liable for the loss of the latter, notwithstanding its negligence in allowing the sparks to escape. In the New York case it was determined that the negligence was too remote, and the injury not the natural and probable result; but later in the same court, in an action against a railroad company for fire, resulting from the ignition of a tie by coal from a locomotive, an effort was made to distinguish the case, and it was held that the question of proximate cause was properly left to the jury; Webb v. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 420, 10 Am. Rep. 389. It was further shaken (usually upon the idea of distinguishing it), in Lowery v. Ry. Co., 99 N. Y. 158, 1 N. E. 608, 52 Am. Rep. 12; and its weight as authority practically ended by O'Neill v. Ry. Co., 115 N. Y. 579, 22 N. E. 217, 5 L. R. A. 591; and Read v. Nichols, 118 N. Y. 224, 23 N. E. 468, 7 L. R. A. 130.

The Pennsylvania case was also "distinguished" in a case in which the same court held that where sparks from an engine fired a railroad tie and it resulted in burning two fields and fences, the proximity of the cause is a question for the jury, who must determine whether the facts constituted a continuous succession of events so linked as to be a natural whole, or whether the chain is so broken as to become independent, and the final result cannot be said to be the natural and probable consequence of the negligence of the defendants, and that it might and ought to have been foreseen under the circumstances; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hope, 80 Pa. 373, 21 Am. Rep. 100; but Pa. R. R. Co. v. Kerr was expressly approved and followed in a later case in which damage by a fire, spread by burning oil carried by a running stream, was held too remote, and the stream was considered to be an intervening agent; in this case the court said that the facts were ascertained and there was nothing to put to the jury, and on this theory it was distinguished from the case in 80 Pa. This case had what the chancellor of New Jersey termed substantially its counterpart in that state, in a claim for damages against a receiver operating a railroad, and strong disapproval of the Pennsylvania case and the earlier case in New York was expressed. The stream was considered similar to other material forces, and a natural link in the chain of causation, and the receiver was held liable, the rule as applied being thus stated: "When a fire originates in the negligence of a defendant, and is carried by a material force, whether it be the wind, the law of gravitation, combustible matter existing in a state of nature, or other means, to the plaintiff's property and destroys it, and it appears that no object intervened between the point where the fire started and the injury, which would have prevented the injury, if due care had been taken, the defendant is legally answerable for the loss;" Kuhn v. Jewett, 32 N. J. Eq. 647. The only point which suggested difficulty in applying to this class of cases the general doctrine of liability for the result of negligence is brought out with distinctness in the different views taken by the Pennsylvania and New Jersey courts of cases precisely similar as to the facts, and that difference may be considered as concerning rather the doctrine of proximate cause than as having special relation to fires from locomotives.

The cases of Ryan v. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 214, 91 Am. Dec. 49, and Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kerr, 62 Pa. 353, 1 Am. Rep. 431, are said to "stand alone" and to be "in conflict with every English or American case as yet reported"; Fent v. Ry. Co., 59 Ill. 349, 14 Am. Rep. 13; "much shaken" and "each qualified and explained in its own jurisdiction, by later decisions so as to take from its weight"; Martin v. R. Co., 62 Conn. 331, 25 Atl. 239; and finally the United States supreme court, speaking through a Pennsylvania justice says of the two cases: "Those cases have been the subject of much criticism since they were decided; and it may, perhaps, be doubted whether they have always been understood. If they were intended to assert the doctrine that when a building has been set on fire through the negligence of a party, and a second building has been fired from the first, it is a conclusion of law that the owner of the second has no recourse to the negligent wrong-doer, they have not been accepted as authority for such doctrine, even in the states where the decisions were made." Strong, J., in Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 474, 24 L. Ed. 256, citing Webb v. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 420, 10 Am. Rep. 389, and Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hope, 80 Pa. 373, 21 Am. Rep. 100; and cases contra of other states.

The result is to settle the rule as stated that, whether the fire is traceable to its negligence directly or indirectly, the company is liable when the fire started by its locomotive was the proximate cause of the injury complained of, and this applies as well to the class of cases hereafter noted in this title. The application of the doctrine is illustrated by a case which held that when the fire negligently set was carried by moderately high wind, though not unusual, the wind was not the proximate cause, and the company was liable; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. McCollum, 2 Kan. App. 319, 43 Pac. 97. When the fire is communicated indirectly, the question as to what is the proximate cause of the injury is ordinarily not one of science or of legal knowledge, but of fact for the jury to determine, in view of the accompanying circumstances; Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256; Fent v. Ry. Co., 59 Ill. 349, 14 Am. Rep. 13; Toledo, W. & W. Ry. Co. v. Muthersbaugh, 71 Ill. 572; Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 115; Perry v. R. Co., 50 Cal. 578; Clemens v. R. Co., 53 Mo. 366, 14 Am. Rep. 460; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bales, 16 Kan. 252; and, notwithstanding the earlier cases discussed supra, Frace v. R. Co., 143 N. Y. 182, 38 N. E. 102; and Lehigh Val. R. Co. v. McKeen, 90 Pa. 122, 35 Am. Rep. 644.

A railroad company has the right to keep its right of way free from combustibles by burning off grass, etc., but in such case it is bound at its peril to keep such fire within bounds; Indiana, B. & W. Ry. Co. v. Overman, 110 Ind. 538, 10 N. E. 575. See 11 L. R. A. 506, note.

Indeed, though not an insurer, the railroad company must keep its track reasonably clear of such danger; Briant v. R. Co., 104 Mich. 307, 62 N. W. 365; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Rowland (Tex.) 23 S. W. 421; St. Johns & H. R. Co. v. Ransom, 33 Fla. 406, 14 South. 892; Pierce v. R. Co., 105 Mass. 199 (but see Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Gilland, 4 Wyo. 395, 34 Pac. 953); and is liable for damages from fire, caused by its negligence with respect to a fire which spreads from the track; Black v. R. Co., 115 N. C. 667, 20 S. E. 713, 909; and the care exercised in constructing and operating the engine is no defence; Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. v. Endres, 57 Ill. App. 69; Stacy v. R. Co., 85 Wis. 225, 54 N. W. 779; New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Thomas, 92 Va. 606, 24 S. E. 264; nor is the diligence of the company in attempting to quench the fire; Austin v. R. Co., 93 Wis. 496, 67 N. W. 1129; it is for the jury to determine the question of negligence or care with respect to allowing weeds to grow on the right of way; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Medley, 75 Va. 499, 40 Am. Rep. 734; Gibbons v. R. Co., 58 Wis. 335, 17 N. W. 132; or the time and manner of setting and guarding the fire; Cole v. R. Co., 105 Mich. 549, 63 N. W. 647; or whether fire was started by sparks from a locomotive; Marande v. R. Co., 184 U. S. 173, 22 Sup. Ct. 340, 46 L. Ed. 487; the company must exercise ordinary care which is proportioned to, and measured by, the amount of danger, and is liable for the want of it; Martin v. R. Co., 87 Tex. 117, 26 S. W. 1052; such fire if started for a lawful purpose is itself no evidence of negligence, which must be proved by the person complaining; Mattoon v. R. Co., 6 S. D. 301, 60 N. W. 69; nor is unlawful speed of a train unless the fire would not otherwise have occurred; Bennett v. R. Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 423, 32 S. W. 834.

It has been held that when a fire is caused by the sparks of a locomotive, communicating with dried grass which a railroad company has permitted to accumulate in the line of its track, and thence spreading to the property of an adjacent land-owner, it is a question for a jury whether the company was guilty of negligence, irrespective of any question as to negligence or omission of duty on the part of the land-owner; Kellogg v. R. Co., 26 Wis. 223, 7 Am. Rep. 69; Flynn v. R. Co., 40 Cal. 14, 6 Am. Rep. 695; contra, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Simonson, 54 Ill. 504, 5 Am. Rep. 155; Snyder v. R. Co., 11 W. Va. 14; Mississippi Home Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 70 Miss. 119, 12 South. 156. Direct evidence of the accumulation of such inflammable material was held sufficient evidence of defendant's liability; Sibilrud v. R. Co., 29 Minn. 58, 11 N. W. 146; Troxler v. R. Co., 74 N. C. 377; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Porter, 92 Ill. 437; but allowing such accumulation is not negligence per se, unless such as a prudent man having regard to the same hazard would not permit; Kesee v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 78, 6 Am. Rep. 643; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Stevens, 87 Ind. 198; and there must be a connection between the negligence and the injury and no intervening cause (such as in this case a high wind carrying a burning brand over a ridge to a marsh adjoining plaintiff's); Marvin v. Ry. Co., 79 Wis. 140, 47 N. W. 1123, 11 L. R. A. 506. As to how far a properly equipped locomotive will set fire by sparks is a proper subject for expert evidence; Kansas City, F. S. & M. R. Co. v. Blaker, 68 Kan. 244, 75 Pac. 71, 64 L. R. A. 81, 1 Ann. Cas. 883; Babbitt v. R. Co., 108 App. Div. 74, 95 N. Y. Supp. 429.

Generally the accumulation of inflammable material near the track by the plaintiff is contributory negligence; Omaha Fair & Exposition Ass'n v. R. Co., 42 Neb. 105, 60 N. W. 330; T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Tankersley, 63 Tex. 57; but it is not so to permit the natural growth of stubble and grass to remain; Patton v. Ry. Co., 87 Mo. 117, 56 Am. Rep. 446; nor to deposit wood near the track under a contract with the company; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Nelson, 51 Ind. 150; but if the defendant permits inflammable rubbish to accumulate and remain on its right of way it is negligence; Hawley v. Ry. Co., 49 Or. 509, 90 Pac. 1106, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 526; erecting a wooden building near a railroad track is not negligence per se; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Barker, 94 Ky. 71, 21 S. W. 347; but the owner assumes the risks incident thereto, and cannot recover if it is burned without fault on the part of the company; Briant v. R. Co., 104 Mich. 307, 62 N. W. 365. The storage of cotton, on a platform for that purpose, near the depot of a railroad company, is not an assumption of risk by its owner, if the company is using an engine with a defective spark arrester; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287, 23 Sup. Ct. 681, 47 L. Ed. 1057, affirming id., 112 Fed. 402, 50 C. C. A. 230.

In Indiana a plaintiff must not only aver freedom from fault but absence on his part of contributory negligence; Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 96 Ind. 40; id., 96 Ind. 62. Formerly the Illinois negligence rule was: Where fire is ignited on the right of way of a railroad, by reason of an accumulation of grass left there, and communicated to the adjoining field by the negligence of the owner in not keeping it free from combustible materials, the owner cannot recover for the injury thereby occasioned, unless the negligence of the company is greater than his own; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Simonson, 54 Ill. 504, 5 Am. Rep. 155. But later cases in that state overrule this doctrine, and a statute provides that it shall not be considered negligence on the part of the owner of property, injured by fire originating from the operation of a railroad, that he uses the same in the manner it would have been used had no railroad passed through or near the property so injured; American Strawboard Co. v. R. Co., 177 Ill. 513, 53 N. E. 97; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Stephens, 173 Ill. 430, 51 N. E. 69; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Tate, 104 Ill. App. 615.

In many states statutes have been passed making railroad companies absolutely liable for damage caused by fires from locomotives, and such statutes have been almost uniformly held to be constitutional; Pierce v. R. Co., 105 Mass. 199; Bassett v. R. Co., 145 Mass. 129, 13 N. E. 370, 1 Am. St. Rep. 443; Chapman v. R. R. Co., 37 Me. 92; Thatcher v. R. Co., 85 Me. 502, 27 Atl. 519; Grissell v. R. Co., 54 Conn. 447, 9 Atl. 137, 1 Am. St. Rep. 138. Such a statute does not violate the constitution of the United States; St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 243, 41 L. Ed. 611; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 19 Sup. Ct. 609, 43 L. Ed. 909. Such statutes apply to property not adjoining the right of way, if set on fire by intervening property ignited by the locomotive; Hunter v. R. R. Co., 41 S. C. 86, 19 S. E. 197; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Arthur, 2 Colo. App. 159, 29 Pac. 1031; and are not void as interfering with the federal jurisdiction over interstate commerce; Smith v. R. R., 63 N. H. 25; McCandless v. R. Co., 38 S. C. 103, 16 S. E. 429, 18 L. R. A. 440. Under such a statute it was held that the company was prima facie liable; Small v. R. Co., 50 Ia. 340; and that contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is no defense to such an action; West v. Ry. Co., 77 Ia. 654, 35 N. W. 479, 42 N. W. 512; to the same effect; Mathews v. Ry. Co., 121 Mo. 298, 24 S. W. 591, 25 L. R. A. 161, affirmed St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 243, 41 L. Ed. 611. Where, however, a railroad company leased land on its right of way to a cold storage company, stipulating that it would not be liable for fires, it was held such a contract was not against public policy, though in contravention of the state statute; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Ry. Co., 175 U. S. 91, 20 Sup. Ct. 33, 44 L. Ed. 84; and the company is liable for the spreading of the fire even when the person whose property was first set on fire requested the railroad men to let it burn, as he wished to burn up the bogs; Simmonds v. R. Co., 52 Conn. 264, 52 Am. Rep. 587.

As to liability for damages from fires by reason of the failure to furnish water to extinguish them, see WATER COMPANIES.

See 1 L. R. A. 625, note; 21 id. 255, note; NEGLIGENCE; RAILROAD.

As to the right of a city to order the destruction of property to prevent the spread of fire, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

FIRE AND SWORD. Letters of fire and sword were the ancient means for dispossessing a tenant who retained possession contrary to the order of the judge and diligence of the law. They were directed to the sheriff, and ordered him to call the assistance of the county to dispossess the tenant. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. lib. iv. tit. 3, § 17.

FIRE-ARM. An instrument used in the propulsion of shot, shell, or bullets by the action of gunpowder exploded within it.

In 1637 a royal charter was granted to the gunmakers of London empowering them to search for, prove, and mark hand guns, pistols, etc., and by the statutes of 1818 and 1855 the proving of all fire-arms was made compulsory. These statutes have been superseded by the gun-barrel proof act 31 and 32 Vict., which regulates the duties and powers of the London and Birmingham proof-houses, and which makes the forging or counterfeiting of proof-marks or stamps, and the selling, or having in possession for the purpose of sale, of fire-arms bearing such forged or counterfeited mark or stamp, a misdemeanor.

As to what constitutes a fire-arm, the decisions have been somewhat conflicting. A pistol so dilapidated that it could not be discharged by the trigger has been held to be a fire-arm and a deadly weapon; Atwood v. State, 53 Ala. 508; so where the mainspring was so disabled as not to allow it to be discharged in the regular way; Williams v. State, 61 Ga. 417, 34 Am. Rep. 102; but not so where the weapon could not be discharged by a cap on the tube; Evins v. State, 46 Ala. 88. The separate parts of a pistol found on the offender's person were held a fire-arm;

Hutchinson v. State, 62 Ala. 8, 34 Am. Rep. 1. See ARMS; WEAPON.

FIRE DEPARTMENT. A city is not liable to an employee of the fire department for the negligence of those in charge of that department in furnishing vicious horses, where such employee without knowledge of such viciousness is injured by the horse; Lynch v. City of North Yakima, 37 Wash. 657, 80 Pac. 79, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 261; nor for injuries to an engineer of a fire engine due to the gross negligence and incompetency of the driver; Shanewerk v. City of Ft. Worth, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 271, 32 S. W. 918; nor in such a case for injury to one on the street; Higgins v. Superior, 134 Wis. 264, 114 N. W. 490, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 994; nor for injuries to an employee caused by negligence in permitting the hose reel on which he was required to ride to get out of repair; Peterson v. Wilmington, 130 N. C. 76, 40 S. E. 853, 56 L. R. A. 959; nor for the negligence of an employee of the department who, in recklessly moving scales used in weighing coal, injured the plaintiff; Manske v. Milwaukee, 123 Wis. 172, 101 N. W. 377; or of one who caused injuries whilst practicing with the water tower in the public streets; Frederick v. Columbus, 58 Ohio St. 538, 51 N. E. 35; or by negligently leaving a ladder truck standing so that a ladder projected across the sidewalk; Dodge v. Granger, 17 R. I. 664, 24 Atl. 100, 15 L. R. A. 781, 33 Am. St. Rep. 901; or for frightening a horse by negligently ringing a bell; Saunders v. Ft. Madison, 111 Ia. 102, 82 N. W. 428; or for damaging a stock of goods by water negligently thrown by firemen; Davis v. City of Lebanon, 108 Ky. 688, 57 S. W. 471.

FIRE-ESCAPE. An apparatus constructed to afford a safe and convenient method of escape from a burning building.

Regulations have been enacted in most of the states, often by municipal ordinances, providing that all factories, hotels, schools, buildings, theatres, hospitals, public buildings, and flat or tenement houses shall be equipped with safe and suitable means of escape in case of fire. Such regulations are of a highly penal character, and are to be strictly construed; Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 222, 51 Am. Rep. 201; Keely v. O'Conner, 106 Pa. 321; Maker v. Mill & Power Co., 15 R. I. 112, 23 Atl. 63. They are not of such a character as to interfere with the use and enjoyment of private property; Fire Department of New York v. Chapman, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 377. They are the subject of a proper police regulation; Roumfort Co. v. Delaney, 230 Pa. 374, 79 Atl. 653.

The original duty to provide fire-escapes rests with the owner or proprietor; Willy v. Mulledy, 78 N. Y. 310, 34 Am. Rep. 536; and the fact that he has erected them in compliance with the statute will not exempt him from providing additional ones when ordered so to do; Fire Deparment of New York v. Chapman, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 377; but in some states it has been held that when the owner has leased his premises the tenant in actual occupancy and possession, who places his operatives in a position of danger and enjoys the benefit of their services, becomes responsible under the law; Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 222, 51 Am. Rep. 201; Keely v. O'Conner, 106 Pa. 321; Lee v. Smith, 42 Ohio St. 458, 51 Am. Rep. 839; (contra, Abrayan v. Bank, 16 N. Y. St. Rep. 750.) But these cases seem to place the question of liability more on the ground of the relation of master and servant, it being held that as an absolute duty is laid upon the owner by statute, a servant sustaining an injury by breach of such duty may maintain an action ; McAlpin v. Powell, 70 N. Y. 126, 26 Am. Rep. 555; Williams v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 451. A building becomes a public nuisance if not supplied with such appliances as required by statute; 16 Abb. 195. And the mere relation of landlord and tenant will not bar the action; Willy v. Mulledy, 78 N. Y. 310, 34 Am. Rep. 536. It is not the duty of the tenant to search for defects and report them to the owner; id.; nor will the owner be permitted to wait until he is officially directed to provide fire-escapes; id.; McLaughlin v. Armfield, 58 Hun 376, 12 N. Y. Supp. 164; although no such obligation existed at common law; Pauley v. Lantern Co., 131 N. Y. 90, 29 N. E. 999, 15 L. R. A. 194; Jones v. Granite Mills, 126 Mass. 84, 30 Am. Rep. 661.

They must be reasonably secure, although they need not be the best that can be devised; Pauley v. Lantern Co., 131 N. Y. 90, 29 N. E. 999, 15 L. R. A. 194; and the number required depends on the size of the building, the number of employees, and the inflammable character of the materials there used; Pauley v. Lantern Co., 61 Hun 254, 16 N. Y. Supp. 820; having erected a reasonably safe fire-escape, the owner is not responsible if a fire cuts off access to it; Keely v. O'Conner, 106 Pa. 321. See Thomas, Negl. 772; Ray, Neg. Imp. Dut. 660; NEGLIGENCE.

FIRE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

FIRE ORDEAL. See ORDEAL.

FIRE POLICY. See INSURANCE; POLICY.

FIRE-PROOF. Incombustible; not in danger from the action of fire.

A statement that a building is fire-proof necessarily excludes the idea that it is of wood, and necessarily implies that it is constructed of some substance fitted for the erection of fire-proof buildings. The characterization of one portion of a building as fire-proof suggests a comparison with other portions of the same building, and warrants the conclusion that the specified portion is different from the remainder; Hickey v. Morrell, 102 N. Y. 459, 7 N. E. 321, 55 Am. Rep. 824.

In an insurance policy, a condition that books be kept in a fire-proof safe is complied with if the safe be of the kind commonly regarded as fire-proof; Knoxville Fire Ins. Co. v. Hird, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 23 S. W. 393. The insured does not by this clause warrant his safe to preserve the books; id. Such a clause, commonly called the iron-safe clause, is a warranty the breach of which avoids the policy; Standard Fire Ins. Co. of Kansas City v. Willock (Tex.) 29 S. W. 218; Home Ins. Co. of New Orleans v. Cary, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 300, 31 S. W. 321. See INSURANCE.

FIRE RAISING. In Scotch Law. The wilfully setting on fire buildings, growing or stored cereals, growing wood, or coalheughs. Ersk. Pr. 577. See ARSON.

FIRE-WORKS. A contrivance of inflammable and explosive materials combined of various proportions for the purpose of producing in combustion beautiful or amusing scenic effects, or to be used as a night signal on land or sea, or for various purposes in war. Cent. Dict.

Percussion caps for signalling railway trains are held to be explosive preparations, although the court considered they were not "fireworks" as the latter term is known to commerce; 3 B. & S. 128. Under a clause in an insurance policy forbidding the keeping of gunpowder, fireworks are not prohibited; Tischler v. Ins. Co., 66 Cal. 178, 4 Pac. 1169. Where a display of fireworks was made by private persons, under a permit given by the mayor, the city was held liable for injuries on the ground that it consented to a nuisance; Speir v. City of Brooklyn, 139 N. Y. 6, 34 N. E. 727, 21 L. R. A. 641, 36 Am. St. Rep. 664; followed Landau v. City of New York, 180 N. Y. 48, 72 N. E. 631, 105 Am. St. Rep. 709. The liability of the town for such injuries has been denied, however, on the ground that the act was a simple violation of an ordinance; Ball v. Town of Woodbine, 61 Ia. 83, 15 N. W. 846, 47 Am. Rep. 805; Aron v. City of Wausau, 98 Wis. 592, 74 N. W. 354, 40 L. R. A. 733; and a borough would not be liable for the negligence of its police officers in permitting unlawful acts; Borough of Norristown v. Fitzpatrick, 94 Pa. 121, 39 Am. Rep. 771; Morehead Banking Co. v. Morehead, 116 N. C. 413, 21 S. E. 191; Bartlett v. Town of Clarksburg, 45 W. Va. 393, 31 S. E. 918, 43 L. R. A. 295, 72 Am. St. Rep. 817.

It is not contributory negligence to be present at exhibitions of fireworks; Mullins v. Blaise, 37 La. Ann. 92; Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Vt. 530; contra, Frost v. Josselyn, 180 Mass. 389, 62 N. E. 469.

See INSURANCE; RISKS AND PERILS; CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA SPECTATUR.

FIREBOTE. An allowance of wood or estovers to maintain competent firing for the tenant. A sufficient allowance of wood to burn in a house. 1 Washb. R. P. 99. Tenant for life or years is entitled to it; 2 Bla. Com. 35. Cutting more than is needed for present use is waste; 3 Dane, Abr. 238; Sackett v. Sackett, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 312; Cro. Eliz. 593; 7 Bingh. 640. The rules in England and in this country are different in relation to the kind of trees which the tenant may cut; Padelford v. Padelford, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 152; Jackson v. Brownson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 227, 5 Am. Dec. 258; Kidd v. Dennison, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Morehouse v. Cotheal, 22 N. J. L. 521; Crockett v. Crockett, 2 Ohio St. 180; McCullough v. Irvine's Ex'rs, 13 Pa. 438; 3 Leon. 16.

FIRKIN. A measure of capacity, equal to nine gallons. The word firkin is also used to designate a weight, used for butter and cheese, of fifty-six pounds avoirdupois.

FIRLOT. A Scotch measure of capacity containing two gallons and a pint. Spelman.

FIRM. The persons composing a partnership, taken collectively.

The name or title under which the members of a partnership transact business.

The word is used as synonymous with partnership. The words "house," "concern," and "company" are also used in the same sense. This name is in point of law conventional, and applicable only to the persons who, on each particular occasion when the name is used, are members of the firm. A firm is usually described, in legal proceedings, as certain persons trading or carrying on business under and using the name, style, and firm of, etc. See 9 Q. B. 361; 9 M. & W. 347; 1 Chitty, Bailm. 49.

As to the nature and characteristics of firms and firm names and the law of the subject, see PARTNERSHIP.

FIRM NAME. The name or title of a firm in business. See PARTNERSHIP.

FIRMA (L. Lat.). A farm or rent reserved on letting lands, anciently frequently reserved in provisions. Spelman, Gloss.; Cunningham, Law Dict.

A banquet; supper; provisions for the table. Du Cange.

A tribute or custom paid towards entertaining the king for one night. Domesday; Cowell.

A rent reserved to be paid in money, called then alba firma (white rents, money rents). Spelman, Gloss.

A lease. A letting. Ad firmam tradidi (I have farm let). Spelman, Gloss.

A messuage with the house, garden, or lands, etc., connected therewith. Co. Litt. 5 a; Shepp. Touchst. 93. See FARM.

FIRMA BURGI. The right, in mediæval days, to take the profits of a borough, paying for them a fixed sum to the crown or other lord of the borough. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 276.

FIRMA FEODI (L. Lat.). Fee-farm. See FEODI-FIRMA.

FIRMAN. A passport granted by the Great Mogul to captains of foreign vessels to trade within the territories over which he has jurisdiction; a permit.

FIRMARATIO. The right of a tenant to his lands and tenements. Cowell.

FIRMARIUS (L. Lat.). A fermor. A lessee of a term. Firmarii comprehend all such as hold by lease for life or lives or for year, by deed or without deed. Co. 2d Inst. 144, 145; 1 Washb. R. P. 107; Sackett v. Sackett, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 312; 7 Ad. & E. 637.

FIRMITAS. In English Law. An assurance of some privilege, by deed or charter.

FIRMLY. Where a statute requires an affidavit that an appellant from an award of a board of arbitrators "firmly believes injustice has been done," it is not sufficient to express belief, omitting the word firmly. The word is a strong expression intended to put the affiant on his guard. It cannot be dispensed with without substituting something equal to it in substance; as to what shall be so considered, there may be liberal construction. Verily is as strong a word as firmly, and is sufficient; Thompson v. White, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 135.

FIRMURA. Liberty to scour and repair a mill-dam, and carry away the soil, etc. Blount.

FIRST. In a will the word "first" may not import precedence of one bequest over another. Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 330; Swasey v. American Bible Society, 57 Me. 523.

FIRST-CLASS. Occupying the highest standing in a particular classification. In a contract for "first-class" work, it is for the jury to decide as to whether the terms were substantially complied with; Boughton v. Smith, 67 Hun 652, 22 N. Y. Supp. 148. A stipulation in a contract that the title of the vendor shall be first-class means simply that it shall be marketable; Vought v. Williams, 120 N. Y. 253, 24 N. E. 195, 8 L. R. A. 591, 17 Am. St. Rep. 634.

FIRST-CLASS MATTER. Matter received at the United States post-offices, in writing or sealed against inspection.

FIRST-CLASS MISDEMEANANT. Under the Prisons Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, s. 67) prisoners in the county, city, and borough prisons convicted of misdemeanor and not sentenced to hard labor, are divided into two classes, one of which is called the first division; and it is in the discretion of the court to order that such a prisoner be treated as a misdemeanant of the first division, usually called "first-class misdemeanant," and as such not to be deemed a criminal prisoner, i. e. a prisoner convicted of a crime.

FIRST FRUITS. The first year's whole profits of the spiritual preferments. There were three valuations (valor beneficium) at different times, according to which these first fruits were estimated, made in 1253, 1288, and 1318. A final valuation was made by the 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3.

They now form a perpetual fund, called Queen Anne's bounty, the income of which is used for the augmentation of poor livings. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 284, and notes; 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 260.

FIRST IMPRESSION (Lat. primæ impressionis). First examination. First presentation to a court for examination or decision. A cause which presents a new question for the first time, and for which, consequently, there is no precedent applicable in all respects, is said to be a case of the first impression. Austin, Jur. sect. xxv. ad fin. See JUDGE-MADE LAW.

FIRST INSTANCE. See COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE.

FIRST PURCHASER. In the English law of descent, the first purchaser was he who first acquired an estate in a family which still owns it. A purchase of this kind signifies any mode of acquiring an estate, except by descent. 2 Bla. Com. 220.

FISCAL. Belonging to the fisc, or public treasury. A fiscal agent does not necessarily imply a depositary of the public funds, so as, by the simple use of it in a statute without any directions in this respect to make it the duty of the state treasurer to deposit with him any moneys in the treasury; State v. Dubuclet, 27 La. Ann. 29.

FISCUS. In Civil Law. The treasury of a prince; the public treasury. 1 Low C. 361. In France, fisc.

Hence, to confiscate a thing is to appropriate it to the fisc. Paillet, Droit Public, 21, n., says that fiscus, in the Roman law, signified the treasury of the prince, and ærarium the treasury of the state. This distinction was not observed in France. In course of time the fiscus absorbed the ærarium and became the treasury of the state. Gray, Nature and Sources of Law 58. See Law 10, ff. De jure Fisci.

FISH. An animal which inhabits the water, breathes by means of gills, swims by the aid of fins, and is oviparous.

Fishes in rivers and in the sea are considered as animals feræ naturæ; consequently, no one has any property in them until they have been captured; Percy Summer Club v. Welch, 66 N. H. 180, 28 Atl. 22; Lincoln v. Davis, 53 Mich. 375, 19 N. W. 103, 51 Am. Rep. 116; Gentile v. State, 29 Ind. 409; and, like other wild animals, if, having been taken, they escape and regain their liberty, the captor loses his property in them. See FISHERY.

FISH COMMISSIONER.

The Act of February 9, 1871, provides for the appointment of a commissioner of fish and fisheries, with all necessary powers looking to the preservation and increase of food fishes throughout the country. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4395.

FISH ROYAL. A whale, porpoise, or sturgeon thrown ashore on the coast of England belonged to the king as a branch of his prerogative. Hence these fish are termed royal fish. Hale, De Jure Mar. pt. 1, c. 7; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 290; Plowd. 305; Bracton, l. 3, c. 3.

FISHERIES ARBITRATION. The right of the United States to fish upon the coastal waters of the British colonies on the Atlantic had been a subject of negotiation from the Treaty of Peace between the two countries in 1783 down to the year 1910, when the long standing dispute between them was finally settled by arbitration. By the Treaty of Peace with England, in 1783, the United States obtained the "right" to fish on the banks of Newfoundland and the "liberty" to fish on the coasts, bays, and creeks of the British Dominions in America. In 1814, when the Treaty of Peace was being signed at Ghent, Great Britain refused to re-concede the privilege granted by the Treaty of 1783. In 1815, the United States maintained that the general provisions of the Treaty of 1783 were of a character not to be annulled by a subsequent war, whereas England declared that what was described as a "liberty" in the Treaty of 1783 was terminated by the war of 1812. By the Treaty of 1818 the United States obtained the right to fish on certain specified coasts of British America without reference to the distance from shore, while as to all other coasts, they were excluded from fishing within three marine miles from the shore. The Treaty of Washington, of 1871, removed the restrictions upon inshore fisheries. Art. XIX. yields a corresponding right to all British subjects as to the Atlantic coasts of the United States north of the 39th parallel, and concedes to each nation the right to import, free of duty, fish and fish oils into the ports of the other. The treaty was to continue in operation for ten years, and further until two years' notice from either party. In Art. XXII. it is stated that the British government asserts that these provisions of the treaty would work to her disadvantage. Provision was accordingly made, by the same article, for the appointment of a commission, which was known as the Fisheries Commission, to determine the amount of compensation to be paid by the United States. The tribunal, consisting of three members, met at Halifax, N. S., June 15, 1877, and awarded the sum of $5,500,000 to Great Britain.

In 1883 the United States gave notice of the termination, after two years, of the articles of the Treaty of 1871 relating to fisheries. Disputes had arisen as to the following points: What were the "bays" intended by the Treaty of 1818; were the three miles to be measured from sinuosities of the coast, or from a line drawn from headland to headland; and how far could American vessels traffic in their catch when putting into the harbor?

In 1898 the fisheries question was considered by the Quebec Commission, but without result. Finally, on January 27, 1909, an agreement was signed by the two countries referring the matter to arbitration by the Permanent Court at The Hague. On five of the seven questions presented to the court, the award was favorable to the United States. For the future the reasonableness of the regulations defining the seasons when fish may be taken on the treaty coasts, and the methods and instruments to be used, shall be determined by a Mixed Commission appointed by the two countries.

FISHERY. A place prepared for catching fish with nets or hooks. This is commonly applied to the place of drawing a seine or net. Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 131.

A common of fishery is not an exclusive right, but one enjoyed in common with certain other persons. 3 Kent 329.

A free fishery is said to be a franchise in the hands of a subject, existing by grant or prescription, distinct from an ownership in the soil. It is an exclusive right, and applies to a public navigable river, without any right in the soil. 3 Kent 329.

A several fishery is one by which the party claiming it has the right of fishing, independently of all other, so that no person can have a coextensive right with him in the object claimed; but a partial and independent right in another, or a limited liberty, does not derogate from the right of the owner. 5 Burr. 2814.

A distinction has been made between a common fishery (commune piscarium), which may mean for all mankind, as in the sea, and a common of fishery (communium piscariæ), which is a right, in common with certain other persons, in a particular stream. 8 Taunt. 183. Angell seems to think that common of fishery and free fishery are convertible terms. Law of Watercourses, c. 6, ss. 3, 4.

Woolrych says that sometimes a free fishery is confounded with a several, sometimes it is said to be synonymous with common, and again it is treated as distinct from either. Law of Waters, etc., 97.

A several fishery, as its name imports, is an exclusive property; this, however, is not to be understood as depriving the territorial owner of his right to a several fishery when he grants to another person permission to fish; for he would continue to be the several proprietor, although he should suffer a stranger to hold a coextensive right with himself. Woolr. Wat. 96.

These distinctions in relation to several, free, and common of fishery are not strongly marked, and the lines are sometimes scarcely perceptible. "Instead of going into the black-letter books to learn what was a fishery, and a free fishery, and a several fishery," says Huston, J., "I am disposed to regard our own acts, even though differing from old feudal law." Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 132.

The right of fishery is to be considered with reference to navigable waters and to waters not navigable; meaning, by the former, those in which the tide ebbs and flows; by the latter, those in which it does not. By the common law of England the fisheries in all the navigable waters of the realm belong to the crown by prerogative, in such way, nevertheless, as to be common to all the subjects: so that an individual claiming an exclusive fishery in such waters must show it strictly by grant or prescription. Such a grantee may not use a right of fishery in such a manner as to interfere with navigation, which belongs to all the subjects of the realm; 20 C. B. N. S. 1. In that country navigable waters meant tide-waters; [1891] 2 Ch. 681; but different conditions in this country have resulted in the application of the rule cessat ratio cessat lex, and while the same principle is recognized that navigable waters belong to the state and non-navigable ones to the riparian proprietor, the recognition of tide-water as the test of navigability is abandoned.

By Magna Carta, c. 16, "no river banks shall be guarded from henceforth, but such as were in defence at the time of King Henry, our grandfather, by the same places and in the same bounds as they were wont to be in his time." That this chapter limited the right of the crown to grant several fisheries was contended by Coke; 2 Inst. 30. Lord Hale, however, construed it to apply only to the custom of putting fresh as well as salt rivers in defence for the king's recreation, and to limit the right of the crown to the use of such rivers as were in defence in the time of Henry II. De Jure Mar. c. 2. That the Great Charter restrained the king from granting exclusive rights of fishery in navigable waters is held in some cases; Lowndes v. Dickerson, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 586; 23 L. T. N. S. 732; Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 4, 10 Am. Dec. 356; Gough v. Bell, 21 N. J. L. 156; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597. That the crown may grant exclusive rights of fishery in tide-waters is held in Rogers v. Jones, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 237, 19 Am. Dec. 493. That Magna Carta was only intended to restrain the king from granting exclusive rights of fishery disconnected with the soil, in disregard of the rights of the owner of the soil, was held in Trustees of Brookhaven v. Strong, 60 N. Y. 56 (followed in Robins v. Ackerly, 91 N. Y. 98). In Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 367, 10 L. Ed. 997, it was said, following Lord Hale's construction, "The true rule on the subject is that prima facie a fishery in a navigable river is common, and he who sets up an exclusive right must show title either by grant or prescription," and that this is the doctrine of the King's Bench in England in the case in 4 Burr. 2163.

See NAVIGABLE WATERS.

In rivers not navigable the fisheries belong to the owners of the soil or to the riparian proprietors; 2 Bla. Com. 39; Gould, Wat. 42, 48; Hale, De Jure Mar. c. 4; 4 Burr. 2162; Dav. 155; 7 Co. 16 a; Plowd. 154 a. In such rivers the owner of the adjoining soil has an exclusive right of fishery in front of his land to the thread of the river, except so far as this right has been qualified by legislative regulation; but this right is limited to the taking of fish, and does not carry with it the right to prevent the passage of fish to lakes and ponds for breeding purpose; Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 199, 16 Am. Dec. 386. The common-law doctrine accepting the tide-water test of navigability has been declared to be the law in several of the United States; People v. Platt, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 195, 8 Am. Dec. 382; Hooker v. Cummings, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 90, 11 Am. Dec. 249; Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 199, 16 Am. Dec. 386; Lay v. King, 5 Day (Conn.) 72; Bennett v. Boggs, 1 Baldw. 60, Fed. Cas. No. 1,319; Smith v. Miller, 5 Mas. 191, Fed. Cas. No. 13,080; Adams v. Pease, 2 Conn. 481; Com. v. Vincent, 108 Mass. 446, 447; Moulton v. Libbey, 37 Me. 472, 59 Am. Dec. 57. But in some states the right of fishery in the great rivers of those states, though not tide-waters, is held to be vested in the state and open to all the world; Shrunk v. Nav. Co., 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 71; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597; Collins v. Benbury, 25 N. C. 277, 38 Am. Dec. 722; Sloan v. Biemiller, 34 Ohio St. 492; See Harvey v. Vandegrift, 89 Pa. 346; People v. Doxtater, 75 Hun 472, 27 N. Y. Supp. 481. This modification of the common-law doctrine has been applied not to the abandonment of the distinction between the public and private rights of fisheries as affected by navigability, but to the establishment of a different test of navigability, made necessary by the difference of physical conditions in the two countries already alluded to. So in the leading Pennsylvania case the point of the decision was that neither the quality of fresh or salt water, nor the flux or reflux of the tide, would determine whether a river should be considered navigable or not; Carson v. Blazer, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 475, 4 Am. Dec. 463. After changing the test of navigability, these cases applied the rule of the public character of streams actually navigable which had been in England determined by the mere test of tide water. Stover v. Jack, 60 Pa. 339, 100 Am. Dec. 566.

It is for the states to determine the question of the title to the beds of navigable non-tidal waters between the state and the riparian owner; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. Ed. 224. Each state has the exclusive control of fisheries in the tide-waters and beds of tide-waters within its jurisdiction, subject to the paramount right of navigation; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 11 Sup. Ct. 559, 35 L. Ed. 159. The jurisdiction of a state is coextensive with its territory, coextensive with its legislative powers, and, within what are generally recognized as the territorial limits of a state, by the law of nations, a state can define its boundaries on the sea and the boundaries of its counties; U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 386, 4 L. Ed. 404.

In the control of fisheries within a state, the state government is supreme; U. S. v.

Packer's Ass'n, 79 Fed. 152; Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 369, 10 L. Ed. 997; Marsh v. Colby, 39 Mich. 626, 33 Am. Rep. 439. It may regulate public rights of fishing; Daniels v. Homer, 139 N. C. 219, 51 S. E. 992, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385; or make grants of exclusive rights which do not impair any private rights already vested; Smith v. Look, 108 Mass. 141; Com. v. Hilton, 174 Mass. 29, 54 N. E. 362, 45 L. R. A. 475; it may prohibit the taking of fish during certain seasons of the year or with certain implements; Duncan v. Sylvester, 24 Me. 482, 41 Am. Dec. 400; Matthews v. Treat, 75 Me. 597; Donnell v. Joy, 85 Me. 118, 26 Atl. 1017; even on the part of private individuals from waters in which as riparian owners they have the exclusive right of fishing, if such waters connect with the public waters of the state; People v. Bridges, 142 Ill. 30, 31 N. E. 115, 16 L. R. A. 684; People v. Lumber Co., 116 Cal. 397, 48 Pac. 374, 39 L. R. A. 581, 58 Am. St. Rep. 183; Barrows v. McDermott, 73 Me. 441; or a state may prohibit all such acts as would render the public right less valuable or destroy it altogether; Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. (U. S.) 71, 15 L. Ed. 269. It may prohibit the taking of oysters and shell fish in its public waters by the citizens of other states, without infringing on the privileges and immunities of citizens of other states; State v. Medbury, 3 R. I. 138; New England Oyster Co. v. McGarvey, 12 R. I. 385; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230; or without discrimination against them; State v. Tower, 84 Me. 444, 24 Atl. 898; People v. Lowndes, 130 N. Y. 455, 29 N. E. 751. The rights, privileges and immunities secured by the constitution of the United States to the inhabitants of the several states do not include, in favor of the inhabitants of any state, right in the common property of the inhabitants of the other states; Com. v. Hilton, 174 Mass. 29, 54 N. E. 362, 45 L. R. A. 475. No rights under the commerce clause of the federal constitution are infringed by a state act under which a conviction may be had for using a dredge in tidal waters of a state for the purpose of catching oysters upon lands leased by another person; Lee v. New Jersey, 207 U. S. 67, 28 Sup. Ct. 22, 52 L. Ed. 106. A state may require a license fee from all persons engaged in fishing for profit in the navigable waters of Lake Erie; State v. Hanlon, 77 Ohio St. 19, 82 N. E. 662, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539, 122 Am. St. Rep. 472. It may provide for forfeiture of a vessel violating the fishing laws; Boggs v. Com., 76 Va. 989; Haney v. Compton, 36 N. J. L. 507; Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. (U. S.) 71, 15 L. Ed. 269. It may confiscate nets used in illegal fishing; Daniels v. Homer, 139 N. C. 219, 51 S. E. 992, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385, affirming id., 119 N. Y. 226, 23 N. E. 878, 7 L. R. A. 134, 16 Am. St. Rep. 813. It extends to the preservation of fish not used as food for human beings, but as food for other fish; Com. v. Manchester, 152 Mass. 230, 25 N. E. 113, 9 L. R. A. 236, 23 Am. St. Rep. 820. The states, by surrendering to the federal government the right to regulate commerce, did not part with the ownership of the fish in the tidal waters within their borders, or with the right to regulate and control their taking; State v. Corson, 67 N. J. L. 178, 50 Atl. 780; nor did the mere grant of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction to the judicial branch of the government surrender to the United States the power, vested in the several states before the adoption of the constitution, to regulate the fisheries belonging to them and to punish those who should transgress their regulations; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230. The assumption by a state of control over fisheries within the bays leading from the ocean is not in contravention of the authority of the United States; State v. Thompson, 85 Me. 189, 27 Atl. 97. That congress never assumed control over fisheries is persuasive evidence that the right to control them remained in the states; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 11 Sup. Ct. 559, 35 L. Ed. 159.

A club may not enjoin members of the public from fishing on navigable waters; Bodi v. Shooting Club, 57 Ohio St. 226, 48 N. E. 944.

One driving stakes in a navigable river may not enjoin their removal by persons injured thereby; Hettrick v. Page, 82 N. C. 65; but those engaged in fishing in such waters may enjoin one from driving stakes which interfere with their fishing; Skinner v. Hettrick, 73 N. C. 53; Cherry Point Fish Co. v. Nelson, 25 Wash. 558; Morris v. Graham, 16 Wash. 343, 47 Pac. 752, 58 Am. St. Rep. 33.

The control of fisheries to the extent of at least a marine league from the shore belongs to the nation on whose coast the fisheries are prosecuted. Bays wholly within the territory of a nation, not exceeding two marine leagues in width at the mouth, are within its territorial jurisdiction; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 11 Sup. Ct. 559, 35 L. Ed. 159.

By the award of the arbitrators under the treaty with Great Britain (27 Stat. L. 948), it was settled that the United States had no exclusive jurisdiction in Behring Sea outside the ordinary three-mile limit, and no right of property in, or protection over, the fur seals frequenting the islands of the United States when found outside of such three-mile limit. Therefore the act of March 2, 1889, declaring that R. S. sec. 1956, which forbids the killing of fur-bearing animals in Alaska and the waters thereof, shall apply to "all the dominion of the United States in the waters of Behring Sea," must be construed to mean the waters within three miles of the shores of Alaska; Whitelaw v. U. S., 75 Fed. 513, 21 C. C. A. 434.

The right to take fur seals under a so-called lease from the government, which is expressly subject to such regulations of the business as the United States may make, does not entitle the lessee to any damages for a reduction of the catch allowed by the regulations, for which a deduction of rental is provided; North American Com. Co. v. U. S., 171 U. S. 110, 18 Sup. Ct. 817, 43 L. Ed. 98.

The right of private fishery may exist not only in the riparian proprietor, but also in another who has acquired it by grant or otherwise; Co. Litt. 122 a, n. 7; Ang. Waterc. 184; Cobb v. Davenport, 33 N. J. L. 223, 97 Am. Dec. 718. But see 2 Salk. 637. Such a right is held subject to the use of the waters as a highway; Ang. Tide-Wat. 80; Post v. Munn, 4 N. J. L. 67, 7 Am. Dec. 570; Lewis v. Keeling, 46 N. C. 299, 62 Am. Dec. 168; 1 Campb. 516; Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 136; and to the free passage of the fish; 7 East 195; Boatwright v. Bookman, 1 Rice (S. C.) 447; Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 199, 16 Am. Dec. 386; Shaw v. Crawford, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 236; Hyde v. Russell, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 251. See as to right of fishery; 9 L. R. A. 236, 807, notes, 60 L. R. A. 486, note.

A definite "fishing right in the adjoining sea," described in the granting clause of a royal patent as "attached to this land" and which right is of a sort long recognized by the Hawaiian laws as private property, is included in the grant, although the habendum is to have and to hold "the above granted land," which, standing alone, might not include a fishing right; Damon v. Hawaii, 194 U. S. 154, 24 Sup. Ct. 617, 48 L. Ed. 916. In Hawaii the land was formerly an incident to the fishery, and though the right claimed was different from those recognized by the common law, it was regarded as an easement or profit à prendre. A later case also held that the grantees of land in Hawaii under a royal patent were entitled to a fishery right in the adjoining sea which they and their predecessors in title had enjoyed from time immemorial; Carter v. Hawaii, 200 U. S. 255, 26 Sup. Ct. 248, 50 L. Ed. 470. Where fishing rights were secured to the Yakima Indians on the Columbia river by the treaty of 1859, such rights were held paramount to the powers acquired by the state of Washington on its admission to the Union in and over the shore lands; U. S. v. Winans, 198 U. S. 371, 25 Sup. Ct. 662, 49 L. Ed. 1089. The treaty was held not a grant of rights to the Indians, but a grant of rights from them—a reservation of those not granted. It imposed a servitude upon the land. See, as to prescriptive rights of fishery, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 386, note.

The free right of fishery in navigable waters extends to the taking of shell-fish between high and low water-mark; 2 B. & P. 472; Peck v. Lockwood, 5 Day (Conn.) 22; Moulton v. Libbey, 37 Me. 472, 50 Am. Dec. 57; Proctor v. Wells, 103 Mass. 217.

See as to river and lake fisheries, 14 Law Mag. & Rev. 4th 220; France and Canada; 15 id. 301; United States and Canada; 13 id. 282; 21 Am. L. Rev. 369, 431; 1 Rev. Crit. 38.

FISHGARTH. A dam or weir in a river for taking fish. Cowell.

FISHING BANKS. A fishing ground of comparative shoal water in the sea. Parker v. Thomson, 21 Or. 523, 28 Pac. 502.

FISHING-BILL. A term used in equity for a bill that seeks a discovery upon general, loose, and vague allegations. Story, Eq. Pl. § 325; on that ground alone, such a bill will be at once dismissed; In re Pacific Ry. Commission, 32 Fed. 263.

FISK. In Scotch Law. The revenue of the crown. Generally used of the personal estate of a rebel which has been forfeited to the crown. Bell, Dict.

FISTUCA. See FESTUCA.

FIT. Suitable; appropriate; conformable to a duty. Fit for cultivation refers to that condition of soil which will enable a farmer with a reasonable amount of skill to raise regularly and annually, by tillage, grain or other staple crops; Keeran v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 581; State v. Allen, 35 N. C. 37; Barrett v. Nelson, 29 Kan. 596.

FIVE MILE ACT. An act of parliament passed in 1665, forbidding nonconformists who refused to take the oath of non-resistance to come within five miles of any corporation in which they had preached since the passing of the act of oblivion in 1660, nullified by act of 1689.

FIX. To determine; to settle. Bunn v. Kingsbury County, 3 S. D. 87, 52 N. W. 673. A constitutional provision to the effect that the general assembly shall fix the compensation of officers, means that it shall prescribe the rule by which such compensation is to be determined. Goodin v. State, 18 Ohio 9.

FIXING BAIL. Rendering absolute the liability of special bail.

The bail are fixed upon the issue of a ca. sa. (capias ad satisfaciendum) against the defendant; Broader v. Welsh, 2 N. & McC. 569; Gillespie v. White, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 117; Drake v. Cochrane, 18 N. J. L. 9; and a return of non est thereto by the sheriff; Collins v. Cook, 4 Day (Conn.) 1; Saunders v. Bobo, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 492; Rosenberg v. McKain, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 145; Howe v. Ranson, 1 Vt. 276; Branch v. Webb, 7 Leigh (Va.) 371; made on the return-day; Rowland v. Seymour, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 590; Ancrum v. Sloan, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 421; unless the defendant be surrendered within the time allowed ex gratia by the practice of the court; Edwards v. Gunn, 3 Conn. 316; McClurg v. Bowers, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 24; Brownelow v. Forbes, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 101; Dick v. Stoker, 12 N. C. 91; Dunbar v. Conway, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 92; Allen

v. Breslauer, 8 Cal. 552; Shannon v. Hyde, 17 Ga. 88.

In New Hampshire; Hamilton v. Dunklee, 1 N. H. 172; Massachusetts; Champion v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 485; Missouri; State v. Millsaps, 69 Mo. 359; Tennessee; White v. State, 5 Yerg. 183; and Texas; Pearson v. State, 7 Tex. App. 279; bail is not fixed till judgment on a sci. fa. is obtained against them, except on the death of the defendant after a return of non est to an execution against him.

The death of the defendant after a return of non est by the sheriff prevents a surrender, and fixes the bail inevitably; Boggs v. Teackle, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 332; Olcott v. Lilly, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 407; Gordon v. Liepman's Adm'r, 3 McCord (S. C.) 49; Bradford v. Earle, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 120; Goodwin v. Smith, 4 N. H. 29; Davidson v. Taylor, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 604, 6 L. Ed. 743. See White's Ex'rs v. Cummins, 1 Ov. (Tenn.) 224; Bank of Mt. Pleasant v. Pollock's Adm'rs, 1 Ohio 35; Griffin v. Moore, 2 Ga. 331.

In Georgia and North Carolina, bail are not fixed till judgment is obtained against them; Granberry v. Pool, 14 N. C. 155; Rich v. Colquitt, 61 Ga. 197. See BAIL.

FIXTURES. Personal chattels affixed to real estate, which may be severed and removed by the party who has affixed them, or by his personal representative, against the will of the owner of the freehold. There is much dispute among the authorities as to what is a proper definition. Bro. Fixt. 1; Tyler's Fixt. 35; 6 Am. L. Rev. 412, where various definitions are reviewed. A "fixture" formerly meant any chattel which on becoming affixed to the soil became a part of the realty. It now means those things which formed an exception to that rule and can be removed by the person who affixed them to the soil; L. R. 4 Ex. 328.

Anything fixed or attached to a building, and used in connection with it, movable or immovable. Whenever the appendage is of such a nature that it is not part and parcel of the building, but may be removed without injury to the building, then it is a movable fixture and does not pass with a conveyance of the freehold. If, however, it be so connected with the building, that it cannot be severed from it without injury to the building, then it is part of the realty and passes with the conveyance of the soil; Capital City Ins. Co. v. Caldwell, 95 Ala. 77, 10 South. 355.

To entitle a tenant to the value of trade fixtures attached by him to property, it is not necessary that they can be removed without injury to the fixtures. The true test is that they can be removed without injury to the freehold; In re City of New York, 192 N. Y. 295, 84 N. E. 1105, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 423, 127 Am. St. Rep. 903.

The annexation may be actual or constructive. 1st, By actual annexation is understood every mode by which a chattel can be joined or united to the freehold. The article must not be merely laid upon the ground; it must be fastened, fixed, or set into the land, or into some such erection as is unquestionably a part of the realty; otherwise it is in no sense a fixture; Bull. N. P. 34; 3 East 38; Walker v. Sherman, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 636; Taffe v. Warnick, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 111, 23 Am. Dec. 383. Locks, iron stoves set in brickwork, posts, window-blinds, and a mirror firmly attached to the chimney breast by molding, afford examples of actual annexation; see Pillow v. Love, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 109; Holmes v. Tremper, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 29, 11 Am. Dec. 238; Kirwan v. Latour, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 289, 2 Am. Dec. 519; McClintock v. Graham, 3 McCord (S. C.) 553; Swift v. Thompson, 9 Conn. 63, 21 Am. Dec. 718; Goddard v. Chase, 7 Mass. 432; McFadden v. Crawford, 36 W. Va. 671, 15 S. E. 408, 32 Am. St. Rep. 894; Spinney v. Barbe, 43 Ill. App. 585.

Machinery in a planing mill, securely fastened, belongs to the realty; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Anderson, 88 Ark. 129, 113 S. W. 1030, 16 Ann. Cas. 784; lace looms bolted to the floor and fastened by iron stays to the roof; 5 F. Ct. Sess. 214; electric light fittings in a hotel; Canning v. Owen, 22 R. I. 624, 48 Atl. 1033, 84 Am. St. Rep. 858; and metallic gutters attached to the roof of a house with water pipes laid under ground; Wright v. Du Bignon, 114 Ga. 765, 40 S. E. 747, 57 L. R. A. 669.

2d, by constructive annexation. Some things have been held to be parcel of the realty, which are annexed or fastened to it; for example, deeds or chattels which relate to the title of the inheritance and go to the heir; Shep. Touch. 469; Beardsley v. Bank, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 632; Wadleigh v. Janvrin, 41 N. H. 503, 77 Am. Dec. 780. Cars used in connection with a drier in a brickyard, and which are indispensable to the use of the drier, are part of the realty, and a mechanic's lien will attach thereto; Curran v. Smith, 37 Ill. App. 69. So wires and insulators used in forming and completing the connection between an electric light and power plant and the places supplied with light and heat by such plant; Hughes v. Power Co., 53 N. J. Eq. 435, 32 Atl. 69; Badger Lumber Co. v. Light & Power Co., 48 Kan. 182, 29 Pac. 476, 15 L. R. A. 652, 30 Am. St. Rep. 301; gas burners, chandeliers, and the like; Keeler v. Keeler, 31 N. J. Eq. 181; Johnson's Ex'r v. Wiseman's Ex'r, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 357, 83 Am. Dec. 475; 18 L. T. N. S. 300.

Doors, mantels, and other building materials which have been purchased for an unfinished building and placed therein, but not attached, are not part of the realty; Blue v. Gunn, 114 Tenn. 414, 87 S. W. 408, 69 L. R. A. 892, 108 Am. St. Rep. 912, 4 Ann. Cas. 1157; the main belt of a mill connecting a drive wheel with the main shaft is realty; Friedly v. Giddings, 119 Fed. 438; where the owner replaced the ordinary fixed grate in the house with others, which were not physically attached to the main structure, it was held they were realty, since they were placed to improve the inheritance; [1901] 1 Q. B. 205.

Tubs, vats, and casks placed in a brewery with a design of permanent use therein and which are too large to pass out of any existing opening are part of the realty; Equitable Trust Co. v. Christ, 47 Fed. 756; and a gasoline engine on a stone foundation in a permanent building; State Security Bank v. Hoskins, 130 Ia. 339, 106 N. W. 764, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 376. So deer in a park, fish in a pond, and doves in a dove-house, go to the heir, and not to the executor, being, like keys and heirlooms, constructively annexed to the inheritance; Shep. Touch. 90; Pothier, Traité des Choses § 1. But loose, movable machinery used in prosecuting any business to which the freehold is adapted cannot be considered part of the real estate nor in any way appurtenant to it; Despatch Line of Packets v. Bellamy Mfg. Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 503; 6 Exch. 295; McLaughlin v. Nash, 14 Allen (Mass.) 136, 92 Am. Dec. 741; Brown v. Power Co., 55 Fed. 229. See, however, Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490; Pyle v. Pennock, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 390, 37 Am. Dec. 517.

Chairs hired for use in a hippodrome and screwed to the floor do not cease to be chattels; [1903] 2 K. B. 135; boilers, engines, shafts and heating apparatus placed in a building for business purposes and easily removable are not part of the realty; Bergh v. Safe Co., 136 Fed. 368, 69 C. C. A. 212, 70 L. R. A. 756; electric fixtures installed by a tenant for his personal comfort and convenience are domestic fixtures, if they can be readily detached without injury to the premises; Raymond v. Strickland, 124 Ga. 504, 52 S. E. 619, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 69; a gas stove is not realty; Hook v. Bolton, 199 Mass. 244, 85 N. E. 175, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 699, 127 Am. St. Rep. 487.

The criterion of an irremovable fixture is the united application of three requisites: (1) real or constructive annexation of the article in question to the freehold; (2) appropriation or adaptation to the use or purpose of that part of the realty with which it is connected; (3) the intention of the party making the annexation to make the article a permanent accession to the freehold; Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 176, 19 N. E. 753, 3 L. R. A. 33; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Morgan, 42 Kan. 23, 21 Pac. 809, 4 L. R. A. 284, 16 Am. St. Rep. 471.

The general rule is, that fixtures once annexed to the freehold become part of the realty. But to this rule there are exceptions: as, first, where there is a manifest intention to use the fixture in some employment distinct from that of the occupant of the real estate; second, where it has been annexed merely for the purpose of carrying on a trade; 3 East 88; Lemar v. Miles, 4 Watts (Pa.) 330; for the fact that it was put up for such a purpose indicates an intention that the thing should not become part of the freehold. See 1 H. Bla. 260. Buildings may, by agreement of parties, be erected upon land without becoming affixed thereto; Kinkead v. U. S., 150 U. S. 483, 14 Sup. Ct. 172, 37 L. Ed. 1152. But if there is a clear intention that the thing should be permanently annexed to the realty, its being used for purposes of trade would not, perhaps, bring the case within one of the exceptions; 1 H. Bla. 260. The tendency of modern authorities is to make the intention of the parties the general rule for deciding whether an article is realty or personalty; L. R. 7 C. P. 328; Snedeker v. Warring, 12 N. Y. 170; 17 Am. Dec. 690, note; Langston v. State, 96 Ala. 44, 11 South. 334. But the intention must be definitely expressed by words or acts; mere unexpressed mental intention is of no avail; Cook v. Whiting, 16 Ill. 480; Burnside v. Twitchell, 43 N. H. 390. See Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 389, 4 N. W. 731, 36 Am. Rep. 446, and note. This intention will prevail except as against innocent purchasers; Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 176, 19 N. E. 753, 3 L. R. A. 33.

Machinery used in a manufacturing plant and intended to be used for the benefit of the realty is realty as between mortgagor and mortgagee; In re Eagle Horseshoe Co., 163 Fed. 699, 90 C. C. A. 283; but where a person placed a frame factory upon the land of another with his consent, and there was no agreement respecting the ownership of the factory, the presumption is that the building is still the property of the party annexing it, and is removable by him; King v. Morris, 74 N. J. L. 810, 68 Atl. 162, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439, 12 Ann. Cas. 1086.

With respect to the different classes of persons who claim the right to remove a fixture, it has been held that where the question arises between an executor and the heir at law the rule is strict that whatever belongs to the estate to which the fixture appertains will go to the heir; but if the ancestor manifested an intention (which it is said may be inferred from circumstances) that the things affixed should be considered personalty, they will be so treated, and will go to the executor. See Bac. Abr. Executor, Administrator; 1 P. Wms. 94; Bull. N. P. 34; 12 Cl. & F. 312; Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 389, 4 N. W. 731, 36 Am. Rep. 446.

As between a vendor and a vendee the same strictness applies as between an executor and an heir at law; for all fixtures which belong to the premises at the time of the sale, or which have been erected by the vendor, whether for purposes of trade or manufacture or not, as potash-kettles for manufacturing ashes, and the like, chandeliers and gas-brackets, pass to the vendee of the land, unless they have been expressly reserved by the terms of the contract; Miller v. Plumb, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 665, 16 Am. Dec. 456; Holmes v. Tremper, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 29, 11 Am. Dec. 238; Ewell, Fixt. 271; Tyler, Fixt. 519 (see also Shaw v. Lenke, 1 Daly [N. Y.] 487; Montague v. Dent, 10 Rich. L. [S. C.] 135, 67 Am. Dec. 572); a faucet attached to a hot-water boiler and a rosebush in the yard pass by deed of the realty; Kirchman v. Lapp, 19 N. Y. Supp. 831; but a filter capable of delivering 105 gallons of water per minute, resting loosely on a factory floor, is a fixture; Sayles v. Purifying Co., 62 Hun 618, 16 N. Y. Supp. 555.

Where the vendee under a contract for the purchase of land is in possession and allows a third party to erect thereon a small building, agreeing that it should be personalty, and subsequently the contract for the purchase of land is rescinded, the building may still be removed by the third party; Brannon v. Vaughan, 66 Ark. 87, 48 S. W. 909.

The same rule applies as between mortgagor and mortgagee; Southbridge Sav. Bank v. Mason, 147 Mass. 500, 18 N. E. 406, 1 L. R. A. 350; 1 Atk. 477; Preston v. Briggs, 16 Vt. 124; Despatch Line of Packets v. Manuf'g Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 203; Ewell, Fixt. 271. The same rule as to ownership of property in chattels annexed to realty prevails between a mortgagor and mortgagee as between a grantor and grantee; and in either case it operates more strongly in favor of the mortgagee or grantee than the landlord where his title is assailed by a lessee; Kinnear v. Railways Co., 223 Pa. 390, 72 Atl. 808.

Wires for conducting an electrical current to lamps pass as fixtures under a mortgage of the electric light plant; Fechet v. Drake, 2 Ariz. 239, 12 Pac. 694; and the annunciator and all the wires of an electric-bell system are part of the realty of a hotel and pass as fixtures under a mortgage; Capehart v. Foster, 61 Minn. 132, 63 N. W. 257, 52 Am. St. Rep. 582; in which case steam radiators and an office-desk attached to the building were held to be fixtures, while gas-burners and chandeliers were held not to pass as such to the mortgagee; contra, as to the last point; Manning v. Ogden, 70 Hun 399, 24 N. Y. Supp. 70; and in National Bank of Catasauqua v. North, 160 Pa. 303, 28 Atl. 694, it was held that steam radiators and valves were not annexed to the realty, but, being exactly analogous to gas fixtures were severable from the realty.

Where chattels are sold under conditional sale and annexed to the realty, the seller may assert his title as against a subsequent mortgagee of the land; Adams Mach. Co. v. Ass'n, 119 Ala. 97, 24 South. 857; Davis v. Bliss, 187 N. Y. 77, 79 N. E. 851, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458; and so where the owner of a greenhouse leased the land and sold the greenhouse and subsequently mortgaged the land, the mortgagee was not entitled to the greenhouse; Royce v. Latshaw, 15 Colo. App. 420, 62 Pac. 627; but where a furnace was sold and installed under similar circumstances, and the premises were bought in under a foreclosure sale under a prior mortgage, it was held that the furnace passed with the realty; Fuller-Warren Co. v. Harter, 110 Wis. 80, 85 N. W. 698, 53 L. R. A. 603, 84 Am. St. Rep. 867; in England, machines bought on conditional sale and attached to the floor become part of the realty; [1903] 1 K. B. 87, affirmed [1904] App. Cas. 466; but where the mortgagee is only an equitable mortgagee, it was held that the vendor of the machine had a prior equitable interest which could not be defeated; [1907] 1 Ch. 575.

The question whether ranges, hot-water boilers, sinks, and wash-tubs are fixtures under a mortgage depends on when and how they are attached to the house; Manning v. Ogden, 70 Hun 399, 24 N. Y. Supp. 70; and as between a devisee and the executor, things permanently annexed to the realty at the time of the testator's death pass to the devisee,—his right to fixtures being similar to that of a vendee; 2 B. & C. 80; Ferard, Fixt. 246. Tapestry which has been cut and pieced so as to cover the walls of a room and the space left by the doors and mantelpiece, and was nailed to wooden buttons let into the plaster and nailed to the brick work, passed as a fixture under the devise of the mansion-house; [1896] 2 Ch. 497; see also 3 L. R. Eq. 382, where, under a will, tapestry, pictures, and frames filled with satin and attached to the walls, and also statues, figures, vases, and stone garden seats set in place by the testator who was tenant for life, which were essentially part of the house or the architectural designs of the building or grounds, however fastened, were fixtures, and could not be removed, but glasses and pictures not in panels, not being part of the building, were not fixtures.

Tapestries fixed by a tenant for life to the walls of a house and easily removable therefrom do not pass to the remainderman; [1901] 1 Ch. 523, affirmed [1902] App. Cas. 157; where a life tenant leases the premises and covenants with his tenant to purchase all additional machinery added thereto, which he does, at the expiration of the term for years, on his death, his widow is entitled to the machinery as against the remainderman; [1905] 1 Ch. 406.

Where a husband, managing his wife's property as her agent, voluntarily, at his own expense, places thereon a boiler, engine, and connections for furnishing power, and subsequently joins his wife in executing a mortgage on the land, the boiler and engine are not trade fixtures, and the husband, as against the purchasers at sheriff's sale on proceeding, under the mortgage, has no right

But as between a landlord and his tenant the strictness of the ancient rule has been much relaxed. The rule here is understood to be that a tenant, whether for life, for years, or at will, may sever at any time before the expiration of his tenancy, and carry away all such fixtures of a chattel nature as he has himself erected upon the demised premises for the purposes of ornament, domestic convenience, or to carry on trade; provided, always, that the removal can be effected without material injury to the freehold; Beers v. St. John, 16 Day (Conn.) 322; Pemberton v. King, 13 N. C. 376; Fairis v. Walker, 1 Bail. (S. Car.) 541; Ombony v. Jones, 19 N. Y. 234; Harkey v. Cain, 69 Tex. 146, 6 S. W. 637; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Morgan, 42 Kan. 23, 21 Pac. 809, 4 L. R. A. 284, 16 Am. St. Rep. 471; Powell v. Bergner, 47 Ill. App. 33; and this is so whether it be made of wood or brick; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. R. Co., 142 U. S. 396, 12 Sup. Ct. 188, 35 L. Ed. 1055. There have been adjudications to this effect with respect to bakers' ovens; saltpans; carding-machines; cider mills and furnaces; steam-engines; soap-boilers' vats and copper stills; mill-stones; Dutch barns standing on a foundation of brick-work set into the ground; a varnish-house built upon a similar foundation, with a chimney; and to a ball-room, erected by the lessee of an inn, resting upon stone posts slightly imbedded in the soil; and also in regard to things ornamental or for domestic convenience: as, furnaces; stoves; cupboards and shelves; bells and bell-pulls; gas-fixtures; portable hot-air furnace; Towne v. Fiske, 127 Mass. 125, 34 Am. Rep. 353; Heysham v. Dettre, 89 Pa. 506; Brown v. Power Co., 55 Fed. 229; pier and chimney-glasses, although attached to the wall with screws; marble chimney-pieces; grates; window-blinds and curtains. The decisions, however, are adverse to the removal of hearth-stones, doors, windows, locks and keys; because such things are peculiarly adapted to the house in which they are affixed; also, to all such substantial additions to the premises as conservatories, greenhouses (except those of a professional gardener), stable, pig-styes and other outhouses, shrubbery and flowers planted in a garden. Nor has the privilege been extended to erections for agricultural purposes; though it is difficult to perceive why such fixtures should stand upon a less favored basis than trade fixtures, when the relative importance of the two arts is considered; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 544; 3 East 38; McCullough v. Irvine's Ex'rs, 13 Pa. 438. But some American authorities question the correctness of the doctrine; Van Ness v. Pacard, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 137, 7 L. Ed. 374; Holmes v. Tremper, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 29, 11 Am. Dec. 238; 2 Ferard, Fixt. 60. A railroad company, occupying land under an agreement, on the termination of such, may remove the rails which have been laid; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. R. Co., 142 U. S. 396, 12 Sup. Ct. 188, 35 L. Ed. 1055.

Ordinary trade fixtures removable without material injury do not pass to the landlord by act of renewing the term; Smusch v. Kohn, 22 Misc. 344, 49 N. Y. Supp. 176; Bernheimer v. Adams, 70 App. Div. 114, 75 N. Y. Supp. 93; contra, Ogden v. Garrison, 82 Neb. 302, 117 N. W. 714, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135; Precht v. Howard, 187 N. Y. 136, 79 N. E. 847, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483; Wadman v. Burke, 147 Cal. 351, 81 Pac. 1012, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1192, 3 Ann. Cas. 330, where the tenant renewed without expressly reserving to himself the right to the fixtures installed by him. When the lessee is in bankruptcy, the trade fixtures ordinarily go to his trustee as against the lessor; Montello Brick Co. v. Trexler, 167 Fed. 482, 93 C. C. A. 118.

The time for exercising the right of removal is a matter of some importance. A tenant for years may remove them at any time during his term and afterwards, if he is in possession and holding over rightfully; 7 M. & W. 14; Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 59; Allen v. Kennedy, 40 Ind. 142; Brown v. Power Co., 55 Fed. 229. But tenants for life or at will, having uncertain interests in the land, have, after the determination of their estates not occasioned by their own fault, a reasonable time within which to remove their fixtures; 3 Atk. 13; Ombony & Dain v. Jones, 19 N. Y. 238; Antoni v. Belknap, 102 Mass. 193; but a tenant at will whose tenancy can only be terminated after reasonable notice, has not this privilege; Erickson v. Jones, 37 Minn. 459, 35 N. W. 267.

If a tenant quits possession of the land without removing such fixtures as he is entitled to, the property in them immediately vests in the landlord, and though they are subsequently severed, the tenant's right to them does not revive; 1 B. & Ad. 394; 2 M. & W. 450; Childs v. Hurd, 32 W. Va. 66, 9 S. E. 362; L. R. 8 Eq. 626; but it is said that a person claiming under a tenant may apparently have more time for removal than the tenant; see [1904] 1 Ch. 819. The rights of parties with respect to particular articles are sometimes regulated by local customs, especially as between outgoing and incoming tenants; and in cases of this kind it becomes a proper criterion by which to determine the character of the article, and whether it is a fixture or not.

FLAG. A symbol of nationality carried by soldiers, ships, etc., and used in many places where such a symbol is necessary or proper.

Nationality is determined by the flag when all other requisites are complied with; 5 East 398; 3 B. & P. 201; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 1; 1 Dods. Adm. 81, 131; The Nereide, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 388, 3 L. Ed. 769.

A ship navigating under the flag and pass of a foreign country is to be considered as bearing the national character of the country under whose flag she sails; Wheat. Int. L., 3d Eng. ed. § 340.

A cargo documented as foreign property in the same manner as the ship by which it is carried, and covered by a foreign flag, is not, under the English rule, the subject of capture; 5 Rob. Rep. 2; id. 5, note. In that country, although the ship is held to be bound by the character imposed upon it by the authority of the government from which all the documents issue, yet goods which have no dependence upon the authority of the state may be differently considered; and if the goods be laden in time of peace, though sailing under a foreign flag, they are not subjects of capture; id.; but these licenses are construed with great liberality in the British courts of admiralty; Stew. Vice. Adm. 360.

The doctrine of the courts in this country has been very strict as to this point, and it has been frequently decided that sailing under the license and passport of protection of the enemy in furtherance of his views and interests was, without regard to the object of the voyage or the port of destination, such an act of illegality as subjected both ship and cargo to confiscation as prize of war; The Julia, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 181, 3 L. Ed. 528; The Aurora, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 203, 3 L. Ed. 536; The Hiram, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 444, 3 L. Ed. 619; The Ariadne, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 143, 4 L. Ed. 205; The Sybil, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 100, 4 L. Ed. 522. These decisions placed the objection to such licenses on the ground of pacific dealing with an enemy and as amounting to a contract that the party to whom the license is given should, for that voyage, withdraw himself from the war and enjoy the repose and blessings of peace. The illegality of such intercourse was strongly condemned; and it was held that, the moment a vessel sailed on a voyage with an enemy's license on board, the offence was irrevocably committed and consummated, and that the delictum was not done away even by the termination of the voyage, but the vessel and cargo might be seized after arrival in a port of the United States and condemned as lawful prize. See 1 Kent 85, 164; Wheat. Int. L. (3d Eng. ed.) 340.

By the rules of the United States Navy the use of a foreign flag to deceive an enemy is permissible, but it must be hauled down before a shot is fired, and under no circumstances will it be allowable to commence an action or to fight a battle without the display of the national flag; Snow, Int. L. 96.

Law of the Flag. An expression applied to the municipal law of the country to which a ship belongs of which the flag is the symbol, when that law is resorted to in preference to the lex loci contractus for the construction and effect of a contract or the determination of a liability affecting the ship or her cargo.

The law of the flag is "to regulate the liabilities and regulations which arise among the parties to the agreement, be it of affreightment or by hypothecation, upon this principle, that the ship-owner who sends his vessel into a foreign port gives a notice by his flag to all who enter into contracts with the shipmaster, that he intends the law of that flag to regulate those contracts, and that they must either submit to its operation or not contract with him or his agent at all;" Foote, Priv. Int. L. 408; and in England this rule is usually followed, the tendency being that, in the absence of indication of the intention of the parties, the presumption is in favor of the law of the ship's flag; Scrutton, Chart. Part. 11; but in 3 Moo. P. C. N. S. 272; Liverpool & G. W. S. Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788; 12 Q. B. D. 589; 10 id. 540, it was held that the lex loci contractus must prevail. In his treatise on merchant shipping (3d ed. 170) MacLachlin thus states the rule as to the effect of the law of the flag on the authority of the master. "The agency of the master is devolved upon him by the law of the flag. The same law that confers his authority, ascertains its limits, and the flag at the mast-head is notice to all the world of the extent of such power to bind the owners or freighters by his act. The foreigner who deals with this agent has notice of that law, and, if he be bound by it, there is no injustice. His notice is the national flag which is hoisted on every sea and under which the master sails into every port, and every circumstance that connects him with the vessel isolates that vessel in the eyes of the world, and demonstrates his relation to the owners and freighters as their agent for a specific purpose and with power well defined under the national maritime law;" id.; this was suggested by the author quoted as a possible explanation of the apparently anomalous exception of bottomry bonds from the general rule that the lex loci contractus prevails.

This rule was followed in Lloyd v. Guibert, where the question was as to the master's authority to bind the ship-owner; L. R. 1 Q. B. 115; s. c. 6 B. & S. 100, and 33 L. J. Q. B. 245; s. c. on appeal 35 id. 74; 6 B. & S. 120.

In this case, in the Queen's Bench, Blackburn, J., in language almost exactly following that above quoted, applied the law of the flag (French), which did not recognize a personal liability of the owner in a bottomry bond, as against the lex loci contractus (Danish), or the laws of the place of performance (English), or those of the place when the cargo was loaded (Haytien). The court, after noting the "singular absence of authority," said that two American cases had been cited; Arayo v. Currel, 1 La. 528, 20 Am. Dec. 286, and Pope v. Nickerson, 3 Sto. 465, Fed. Cas. No. 11,274, adding that "neither of these decisions is binding on us, but we have derived very great assistance from them." As to the last of these cases there follows this comment: "The very learned judgment of Mr. Justice Story just referred to affords a complete answer to a plausible argument in which was suggested that the general maritime law clothed the master with power to bind his owners absolutely, and that the municipal law of the owner's country was analogous to secret restrictions in the ostensible authority of a partner or other agent clothed with general power." In the Exchequer Chamber, where the judgment was affirmed, Willes, J., said: "The general rule, that where the contract of affreightment does not provide otherwise, there, as between the parties to such contract, in respect of sea damage and its incidents, the law of the ship should govern, seems to be not only in accordance with the probable intention of the parties, but also most consistent and intelligible, and therefore most convenient to those engaged in commerce." The same doctrine was applied by the English Court of Appeal to the master's control over the cargo as well as the ship, by Brett, L. J., in L. R. 7 P. D. 137; by Dr. Lushington in Br. & L. 38, and in a later case by Sir J. Hannen, who sustained a sale of part of a damaged cargo, where it was shown by the result to have been unnecessary, such sale being authorized by the law of the flag; [1891] Prob. 328. But see Malpica v. McKown, 1 La. 249, 20 Am. Dec. 279; Arayo v. Currel, 1 La. 528, 20 Am. Dec. 286, where the lex loci contractus was held to prevail.

In Pope v. Nickerson, 3 Sto. 465, Fed. Cas. No. 11,274, although the law of the flag was, in fact, enforced, the decision cannot be said to have followed the rule laid down by MacLachlin, as in that case the particular point decided was as to liability of the owner to the freighter, when the former was a citizen of a state the laws of which did not recognize such liabilities, while by the law of the state in which the freighter resided and also of the foreign port where the cargo was shipped, such a liability existed, and the lex domicilii of the ship-owners was held to govern the contract. See also The Virgin v. Vyfhius, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 8 L. Ed. 1036; BOTTOMRY.

As to the effect of the law of the flag upon the construction of a contract of affreightment, the decisions in this country as a rule are usually governed by the lex loci contractus. In The Brantford City (S. D. of N. Y.) 29 Fed. 373, 383, Brown, J., thus stated this rule: "The 'law of the flag' . . . does not embody any rule of legal construction. Literally, it is but a concise phrase to express a simple fact, namely, the law of the country to which the ship belongs, and whose flag she bears, whether it accords with the general maritime law or not. In so far, however, as the law of the flag does not represent the general maritime law, it is but the municipal law of the ship's home. It has, therefore, no force abroad, except by comity. But foreign law is not adopted by comity, unless some good reason appear in the particular case why it should be preferred to the law of the former. The most frequent and controlling reasons are the actual or presumed intent of the parties or the evident justice of the case arising from its special circumstances."

On this ground, the law of the ship's home is applied by comity, to regulate the mutual relations of the ship, her owner, master, and crew, as among themselves; their liens for wages, and modes of discipline; 1 W. Rob. 35; The Enterprise, 1 Low. 455, Fed. Cas. No. 4,498; Covert v. The Wexford, 3 Fed. 577; The J. L. Pendergast, 29 Fed. 127. For the same reason it is also applied, by comity, to torts on the high seas, as between vessels of the same nation, or vessels of different nations subject to similar laws, though not if they are subject to different laws; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. Ed. 1001. Independently of the intent of the parties, the law of the flag has no application to cases of tort, as between ships or persons of different nationalities and conflicting laws; and federal law, by which stipulations of a common carrier exempting him from the consequence of his own negligence are held to be against public policy and void, is controlling in suits brought here upon shipments made here on board foreign ships under bills of lading signed by foreign masters, though such stipulations be valid by the law of the ship's flag. The Brantford City, 29 Fed. 373.

This case is expressly approved by the supreme court in a case upon the same point, which is the leading American case upon this branch of the subject; Liverpool & G. W. S. Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 461, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788. See comments on this case by the circuit court of appeals; Phinney v. Ins. Co., 67 Fed. 493. The contrary view, under almost identical circumstances, was held in the case of The Missouri and the doctrine of Lloyd v. Guibert was held to extend to this particular point; 41 Ch. Div. 321. Where both the law of the flag and the lex loci contractus were British, the law of England was held to govern the contract; The Carib Prince, 63 Fed. 266; The Majestic, 60 Fed. 627, 9 C. C. A. 161, 23 L. R. A. 746, affirming 56 Fed. 247. In a shipment of goods in England, in an English vessel, on an ordinary bill of lading, the liability of the vessel is to be determined according to the law of the place of shipment, as the law of the flag; The Titania, 19 Fed. 101. So also where the bill of lading was made expressly subject to "a live stock contract," and there was an express provision in that contract that all questions relating to the bill of lading should be determined by British law; The Oranmore, 24 Fed. 922. But the circuit court of appeals, in a similar case, where the bill of lading contained the "so-called flag clause" (that liability should be determined by the law of England, but there was no reference to this in the charter, made in this country), held it no evidence to modify the latter and that it was ineffective to substitute the law of the flag for the lex loci contractus with respect to the stipulation for exemption from liability for negligence; The Energia, 66 Fed. 607, 13 C. C. A. 653, affirming 56 Fed. 126.

Generally it may be said that the doctrine of The Missouri is in conflict with the current of authority in England, it being usually held in that country that as to such stipulations in the bill of lading, the lex loci contractus prevails; 9 Q. B. D. 118; 10 id. 521, 540; 12 id. 596; 3 Moo. P. C. N. S. 272; and to the same effect and under precisely similar circumstances is a judgment of the court of cassation in France, imperfectly stated in a note to the case last cited and fully reported in 75 Journal du Palais (1864) 225, and see 1 Dalloz 449. This question, it may be remarked, is as yet scarcely to be considered as settled by any hard-and-fast rule of law, and the only certain guide, says Bowen, L. J. (12 Q. B. D. 589), "is to be found in applying sound ideas of business, convenience, and sense to the language of the contract itself with a view to discovering from it the true intention of the parties."

Flag of Truce. A white flag displayed by one of two belligerent parties to notify the other party that communication and a cessation of hostilities are desired.

Although each party has the right to send such a flag, there is no obligation on the commander of the enemy's forces to receive it; Snow, Int. L. 96; although it is usual to do so except in very exceptional cases; Davis, Int. L. 238; but if he receive the flag he may take all reasonable precautions to protect himself from any injury that may result from the presence of an enemy within his lines; he may detain the messenger at the outposts or may cause him to be blindfolded, but such messenger is entitled, if the bearer of a bona fide message, to complete inviolability of person; but during an engagement, firing is not necessarily to cease on the appearance of a flag of truce, unless it be made clear that it is exhibited as a token of submission; Snow, Int. L. 97. The rules of war justly forbid the sending of flags of truce for the purpose of obtaining information either directly or indirectly, and a messenger forfeits his inviolability of person and may be detained and subjected to punishment as a spy if he take advantage of his mission to abet an act of treachery. The more important of the foregoing rules have now been embodied in Articles 32, 33, 34 of the Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, adopted by The Hague Peace Conference in 1907, which were substantially a re-statement of the rules laid down in the Draft of an International Declaration Concerning the Laws and Customs of War, signed by the delegates to the Brussels Convention of 1874, but never ratified by their governments. II Opp. 278–282.

In naval operations the senior officer alone is authorized to dispatch or admit flags of truce. The firing of a gun from the senior officer's vessel is generally understood as a warning to approach no nearer. The flag of truce should be met at a suitable distance by a boat or vessel in charge of a commissioned officer having a white flag plainly displayed from the time of leaving until her return, and the same precautions must be observed in dispatching such a flag; Snow, Int. L. 97.

FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES. By the act entitled "An act to establish the flag of the United States," passed April 4, 1818, 3 Story, U. S. Laws 1667, it is enacted—

§ 1. That from and after the fourth day of July next, the flag of the United States be thirteen horizontal stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be twenty stars, white in a blue field.

§ 2. That, on the admission of every new state into the Union, one star be added to the union of the flag; and that such addition shall take effect on the fourth day of July then next succeeding such admission. See Preble, Hist. of Amer. Flag.

It has been held in an unreported case in Illinois that a statute requiring the national flag to be floated over every school-house during school hours is unconstitutional, on the ground that it transcended the police power of the state, Wright, J., contending that the legislature could not enact a statute with penal sanctions unless it had for its object "the maintenance of the police authority of the state, the morals of the state, or the health of the state. The question that arose in this case was whether, in a group of college buildings, each building was compelled to display a separate flag, and the decision that one flag floated from a flagstaff for the group of buildings, was not a compliance with the law is severely criticised in 30 Am. L. Rev. 746.

A state statute (Nebraska), punishing the desecration of the flag and its use for advertising purposes, is not invalid although it excepts periodicals, etc., in which it is used unconnected with advertising matter; Halter v. Nebraska, 205 U. S. 34, 27 Sup. Ct. 419, 51 L. Ed. 696. But in Ruhstrat v. People, 185 Ill. 133, 57 N. E. 41, 49 L. R. A. 181, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30, a like statute was held invalid as not being a proper exercise of the police power. In People v. Van De Carr, 178 N. Y. 425, 70 N. E. 965, 66 L. R. A. 189, 102 Am. St. Rep. 516, a flag act was held invalid as applied to property in existence when it went into effect. The act of congress of Feb. 20, 1905, forbids the grant of a trademark bearing the simulation of the United States flag.

FLAGELLAT. Whipped; scourged. An entry on old Scotch records. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 7.

FLAGRANS (Lat.). Burning; raging; in actual perpetration. Flagrante bello, while war is actually in progress. Flagrant necessity, an urgent and immediate peril or emergency which will excuse an act under other circumstances unlawful.

FLAGRANS CRIMEN. In Roman Law. A term denoting that a crime is being or has just been committed: for example, when a crime has just been committed and the corpus delictum is publicly exposed, or if a mob take place, or if a house be feloniously burned, these are severally flagrans crimen.

The term used in France is flagrant delit. The Code of Criminal Instruction gives the following concise definition of it, art. 41; "Le délit qui se commet actuellement ou qui vient de se commettre, est un flagrant délit."

FLAGRANTE DELICTO (Lat.). In the very act of committing the crime. 4 Bla. Com. 307.

FLAT. When used as a description of anything respecting an arm of the sea, it means a level place over which the water stands or flows. Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 424.

A floor or separate division of a floor, fitted for housekeeping and designed to be occupied by a single family. Cent. Dict.

A building, the various floors of which are fitted up as flats, either residential or business.

A flat is in law a house, though in fact only a part of one in the ordinary sense; L. R. 8 Q. B. D. 423; and the contract between the owner and the occupier is classed among "contracts for permissive use." Holland, Jur. 254.

The owner of a building who rents flats therein retains control of all portions not actually demised to tenants; [1893] Q. B. 177; Inhabitants of Milford v. Holbrook, 9 Allen (Mass.) 17, 85 Am. Dec. 735; he is bound to keep such portions in a reasonable state of repair, and a failure so to do renders him liable in damages; Quinn v. Perham, 151 Mass. 162, 23 N. E. 735; Sawyer v. McGillicuddy, 81 Me. 318, 17 Atl. 124, 3 L. R. A. 458, 10 Am. St. Rep. 260; Dollard v. Roberts, 130 N. Y. 269, 29 N. E. 104, 14 L. R. A. 238; 3 C. P. 326; but the owner is not an insurer, and when he has constructed his roofs, pipes, or drains with the reasonable foresight commonly exercised by prudent men, he will not be responsible for a latent defect or an unusual stress of circumstances; L. R. 6 Ex. 217; Fitch v. Armour, 14 N. Y. Supp. 319; 5 Q. B. D. 602. Where the upper rooms only are leased, a covenant is implied on the part of the lessor to give such rooms the necessary support; Graves v. Berdan, 26 N. Y. 498; Ward v. Fagan, 28 Mo. App. 116; and he is under a negative duty to do nothing to lessen or decrease such support, or to render it insecure; Judd v. Cushing, 50 Hun 181, 2 N. Y. Supp. 836; Butler v. Cushing, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 521.

As to elevator service, see ELEVATOR.

As regards the furnishing of artificial light in halls and passage-ways, it has been held that in the absence of contractual obligation there is no legal duty on the part of the owner to furnish such light; Hilsenbeck v. Guhring, 131 N. Y. 674, 30 N. E. 580; contra, Marwedel v. Cook, 154 Mass. 235, 28 N. E. 140.

The janitor, being controlled by the owner, is, when engaged in the discharge of his general duties, the landlord's servant. Any particular tenant may sue the owner for damages, if the general services so contracted for are not rendered, but when a janitor is engaged by a tenant on some special service, such tenant becomes dominus pro tempore, and as such he incurs a liability similar to the landlord's; so when he attempts to interfere with or assume the direction of the janitor when the latter is discharging any general duty. See [1893] 1 Ch. 1. In either case his duties and liabilities are regulated by the general principles of the law of Master and Servant.

The distinction between the tenants of flats and lodgers and guests at a hotel is, that while the latter may have the exclusive enjoyment of their lodgings or rooms, they have not, as have the tenants of flats, the exclusive possession; 30 L. J. M. C. 74.

See, generally, APARTMENT; LEASE; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

FLAVIANUM JUS (Lat.). A treatise on civil law, which takes its name from its author, Cneius Flavius. It contains forms of actions. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FLEDUITE. A discharge or freedom from amercements where one having been an outlawed fugitive cometh to the place of our lord of his own accord. Termes de la Ley.

The liberty to hold court and take up the amercements for beating and striking. Cowell.

The fine set on a fugitive as the price of obtaining the king's freedom. Spelman, Gloss.

FLEDWITE. A discharge from amercements where one having been a fugitive came to peace with the king of own accord or with license. Termes de la Ley; Cun. L. Dict. But some authorities add to this definition a quære whether it is not rather a fine set upon a fugitive to be allowed to return to the king's place. Cowell; Holthouse.

FLEE FROM JUSTICE. To leave one's home, residence, or known place of abode, or to conceal one's self therein, with intent in either case to avoid detection or punishment for some public offence. State v. Washburn, 48 Mo. 240; U. S. v. O'Brian, 3 Dill. 381, Fed. Cas. No. 15,908.

FLEET. A place of running water where the tide or float comes up.

A famous prison in London, so called from a river or ditch which was formerly there, on the side of which it stood. It was used especially for debtors and bankrupts, and persons charged with contempt of the courts of chancery, exchequer, and common pleas. Abolished in 1842 and pulled down in 1845. Such persons as had been sent there were thereafter sent to the Marshalsea. Moz. & W.; Hayden's Dict. Dates.

FLEET MARRIAGES. There were in the neighborhood of the Fleet prison about sixty marriage houses, some of which were public houses and others not. They were known by having a sign-board, with joined hands, in addition to the public house sign. At the doors of these houses persons called Pliers solicited the passers-by to come in and be married, and in these houses persons who were, or pretended to be, clergymen performed the marriage ceremony and made entries in registers that were kept at the respective houses. There is little doubt that many entries had false dates, that persons who were married personated others, and that women who wished to plead a plea of coverture or hide their shame were married to men who, for a trifling gratuity, married any woman who would pay them, though they had previously married others. Such marriages also took place in the neighborhood of the King's Bench prison, at the Savoy, in the Mint, in the Borough, and at the Mayfair Chapel.

It is said in 1 Peake N. P. C. 303, that a marriage in the Fleet was considered at that time good and legal. In 8 Carr. & P. 581 (34 E. C. L. R.), Patteson, J., said: "I shall not receive the Fleet Registry in evidence for any purpose whatever." They were refused in 1 Peake N. P. C. 303. A collection of over a thousand Fleet registers have been deposited in the Registry of the Bishop of London.

See extracts from these registers and a historical note in 34 E. C. L. R. 534; Burns, Fleet Registers.

FLEM. A fugitive bondman or villein. Spelman. The possession of the goods of such fugitives was called Flemeswite. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 147.

FLET. A house or home. Cowell.

FLETA. The title of an ancient lawbook, supposed to have been written by a judge while confined in the Fleet Prison; written about 1290.

It is written in Latin, and is divided into six books. The author lived in the reigns of Edward II. and Edward III. See lib. 2, cap. 66, § Item quod nullus; lib. 1, cap. 20, § que cœperunt; 10 Coke, pref. Edward II. was crowned A. D. 1306. Edward III. was crowned 1326, and reigned till A. D. 1377. During this period the English law was greatly improved, and the lawyers and judges were very learned. Hale, Hist. Comm. Law 162; 4 Bla. Com. 427, says of this work "that it was for the most part law until the alteration of tenures took place." The same remark he applies to Britton and Hengham. "It is little better than an ill-arranged epitome." 1 Poll. & M. Hist. Engl. Law 188. "The nebulous Fleta." 21 L. Q. R. 393.

FLICHWITE. A fine on account of brawls or quarrels. Spel. Gloss.

FLIGHT. The evading the course of justice by a man's voluntarily withdrawing himself. Formerly, if the jury found that the party fled for it, whether he were found guilty or not of the principal charge, he forfeited his goods and chattels. 4 Bla. Com. 387. Evidence of the flight of an accused person has a tendency to establish guilt; Allen v. U. S., 164 U. S. 492, 17 Sup. Ct. 154, 41 L. Ed. 528. See FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE; EXTRADITION.

FLIGHTWITE. The same as FLEDWITE (q. v.).

FLOAT. A certificate authorizing the party possessing it to enter a certain amount of public land. Marks v. Dickson, 20 How. (U. S.) 504, 15 L. Ed. 1002.

A Mexican grant of quantity, as of a certain number of leagues of land lying within a larger tract, whose boundaries are given, is a float, subject to location within the tract by the government before it can attach to any specific lands; Carr v. Quigley, 149 U. S. 652, 13 Sup. Ct. 961, 37 L. Ed. 885; U. S. v. McLaughlin, 127 U. S. 428, 8 Sup. Ct. 1177, 32 L. Ed. 213.

FLOATABLE. A stream capable of floating logs, etc., is said to be floatable. Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich. 519, 59 Am. Dec. 209.

FLOATING CAPITAL. Capital retained for the purpose of meeting current expenditure.

It includes raw materials destined for fabrication, such as wool and flax products in the warehouses of merchants or manufacturers; such as cloth or linen and money for wages and stores. De Laveleye, Pol. Ec.

FLOATING DEBT. That mass of lawful and valid claims against a corporation, for the payment of which there is no money in the corporate treasury specifically designed, nor any system of taxation or other means of providing money to pay, particularly provided. People v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 374.

FLODEMARK. High-tide mark. Blount. The mark which the sea at highest tides makes upon the shore. And. 189; Cunningham.

FLOGGING. Thrashing or beating with a whip or lash. This system of punishment was abolished in the army by act of Aug. 5, 1861; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1342; in the navy June 6, 1872; id. § 1642. See WHIPPING.

FLOOD. An inundation of water over land not usually covered by it. Such an accident is an Act of God. McHenry v. R. Co., 4 Harr. (Del.) 449. See ACT OF GOD.

FLOOR. The section of a building between horizontal planes. Lowell v. Strahan, 145 Mass. 8, 12 N. E. 401, 1 Am. St. Rep. 422. In a lease the words "first floor" are equivalent to the "first story" of a building and include the walls unless other words control the meaning; Lowell v. Strahan, 145 Mass. 8, 12 N. E. 401, 1 Am. St. Rep. 422.

FLORENTINE PANDECTS. A name applied to a copy of the Pandects erroneously said to have been discovered at Amalfi, Italy, but afterwards removed to Florence. See CIVIL LAW.

FLORIDA. The name of one of the states of the United States of America, being the fourteenth admitted to the Union. It was discovered by Ponce de Leon in 1513; settled by Huguenots in 1562, and permanently settled by Spaniards at St. Augustine in 1565; and ceded to Great Britain in 1763, to Spain in 1783, and to United States in 1819. The Americans took possession in 1821.

It was admitted into the Union in 1845 by virtue of the act of congress entitled: "An act for the admission of the states of Iowa and Florida into the Union," approved March 3, 1845, and the present constitution was adopted Feb. 25, 1868, and amended in 1896.

July 1, 1911, Article XIX amended, prohibiting sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors.

FLORIN (called also Guilder). A coin, originally made at Florence.

The name formerly applied to coins, both of gold and silver, of different values in different countries. In many parts of Germany, the florin, which is still the integer or money-unit in those countries, was formerly a gold piece, value about two dollars and forty-two cents. It afterwards became a silver coin, variously rated at from forty to fifty-six cents, according to locality; but by the German conventions of 1837 and 1838 the rate of nine-tenths fine and one hundred and sixty-three and seven-tenths grains troy per piece was adopted, making the value forty-one cents. This standard is the only one now used in Germany; and the florin or guilder of the Netherlands is, also, coined at nearly the same standard (weight, one hundred and sixty-six grains; fineness, eight hundred and ninety-six thousandths), the value being the same. The florin of Tuscany is only twenty-seven cents in value.

FLOTAGES. Things which float by accident on the sea or great rivers. Blount. The commissions of water-bailiffs. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FLOTSAM, FLOTSAN. A name for the goods which float upon the sea when cast overboard for the safety of the ship, or when a ship is sunk. Distinguished from Jetsam and Ligan. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 5; 5 Co. 106; Comyns, Dig. Wreck, A; Bacon, Abr. Court of Admiralty, B; 1 Bla. Com. 292. See JETTISON; LIGAN.

FLOUD-MARKE. Flode-mark, which see.

FLOWAGE. The natural flowage of water from an upper estate to a lower one is a servitude which the owner of the latter must bear, though the flowage be not in a natural watercourse with well defined banks; Leidlein v. Meyer, 95 Mich. 586, 55 N. W. 367; Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 346, 13 Am. Rep. 213; Gray v. McWilliams, 98 Cal. 157, 32 Pac. 976, 21 L. R. A. 593, 35 Am. St. Rep. 163. Where one drains water from his land into the highway, causing another's crops to be damaged by flowage through a drain connected with the highway, he is liable; Larkin v. Lamping, 44 Ill. App. 649. See EMINENT DOMAIN; RIPARIAN RIGHTS; WATER; WATERCOURSE.

FLOWING LANDS. Raising and settling back water on another's land by a dam placed across a stream or watercourse which is the natural drain and outlet for the surplus water on such land. Call v. Com'rs of Middlesex County, 2 Gray (Mass.) 235. See EMINENT DOMAIN; WATER; WATERCOURSE.

FLUCTUS. Flood; flood tide. Bracton fol. 255.

FLUMEN (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which consists in the right of turning the rain-water, gathered in a spout, on another's land. Erskine, Inst. b. 2, t. 9, n. 9; Vicat, Voc. Jur. See STILLICIDIUM.

FLUMINÆ VOLUCRES. Wild fowl; water fowl. 11 East 571.

FLUVIOUS. A public river; flood tide.

FLY FOR IT. Anciently, it was the custom in a criminal trial to inquire after a verdict, "Did he fly for it?" After the verdict, even if not guilty, forfeiture of goods followed conviction upon such inquiry. Abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28. Wharton.

FLYING SWITCH. This is made by uncoupling the cars from the locomotive while in motion, and throwing the cars on to the side track, by turning the switch, after the engine has passed it, upon the main track. Greenleaf v. R. Co., 29 Ia. 39, 4 Am. Rep. 181. See RAILROAD.

FLYMA. One escaped from justice; a fugitive. Anc. Inst. Flyman Frymth, was the offence of harboring a fugitive; id.

FOCAGE. Housebote; firebote. Cowell.

FOCALE (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. Firewood. The right of taking wood for the fire. Fire-bote. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FODERTORIUM. Provisions to be paid by custom to the royal purveyors. Cowell.

FODERUM (L. Lat.). Food for horses or other cattle. Cowell.

In feudal law, fodder and supplies provided as a part of the king's prerogative for use in his wars or other expeditions. Cowell.

FŒDUS (Lat.). A league; a compact.

FŒMINA VERO CO-OPERTA. A feme covert.

FŒNERATION. See FENERATION.

FŒNUS NAUTICUM (Lat.). The name given to marine interest.

The amount of such interest is not limited by law, because the lender runs so great a risk of losing his principal. Erskine, Inst. b. 4, t. 4, n. 76. See MARINE INTEREST.

FŒSA. Herbage; grass. Cowell

FŒTICIDE. In Medical Jurisprudence. Of late years this term has been applied to designate the act by which criminal abortion is produced. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 288; Guy, Med. Jur. 133. See INFANTICIDE.

FŒTURA (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. The produce of animals, and the fruit of other property, which are acquired to the owner of such animals and property by virtue of his right. Bowyer, Mod. C. L. c. 14, p. 81.

FŒTUS (Lat.). In Medical Jurisprudence. An unborn child. An infant in ventre sa mère.

An arbitrary distinction is made by some writers between fœtus and embryo, the latter term being used for the product of conception up to the fourth month of gestation and the former term after the fourth month.

Although it is often important to know the age of the fœtus, there is great difficulty in ascertaining the fact with the precision required in courts of law.

The great difference between children at birth, as regards their weight and size, is an indication of their condition while within the womb, and is a sufficient evidence of the difficulty as to the age of the fœtus by its weight and size at different periods of its existence.

Thousands of healthy infants have been weighed immediately after birth, and the extremes have been found to be two and eighteen pounds. It is very rare indeed to find any weighing as little as two pounds, but by no means uncommon to find them weighing four pounds. So it is with the length, which varies as much as that of the adult does from the average height of the race.

Neither can anything positive be learned from the progress of development; for although the condition of the bones, cartilages, and other parts will generally mark with tolerable accuracy the age of a healthy fœtus, yet an uncertainty will arise when it is found to be unhealthy. It has been clearly proved, by numerous dissections of new-born children, that the fœtus is subject to diseases which interfere with the proper formation of parts, exhibiting traces of previous departure from health, which had interfered with the proper formation of parts and arrested the process of development.

Interesting as the different periods of development may be to the philosophical inquirer, they cannot be of much value in legal inquiries from their extreme uncertainty in denoting precisely the age of the fœtus by unerring conditions.

FOG. Every vessel must, in a fog, mist, falling snow, or heavy rain storm, go at a moderate speed, having careful regard to the existing circumstances and conditions; The Nacoochee, 137 U. S. 330, 11 Sup. Ct. 122, 34 L. Ed. 687. A speed of six miles per hour is excessive for a steamer in a dense fog, where she is emerging from New York harbor and is likely to meet vessels from many points of the compass; The Martello, 153 U. S. 64, 14 Sup. Ct. 723, 38 L. Ed. 637.

The owner of a sailing vessel cannot substitute for the fog-horn which she is required by the sailing regulations to carry, an instrument blown by steam, and in their opinion more efficient than the fog-horn; The Parthian, 55 Fed. 426, 5 C. C. A. 171, 5 U. S. App. 314. See The Martello, 153 U. S. 64, 14 Sup. Ct. 723, 38 L. Ed. 637. A vessel is not properly equipped at sea which has no spare mechanical fog-horn; The Trave, 55 Fed. 117.

A steamer failing to slack its speed in a fog is at fault in case of collision; 5 U. S. App. 314; 1 id. 614; The Lawrence, 54 Fed. 542, 4 C. C. A. 501; The Fulda, 52 Fed. 400; [1892] Prob. 105. See COLLISION.

FOI. In French Feudal Law. Faith; fealty. Guyot, Inst. Feod. c. 2.

FOINISUM. The fawning of deer. Spel. Gloss.

FOITERERS. Vagabonds. Blount.

FOLC-GEMOTE (spelled, also, folkmote, folcmote, folkgemote; from folc, people, and gemote, an assembly).

A general assembly of the people in a town, burgh, or shire.

During the time at which the separate tribal nations of Britain were under the control or supremacy of the kingdoms of Northumbria, York, and West Saxony successively, the term was applied to the concilium of the freeholders of each village. Tacitus calls it the nation assembled in arms. Their meetings were held each fortnight, and the members bound themselves reciprocally to the peaceable behavior of themselves, their families, and their dependents; 2 Burke, Abr. Eng. Hist. ch. 7. They chose their rulers, the folc kings, at this tribal moot, settled matters of unjust trading, the common tillage and pasturage, and all things that concerned the common householder; 1 Soc. Eng. 125, 136. The conqueror so far as possible endeavored to preserve the customs of the people, but with the growth of the royal power the most important questions were referred to the councillors of the king, comprising the bishops, abbots, and eorldermen who succeeded the folc kings in the folks or shires and designated the witenagemote or council of the wise men; this in turn dissolved into the curia regis; Inderwick, King's Peace. About this period the spelling of the word changes from folc-moot to folk-moot. The meeting of the folk-moot was then transferred to London, and was held thrice a year, and the principal duties that devolved upon it were to hear royal proclamations and statutes, to choose mayors and burgesses, and to pronounce upon offenders the sentence of outlawry; 1 Poll. and Maitl. 642. The folk-moot and the witenagemote are said to have been the foundation of the English Parliament. See Stubbs, Sel. Chars. 10-13; Inderwick, King's Peace; Bagehot, Physics and Politics; Manwood, For. Laws; Spelman, Gloss.; De Brady, Gloss.; PARLIAMENT; WITENA-GEMOTE.

FOLC-RIGHT. The common right of all the people. A law common to all the realm, mentioned by King Edward the elder. It is doubtless in the same sense that the phrase common law originated. 1 Bla. Com. 65, 67.

FOLCLAND (Sax.). Land of the people. Spelman, Gloss.

The subject of land-tenure among the Anglo-Saxons is very obscure. Doubtless all land was originally held in common by the tribe or kingdom, and out of this after a time portions of it were disposed of to individuals. Individual ownership was generally designated by the term alod, which comprised original allotments which had the name ethel, and those which were carved out of the common lands by grant or charter. The tenure of the latter was designated by the term bocland, which is described as "land which is held under a book, under a privilegium, modelled on Roman precedents, expressed in Latin words, armed with ecclesiastical sanctions, and making for alienation and individualism." 8 Eng. Hist. Rev. 1-17. The folcland which was not granted as bocland could be let out for temporary occupation as laenland. A late theory maintained, in the review quoted, by Dr. Vinogradoff is that folcland indicated an estate, not belonging to the folk, but held by folk-right or customary law, and not subject to disposition of the holder. id.; Medley, Eng. Const. Hist. 16. On this theory the modern copy-holders are termed the historical successors of the owners of folcland; id. 36; Pollock, Land Laws 48. Nothing is certain except that the terms referred to were used, but their precise scope is the merest speculation, and successive writers invent new theories with the freedom which is invited by the lack of definite historical or documentary information. The subject affords ample scope for theorizing, as most of what is written upon the subject is of this character, and it is said that the word folkland is only found technically used three times in Anglo-Saxon documents.

The theory of Vinogradoff above stated is earnestly supported by Maitland (Domesday Book and Beyond). He says, referring to the author cited: "His argument has convinced us: but as it is still new we will take leave to repeat it with some few additions of our own." The subject of book-land and folk-land is elaborately discussed and the three documents in which the latter word occurs, as above stated, are fully described. The conclusion is thus stated: "Land, it would seem, is either book-land or folk-land. Book-land is land held by book, by a royal and ecclesiastical privilegium. Folk-land is land held without book, by unwritten title, by the folk-law. 'Folk-land,' is the term which modern historians have rejected in favour of the outlandish alod. The holder of folk-land is a free land owner, though at an early date the king discovers that over him and his land there exists an alienable superiority. Partly by alienations of this superiority, partly perhaps by gifts of land of which the king is himself the owner, book-land is created. Edward's law speaks as though it were dealing with two different kinds of land. But really it is dealing with two different kinds of title . . . the same land might be both book-land and folk-land, the book-land of the minster, the folk-land of the free men who were holding, not indeed 'of' but still 'under' the minster. They or their ancestors had held under the king, but the king had booked their land (which also in a certain sense was his land) to a church. . . . 'Bookland' is a briefer term than 'land held by book-right'; 'folk-land' is a briefer term than 'land held by folk-right.' The same piece of land may be held by book-right and by folk-right; it may be book-land and folk-land too."

FOLD-COURSE. In English Law. Land used as a sheep-walk.

Land to which the sole right of folding the cattle of others is appurtenant: sometimes it means merely such right of folding. The right of folding on another's land, which is called common foldage. Co. Litt. 6 a, note 1; W. Jones 375; Cro. Car. 432; 2 Ventr. 139.

FOLD-SOKE. A feudal service which consisted in the obligation of the tenant not to have a fold of his own but to have his sheep lie in the lord's fold. He was said to be consuetus ad foldam, tied to his lord's fold. The basis of this service is thus expressed by a recent writer: "It is manure that the lord wants; the demand for manure has played a large part in the history of the human race." Maitland, Domesday Book 76. In East Anglia the peasants had sheep enough to make this an important social institution; id. 442.

FOLDAGE. A privilege possessed in some places by the lord of a manor, which consists in the right of having his tenants' sheep to feed on his fields, so as to manure the land. The name of foldage is also given in parts of Norfolk to the customary fee paid to the lord for exemption at certain times from this duty. Elton, Com. 45, 46. See FOLD-SOKE.

FOLGARII. Menial servants; followers. Bract.

FOLGERE. In Old English Law. A freeman who has no house or dwelling of his own, but is the follower or retainer of another (heorthfaest), for whom he performs certain predial services. Anc. Inst. Eng.

FOLGERS. Menial servants or followers. Cowell.

FOLGOTH. Official dignity.

FOLIO. A leaf. The references to the writings of the older law-authors are usually made by citing the folio, as it was the ancient custom to number the folio instead of the page, as is done in modern books.

A certain number of words specified by statute as a folio. Wharton. Originating, undoubtedly, in some estimate of the number of words which a folio ought to contain.

In Michigan it has been held that a legal folio is one hundred words; Thornton v. Village of Sturgis, 38 Mich. 639; and that number is generally made a folio by statute; U. S. R. S. § 828.

FOLK-LAND. See FOLC-LAND.

FOLK-MOOT. See FOLC-GEMOTE; WITENA-GEMOTE.

FOLLOWING BASIS. An agreement that an adjustment in general average shall be made on the "following basis," followed by a statement of the amount to be contributed for the valuation of the ship after collision, and the valuation of the freight and the cargo, does not mean that the freight shall be assessed on its gross valuation, but merely that the valuation shall be taken as the foundation upon which the adjustment shall be made according to law; and if the law applicable prescribes that the freight shall be assessed at one half its gross value, as in California, this will prevail. Minor v. Assur. Co., 58 Fed. 801.

FONDS PERDUS. In French Law. Capital is said to be invested à fonds perdus when it is stipulated that in consideration of the payment of an amount as interest, higher than the normal rate, the lender shall be repaid his capital in this manner. The borrower, after having paid the interest during the period determined, is free as regards the capital itself. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law 560.

FOOD AND DRUG ACTS. It is an indictable offence at common law to expose for sale unwholesome provisions; State v. Snyder, 44 Mo. App. 429; and also for a baker to furnish bread in which alum is known by him to have been mixed; Rex v. Dixon, 3 M. & S. 11. Pure food acts, in the interest of public health, are a valid exercise of the police power and are not obnoxious to the XIVth Amendment; Powell v. Com., 114 Pa. 265, 7 Atl. 913, 60 Am. Rep. 350, affirmed id., 127 U. S. 678, 8 Sup. Ct. 992, 1257, 32 L. Ed. 253; North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, 211 U. S. 206, 29 Sup. Ct. 101, 53 L. Ed. 195, 15 Ann. Cas. 276; so of acts regulating the sale of drugs and provisions; Bertram v. Com., 108 Va. 902, 62 S. E. 969; Saddler v. People, 188 Ill. 243, 58 N. E. 906. Statutes regulating the sale of food for domestic animals are within the scope of the state police power; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 32 Sup. Ct. 715, 56 L. Ed. 1182; and a requirement that the manufacturer disclose ingredients and the minimum percentage of fat and proteins is valid; id. Statutes prohibiting the manufacture and sale of milk and of butter or substances imitative of articles of food are within the police power; State v. Snow, 81 Ia. 642, 47 N. W. 777, 11 L. R. A. 355; Pierce v. State, 63 Md. 592; Com. v. Evans, 132 Mass. 11; even though the right to manufacture and sell such articles is a natural right guaranteed by the constitution; State v. Dairy Co., 62 Ohio St. 350, 57 N. E. 62, 57 L. R. A. 181; or, in the case of the sale of milk, is a lawful business; City of St. Louis v. Dairy Co., 190 Mo. 492, 89 S. W. 617, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 936; so of the manufacture of any article of food to which is added a substance injurious or poisonous; Com. v. Kervin, 202 Pa. 23, 51 Atl. 594, 90 Am. St. Rep. 613.

An act prohibiting the sale of alum baking powders is within the police power, the articles not being considered to be so wholesome and innocuous that judicial notice may be taken thereof; State v. Layton, 160 Mo. 474, 61 S. W. 171, 62 L. R. A. 163, 83 Am. St. Rep. 487. An ordinance forbidding the sale of milk and cream containing a preservative not injurious to health is valid; City of St. Louis v. Schuler, 190 Mo. 524, 89 S. W. 621, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 928; but in People v. Biesecker, 169 N. Y. 53, 61 N. E. 990, 57 L. R. A. 178, 88 Am. St. Rep. 534, it was held that the use of a harmless preservative cannot be forbidden, and that an act prohibiting the sale of butter containing a preservative, except in certain cases, cannot be sustained as a health regulation, since it does not purport to be such, but is apparently directed against fraudulent practices. The regulation of this subject is generally within the legislative control; Powell v. Com., supra; but it is held that an act forbidding the sale of a harmless article (oleomargarine) is invalid; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 386, 2 N. E. 29, 52 Am. Rep. 34; and that if the prohibited article is universally conceded to be so wholesome and innocuous that the courts may take judicial notice of the fact, its sale cannot be prohibited, but if that fact is in dispute, the legislature can regulate or prohibit its sale; City of St. Louis v. Liessing, 190 Mo. 464, 89 S. W. 611, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 918, 109 Am. St. Rep. 774, 4 Ann. Cas. 112. An ordinance is valid prohibiting the sale of cream containing less than twenty per cent. of butter fat; State v. Crescent Creamery Co., 83 Minn. 284, 86 N. W. 107, 54 L. R. A. 466, 85 Am. St. Rep. 464; so of cream containing less than twelve per cent of butter fat; City of St. Louis v. Reuter, 190 Mo. 514, 89 S. W. 628; and an ordinance prohibiting the sale of milk unless it contains not less than three per cent. of butter fat; City of St. Louis v. Dairy Co., 190 Mo. 507, 89 S. W. 627, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 926; and an act prohibiting the sale of an article made in imitation of milk or butter and not made of milk; State v. Rogers, 95 Me. 94, 49 Atl. 564, 85 Am. St. Rep. 395; a city may prohibit the sale of skimmed milk; City of Kansas v. Cook, 38 Mo. App. 660; and pass an ordinance prohibiting the sale of milk containing coloring matter; St. Louis v. Polinsky, 190 Mo. 516, 89 S. W. 625; a statute is valid prohibiting removal of any part of the cream from milk sold as natural milk to a factory in which milk is used as a material; Mantel v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 456, 117 S. W. 855, 131 Am. St. Rep. 818.

Acts intended to prevent fraud in the sale of impure milk, so far as they prevent the sale of milk offered as pure which does not conform to the prescribed standards, are constitutional; People v. Bowen, 182 N. Y. 1, 74 N. E. 489. An act requiring a milkman to subject his cows to the tuberculin test before receiving a license to sell milk is valid; State v. Nelson, 66 Minn. 166, 68 N. W. 1066, 34 L. R. A. 318, 61 Am. St. Rep. 399; so is an ordinance requiring an inspection of milk, cows and stables; Walton v. Toledo, 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 547.

The fact that the legitimate as well as the illegitimate article is required to be tagged does not affect the reasonableness of the provision; People v. Bishopp, 106 App. Div. 266, 94 N. Y. Supp. 773. An act requiring renovated butter to be labeled, so as to distinguish it, is valid; Com. v. Seiler, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 260.

Statutes requiring articles of food to bear a label stating ingredients are valid; Savage v. Scovell, 171 Fed. 566; Steiner v. Ray, 84 Ala. 93, 4 South. 172, 5 Am. St. Rep. 332; or stating the name and residence of the manufacturer; State v. Sherod, 80 Minn. 446, 83 N. W. 417, 50 L. R. A. 660, 81 Am. St. Rep. 268; People v. Windholz, 92 App. Div. 569, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1015; or stating that the product is an imitation; Woolner & Co. v. Rennick, 170 Fed. 662 (whiskey); Palmer v. State, 39 Ohio St. 236, 48 Am. Rep. 429 (butter and cheese); or that renovated butter is not creamery butter; Com. v. Seiler, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 260; Hathaway v. McDonald, 27 Wash. 659, 68 Pac. 376, 91 Am. St. Rep. 889 (renovated butter); People v. Abrahamson, 137 App. Div. 549, 122 N. Y. Supp. 115; or stating the age of a calf when slaughtered; People v. Bishopp, 106 App. Div. 266, 94 N. Y. Supp. 773.

In an act referring to cider vinegar, "pure" means "free from mixture or contact with that which is deleterious, impairs, vitiates or pollutes; People v. Heinz Co., 90 App. Div. 408, 86 N. Y. An act may create a crime of selling adulterated food or drink independent of the seller's knowledge; People v. Snowberger, 113 Mich. 86, 71 N. W. 497, 67 Am. St. Rep. 449.

An ordinance making it unlawful to cover with a colored netting, etc., any package of fruit exposed for sale is unreasonable and void; Frost v. Chicago, 178 Ill. 250, 52 N. E. 869, 49 L. R. A. 657, 69 Am. St. Rep. 301.

The fact that the article is manufactured under United States letters patent does not prevent it from coming under the exercise of the police power; Arbuckle v. Blackburn, 113 Fed. 616, 51 C. C. A. 122, 65 L. R. A. 864.

The legislature may delegate to boards of health the duty of making rules and prescribing tests in the execution of pure food laws; Isenhour v. State, 157 Ind. 517, 62 N. E. 40, 87 Am. St. Rep. 228; People v. Van De Carr, 199 U. S. 552, 26 Sup. Ct. 144, 50 L. Ed. 305.

The state has a right to seize and destroy food which is unfit to use, and is not required to give previous notice and an opportunity to be heard; but the owner has a right of action after the destruction if the state has acted improperly; North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, 211 U. S. 306, 29 Sup. Ct. 101, 53 L. Ed. 195, 15 Ann. Cas. 276.

It is immaterial that some value may remain in the food for other purposes if kept to be sold at some time as food; id.

No state statute which even affects incidentally interstate commerce is valid if it is repugnant to the federal Food and Drugs Act; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 32 Sup. Ct. 715, 56 L. Ed. 1182.

The principal purpose of the United States Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, is to prohibit adulteration and misbranding. It applies to the introduction into any state or territory or the District of Columbia from any other state or territory or the District of Columbia, or from any foreign country, or shipment to any foreign country, of adulterated or misbranded drugs. It makes the act an offence. No article is included when packed for export to any foreign country according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser, when no substance is used in the preparation or packing thereof in conflict with the laws of the foreign country. Specimens are examined in the bureau of chemistry of the department of agriculture; if found obnoxious to the act, notice is given to the party from whom the sample was obtained, who is given an opportunity to be heard; if it appears that the act has been violated, the secretary of agriculture certifies the fact to the proper United States district attorney, who shall proceed in the federal court to enforce the penalties.

The term "drug," as used in the act, includes "all medicines and preparations recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia or National Formulary for internal or external use, and any substance or mixture of substances intended to be used for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease of either man or other animals." The term "food" means "all articles used for food, drink, confectionery, or condiment by man or other animals, whether simple, mixed or compound."

What is adulteration is specified at great length in the act. No dealer shall be prosecuted when he can establish a guarantee signed by the wholesaler, jobber or manufacturer or other party residing in the United States, from whom he purchased the articles, to the effect that the article is not adulterated or misbranded. Obnoxious articles, when transported or in unbroken packages, are liable to proceedings and confiscation in the court of the district where found. The articles may be destroyed or may be sold and the proceeds, less costs, paid into the treasury of the United States. The proceedings are by libel conformably as near as may be to those in admiralty, but either party may demand a jury trial.

The act went into effect January 1, 1907. It extends to food for man and all other animals; U. S. v. One Car Load, etc., 188 Fed. 453.

This act is not an exercise of the police power, but is a proper regulation of interstate commerce; Shawnee Milling Co. v. Temple, 179 Fed. 517; U. S. v. 420 Sacks of Flour, 180 Fed. 518. That is the only ground of federal control; U. S. v. J. L. Hopkins & Co., 199 Fed. 649.

This statute, making it a criminal offence to sell articles so misbranded, was held valid as to one who sold and delivered such goods within the state, since it enabled an innocent purchaser, relying on the false certificate, to sell the same in interstate commerce; U. S. v. Specialty Co., 175 Fed. 299.

The act is not void for uncertainty because no standard of quality is prescribed, but the determination of the standard is left to the courts; U. S. v. 420 Sacks of Flour, 180 Fed. 518.

There can be no seizure by a private person and no seizure prior to the institution of proceedings; U. S. v. Two Barrels of Desiccated Eggs, 185 Fed. 302.

Such misbranded goods may be confiscated after they have reached their destination, while they are in the original unbroken packages; Hipolite Egg Co. v. U. S., 220 U. S. 45, 31 Sup. Ct. 364, 55 L. Ed. 364.

The preliminary examination by the department of agriculture of a food or drug product is not a necessary condition precedent for the filing of a libel for the condemnation thereof; U. S. v. 50 Barrels of Whisky, 165 Fed. 966; U. S. v. Morgan, 222 U. S. 274, 32 Sup. Ct. 81, 56 L. Ed. 198.

Proceedings are by libel in the district court, the practice conforming as nearly as may be to admiralty practice; the review is by writ of error; Four Hundred and Forty-Three Cans of Frozen Egg Product v. U. S., 226 U. S. 172, 33 Sup. Ct. 50, 57 L. Ed. 174.

As to the definition of original packages, the following have been held to be such under other acts: Single bottles of beer and whiskey sealed in pasteboard or wooden boxes; In re Beine, 42 Fed. 546; Guckenheimer v. Sellers, 81 Fed. 997. These instances are given as perhaps the minimum; more elaborate packages might therefore be held within the definition. See ORIGINAL PACKAGE.

In U. S. v. Johnson, 221 U. S. 488, 31 Sup. Ct. 627, 55 L. Ed. 823, it was held under the act of 1906 that the act was aimed at false statements as to identity, possibly including strength, quality and purity, and not at statements as to curative effect (cancer), even if misleading. Upon the decision in this case the act of August 23, 1912, was passed to cover statements as to curative effects.

The act of March 3, 1913, provided that, if goods be in package form, the contents must be "plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package in terms of weight, measure, or numerical count," but that reasonable variations be permitted, etc. In Lexington Mill & Elevator Co. v. U. S., 202 Fed. 615, 121 C. C. A. 23, it was held that the addition to an article of food of an ingredient which, in sufficient quantity, is poisonous, is not an adulteration unless the quantity used is sufficient to render the article "injurious to health"; this judgment was affirmed in the supreme court on Feb. 24, 1914, 34 Sup. Ct. 337, 232 U. S. 383, 58 L. Ed. —.

See Thornton, Pure Food and Drugs (1912), containing the regulations and rulings of the department of agriculture, and the opinion of President Taft on blended whisky.

FOOT. A measure of length, containing one-third of a yard, or twelve inches. See ELL. Figuratively it signifies the conclusion, the end; as, the foot of the fine, the foot of the account. See Williston v. Morse, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 26; Charge to Grand Jury, 5 McLean, 306, Fed. Cas. No. 18,267.

FOOT OF THE FINE. The fifth part or the conclusion of a fine. It includes the whole matter, reciting the names of the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. 2 Bla. Com. 351.

FOOTGELD. An amercement for not cutting out the ball or cutting off the claws of a dog's feet (expeditating him). To be quit of footgeld is to have the privilege of keeping dogs in the forest unlawed without punishment or control. Manw. For. Laws, pt. 1, p. 86; Crompton, Jur. 197; Termes de la Ley; Cunningham, Law Dict.; EXPEDITATION.

FOOTPRINTS. Impressions made by the feet of persons, or their shoes, boots, or other covering for the feet, on the ground, snow, or other surface. In the same category are also impressions of shoenails, patches, abrasions, or other peculiarities therein. When found at or near the scene of a crime they often lead to the identification of guilty parties.

"The presumption founded on these circumstances has been appealed to by mankind in all ages, and in inquiries of every kind, and it is so obviously the dictate of reason, if not of instinct, that it would be superfluous to dwell upon its importance." Wills, Circ. Ev. 194. It is said that evidence of footprints and their correspondence with defendant's feet may be proved even when his agency is disputed, not as alone convincing, or indeed, available, but as tending to establish a case; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 795; even where the defendant's proof tended to establish an alibi; Williams v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 128, 25 S. W. 629, 28 S. W. 958, 47 Am. St. Rep. 21. Evidence of footprints alone has been held insufficient to convict; 1 F. & F. 354; State v. Johnson, 19 Ia. 230; Green v. State, 17 Fla. 669; and unless the measurement is careful and accurate, or there is some peculiarity shown, the probative force is slight; Whetston v. State, 31 Fla. 240, 12 South. 661; People v. Newton, 3 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 406; Shannon v. State, 57 Ga. 482; State v. Reed, 89 Mo. 168, 1 S. W. 225; but in many cases such peculiarities have been shown and evidence of the footprints admitted; Preston v. State, 8 Tex. App. 30; Schoolcraft v. People, 117 Ill. 271, 7 N. E. 649; Griggs v. State, 59 Ga. 738; State v. Grebe, 17 Kan. 458; 10 Crim. L. Mag. 890; but a conviction on such evidence will be reversed for refusal to admit proof for the defendant that he has never worn a shoe which would make such a print; Stone v. State, 12 Tex. App. 219; the discovery and comparison should be prompt with relation to the crime; McDaniel v. State, 53 Ga. 253; and the measurement should be accurate; Stone v. State, 12 Tex. App. 219; Bouldin v. State, 8 Tex. App. 332; though it need not be immediate, the question of time going to the weight of the evidence, not to its competency; People v. McCurdy, 68 Cal. 576, 10 Pac. 207.

The identification of such tracks is a matter of common observation, which does not require expert testimony; Murphy v. People, 63 N. Y. 590; Young v. State, 68 Ala. 569; State v. Morris, 84 N. C. 756; and only the peculiarity of the tracks and the facts of identification may be proved, but not the opinion of the witness whether they were made by the defendant; Clough v. State, 7 Neb. 320; Hodge v. State, 98 Ala. 10, 13 South. 385, 39 Am. St. Rep. 17; but a witness has been permitted to prove the measurement of the tracks and their exact correspondence with the shoe of the defendant; McLain v. State, 30 Tex. App. 482, 17 S. W. 1092, 28 Am. St. Rep. 934; the examination and the comparison need not be made in the presence of the defendant; State v. Morris, 84 N. C. 756; nor can he be compelled to put his foot in the track to make evidence against himself; Day v. State, 63 Ga. 667; but where he was compelled to do so the evidence was admitted; State v. Graham, 74 N. C. 646, 21 Am. Rep. 493; and tracks have been voluntarily made by the accused before the jury for comparison with those proved; Gregory v. State, 80 Ga. 269, 7 S. E. 222. Comparison of the shoes with the footmarks should be made before the former are put in the marks; 1 Lew. C. C. 116; and where this was not done the evidence on the subject was rejected; id.

Such evidence, even if established beyond doubt, is liable, as in all cases of circumstantial evidence, to be the subject of fabrication, or erroneous inference; see the case of Mayenc, Gabriel 403, where the shoes of another person were put on by one committing a crime; and the celebrated case of Thornton, fully reported in Wills, Circ. Ev. 286, where an alibi was successfully proved after apparently conclusive circumstantial evidence, including footprints.

Proof may be made by horse-tracks corresponding with those made by a horse of defendant; Goldsmith v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 112, 22 S. W. 405; or that shoes taken from such horse fitted the tracks; Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44; and when the prisoner had reversed the shoes of his horse after reaching the house, to give the impression that two persons had been there, the artifice led to his detection by the discovery of recent nail-marks in the horse's hoof; Spooner's Case, 2 Chand. Am. Cr. Tr.; but horse-tracks alone are not sufficient to convict; State v. Melick, 65 Ia. 614, 22 N. W. 895; and see Bouldin v. State, 8 Tex. App. 332.

For a full discussion of the subject, see Wills, Circ. Ev. 194. See EVIDENCE; INCRIMINATION.

FOR. In place of or in front of. Ready v. Sommer, 37 Wis. 265. Because or on account of; by reason of; as agent for; in behalf of. Strong v. Ins. Co., 31 N. Y. 103, 88 Am. Dec. 242; see AGENT. Used in connection with a period it means "during," where publication is required for at least thirty days, one publication thirty days before the sale would not be a compliance. Lawson v. Gibson, 18 Neb. 139. And see Craig's Adm'x v. Fox, 16 Ohio 563; Whitaker v. Beach, 12 Kan. 493. It may, if necessary, be inserted in a statute by judicial construction; King v. Kelly, 25 Minn. 522.

In a contract it implies a condition precedent; Hob. 41; 5 M. & S. 187. See also 12 Mod. 455.

In French Law. A tribunal. Le for intérieur, the interior forum; the tribunal of conscience. Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 11, art. 3.

FOR ACCOUNT OF. A phrase used in an order, draft, or memorandum to designate the person against whom, or account against which, the thing or sum is to be charged.

FOR AT LEAST. As applied to a number of days required for notice this phrase includes either the first or last day, but not both. Stroud v. Water Co., 56 N. J. L. 422, 28 Atl. 578. See TIME.

FOR COLLECTION. See INDORSEMENT.

FOR DEPOSIT TO THE CREDIT OF. See INDORSEMENT.

FOR GOOD CAUSE. A statute authorizing a continuance "for good cause" in the absence of a party is satisfied by proof of the illness of plaintiff in another state, and the ignorance of his attorney of the names of the witnesses and the details of the case. Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 636, 95 Am. Dec. 152.

FOR THAT. In Pleading. Words used to introduce the allegations of a declaration. "For that" is a positive allegation; "For that whereas" is a recital. Hamm. N. P. 9.

FOR THAT WHEREAS. Introductory words in pleading. See Hamm. N. P. 9. These words are used in the introduction of the statement of the plaintiff's case as a recital in the declaration in all actions except trespass, in which there being no recital the expression was "For that." 1 Burr. Inst. Cler. 170.

FOR THE ACCOUNT. A stock exchange term. A broker having an order to buy or sell may contract for the specific amount of stock ordered to be bought or sold, or may include such order with other orders, or in quantities to suit his convenience. Clews v. Jamieson, 182 U. S. 487, 21 Sup. Ct. 845, 45 L. Ed. 1183, citing Dos Passos, St. Bro. 276.

FOR USE. Words used to describe a suit, judgment, or decree in which the nominal plaintiff sues for the benefit or advantage of another. This is necessary in some cases where an assignee is obliged to sue in the name of the assignor. The style of the suit is "for (or to the) use of A. v. B."

Loans for use are distinguished from loans for consumption; the former being those in which the article bailed is to be used and returned and the latter those in which it may be consumed and returned in kind.

FOR WHOM IT MAY CONCERN. A general clause in a policy of insurance, intended to apply to all persons who have any insurable interest. 1 Phill. Ins. 152. This phrase, or some similar one, must be inserted, to give any one but the party named as the insured rights under the policy. See 1 B. & P. 316, 345; 2 Maule & S. 485; Davis v. Boardman, 12 Mass. 80.

FORAGE. Hay and straw for horses, particularly in the army. Jac.

FORAGIUM. Straw when the corn is threshed out. Cowell.

FORAKER ACT. A name usually given to the act of congress of April 12, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 77, c. 191, which provided civil government for Porto Rico. See a synopsis of it by Harlan, J., in Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 390, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 45 L. Ed. 1088. See PORTO RICO.

FORANEUS. One from without; a foreigner; a stranger. Calv. Lex.

FORATHE. One who can take oath for another who is accused of one of the lesser crimes. Manw. For. Laws 3; Cowell.

FORBALCA. In Old Records. A forebalk; a balk (that is, an unplowed piece of ground) lying forward or next the highway. Cowell.

FORBARRE. To deprive one of a thing forever. Cowell.

FORBATUDUS. The aggressor slain in combat. Jac.

FORBEARANCE. A delay in enforcing rights. The act by which a creditor waits for the payment of a debt due him by the debtor after it has become due. It is sufficient consideration to support assumpsit.

An agreement to forbear bringing a suit for a debt due, although for an indefinite time, and even although it cannot be construed to be an agreement for a perpetual forbearance, if followed by actual forbearance for a reasonable time, is a good consideration for a promise; Howe v. Taggart, 133 Mass. 287.

See ASSUMPSIT; CONSIDERATION.

FORCE. Restraining power; validity; binding effect.

A law may be said to be in force when it is not repealed, or, more loosely, when it can be carried into practical effect. An agreement is in force when the parties to it may be compelled to act, or are acting, under its terms and stipulations.

Strength applied. Active power. Power put in motion.

Actual force is where strength is actually applied or the means of applying it are at hand. Thus, if one break open a gate by violence, it is lawful to oppose force to force.

See 2 Salk. 641; 8 Term 78, 357. See BATTERY.

Implied force is that which is implied by law from the commission of an unlawful act. Every trespass quare clausum fregit is committed with implied force. Co. Litt. 57 b, 161 b, 162 a; 1 Saund. 81, 140, n. 4; 5 Term 361; Bac. Abr. Trespass; 3 Wils. 18; Fitzh. N. B. 890; 5 B. & P. 365, 454.

Mere nonfeasance cannot be considered as force, generally; 2 Saund. 47; Co. Litt. 161.

If a person with force break a door or gate for an illegal purpose, it is lawful to oppose force to force; and if one enter the close of another vi et armis, he may be expelled immediately, without a previous request; for there is no time to make a request; 2 Salk. 641; 8 Term 78, 357. When it is necessary to rely upon actual force in pleading, as in the case of a forcible entry, the words "manu forti," or "with a strong hand," should be adopted; 8 Term 357; Com. v. Shattuck, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 141. But in other cases the words "vi et armis," or "with force and arms," are sufficient. See those titles.

Municipal officers seizing private property under an order condemning it for a street, are not guilty of forcible trespass if they use no more force than necessary, even though the owner be present forbidding them; State v. Lyle, 100 N. C. 497, 6 S. E. 379.

FORCE AND ARMS. A phrase used in declarations of trespass and in indictments, but now unnecessary in declarations, to denote that the act complained of was done with violence. 2 Chitty, Pl. 846, 850; 2 Steph. Com. 364. See FORCE; VI ET ARMIS; TRESPASS.

FORCE AND FEAR, called also "vi metuque," means that any contract or act extorted under the pressure of force (vis) or under the influence of fear (metus) is voidable on that ground, provided, of course, that the force or the fear was such as influenced the party. Brown.

FORCE MAJEURE (Fr.). Superior or irresistible force. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. c. 12. See VIS MAJOR.

FORCED HEIRS. In Louisiana. Those persons whom the testator or donor cannot deprive of the portion of his estate reserved for them by law, except in cases where he has a just cause to disinherit them. La. Civ. Code. As to the portion of the estate they are entitled to, see LEGITIME. The causes for which forced heirs may be deprived of this right must be stated in the testament and also established by proof by the other heirs; id.

FORCED OUT. Where a license to a corporation was to cease if the licensor was "forced out of the company," and one who had acquired all the stock, except that held by the licensor, procured from the company an assignment of all its property, and induced it to cease doing business, it was held that the licensor was "forced out of the company." Havana Press Drill Co. v. Ashurst, 148 Ill. 115, 35 N. E. 873.

FORCED SALE. A sale made at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, in virtue of execution issued on a judgment already rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction; a sale made under the process of the court, and in the mode prescribed by law. Sampson v. Williamson, 6 Tex. 110, 55 Am. Dec. 762.

A forced sale is a sale against the consent of the owner. The term should not be deemed to embrace a sale under power in a mortgage. Patterson v. Taylor, 15 Fla. 336.

FORCES. The military and naval resources of a country.

FORCHEAPUM. Pre-emption. Blount.

FORCIBLE ENTRY OR DETAINER. A forcible entry or detainer consists in violently taking or keeping possession of lands or tenements, by means of threats, force, or arms, and without authority of law. Comyns, Dig.; Woodf. Landl. & Ten. 973; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 489.

Such an entry as is made with strong hand, with unusual weapons, and unusual number of servants or attendants, or with menace of life or limb; an entry which only amounts in law to a trespass is not within statutes relating thereto. Smith v. Reeder, 21 Or. 541, 28 Pac. 890, 15 L. R. A. 172.

To make an entry forcible, there must be such acts of violence, or such threats, menaces, or gestures, as may give reason to apprehend personal injury or danger in standing in defence of the possession. But the force made use of must be more than is implied in any mere trespass; 8 Term 357; Com. v. Dudley, 10 Mass. 409; Pennsylvania v. Robison, 1 Add. (Pa.) 14; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 786.

Driving the tenant from the premises by deadly weapons and an array of numbers is a forcible entry; State v. Smith, 100 N. C. 466, 6 S. E. 84. But it is sufficient that it was made against the will of the individual when in peaceable possession, without actual force; Oakes v. Aldridge, 46 Mo. App. 11; Meriwether v. Howe, 48 Mo. App. 148; Wylie v. Waddell, 52 Mo. App. 226.

Proceedings in case of a forcible entry or detainer are regulated by the statutes of the several states, and relate to a restitution of the property, if the individual who complains has been dispossessed, as well as to the punishment of the offender for a breach of the public peace. And the plea of ownership is no justification for the party complained of; for no man may enter even upon his own lands in any other than a peaceable manner. Nor will he be excused if he entered to make a distress or to enforce a lawful claim, nor if possession was ultimately obtained by entreaty; Woodf. L. & T. 741, n.; Langdon v. Potter, 3 Mass. 215; State v. Johnson, 18 N.

C. 324; 8 Term 361; but, contra, it has been held, that an intruder in quiet possession of land may be forcibly expelled by the owner; Smith v. Reeder, 21 Or. 541, 28 Pac. 890, 15 L. R. A. 172; Canavan v. Gray, 64 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 788. If the owner is guilty of a breach and trespass on the person of the intruder in taking possession of his land, he is liable for that, but his possession is lawful, and an action of trespass quare clausum is not maintainable against him; Overdeer v. Lewis, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 90, 37 Am. Dec. 440; Rich v. Keyser, 54 Pa. 86. This follows the English doctrine as expressed by Parke, B., that, where a breach of the peace has been committed by a freeholder who, in order to get possession of his land, assaults a person wrongfully holding possession of it, although the freeholder may be responsible to the public for a forcible entry, he is not liable to the other party; and in an action brought against him, it is a sufficient justification that the tenant was in possession against the will of the owner; 14 M. & W. 437. See 4 Am. Law Rev. 429. A lessee never in possession cannot maintain unlawful detainer against the lessor, either at common law or statute; Long v. Noe, 49 Mo. App. 19. A change of possession pending a suit for forcible entry and detainer does not affect the right of recovery; Daggitt v. Mensch, 141 Ill. 395, 31 N. E. 153.

Upon an indictment for this offence at common law, the entry must appear to have been accompanied by a public breach of the peace; and, upon a conviction for either a forcible entry or detainer, the court will award restitution of the premises in the same manner as a judge in a civil court, under a statutory proceeding, is authorized to do upon a verdict rendered before him; 1 Ld. Raym. 512; 8 Term 360; Cro. Jac. 151; Al. 50.

Neither title nor right of possession is at issue, or can be made an issue, in an action of forcible entry and detainer; Sheehy v. Flaherty, 8 Mont. 365, 20 Pac. 687.

FORDA. In Old Records. A ford or shallow, made by damming or penning up the water. Cowell.

FORDAL (Sax.). A butt or headband. A piece.

FORDANNO. A first assailant. Spel. Gloss.

FORDIKA. In Old Records. Grass or herbage growing on the edge or bank of dykes or ditches. Cowell.

FORE (Sax.). Before. (Fr.) Out. Kelham.

FORE-MATRON. In a jury of women this word corresponds to the foreman of a jury. She was sworn in separately; 8 Carr. & P. 264.

FORE-OATH. Before the Norman Conquest, an oath required of the complainant in the first instance (in the absence of manifest facts) as a security against frivolous suits. Pollock, 1 Sel. Essays Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 93.

FORECLOSE. To shut out; to bar. Used of the process of destroying an equity of redemption. 1 Washb. R. P. 589; Dan. Ch. Pr. 1204; Coote, Mortg. 511; Lansing v. Goelet, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 382.

FORECLOSURE. A proceeding in chancery by which the mortgagor's right of redemption of the mortgaged premises is barred or closed forever.

The modern significance of the term, as applied to mortgages, is that of a sale under a judgment of foreclosure, and not the judgment itself; Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 600, 29 Pac. 220.

This takes place when the mortgagor has forfeited his estate by non-payment of the money due on the mortgage at the time appointed, but still retains the equity of redemption; in such case, the mortgagee may file a bill calling on the mortgagor, in a court of equity, to redeem his estate presently, or, in default thereof, to be forever closed or barred from any right of redemption.

In some cases, however, the mortgagee obtains a decree for a sale of the land under the direction of an officer of the court, in which case the proceeds are applied to the discharge of incumbrances, according to their priority. See Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 100; Palmer's Adm'rs v. Mead, 7 Conn. 152; Gilman v. Hidden, 5 N. H. 30; Anonymous, 2 N. C. 482; Higgins v. West, 5 Ohio 554; Quint v. Little, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 495; 1 Washb. R. P. 589; Dan. Ch. Pr. 1204.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage, there is no occasion for an entry for breach of condition; Cook v. Bartholomew; 60 Conn. 24, 22 Atl. 444, 13 L. R. A. 452. Where, before beginning suit to foreclose for default in paying interest, the defaulted interest was paid and accepted, such acceptance is a waiver of any claim of forfeiture on account of the default; Smalley v. Ranken, 85 Ia. 612, 52 N. W. 507.

Strict Foreclosure. When the property is of less value than the mortgage debt and the mortgagee is willing to take it for his debt, the court may decree a strict foreclosure, unless there are other encumbrancers, purchasers of the equity of redemption or creditors to object; Farrell v. Parlier, 50 Ill. 274; Flagg v. Walker, 113 U. S. 659, 5 Sup. Ct. 697, 28 L. Ed. 1072; if the mortgagor is insolvent and there are no other encumbrancers; Hollis v. Smith, 9 Ill. App. 109. See note in 19 L. Ed. 354; 20 L. R. A. 370. Such a decree must find the amount due and allow time for payment and redemption; it cannot be final in the first instance; Clark v. Reyburn, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 318, 19 L. Ed. 354.

Strict foreclosure is usually by a bill in equity praying the foreclosure, by which the court, through a master, ascertains the amount due upon the mortgage and then decrees that unless the owner of the equity of redemption shall within a prescribed time pay that sum and redeem the property, he shall be forever barred; 4 Kent 180; 2 Washb. R. P. 248. It has been spoken of as a harsh remedy; Bolles v. Duff, 43 N. Y. 469.

It can only be resorted to under peculiar circumstances; Jefferson v. Coleman, 110 Ind. 515, 11 N. E. 465. It would not generally be allowed without the mortgagor's consent; Caufman v. Sayre, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 202. It exists in Maryland; Dorsey v. Dorsey, 30 Md. 522, 96 Am. Dec. 617; Wisconsin; Kimball v. Darling, 32 Wis. 675; and New Jersey; Parker v. Child, 25 N. J. Eq. 41; it is said to be unusual in North Carolina; Green v. Crockett, 22 N. C. 390. It is held that the mortgagor's equity of redemption can only be barred by his own agreement, by estoppel, or by judicial sale; Appeal of Winton, 87 Pa. 77. That it is not recognized as a practice, see Browne v. Browne, 17 Fla. 607, 35 Am. Rep. 96; Gamut v. Gregg, 37 Ia. 573; Davis v. Holmes, 55 Mo. 349; First Nat. Bank v. Min. Co., 8 Mont. 32, 19 Pac. 403; Kyger v. Ryley, 2 Neb. 20; in some of these states the subject is regulated by code. In Massachusetts the practice is usually by way of entry in possession, or by writ of entry, or under the powers contained in the mortgage. Usually a considerable period is allowed for redemption. In Maine there is proceeding by writ of entry and the mortgagor has three years for redemption.

A strict foreclosure will not be granted to cut off the right of a second mortgagee where he was not a party; Moulton v. Cornish, 138 N. Y. 133, 33 N. E. 842, 20 L. R. A. 370; but the decree may direct that, unless within a prescribed time he shall notify the purchaser of his intention to redeem, he shall be barred; Moulton v. Cornish, 138 N. Y. 133, 33 N. E. 842, 20 L. R. A. 370.

See Horr v. Herrington, 22 Okl. 590, 98 Pac. 443, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 47 and note, 132 Am. St. Rep. 648.

As to the subject generally, and also as to Railway Foreclosure, see MORTGAGE.

FOREGIFT. A premium paid by a lessee for his lease, separate and distinguished from the rent. A payment in advance.

FOREGOERS. Royal purveyors. 26 Edw. III. c. 5.

FOREHAND RENT. In English Law. A species of rent which is a premium given by the tenant at the time of taking the lease, as on the renewal of leases by ecclesiastical corporations, which is considered in the nature of an improved rent. 3 Atk. Ch. 473; Crabb, R. P. § 155.

FOREIGN. That which belongs to another country; that which is strange. Spratt v. Spratt, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 343, 7 L. Ed. 171.

Every nation is foreign to all the rest; and the several states of the American Union are foreign to each other with respect to their municipal laws; Byrne v. Holt, 2 Wash. C. C. 282, Fed. Cas. No. 2,272; Brackett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 517, 10 Am. Dec. 179; Packard v. Hill, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 411; Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 203; Taylor v. Bank, 7 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 585; Taylor's Adm'r v. Bank, 5 Leigh (Va.) 471; Inhabitants of Kaynham v. Inhabitants of Canton, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 293; The Lulu, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 192, 19 L. Ed. 906; Negus v. Simpson, 99 Mass. 388.

But the reciprocal relations between the national government and the several states are not considered as foreign, but domestic; Hinde v. Vattier, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 398, 8 L. Ed. 168; Leland v. Wilkinson, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 317, 8 L. Ed. 412; Owings v. Hull, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 607, 9 L. Ed. 246; Young v. Bank, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 384, 2 L. Ed. 655; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. R. Co., 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 1, 63.

FOREIGN ANSWER. An answer not triable in the county where it is made. Stat. 15 Hen. VI. c. 5; Blount.

FOREIGN APPOSER. An officer in the exchequer who examines the sheriff's estreats, comparing them with the records, and apposeth (interrogates) the sheriff what he says to each particular sum therein. Coke, 4th Inst. 107; Blount; Cowell, Foreigne. The word is written opposer, opposeth, by Lord Coke; and this signification corresponds very well to the meaning given by Blount, of examiner (interrogator) of the sheriff's accounts.

FOREIGN ASSIGNMENT. An assignment made in a foreign country or in another state. 2 Kent 405. See ASSIGNMENT.

FOREIGN ATTACHMENT. A process by virtue of which the property of an absent and non-resident debtor is seized for the purpose of compelling an appearance, and, in default of that, to pay the claim of the plaintiff. See ATTACHMENT.

FOREIGN BILL OF EXCHANGE. A bill drawn in one country and made payable in another.

A bill drawn in one state by a resident thereof upon a resident of another state and payable there is a foreign bill; Ocean National Bank v. Williams, 102 Mass. 141; Amsinck v. Rogers, 189 N. Y. 252, 82 N. E. 134, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 875, 121 Am. St. Rep. 858, 12 Ann. Cas. 450; Knickerbocker Life Ins Co. v. Pendleton, 112 U. S. 696, 5 Sup. Ct. 314, 28 L. Ed. 866.

See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

FOREIGN BOUGHT AND SOLD. A custom in London, which, being found prejudicial to sellers of cattle in Smithfield, was abolished. Wharton.

FOREIGN CHARITY. One created or endowed to be administered in a state or country foreign to that of the domicil of the benefactor.

A bequest by a testator in one state establishing a charitable use to be administered by a corporation created in another state, all the trustees (thirteen in number) except two being non-residents of the state of domicil of the testator, is a foreign charity. The court of chancery of New Jersey will not administer such a charity, but when it is valid by the law of both states, and the trustees have the legal capacity to carry out the charity, the court will order its payment to them, leaving it to the courts of the other state to see to its administration; Taylor's Ex'rs v. Trustees of Bryn Mawr College, 34 N. J. Eq. 101. Such is the general rule; Boyle on Char. 134; Perry, Tr. § 741; Tudor, Char. Tr. 259; Hill, Trust. 468; Sto. Eq. Jur. § 1184; 19 Beav. 597. See CHARITABLE USE.

FOREIGN COINS. Coins issued by the authority of a foreign government.

There were formerly several acts of Congress passed which rendered certain foreign gold and silver coins a legal tender in payment of debts upon certain prescribed conditions as to the fineness and weight, but by the act of Feb. 21, 1857, it was provided: That all former acts authorizing the currency of foreign gold or silver coins, and declaring the same a legal tender in payment for debts, are repealed; but it shall be the duty of the director of the mint to cause assays to be made from time to time of such foreign coins as may be known to our commerce, to determine their average weight, fineness, and value, and to embrace in his annual report a statement of the results thereof.

The value of foreign coin as expressed in the money of account of the United States shall be that of the pure metal of such coin of standard value; and the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations of the world shall be estimated annually by the director of the mint, and be proclaimed by the secretary of the treasury; R. S. § 3564; Collector v. Richards, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 246, 23 L. Ed. 95.

The value of foreign coins as ascertained by the estimate of the director of the mint and proclaimed by the secretary of the treasury is conclusive upon custom-house officers and importers; Hadden v. Merritt, 115 U. S. 25, 5 Sup. Ct. 1169, 29 L. Ed. 333.

FOREIGN COMMERCE. "Commerce which in some sense is necessarily connected with these nations, transactions which either immediately or at some stage of their progress must be extra-territorial. The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal." . . . "Nor . . . because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture or manufactures, or in the arts, may ultimately become the subjects of foreign commerce, that the control of the means or the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered and protected is legitimately within the import of the phrase foreign commerce." Veazie v. Moor, 14 How. (U. S.) 568, 573, 14 L. Ed. 545.

FOREIGN CORPORATION. One created by or under the laws of any other state or government.

A corporation is a person in most senses and for most purposes of legal administration, and for the purposes of determining the jurisdiction of the federal courts it is a citizen, but it is not such in the sense that a natural person is one, and hence for most purposes corporations are "foreign" as between the states. As to whether they are citizens or persons, see those titles.

"A corporation can have no legal existence out of the boundaries of the sovereignty by which it is created. It exists only in contemplation of law, and by force of the law, and where that law ceases to operate, and is no longer obligatory, the corporation can have no existence. It must dwell in the place of its creation, and cannot migrate to another sovereignty;" Taney, C. J., in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; Rece v. Newport News Co., 32 W. Va. 164, 9 S. E. 212, 3 L. R. A. 572. It may contract in other states within the scope of its own powers and subject to the laws of the lex loci contractus or the lex loci solutionis, as the case may be, as natural persons may contract where they do not reside. "And what greater objection can there be to the capacity of an artificial person, by its agents, to make a contract within the scope of its limited powers, in a sovereignty in which it does not reside, provided such contracts are permissible by the law of the place?" Bank of Kentucky v. Bank, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 180, 225. See Bard v. Poole, 12 N. Y. 495; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cross, 18 Wis. 109. In the absence of proof, the validity of such contracts is presumed; Boulware v. Davis, 90 Ala. 207, 8 South. 84, 9 L. R. A. 601; Wood Hydraulic Hose Min. Co. v. King, 45 Ga. 34; New York Floating Derrick Co. v. Oil Co., 3 Duer (N. Y.) 648. Unless expressly forbidden to do so a corporation may acquire rights of contract and property in a foreign jurisdiction; Mulford Co. v. Curry, 163 Cal. 276, 125 Pac. 236; private corporations will be permitted to transact in other states the business authorized by the state of their creation; State v. Water Co., 61 Kan. 547, 60 Pac. 337; subject to any limitations imposed by express legislation; Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Bashford, 120 Wis. 281, 97 N. W. 940; American Waterworks Co. v. Trust Co., 73 Fed. 956, 20 C. C. A. 133; or to the laws and policy of the state in which it does business; Hyde v. Scott, 75 Misc. 487, 133 N. Y. Supp. 904.

"Every power, however, which a corporation exercises in another state, depends for its validity upon the laws of the sovereignty in which it is exercised, and a corporation can make no valid contract without their sanction, express or implied;" Taney, C. J., in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 588, 10 L. Ed. 274; any other exercise of power by it rests absolutely upon the doctrine of comity; id.; State v. Packing Co., 110 La. 180, 34 South. 368, 98 Am. St. Rep. 459; State v. Telephone & Telegraph Co., 114 Tenn. 194, 86 S. W. 390; Chapman v. Cash Register Co., 32 Tex. Civ. App. 76, 73 S. W. 969; In re Willmer's Estate, 153 App. Div. 804, 138 N. Y. Supp. 649; Model Heating Co. v. Magarity, 1 Boyce (Del.) 240, 75 Atl. 614; and is subject to the laws and regulations, process and remedial jurisdiction of the state of business or temporary domicil; Clark v. R. Co., 81 Me. 477, 17 Atl. 497; Austin v. R. Co., 25 N. J. L. 381; Riddle v. R. Co., 39 Fed. 290; Attorney General v. Min. Co., 99 Mass. 148, 96 Am. Dec. 717; People v. R. R. of New Jersey, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 478; this comity stops short of permission to exercise any powers in excess either of the powers of domestic corporations of the same class; Demarest v. Flack, 128 N. Y. 205, 28 N. E. 645, 13 L. R. A. 854; Clarke v. Banking Co. of Georgia, 50 Fed. 338, 15 L. R. A. 683; 33 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 15, 16; or of the powers authorized by its own charter; Talmadge v. Transp. Co., 3 Head. (Tenn.) 337; Diamond Match Co. v. Reg. of Deeds, 51 Mich. 145, 16 N. W. 314. Whatever limitations a state statute may impose upon a foreign corporation's liberty of contracting, whatever its discriminations, they become conditions of the permission to do business in the state and such conditions were accepted with the permit; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 20 Sup. Ct. 518, 44 L. Ed. 657; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 20 Sup. Ct. 962, 44 L. Ed. 1116; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 19 Sup. Ct. 281, 43 L. Ed. 552, affirming Morse v. City of Westport, 136 Mo. 282, 37 S. W. 932. So a telegraph company incorporated in Maryland, whose operations were by its charter limited to that state was refused, by the Delaware courts, a mandamus to compel a telephone company to furnish to it a telephone in aid of its business in Delaware; Baltimore & O. Telegraph Co. of Baltimore City v. Telegraph & Telephone Co., 7 Houst. (Del.) 269, 31 Atl. 714.

Foreign corporations are sometimes by the legislation of a state made domestic corporations for certain purposes, as for jurisdiction; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 65, 20 L. Ed. 354; James v. R. Co., 46 Fed. 47; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Alabama, 107 U. S. 581, 2 Sup. Ct. 432, 27 L. Ed. 518; and to determine when this is so is sometimes a matter of great difficulty; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7891; but where, by the concurrent action of two states, a railroad company is chartered or consolidated for police and jurisdictional purposes, it is as a whole treated as a domestic corporation of each state; id.; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black (U. S.) 286, 17 L. Ed. 130; Burger v. R. Co., 22 Fed. 561; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 551; State v. R. Co., 18 Md. 193; Sprague v. R. Co., 5 R. I. 233; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 65, 20 L. Ed. 354; State v. R. Co., 25 Neb. 156, 41 N. W. 125, 2 L. R. A. 564; State v. R. Co., 25 Neb. 164, 41 N. W. 127. A state may impose such terms for the admission of foreign corporations as it may deem best; Cyclone Min. Co. v. Baker L. & P. Co., 165 Fed. 996; or may exclude them, and this power extends to a single one already within its jurisdiction, if the act does not deprive it of property without due process of law, and the mere right to extend its business into a state is not property in this sense; National Council v. State Council, 203 U. S. 151, 27 Sup. Ct. 46, 51 L. Ed. 132. Such statutes do not constitute a contract between the state and such foreign corporation which is impaired by subsequent legislation; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 43 L. Ed. 569. They do not avoid the contracts made in the state by unregistered foreign corporations, but merely suspend civil remedies in that state; suit may be brought in another state; Allen v. Allegheny Co., 196 U. S. 458, 25 Sup. Ct. 311, 49 L. Ed. 551. The right of a state to prevent foreign corporations from continuing to do business within its borders is a correlative of the right to exclude them therefrom, and as this power is plenary, the state, so long as no contract is impaired, may exercise it in consideration of acts done in another jurisdiction; Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 29 Sup. Ct. 370, 53 L. Ed. 530, 15 Ann. Cas. 645; Cable v. U. S. Life Ins. Co., 191 U. S. 288, 24 Sup. Ct. 74, 48 L. Ed. 188.

The right of federal control of interstate commerce results in certain restraints upon the power of the states to regulate and tax foreign corporations so far as their business is held to be foreign or interstate commerce within the meaning of the federal constitution. The only limitation, however, on the powers of a state to exclude or exact conditions from a foreign corporation arises when the corporation is in the employ of the federal government; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 12 Sup. Ct. 403, 36 L. Ed. 164; or its business is strictly commerce, interstate or foreign; Pembina Consol. Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 1, 84 C. C. A. 167. If empowered to engage in interstate commerce by its own state, it may carry on interstate commerce in every state in the Union; Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. Krumseig, 172 U. S. 351, 19 Sup. Ct. 179, 43 L. Ed. 474; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 622, 23 Sup. Ct. 229, 47 L. Ed. 336. And corporations possess the same rights as citizens with respect to freedom from state regulation of interstate commerce; La Moine Lumber & Trading Co. v. Kesterson, 171 Fed. 980; and a state law requiring a foreign corporation to file a copy of its charter and pay a small fee as a condition of doing business in the state does not interfere unlawfully with interstate commerce; Diamond Glue Co. v. U. S. Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611, 23 Sup. Ct. 206, 47 L. Ed. 328. Such commerce receives the same protection when carried on by corporations or by individuals; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 196, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 29 L. Ed. 158; and includes transportation; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 232, 21 L. Ed. 146; Bowman v. Ry. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700; telegraph lines; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 8 Sup. Ct. 1383, 32 L. Ed. 311 (which are also subject to federal regulation under acts of congress authorizing their location under certain conditions, on post roads; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1977; Pensacola Telegraph Co. v. Telegraph Co., 96 U. S. 11, 24 L. Ed. 708; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. Ed. 1067); the sale of merchandise by a corporation of one state whether made without the state or by commercial travellers, to a resident of another; Ware v. Shoe Co., 92 Ala. 145, 9 South. 136; Gunn v. Mach. Co., 57 Ark. 24, 20 S. W. 591, 18 L. R. A. 206, 38 Am. St. Rep. 223; the sale of patented or copyrighted articles or books; Ex parte Robinson, 2 Biss. 309, Fed. Cas. No. 11,932; Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co. v. Butler, 53 Ind. 454, 21 Am. Rep. 200; the right to vend them anywhere within the United States being secured by the constitution and patent and copyright laws; Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8; U. S. R. S. § 4884; but insurance is not commerce (q. v.), and corporations engaged in that business may be regulated; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168, 19 L. Ed. 357 (followed, after full consideration, in New York Life Ins. Co. v. Deer Lodge County, 231 U. S. 495, 34 Sup. Ct. 167, 58 L. Ed. ——); State v. Root, 83 Wis. 667, 54 N. W. 33, 19 L. R. A. 271; Goldsmith v. Ins. Co., 62 Ga. 379; and business cannot be carried on in a state by a foreign corporation which has not complied with all the conditions imposed by the state as a prerequisite to doing business within its limits; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 20 Sup. Ct. 962, 44 L. Ed. 1116; Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 43 L. Ed. 569; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 19 Sup. Ct. 281, 43 L. Ed. 552; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 39 L. Ed. 297; Philadelphia Fire Ass'n v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 7 Sup. Ct. 108, 30 L. Ed. 342; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 5 Sup. Ct. 739, 28 L. Ed. 1137.

The state power of taxation of such corporations is subject to certain restrictions in addition to those already stated, but as a general rule the property of the corporation owned or used within the state is alone the proper subject of taxation. The power has been sustained as to franchises; Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 594, 18 L. Ed. 897; Provident Inst. for Savings v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 611, 18 L. Ed. 907; even of an interstate corporation acting under U. S. R. S. § 5263; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Attorney General, 125 U. S. 530, 8 Sup. Ct. 961, 31 L. Ed. 790; Attorney General v. Telegraph Co., 141 U. S. 40, 11 Sup. Ct. 889, 35 L. Ed. 628; as to tangible property within the state even if employed in interstate commerce; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 5, 21 L. Ed. 787; Minot v. R. Co., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 206, 21 L. Ed. 888; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. Ed. 1067; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Attorney General, 125 U. S. 530, 8 Sup. Ct. 961, 31 L. Ed. 790; and with respect to the situs for this purpose, personal property may be separated from its owner; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 11 Sup. Ct. 876, 35 L. Ed. 613; in which the principle was applied to rolling stock (q. v.), of which as a general rule the situs is the domicil of the corporation; Appeal Tax Court of Baltimore City v. Ry. Co., 50 Md. 417; Pacific R. Co. v. Cass County, 53 Mo. 18; but subject to exceptions growing out of its character and use; City of Dubuque v. R. Co., 39 Ia. 56; Kennedy v. R. Co., 62 Ill. 395. See 6 Thomp. Corp. § 8097, and note 3. Where a corporation was registered in South Africa, but did its real business in London, it was held liable to taxation in England on its entire income; De Beers Consol. Mines, Ltd., v. Howe [1906] A. C. 455.

This power does not reach the capital of a company domiciled without the state, though a tax on a proportion of it has been sustained as a license; Riley v. Tel. Co., 47 Ind. 511; and so has a tax called an excise, on capital of a corporation having its domicil within and its business without the state; Attorney General v. Mining Co., 99 Mass. 148, 96 Am. Dec. 717; or a franchise tax assessed according to legislative discretion; People v. Trust Co., 96 N. Y. 387; measured by the capital found to be employed within the state; People v. Davenport, 91 N. Y. 574; People v. Com'rs of Taxes, 104 N. Y. 240, 10 N. E. 437; which is justified on the theory that part of the capital is employed within the state; People v. Wemple, 129 N. Y. 558, 29 N. E. 812. See TAXATION.

Independently of the power of taxation, foreign corporations may be excluded from doing business in other states, or, if permitted to do it, are subject to such terms and conditions as the legislature may see fit to impose; Attorney General v. Min. Co., 99 Mass. 148, 96 Am. Dec. 717; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Mayer, 28 Ohio St. 521; Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Harrah, 47 Ind. 236; Home Ins. Co. v. Davis, 29 Mich. 238; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. (U. S.) 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; Semple v. Bank, 5 Sawy. 88, Fed. Cas. No. 12,659; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168, 19 L. Ed. 357. Such conditions may include: Restrictions upon the right of eminent domain (q. v.); payment of license fees; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Com. of Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; provisions that any restriction imposed by the home state of the foreign corporation shall also be imposed upon corporations of that state in the domestic state; People v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 92 N. Y. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 380; Home Ins. Co. v. Swigert, 104 Ill. 653; such provisions when, as is usual, they are in the form of a license or tax are not objectionable on the ground of inequality; State v. Ins. Co., 115 Ind. 257, 17 N. E. 574; Blackmer v. Ins. Co., 115 Ind. 596, 17 N. E. 583; Phœnix Ins. Co. of New York v. Welch, 29 Kan. 672. So statutes are upheld requiring such corporations to file their charter, etc.; Hammer v. Min. & Mill. Co., 130 U. S. 291, 9 Sup. Ct. 548, 32 L. Ed. 964; or their agents to file evidence of their authority; Morgan & Co. v. White, 101 Ind. 413; or to keep a known place of business, and a resident agent; or to appoint an attorney for service of process in suits against the company; Utley v. Min. Co., 4 Colo. 369; in default of which contracts are voidable; Semple v. Bank, 5 Sawy. 88, Fed. Cas. No. 12,659; Bank of British Columbia v. Page, 6 Or. 431; New England Mtg. Sec. Co. v. Ingram, 91 Ala. 337, 9 South. 140; and all such statutes are self-enforcing; id.

When by constitution or statute such corporations are restricted from doing business within the state, in default of compliance with the provisions thereof, the decisions are not uniform as to what amounts to a violation of the prohibition. The question usually arises in one of two cases, either where it is sought to serve process on a corporation or to tax its property. It may also arise in penal actions against the corporation or its agent for doing business without complying with the statute. It seems to be established by the weight of authority that single transactions do not constitute such doing business as is contemplated by the statute; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7936, where many cases are collected, holding valid acts done in states where there are statutes of the class mentioned; see infra.

Most of the statutes of this class prescribe penalties, either by qui tam action or indictment, upon agents for violations of them, and it is held that such a state statute making it a misdemeanor for a person in the state to procure insurance for a resident there from an insurance company not incorporated under its laws, and which had not filed the bond required by the laws of the state relative to insurance, is not a regulation of commerce, and does not conflict with the constitution of the United States; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 39 L. Ed. 297. Such an act was held not to apply to the owner of property who merely obtained insurance on his own property; Com. v. Biddle, 139 Pa. 605, 21 Atl. 134, 11 L. R. A. 561. A foreign corporation which is barred from a state court for failure to obey the laws of that state as a prerequisite cannot sue on its contract in a federal court; Cyclone Min. Co. v. Power Co., 165 Fed. 996; nor can it foreclose a mortgage upon land in the state; Chattanooga Nat. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Denson, 189 U. S. 408, 23 Sup. Ct. 630, 47 L. Ed. 870; nor can it recover upon a bond conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duty of an agent appointed to conduct business in the state; McCanna & Fraser Co. v. Surety Co., 74 Fed. 597; Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Bales, 92 Pa. 352; U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Adams, 7 Biss. 30, Fed. Cas. No. 16,792; contra, Penn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bradley, 21 N. Y. Supp. 876; Manhattan Ins. Co. v. Ellis, 32 Ohio St. 388; but it was held that a foreign corporation which had failed to register under the Delaware act could nevertheless enforce a contract in a Delaware court against one who retained the benefits of the contract, the act being silent on this point, and this is said to be the "better doctrine"; Model Heating Co. v. Magarity, 1

Boyce (Del.) 240, 75 Atl. 614. A South Dakota act forbidding resort to its courts to a foreign corporation that has not registered is valid under the police power, even though the transaction in question related to interstate commerce; Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 28 S. D. 397, 133 N. W. 683, refusing to follow Sioux Remedy Co. v. Lindgren, 27 S. D. 123, 130 N. W. 49. Such corporation may sue on a cause of action under a federal statute having no relation to its doing business in the state contrary to law; Vitagraph Co. of America v. Optiscope Co., 157 Fed. 699. The agent of a foreign corporation which has not filed its statement under this act, is presumed to know of his incapacity and becomes personally liable to one with whom he dealt on account of such corporation, and this responsibility is in addition to the statutory penalty for acting as the agent of a foreign corporation without complying with the provisions of the act; Lasher v. Stimson, 145 Pa. 30, 23 Atl. 552.

Efforts have been made to take away the jurisdiction which federal courts may exercise in controversies between a foreign corporation and a citizen of the state, and to substitute the exclusive jurisdiction of the state courts. Any direct enactments forbidding removal would be declared unconstitutional; and an agreement made not to exercise this right of removal is void; Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Becker, 32 Fed. 849; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Cary, 28 Ohio St. 208. A valid corporation of any state has the absolute right to institute and maintain in the federal courts, and to remove to those courts, its suits in every other state, in cases prescribed by the acts of congress; Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 87 U. S. 445, 22 L. Ed. 365; Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 200, 7 Sup. Ct. 931, 30 L. Ed. 915. "Every law of a state which attempts to destroy these rights, or to burden their exercise, is violative of the constitution of the United States and void;" Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. U. S. Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 1, 84 C. C. A. 167.

When restrictive state statutes exist, contracts made in violation of them are treated in some states as voidable at the election of the other party; Hyde v. Goodnow, 3 N. Y. 266; Columbia Fire Ins. Co. v. Kinyon, 37 N. J. L. 33; Washington County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Dawes, 6 Gray (Mass.) 376; Haverhill Ins. Co. v. Prescott, 42 N. H. 547, 80 Am. Dec. 123; Beecher v. Mill Co., 45 Mich. 103, 7 N. W. 695; except as against a bona fide holder of negotiable paper for value and without notice; Williams v. Pheney, 8 Gray (Mass.) 206; or it is held that the remedy is suspended until the statute is complied with; Daly v. Ins. Co., 64 Ind. 1; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 64 Ind. 548; or that they are only void when the statute expressly so provides, as held in an able opinion by Bartholomew, J., in Washburn Mill Co. v. Bartlett, 3 N. D. 138, 54 N. W. 544; Connecticut River Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Way, 62 N. H. 622; American Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 37 Fed. 242; Rogers & Co. v. Simmons, 155 Mass. 259, 29 N. E. 580; or not void when the statute provides a penalty; Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 10 Sup. Ct. 93, 33 L. Ed. 317; Pangborn v. Westlake, 36 Ia. 546; Toledo Tie & Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 33 W. Va. 566, 11 S. E. 37, 25 Am. St. Rep. 925; Sherwood v. Alvis, 83 Ala. 115, 3 South. 307, 3 Am. St. Rep. 695 (but see Farrior v. Security Co., 88 Ala. 275, 7 South. 200, Mullens v. Mtg. Co., 88 Ala. 280, 7 South. 201, and Christian v. Land & Mtg. Co., 89 Ala. 198, 7 South. 427). In other states it is held that the contract cannot be enforced; Thome v. Ins. Co., 80 Pa. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 89; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Harvey, 11 Wis. 394; Cincinnati Mut. Health Assur. Co. v. Rosenthal, 55 Ill. 85, 8 Am. Rep. 626; Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Wright, 55 Vt. 526; but the corporation cannot set up its own non-compliance with a statute to avoid its own contract; Lasher v. Stimson, 145 Pa. 30, 23 Atl. 552; Hartford Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Matthews, 102 Mass. 221; Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Rust, 141 Ill. 85, 30 N. E. 772; Behler v. Ins. Co., 68 Ind. 347; Pennypacker v. Ins. Co., 80 Ia. 56, 45 N. W. 408, 8 L. R. A. 236, 20 Am. St. Rep. 395; Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415, 26 L. Ed. 187. Such contracts may be validated by the legislature, by subsequent act; U. S. Mortgage Co. v. Gross, 93 Ill. 483. The rule avoiding them as against public policy is not to be extended; L. R. 19 Eq. 465. Whether compliance with such statutes is presumed or must be averred and proved is a point on which the decisions differ; it is held that there is such presumption in Railway Co. v. Fire Ass'n, 55 Ark. 163, 18 S. W. 43; White River Lumber Co. v. Imp. Ass'n, 55 Ark. 625, 18 S. W. 1055; American Ins. Co. v. Cutler, 36 Mich. 261; American Ins. Co. v. Smith, 73 Mo. 368; Sprague v. Lumber Co., 106 Ind. 242, 6 N. E. 335; and an analogous case is Fry v. Bennett, 28 N. Y. 324. On the other hand, it has been frequently held that compliance must be averred and proved; Christian v. Land & Mtg. Co., 89 Ala. 198, 7 South. 427; Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Wright, 55 Vt. 526; but this view is said to be illogical and unsound; 31 Am. L. Rev. 19; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7965, citing as conclusive the analogous case in which failure of a liquor dealer to have a license is held to be a good defence to an action for liquor sold; Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 421, 12 Sup. Ct. 884, 36 L. Ed. 759; although no one would think of averring and proving his license. With much reason, therefore, it was held that such averment is not necessary, and nothing short of a distinct averment of non-compliance will make proof to the contrary necessary; White River Lumber Co. v. Imp. Ass'n, 55 Ark. 625, 18 S. W. 1055.

The question of the power of a foreign corporation to take hold and transmit title to land is one of public policy, and no general rule can be formulated from the decisions and statutes which must (as in most matters affecting land titles) be referred to with reference to a particular state. Enabling statutes will be found in many states, either general, or where such legislation is permissible, for special cases. It can at least be suggested that in the absence of any such legislation, or of express decisions, serious doubt will arise as to the power. The conclusion is reached by Judge Thompson that in the absence of prohibitory local law, there is much authority that, if authorized to do so in the state of their creation, corporations may hold land in other states; Barnes v. Suddard, 117 Ill. 237, 7 N. E. 477; New Hampshire Land Co. v. Tilton, 19 Fed. 73; Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214, 12 Am. Rep. 243; unless forbidden to do so either by the public policy of the state; United States Trust Co. of New York v. Lee, 73 Ill. 142, 24 Am. Rep. 236; or its statute law; Com. v. R. Co., 132 Pa. 591, 19 Atl. 291, 7 L. R. A. 634, where the subject is considered at length by Paxson, J., with respect to general enabling laws and proceedings by the state in such cases; Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 122, 10 L. Ed. 382; Hickory Farm Oil Co. v. R. Co., 32 Fed. 22.

It is sometimes held that the power exists for business purposes, as an office; Baltimore & P. Steamboat Co. v. McCutcheon, 13 Pa. 13; Carroll v. City of East St. Louis, 67 Ill. 568, 16 Am. Rep. 632; Barnes v. Suddard, 117 Ill. 237, 7 N. E. 477; and it has been held that a Connecticut company having no business there could operate as a land company in New Hampshire; New Hampshire Land Co. v. Tilton, 19 Fed. 73; contra, Carroll v. City of East St. Louis, 67 Ill. 568, 16 Am. Rep. 632; the tendency of American legislation is to permit the holding of land by foreign corporations, for business but not for speculation; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7917. The right of such corporation to take and hold title to real estate cannot be questioned in ejectment by it against a former managing director; Seymour v. Gold Mines, 153 U. S. 523, 14 Sup. Ct. 847, 38 L. Ed. 807. See ALIEN.

The power of acquiring land has been held to exist until forbidden; American & F. Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 352, 25 L. Ed. 888; Blodgett v. Zinc Co., 120 Fed. 893, 58 C. C. A. 79; and as against every one except the state when proceeding for a forfeiture; Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. 122, 10 L. Ed. 382; Baker v. Neff, 73 Ind. 68; Alexander v. Tolleston Club of Chicago, 110 Ill. 65; Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. Ed. 188. Of such proceedings it is said that the only one in this country is that in Pennsylvania cited infra; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7918.

Land may generally be taken by devise; Thompson v. Swoope, 24 Pa. 474; University v. Tucker, 31 W. Va. 621, 8 S. E. 410; but only by corporations having charter power so to take; Boyce v. City of St. Louis, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 650; Starkweather v. Bible Soc., 72 Ill. 50, 22 Am. Rep. 133. Foreign corporations have usually the power to acquire land by foreclosure of mortgages; National Trust Co. v. Murphy, 30 N. J. Eq. 408; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. McKinney, 6 McLean 1, Fed. Cas. No. 4,667; American Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Owen, 15 Gray (Mass.) 491; and in such cases the state only and not the mortgagor can set up a want of power; Carlow v. C. Aultman & Co., 28 Neb. 672, 44 N. W. 873; Pancoast v. Ins. Co., 79 Ind. 172.

In all cases involving the right of foreign corporations to hold lands the lex rei sitæ governs; Sto. Confl. L. § 428; Boyce v. City of St. Louis, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 650. See ESCHEAT.

Whenever a foreign corporation has the power to make a contract in a state or country it may enforce it or recover damages for a breach in like manner as persons may do in like case; 2 Ld. Raym. 1535; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; New Jersey Protection & Lombard Bank v. Thorp, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 46; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cross, 18 Wis. 109; British American Land Co. v. Ames, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 391; Day v. Bank, 13 Vt. 97; Savage Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 17 Me. 34, 35 Am. Dec. 227. From these and many other cases it is clearly a principle long and well settled that, unless prohibited by local statutory law, a corporation of one state may sue in another by its corporate title. Such prohibitory legislation exists in some states as already sufficiently shown; supra. When it does not exist this right of action extends to all cases and causes of action as to which a remedy exists in favor of persons or domestic corporations; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7978; and see id. §§ 7380–8. An action by such corporation for libel has been sustained; Jewelers' Mercantile Agency v. Douglass, 35 Ill. App. 627.

In such actions when, as in most jurisdictions, it is unnecessary to aver or prove the corporate existence in suits by or against corporations (see 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7658), or at least only to make very formal allegation of it (id. § 7661); the same rule applies to foreign corporations; id. § 7984; Paine v. R. Co., 31 Ind. 283; Smith v. Machine Co., 26 Ohio St. 562; nor, as has been held, in the absence of a statute either expressly or by authoritative construction requiring it, need there be an averment of compliance with statutory pre-requisites for doing business; American Button Hole & O. S. S. M. Co. v. Moore, 2 Dak. 280, 8 N. W. 131; O'Reilly, Skelly & Fogarty Co. v. Greene, 17 Misc. 302, 40 N. Y. Supp. 360; Nichels v. Saving Ass'n, 93 Va. 380, 25 S. E. 8; the ground of dispensing with the averment of compliance with such statutes is the presumption of legality and compliance with local law, discussed, supra.

Apart from this question, which only affects the right of action upon contracts made within the state, the foreign corporation has, as to all other matters, the same rights and remedies as other non-residents; Utley v. Mining Co., 4 Colo. 369; Smith v. Little, 67 Ind. 549. It may foreclose a mortgage even when by statute disqualified from acquiring real estate; Leasure v. Ins. Co., 91 Pa. 491; Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 36 Minn. 108, 31 N. W. 54; contra, Christian v. Mortgage Co., 89 Ala. 198, 7 South. 427; and purchase at the execution sale; Elston v. Piggott, 94 Ind. 14; or maintain an action on an insurance policy; Tabor v. Mfg. Co., 11 Colo. 419, 18 Pac. 537; or for a tax wrongfully paid; Powder River Cattle Co. v. Com'rs of Custer County, 9 Mont. 145, 22 Pac. 383. Where a foreign corporation, by the law of its domicil, continues to exist after the expiration of its charter for the purpose of suing on debts accrued before such expiration, it may also sue in such case in New York; O'Reilly, Skelly & Fogarty Co. v. Greene, 17 Misc. 302, 40 N. Y. Supp. 360.

In suits against foreign corporations the question of jurisdiction is of first importance, and it is the general rule that a corporation, like a natural person, cannot be sued in personam in a state within whose limits it has never been found; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7988. This conclusion springs naturally from the principle that a "corporation being the creation of local law, can have no legal existence beyond the limits of the sovereignty where created;" Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 181, 19 L. Ed. 357; but this rule is subject to exceptions growing out of the theory that, under certain circumstances, such corporations will be held in law to have acquired a domicil within a state, at least so far as to subject them to suit.

A non-resident corporation, whose objection to the jurisdiction on the ground of insufficient service is overruled, and which then by order of court pleads to the merits, does not lose its rights of objection; but it does submit to the jurisdiction if it sets up a counterclaim, even though in the nature of recoupment; Merchants' Heat & Light Co. v. J. B. Clow & Sons, 204 U. S. 286, 27 Sup. Ct. 285, 51 L. Ed. 488.

In England in spite of dicta to the contrary; L. R. 7 Q. B. 293; 1 Ex. Div. 237; there was said to be no case prior to 1885 holding foreign corporations suable in that country; 54 L. J. Q. B. Div. 527. The necessities of the case resulted in a rule authorized by statute providing for acquiring jurisdiction over a foreign corporation carrying on business in England by service on a "head officer" in charge of its business there; and the court of appeal sustained the jurisdiction so acquired; 58 L. J. Q. B. Div. 508; 33 Ch. Div. 446. See 5 H. L. Cas. 416.

In the United States the exceptions to the general rule first stated are thus classified by Thompson: (1) Where a corporation had established a permanent agency in the state or country; (2) when it is agreed with the state that process may be served in it; (3) when it is agreed with the opposite party that an action may be brought against it to enforce a contract against it in a state or country other than its domicil; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7988. These exceptions were rendered necessary to meet the case of corporations in recent years doing business so extensively outside of the domicil of their creation, and particularly of what are known as "tramp corporations," purposely organized in another state to do business in their own and evade its laws; besides, trading corporations being equally migratory with individuals, the reason originally assigned for want of jurisdiction had ceased to exist; id. § 7989. Accordingly it may be considered that corporations may acquire business domicils in other states and countries, and, wherever they do so, they may be sued without the aid of local statute law; id. In most, if not all of the states, however, statutes exist requiring foreign corporations to appoint an agent for process as a condition of doing business in the state, and so, also, by local statutes, jurisdiction is affirmatively assumed. See National Bank of Commerce v. Huntington, 129 Mass. 444; McNichol v. Reporting Agency, 74 Mo. 457; March v. R. Co., 40 N. H. 548, 77 Am. Dec. 732; City Fire Ins. Co. v. Carrugi, 41 Ga. 660; Iron Age Pub. Co. v. Telegraph Co., 83 Ala. 498, 3 South. 449, 3 Am. St. Rep. 758; Camden Rolling Mill Co. v. Iron Co., 32 N. J. L. 15; U. S. v. Telephone Co., 29 Fed. 17; Tuchband v. R. Co., 115 N. Y. 437, 22 N. E. 360. The principles upon which the jurisdiction rests are that it must appear in the record that the corporation was engaged in business in the state, and that the person upon whom service was made represented the company there in the business; and while the certificate of service is prima facie evidence of the latter fact, it is open to contradiction when the record is offered in evidence in another state; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 1 Sup. Ct. 354, 27 L. Ed. 222.

With respect to what constitutes a valid service on a foreign corporation, the subject is generally regulated by statutes which must be consulted with reference to any given case, and reference may be made to 6 Thomp. Corp. Ch. 198, where the decisions are collected as to service on different classes of officers and agents. The decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court established the rule that jurisdiction cannot be acquired by service upon an officer casually within the state for purposes not connected with the business of the corporation; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. (U. S.) 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; St. Clair

Cases in which the corporation has been held to be "doing business" under such statute are: Writing a policy of insurance upon property within the state although the contract was executed elsewhere; Stanhilber v. Ins. Co., 76 Wis. 285, 45 N. W. 221; keeping an office for a combination of two railroads where negotiation for settlement of the claim had been conducted by the agent upon whom process could be served; St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Alexander, 227 U. S. 218, 33 Sup. Ct. 245, 57 L. Ed. ——. A foreign insurance company, which has been doing business in a state through its agents, does not cease to do it when it withdraws its agents and ceases to obtain or ask for new risks or obtain new policies, while, at the same time, its old policies continue in force and the premiums thereon are paid by the policy-holders to an agent in the state where the policy-holders reside; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 43 L. Ed. 569; or where its agents are there, under its authority, adjusting the losses covered by their policies; Pennsylvania Lumberman's Mut. Fire Co. v. Meyer, 197 U. S. 407, 25 Sup. Ct. 483, 49 L. Ed. 810. In some cases an isolated transaction constitutes doing business, as where a foreign corporation sold some machinery through an order taken and filled by its local agent and a note was given for the purchase price; Deere Plow Co. v. Wyland, 69 Kan. 255, 76 Pac. 863, 2 Ann. Cas. 304. The practical difficulty of determining whether a single transaction evidences a purpose to engage in business permanently is one of fact purely, and is properly for the jury; Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. Wolf Co., 118 Fed. 239, 55 C. C. A. 93. It was said that doing business implied corporate continuity of conduct such as might be evidenced by the investment of capital there, that the maintenance of an office for the transaction of its business and those incidental circumstances which attest a corporate intent to avail itself of the privilege of carrying on the business; Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 183 N. Y. 98, 75 N. E. 935, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 127.

A corporation doing business in a state and protected by its power may be compelled to produce before a tribunal of the state material evidence in its custody and control although for the time outside the limits of the state; Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. Ct. 178, 52 L. Ed. 327, 12 Ann. Cas. 658; affirming In re Consolidated Rendering Co., 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790, 11 Ann. Cas. 1069.

Cases in which the transaction in question was held not to be "doing business" within the statute are most of those in which there is a single isolated act; Ladd Metals Co. v. Mining Co., 152 Fed. 1008; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 5 Sup. Ct. 739, 28 L. Ed. 1137; such as the purchase of railroad securities by a foreign trust company and taking a mortgage to secure them; Gilchrist v. Helena, H. S. & S. R. Co., 47 Fed. 593; but do not include an application for insurance and receiving the money therefor where the application is sent direct to the foreign office; Fulton v. Acc. Ass'n, 172 Pa. 117, 33 Atl. 324; Clay Fire & M. Ins. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346; Columbia Fire Ins. Co. v. Kinyon, 37 N. J. L. 33; or through a broker who deals with the company through another broker; Romaine v. Ins. Co., 55 Fed. 751; but these cases have been criticised; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 7937, n. 2; but the weight of authority is said to be in favor of the validity of the policy where it is written out and returned from the home office and transmitted by an agent who has not complied with the statutes of the foreign state; Lamb v. Bowser, 7 Biss. 315, Fed. Cas. No. 8,008; id., 7 Biss. 372, Fed. Cas. No. 8,009. So it was held not doing business (for service) where a steamship company sold tickets through an agent who had the company's name on his office door and received a commission on his sales and a contribution on account of office rent; Goepfert v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 156 Fed. 196; nor where there was the mere renting of an office for collecting news and soliciting contracts for advertisements when the orders were sent outside of the state and filled there; American Contractor Pub. Co. v. Michael Nocenti Co., 139 N. Y. Supp. 853; nor where the corporation sends its products into a state through a commission merchant doing business there; Brookford Mills v. Baldwin, 154 App. Div. 553, 139 N. Y. Supp. 195; nor where it merely collected debts in a state; Ichenhauser Co. v. Landrum's Assignee, 153 Ky. 316, 155 S. W. 738; nor where the company has no office in a state, but employs a soliciting agent who sends the orders to the home office where they are filled by direct shipment to the buyer; Saxony Mills v. Wagner, 94 Miss. 233, 47 South. 899, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, 136 Am. St. Rep. 575, 19 Ann. Cas. 199; where there is merely an office and an agent to solicit freight and passenger traffic; Green v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 205 U. S. 530, 27 Sup. Ct. 595, 51 L. Ed. 916; nor where there was no office except for the registration of stock transfers but the company kept a bank account and its directors met there, as permitted by its laws; Honeyman v. Iron Co., 133 Fed. 96.

The service was held sufficient where an insurance company with outstanding policies collected premiums and adjusted losses and the service was made upon a doctor sent to investigate a loss; Commercial Mut. Acc. Co. v. Davis, 213 U. S. 245, 29 Sup. Ct. 445, 53 L. Ed. 782. Where a corporation is not doing business in a state, service on its president, when temporarily within its jurisdiction, is not sufficient service; Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 15 Sup. Ct. 559, 39 L. Ed. 517; and the residence of an officer of a corporation in a state is not sufficient; he must be there officially representing the corporation in its business; Conley v. Alkali Works, 190 U. S. 406, 23 Sup. Ct. 728, 47 L. Ed. 1113. The residence of an attorney, appointed to accept service for a foreign corporation, fixes the residence of the corporation; Lemon v. Glass Co., 199 Fed. 927; the appointment of a statutory agent is irrevocable, except by the appointment of a new one; Gibson v. Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 81, 10 N. E. 729; and continues as long as any liability remains against the corporation arising out of business done by it under the registration; Brown-Ketcham Iron Works v. Swift Co. (Ind.) 100 N. E. 584; although irrevocable in form it may be revocable on withdrawal from the state as to matters not connected with business transacted in the state or with its residents; Hunter v. Ins. Co., 218 U. S. 573, 31 Sup. Ct. 127, 54 L. Ed. 1155, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686; but a few disconnected transactions, by a foreign corporation after its withdrawal, do not constitute doing business in the state so as to preclude its revocation of a power of attorney to a state officer to accept process; id. The termination of business dealings in the state need not ipso facto terminate the statutory agent's authority to receive service. In the absence of express provisions, however, such authority should not easily be implied. The company has submitted to the jurisdiction of the courts in return for the privilege of doing business in the state; when it voluntarily withdraws, the presumption would be that it has withdrawn for all purposes. A common class of statutes, however, provides for the designation of special agents, frequently state officers other than the officers or business agents of the company, to receive service, and under these statutes some courts have held that jurisdiction over the company remains in respect to all liabilities incurred by the company while in the state; Collier v. Life Ass'n, 119 Fed. 617; Davis v. Coal Co., 129 Fed. 149; Groel v. Electric Co., 69 N. J. Eq. 397, 60 Atl. 822; contra, Swann v. Life Ass'n, 100 Fed. 922; Friedman v. Empire Ins. Co., 101 Fed. 535. See also Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 23 Sup. Ct. 707, 47 L. Ed. 987. Where a foreign corporation had been doing business in a state and there contracted a liability, but had withdrawn from the state before suit was brought, it was held that service could be had in that state in the mode prescribed by its laws; McCord Lumber Co. v. Doyle, 97 Fed. 22, 38 C. C. A. 34.

In some states, under acts requiring registering of an agent, registering after the transaction but before suit is good, since the acts only affect the remedy and do not avoid the contract; Augur Steel Axle Co. v. Whittier, 117 Mass. 451; Security Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Elbert, 153 Ind. 198, 54 N. E. 753.

Foreign corporations, it is said, cannot be logically dealt with as non-residents within the meaning of attachment laws, where they have become domesticated so far as to be liable to actions in personam; Farnsworth v. R. Co., 29 Mo. 75; Martin v. R. Co., 7 Bush (Ky.) 116. Formerly a foreign attachment could not be issued in courts of the United States; Pollard v. Dwight, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 421, 2 L. Ed. 666; Nazro v. Cragin, 3 Dill. 474, Fed. Cas. No. 10,062; Ex parte Des Moines & M. R. Co., 103 U. S. 794, 26 L. Ed. 461; but in 1872 the federal courts were authorized to adopt the state laws in force relative to attachments; U. S. R. S. § 915; and the federal courts now apply state statutes relating to attachments to foreign corporations; Rainey v. Maas, 51 Fed. 580. Such corporations may also be summoned as garnishees whenever they would be liable for the debt attached, or by residence or agency are amenable to process; Libbey v. Hodgdon, 9 N. H. 394; Fithian v. R. Co., 31 Pa. 114; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Crane, 102 Ill. 249, 40 Am. Rep. 581; Knox v. Ins. Co., 9 Conn. 430, 25 Am. Dec. 33; or when they do business in the state and have a managing agent there; Rainey v. Maas, 51 Fed. 580.

It has been held that the dissolution of a corporation dissolves a foreign attachment against it, on the ground that to compel an appearance was the primary object of the process; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Little, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 207, 42 Am. Dec. 293; but the soundness of this case has been doubted on the ground that, jurisdiction having attached to the res, it continues for the real object of the suit—satisfaction of the demand; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 8062; and this view is supported by another case which holds that comity does not interfere with it; City Ins. Co. of Providence v. Bank, 68 Ill. 348. But it was held that a state statute providing that corporations shall continue to exist for a certain period after the time fixed for dissolution, for the purpose of prosecuting and defending suits, and that no body of persons acting as a corporation shall set up want of legal organization as a defence to a suit against them as a corporation, does not control or affect foreign corporations merely doing business in the state; and a suit against such a corporation abates upon its dissolution, so that, if a judgment be thereafter entered against it, the same is void; Marion Phosphate Co. v. Perry, 74 Fed. 425, 20 C. C. A. 490, 33 L. R. A. 252. See DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATIONS.

A corporation may subject itself to the jurisdiction of a foreign state by contract with a private person; 60 L. T. N. S. 924; or with the state; New England Mortgage Security Co. v. Ingram, 91 Ala. 337, 9 South. 140.

Foreign corporations are sometimes held not liable to suit, except ex contractu upon domestic contracts; Bawknight v. Ins. Co., 55 Ga. 194; or for torts committed within the state; Robinson v. Navigation Co., 112 N. Y. 315, 19 N. E. 625, 2 L. R. A. 636; Central R. & Banking Co. v. Carr, 76 Ala. 388, 52 Am. Rep. 339; Gray v. Pulley Works, 16 Fed. 436; Austin v. R. Co., 25 N. J. L. 381; unless the statutory jurisdiction extends to any cause of action; Palmer v. Ins. Co., 84 N. Y. 63; Myer v. Ins. Co., 40 Md. 595; Brauser v. Ins. Co., 21 Wis. 506; nor are they liable to suits by non-residents on foreign contracts; Sawyer v. Ins. Co., 46 Vt. 697; contra, Johnston v. Ins. Co., 132 Mass. 432.

A state court may take possession of the assets of an insolvent foreign corporation within its limits and distribute them or their proceeds among creditors, but it cannot discriminate in favor of its own creditors against citizens of other states; Blake v. McClung, 176 U. S. 62, 20 Sup. Ct. 307, 44 L. Ed. 371. But the United States circuit court has no inherent power, as a court of equity, at the suit of domestic shareholders, to dissolve an English mining company, owning and operating a mine in the United States, and to wind up its business operations; nor has it any such power under the act of parliament known as the "Companies Act, 1862;" Republican Mountain Silver Mines v. Brown, 58 Fed. 644, 7 C. C. A. 412, 24 L. R. A. 776.

A corporation, by doing business in another state and becoming liable to suit there, both in state and federal courts, does not lose its right to claim, for the purposes of federal jurisdiction, a citizenship in the state by which it was created; Murfr. For. Corp. 236. When sued in a foreign state it may remove the cause to a federal court; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 643; Wilkinson v. R. Co., 22 Fed. 353. But it is otherwise if the effect of the legislation under which it enters the foreign state be to confer corporate privileges upon it in that state. In such case the company is a citizen of both states; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 643.

See LEX LOCI CONTRACTUS; EMINENT DOMAIN; GARNISHMENT; POLICE POWER; TAXATION; UNITED STATES COURTS; MERGER.

FOREIGN COUNTY. Another county. It may be in the same kingdom, it will still be foreign. See Blount, Foreign.

FOREIGN COURT. The circuit court of the United States is not a foreign court relatively to the court of chancery of New Jersey; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 426.

FOREIGN CREDITOR. One who is resident in a state or country foreign to that of the domicil of the debtor or the situs of his property.

FOREIGN DECREE. See FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

FOREIGN DIVORCE. One obtained in a state or country other than that in which the marriage was solemnized and the parties, or at least the one against whom the proceeding is taken, are domiciled. See DIVORCE.

FOREIGN DOMICIL. See DOMICIL.

FOREIGN DOMINION. In English Law. A country, at one time subject to a foreign prince; which, by conquest or cession, has become a part of the dominion of the British Crown. 5 B. & S. 290.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT. The statute 59 Geo. III. c. 69, for preventing British citizens from enlisting as sailors or soldiers in the service of a foreign power. 4 Steph. Com. 226. See NEUTRALITY.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE. Drafts drawn on a foreign state or county. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

FOREIGN FACTOR. One who resides in a country foreign to that of his principal. See FACTOR.

FOREIGN FISHING. Oil, manufactured from whales caught by the crew of an American vessel, is not the product of foreign fishing within the purview of the revenue laws of the United States, though it has since been owned and brought into port by persons in the foreign service. U. S. v. Burdett, 2 Sumn. 336, Fed. Cas. No. 14,684.

FOREIGN-GOING SHIP. In the English Merchant Shipping Act, any ship employed in trading between some place or places in the United Kingdom, and other places specified in said act outside the limits of the kingdom.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT. A judgment of a foreign tribunal.

It is a general rule that foreign judgments are admitted as conclusive evidence of all matters directly involved in the case decided, where the same question is brought up incidentally. 1 Greenl. Ev. 547, and note; Betts v. Bagley, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 572. Such judgments and decrees in rem, whether relating to immovable property or movables within the jurisdiction of the foreign court, are binding everywhere; L. R. 4 H. L. 414; [1897] 1 Q. B. 55; [1896] 2 Q. B. 455. This rule applies to admiralty proceedings in rem founded on actual possession of the subject-matter, and garnishment proceeding in a like case.

It seems to be the better opinion that judgments in personam regular on their face, which are sought to be enforced in another country, are conclusive evidence, subject to a re-examination, in the courts where the new action is brought, only for irregularity, fraud, or lack of jurisdiction as to the cause or parties; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 546; Westl. Priv. Int. Law 372; Story, Confl. Laws § 607; 2 Swanst. 325; Dougl. 6, n.; 3 Sim. 458; 6 Q. B. 288; Kittredge v. Emerson, 15 N. H. 227; Folger v. Ins. Co., 99 Mass. 273, 96 Am. Dec. 747; Pearce v. Olney, 20 Conn. 544; Rogers v. Gwinn, 21 Ia. 58; but see Sanford v. Sanford, 28 Conn. 28; Bicknell v. Field, 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 440; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 290, 18 L. Ed. 475. It was formerly held that they were prima facie evidence merely. See 2 H. Bla. 410; Dougl. 1, 6; 3 Maule & S. 20; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 88; Elizabethtown Sav. Inst. v. Gerber, 34 N. J. Eq. 130; Carleton v. Bickford, 13 Gray (Mass.) 591, 74 Am. Dec. 652; State of Indiana v. Helmer, 21 Ia. 370; Pawling v. Wilson, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 192; Tourigny v. Houle, 88 Me. 406, 34 Atl. 158. But this theory has been entirely overthrown, the doctrine of their conclusive character having been settled in England in L. R. 6 Q. B. 179. It is also fully recognized in this country; Lazier v. Westcott, 26 N. Y. 148, 82 Am. Dec. 404; Konitzky v. Meyer, 49 N. Y. 571; Rankin v. Goddard, 54 Me. 28, 89 Am. Dec. 718; and see Hilton v. Guyot, infra.

The subject of the conclusiveness of foreign judgments has been treated with much diversity of opinion in the English courts. That they are prima facie evidence to sustain an action is clear according to all the authorities, but whether conclusive, and if not so in all cases, what defences may be admitted, was for a long time not definitely settled by the English courts. The cases were very fully reviewed by Judge Redfield with this result: "So that now it may be regarded as fully established in England, that the contract resulting from a foreign judgment is equally conclusive, in its force and operation, with that implied by any domestic judgment. But there is still a very essential and important distinction between the two. Domestic judgments rest upon the conclusive force of the record, which is absolutely unimpeachable. Foreign judgments are mere matters in pais, to be proved the same as an arbitration and award, or an account stated; to be established, as matter of fact before the jury; and by consequence subject to any contradiction or impeachment which might be urged against any other matter resting upon oral proof. Hence any fraud which entered into the concoction of the judgment itself is proper to be adduced, as an answer to the same; but no fraud which occurred and was known to the opposite party, before the rendition of such foreign judgment, and which might, therefore, have been brought to the notice of the foreign court, can be urged in defence of it. It is proper to add, that while the English courts thus recognize the general force and validity of foreign judgments, it has been done under such limitations and qualifications that great latitude still remains for breaking the force of, and virtually disregarding such foreign judgments as proceed upon an obvious misapprehension of the principles governing the case; or where they are produced by partiality or favoritism, or corruption, or where upon their face they appear to be at variance with the instinctive principles of universal justice. But these are rare exceptions." Sto. Confl. Laws, Redfield's ed. § 618 a–618 k. And the same conclusion from the English cases is reached in 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 277.

An English writer on the subject attributes the vacillation of the courts of that country to the fact that two doctrines have been discussed as the basis of the conclusive effect given to a foreign judgment. The earlier theory was that of comity, which, as defined by Blackburn, J., in opposing the doctrine, is that "it is an admitted principle of the law of nations, that a state is bound to enforce within its territories the judgment of a foreign tribunal;" L. R. 6 Q. B. 139. This doctrine was supported by Lords Nottingham, Ellenborough, Kenyon, Cockburn, and Brougham, and Chief Baron Pigot, Sir G. Jessel, and Sir R. Phillimore; 2 Swanst. 326, n.; 4 Campb. 28; 4 M. & S. 141; 7 Term 681; 30 L. J. C. P. 177; 2 Cl. & F. 470; Ir. Rep. 1 C. L. 471; 50 L. J. P. 30; L. R. 4 P. C. 144. Of the objections raised the most important was said to be uncertainty; Piggott, For. Judg. 6. See Sto. Confl. Laws § 598. The other theory, termed that of obligation, is that when a competent court has adjudicated a certain sum to be due, a legal obligation arises to pay that sum, and an action of debt to enforce the judgment may be sustained. This was first enunciated by Parke, B., in 1845; 9 M. & W. 810; 14 L. J. Ex. 145; it was approved in 1870 by Blackburn and Mellor,

Both ideas are involved in what the English writer last cited terms the theory of obligation and comity, which is in substance this: A legal obligation arises in the state where the judgment was rendered, accompanied by a correlative sanction under which the obligation may be made effective so long as the defendant is within the jurisdiction of the foreign court; but when, by his absence from that jurisdiction, the remedy is no longer available, the obligation will, in another state or country, be clothed by comity with an auxiliary sanction to replace the correlative sanction which it has lost; Piggott, For. Judg. 18.

The foreign court must have had jurisdiction, and when the defendant was not a subject of or resident in the country in which the judgment was obtained, so that there existed nothing imposing on him any duty to obey it, the judgment cannot be enforced in an English court; L. R. 6 Q. B. 155; 67 L. T. 767. But the conclusiveness of a judgment when there was jurisdiction is illustrated by a decision that a mistake of English law as to an English contract, apparent on the face of the proceedings, was not ground of defence to a foreign judgment; L. R. 6 Q. B. 139.

In this country the subject was elaborately discussed in Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 16 Sup. Ct. 139, 40 L. Ed. 95, in the argument and opinions of which are collected all the authorities. In that case it was held that "when an action is brought in a court of this country, by a citizen of a foreign country, against one of our own citizens, to recover a sum of money adjudged by a court of that country to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and the foreign judgment appears to have been rendered by a competent court, having jurisdiction of the cause and of the parties, and upon due allegations and proofs, and opportunity to defend against them, and its proceedings are according to the course of a civilized jurisprudence, and are stated in a clear and formal record, the judgment is prima facie evidence, at least, of the truth of the matter adjudged; and it should be held conclusive upon the merits tried in the foreign court, unless some special ground is shown for impeaching the judgment, as by showing that it was affected by fraud or prejudice, or that, by the principles of international law, and by the comity of our own country, it should not be given full credit and effect;" Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 16 Sup. Ct. 139, 40 L. Ed. 95.

In the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice Gray reviews the American and English cases, and examines in detail existing laws and usages of civilized nations, and reaches the conclusion that "where there has been opportunity for a full and fair trial abroad before a court of competent jurisdiction, conducting the trial upon regular proceedings, after due citation or voluntary appearance of the defendant, and under a system of jurisprudence likely to secure an impartial administration of justice between the citizens of its own country and those of other countries, and there is nothing to show either prejudice in the court, or in the system of laws under which it was sitting, or fraud in procuring the judgment, or any other special reason why the comity of this nation should not allow it full effect, the merits of the case should not, in an action brought in this country upon the judgment, be tried afresh, as on a new trial or an appeal, upon the mere assertion of the party that the judgment was erroneous in law or in fact."

But the court go further and rest the decision upon the principle of reciprocity, adopting and applying the rule that "judgments rendered in France, or in any other foreign country, by the laws of which our own judgments are reviewable upon the merits, are not entitled to full credit and conclusive effect when sued upon in this country, but are prima facie evidence only of the justice of the plaintiff's claim."

Accordingly, it was held that, such being the practice of the French courts, with regard to American judgments, the judgment recovered in France, which was the cause of action, was not conclusive, but subject to review upon its merits.

Chief Justice Fuller delivered a dissenting opinion in which concurred Harlan, Brewer, and Jackson, JJ., taking the ground that the question was not one of comity, but to be determined upon the broad principle of public policy that there should be an end of litigation, and that this applied equally to foreign and domestic judgments.

The principles of this decision were at the same term applied to a Canadian judgment which was held conclusive inasmuch as the pleadings showed a submission to the jurisdiction of a competent court. Mere averments that the judgment was "irregular and void," and that there was "no jurisdiction or authority on the part of the court to enter such a judgment upon the facts and the pleadings" are but averments of legal conclusions and so insufficient to impeach the judgment; and it was held that, in answer to an action upon a foreign judgment the specific facts must be given upon which it is supposed to be irregular and void or based upon fraud. If rendered upon regular proceedings and due notice or appearance, and not procured by fraud, in a foreign country, by whose laws a judgment of one of our own courts, under like circumstances, is held conclusive of the merits, it is conclusive between the parties in an action brought upon it in this country, as to all matters pleaded and which might have been tried; Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 16 Sup. Ct. 171, 40 L. Ed. 133.

Foreign adjudications as respects torts are not binding; Whart. Confl. L. § 793, 827; and a judgment in Germany for infringement of trade-mark cannot be set up in the United States; Hohner v. Gratz, 50 Fed. 369. See TRADE-MARK.

Foreign judgments may be evidenced by exemplifications certified under the great seal of the state or country where the judgment is recorded, or under the seal of the court where the judgment remains; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 501; by a copy proved to be a true copy, or by the certificate of an officer authorized by law, which certificate must itself be properly authenticated; Union Bank of Georgetown v. Crittenden, 2 Cra. 238, Fed. Cas. No. 14,354; Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 335, 3 L. Ed. 117; Vandervoort v. Smith, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 155; Gardere v. Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 514; Buttrick v. Allen, 8 Mass. 273, 5 Am. Dec. 105; Calhoun v. Ross, 60 Ill. App. 309. The acts of foreign tribunals which are recognized by the law of nations, such as courts of admiralty and the like, are sufficiently authenticated by copies under the seal of the tribunal; Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 335, 3 L. Ed. 117; Thompson v. Stewart, 3 Conn. 171, 8 Am. Dec. 168. The record of a judgment of a foreign court, not of record and of inferior territorial jurisdiction, is not admissible in evidence, in the absence of proof of facts showing that the court had jurisdiction; Kopperl v. Nagy, 37 Ill. App. 23. See Edwards v. Jones, 113 N. C. 453, 18 S. E. 500.

The various states are considered as foreign to each other, with respect to this subject; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 287, 11 Sup. Ct. 92, 34 L. Ed. 670.

The constitution of the United States provides that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state"; Const. Art. IV. § 1. By the act of May 26, 1790, the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any state shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that the said attestation is in due form. And the said records and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts of the state from whence the said records are or shall be taken. By the act of March 27, 1804, all records and exemplifications of office books, which are or may be kept in any public office of any state, not appertaining to a court, shall be proved or admitted in any other court or office in any other state, by the attestation of the keeper of the said records or books, and the seal of his office thereto annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the presiding justice of the court of the county or district, as the case may be, in which such office is or may be kept, or of the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or the keeper of the great seal of the state, that the said attestation is in due form and by the proper officer; and the said certificate, if given by the presiding justice of a court, shall be further authenticated by the clerk or prothonotary of the said court, who shall certify, under his hand and the seal of his office, that the presiding justice is duly commissioned and qualified; or, if the said certificate be given by the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or keeper of the great seal, it shall be under the great seal of the state in which the said certificate is made. And the said records and exemplifications, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court and office within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts or offices of the state from whence the same are or shall be taken; and the provisions of both acts shall extend to the records, etc., of the territories; U. S. R. S. § 906.

The object of this clause was to prevent judgments from being disregarded in other states; People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 247, 12 Am. Rep. 260; it relates only to the validity and force of judgments rendered in one state when proved in another; Claflin v. McDermott, 12 Fed. 375. It does not change the nature of a judgment; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 312, 10 L. Ed. 177; but places judgments rendered in another state on a different footing from what are known at common law as foreign judgments; Gibbons v. Livingston, 6 N. J. L. 236. The clause makes the record evidence but does not affect the jurisdiction either of the court in which the judgment is rendered or of that in which it is offered in evidence. The judgment of a foreign state differs only from a foreign judgment in not being re-examinable for fraud in obtaining them, if the court had jurisdiction; Wisconsin v. Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 292, 8 Sup. Ct. 1370, 32 L. Ed. 239; Forrest v. Fey, 218 Ill. 165, 75 N. E. 789, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 740, 109 Am. St. Rep. 249. A judgment rendered in another state is to be regarded as a domestic judgment; Eastern Townships Bank v. Beebe & Co., 53 Vt. 177, 38 Am. Rep. 665; but it is not on the footing of a domestic judgment so far as to be enforced by execution, but the manner of their enforcement is left to the state in which they are sued on, pleaded, or offered in evidence. When pleaded and proved they are conclusive, and if their enforcement is denied it amounts to the denial of a right secured by the constitution of the United States; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; Sistare v. Sistare, 218 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 682, 54 L. Ed. 905, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1068. The constitution and the rule of comity include only judgments in civil actions, not in criminal prosecutions; Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; Wisconsin v. Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 8 Sup. Ct. 1370, 32 L. Ed. 239; Arkansas v. Bowen, 3 App. D. C. 537; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Kirk, 222 Pa. 567, 71 Atl. 1085, 128 Am. St. Rep. 823. This distinction makes it necessary to examine critically the judgment which it is sought to enforce in another state, if based upon a statute, and to determine whether or not it is penal. Whether a law is penal in the international sense depends upon whether its object is to punish a public offense, or to afford a private remedy against a wrong done; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123. Thus, in an action brought upon a judgment recovered by the state of Wisconsin in her own courts against a Louisiana corporation for fines imposed by the statutes of Wisconsin for failure to make an annual statement or for making a false statement, it was held that the rule did not apply to a judgment for such pecuniary penalty; Wisconsin v. Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 8 Sup. Ct. 1370, 32 L. Ed. 239. A suit by the United States for the statutory penalty provided by the safety appliance act is a prosecution for a criminal offence; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 172 Fed. 194, 96 C. C. A. 646, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 756. A government proceeding in rem to enforce a forfeiture for a violation of the revenue law, though in civil form, is a criminal prosecution; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; and under an act providing that for a violation of the immigration laws the offender shall forfeit the sum of $1,000, to be recovered by the United States or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor, the prosecution was held criminal; Lees v. U. S., 150 U. S. 476, 14 Sup. Ct. 163, 37 L. Ed. 1150.

The judgment of a state court has the same validity and effect in any other state as it has in the state where it was rendered; Mayhew v. Thatcher, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 129, 5 L. Ed. 223; Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 87, 11 Sup. Ct. 960, 35 L. Ed. 640; First Nat. Bank of Danville v. Cunningham, 48 Fed. 510. The judicial proceedings within the act are only such as have been rendered by a competent court, with full jurisdiction; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 88; S. Dwight Eaton Co. v. Kelly, 45 Ill. App. 533; Lindley v. O'Reilly, 50 N. J. L. 636, 15 Atl. 379, 1 L. R. A. 79, 7 Am. St. Rep. 802; Darcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. (U. S.) 165, 13 L. Ed. 648; it may be a superior court of record or an inferior tribunal; Taylor v. Barron, 30 N. H. 78, 64 Am. Dec. 281; Pelton v. Platner, 13 Ohio 209, 42 Am. Dec. 197; including a judgment of a justice of the peace; Menken v. Brinkley, 94 Tenn. 721, 31 S. W. 92. A judgment may be attacked on the ground of a want of jurisdiction; Miller, Const. U. S. 632; Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 21 L. Ed. 897; Morgan v. Morgan, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 315, 21 S. W. 154; Pennywit v. Foote, 27 Ohio St. 600, 22 Am. Rep. 340; McCreery v. Davis, 44 S. C. 195, 22 S. E. 178, 28 L. R. A. 655, 51 Am. St. Rep. 794; In re James' Estate, 99 Cal. 374, 33 Pac. 1122, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 10 Sup. Ct. 269, 33 L. Ed. 538; thus a judgment against a defendant who was not served with proper process, and who did not appear, would be entitled to no credit in another state; D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. (U. S.) 165, 13 L. Ed. 648; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 287, 11 Sup. Ct. 92, 34 L. Ed. 670; but facts establishing the want of jurisdiction must be shown; Fitchett v. Blows, 74 Fed. 51, 20 C. C. A. 286. Credit is not to be given to judgments of another state if they were wanting in due process of law; Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 27 Sup. Ct. 236, 51 L. Ed. 345. A judgment of a foreign state, against several defendants jointly, in an action in which one of them was not served with process, cannot be enforced against one of such defendants who in the foreign action was served with process; Watson v. Steinau, 19 R. I. 218, 33 Atl. 4, 61 Am. St. Rep. 768. See Pritchett v. Clark, 4 Harr. (Del.) 281; id., 3 Harr. (Del.) 241, 517.

Not only must the foreign court have had jurisdiction of the person, but it must appear that the judgment there rendered was responsive to the issues tendered by the pleadings; so held where the defendant had appeared and answered, but took no part in the trial; but if the party was present at the trial, it will be presumed that necessary amendments to conform the pleadings to the evidence were made; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 11 Sup. Ct. 773, 35 L. Ed. 464.

Where the court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, fraud in obtaining the judgment may be set up as a defence; Ambler v. Whipple, 139 Ill. 311, 28 N. E. 841, 32 Am. St. Rep. 202; White v. Reid, 70 Hun 197, 24 N. Y. Supp. 290; Ball v. Warrington, 108 Fed. 472, 47 C. C. A. 447; it must be fraud in procuring the judgment; Payne v. O'Shea, 84 Mo. 129; or it will constitute a ground of collateral attack; id.; Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536, 36 N. E. 628, 23 L. R. A. 665, 39 Am. St. Rep. 196; but fraud cannot be pleaded as a ground of attack in one federal court, upon a judgment obtained in another; Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 11 Sup. Ct. 369, 34 L. Ed. 1054.

Proceedings will lie in equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment obtained by fraud in a foreign state; Payne v. O'Shea, 84 Mo. 129; Levin v. Gladstein, 142 N. C. 482, 55 S. E. 371, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905, 115 Am. St. Rep. 747. If the court of the foreign state had jurisdiction over the parties, its judgment cannot be impeached, even if it went upon a misapprehension of its own law; Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 28 Sup. Ct. 641, 52 L. Ed. 1039, where a construction of the constitutional provision by Marshall, C. J., in Hampton v. McConnel, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 234, 4 L. Ed. 378, is affirmed and the supposed qualification of it in Wisconsin v. Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 8 Sup. Ct. 1370, 32 L. Ed. 239, is declared to be a dictum.

The constitution does not give to a judgment all the attributes to which it was entitled in the state where it was rendered; Brengle v. McClellan, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 434; but if duly certified, it is admissible in evidence in any state; Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 54; Parke v. Williams, id. 247; a state may give a judgment rendered in another state any effect it may think proper, always provided it does not derogate from the legal effect conferred upon it by the constitution and the laws of congress in this behalf; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 88. In case, however, full faith and credit is not given to the judgment of another state, any judgment thereon will be erroneous; Green v. Van Buskirk, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 139, 19 L. Ed. 109. If a state court refuses to give full faith and credit to a decision of a federal court, it raises a federal question and the supreme court has jurisdiction; Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Kirven, 215 U. S. 252, 30 Sup. Ct. 78, 54 L. Ed. 179. When the court rendering the judgment has jurisdiction, its judgment is final as to the merits; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 302, 18 L. Ed. 475; Ingram v. Drinkard, 14 Tex. 352; Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Baltimore, 7 Gill (Md.) 430; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Hoechner, 67 Fed. 459, 14 C. C. A. 469; Snyder v. Critchfield, 44 Neb. 66, 62 N. W. 306; but no greater effect can be given to a judgment than it had in the state where it was rendered; Board of Public Works v. College, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 529, 21 L. Ed. 687; Suydam v. Barber, 18 N. Y. 468, 75 Am. Dec. 254.

The judgment must be given the same faith and credit as is given to domestic judgments; Levin v. Gladstein, 142 N. C. 482, 55 S. E. 371, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905, 115 Am. St. Rep. 747. If a judgment or decree is enforcible in the state where it is rendered, it is enforcible in any other state; Caldwell v. Carrington, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 86, 9 L. Ed. 60; but the constitutional provision does not give validity to a void judgment or decree; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606; Mitchell v. Lenox, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 49, 10 L. Ed. 349; Rodgers v. Ins. Co., 148 N. Y. 34, 42 N. E. 515. It does not impose on any state the duty of following the decision of another state as to the construction of the statutes of the latter; Wiggins' Ferry Co. v. R. Co., 3 McCrary 609, 11 Fed. 381; Miller v. Miller, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 507; nor enforcing within its territory the law of another state.

A judgment entered in pursuance of a warrant of attorney, in a state in which such judgments are authorized, has the same force when sued on in another state as a judgment in an adversary proceeding; Hazel v. Jacobs, 78 N. J. L. 459, 75 Atl. 903, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066, 20 Ann. Cas. 260; an action thereon can only be defeated by want of jurisdiction by fraud in procuring the judgment, or defences based on matter arising after the judgment was rendered; any defence to the original cause of action is conclusively negatived by the judgment; but the sufficiency of the warrant may be inquired into and is to be determined from the evidence of the law of the state of its entry; Snyder v. Critchfield, 44 Neb. 66, 62 N. W. 306. Where a judgment is revived by scire facias, without service on or appearance by the defendant, the plaintiff cannot recover thereon in another state where the defendant resides, after the statute of limitations has run against the original judgment; such revival is either a new proceeding substituted for an action of debt, and hence invalid without service, or a continuation of the original action, and therefore barred; Owens v. Henry, 161 U. S. 642, 16 Sup. Ct. 693, 40 L. Ed. 837; Betts v. Johnson, 68 Vt. 549, 35 Atl. 489. And in an action on such judgment the statute of the forum governs and not that of the place where the judgment was rendered; Beer v. Simpson, 65 Hun 17, 19 N. Y. Supp. 578.

A judgment removing the disability of infancy is not conclusive upon the courts of another state, so as to make effective an infant's conveyance of land there; Beauchamp v. Bertig, 90 Ark. 351, 119 S. W. 75, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 659; so where the question relates to the transfer of real property in the second state; Polson v. Stewart, 167 Mass. 211, 45 N. E. 737, 36 L. R. A. 771, 57 Am. St. Rep. 452. Where a decree for alimony in a foreign state is such that it can afterwards be altered and is not a final decree, a New York court is not bound by it; Lynde v. Lynde, 181 U. S. 183, 21 Sup. Ct. 555, 45 L. Ed. 810. In Sistare v. Sistare, 80 Conn. 1, 66 Atl. 772, 125 Am. St. Rep. 102, the court refused to enforce a New York decree for alimony; but this was reversed in the United States supreme court upon the ground that if the judgment was enforceable in New York it must be given effect in another state, although the procedure to enforce it might differ; Sistare v. Sistare, 218 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 682, 54 L. Ed. 905, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1068, 20 Ann. Cas. 1061.

Refusal by a state court to allow a receiver appointed in another state to maintain an action does not deny full faith and credit; Finney v. Guy, 189 U. S. 335, 23 Sup. Ct. 558, 47 L. Ed. 839, following Hale v. Allinson, 188 U. S. 56, 23 Sup. Ct. 244, 47 L. Ed. 380.

A judgment in personam against a corporation, obtained in a federal court of a sister state, is conclusive on the merits of the case in the courts of every other state when made the basis of an action; Chicago & A. Bridge Co. v. Packing & Provision Co., 46 Fed. 584.

U. S. R. S. § 905, applies to records, etc., of a sister state; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; the District of Columbia; Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 3, 2 Sup. Ct. 25, 27 L. Ed. 346; a territory; Gibson v. Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 81, 10 N. E. 729; and the Indian courts in the Indian Territory; Standley v. Roberts, 59 Fed. 836, 8 C. C. A. 305. A state court must give full faith and credit to the judgment of a federal court; Crescent City Live Stock Co. v. Slaughter-House Co., 120 U. S. 141, 7 Sup. Ct. 472, 30 L. Ed. 614. There is no decision as to a case in which something more than "full faith and credit" has been given, but there are dicta that no more can be given; Tilt v. Kelsey, 207 U. S. 57, 28 Sup. Ct. 1, 52 L. Ed. 95. While the supreme court, in its original jurisdiction, takes judicial notice of the laws of the several states, yet while acting under its appellate jurisdiction, whatever was matter of fact (proof of the laws of a foreign state) in the court whose judgment is under review is matter of fact there; Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 6 Sup. Ct. 242, 29 L. Ed. 535; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Ferry Co., 119 U. S. 622, 7 Sup. Ct. 398, 30 L. Ed. 519.

The full faith and credit clause of the constitution does not extend to judgments of foreign states or nations, and unless there is a treaty relative thereto the supreme court has no jurisdiction to review the judgment of a state court on the ground that it failed to give full faith and credit to a judgment of a foreign court; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Tremblay, 223 U. S. 185, 32 Sup. Ct. 309, 56 L. Ed. 398.

The provisions of the act of congress relating to the authentication of records and judicial proceedings must be complied with in order to secure the admission of the exemplification as evidence in a suit upon the judgment in another state; it is not necessary that such exemplification should be used in pleading or in a statement of claim or affidavit of defence; Mink v. Shaffer, 124 Pa. 280, 16 Atl. 805. As to pleading, see 27 Cent. L. J. 400; 26 Abb. N. C. 315, note.

R. S. § 905, provides that acts of the legislature of any state, etc., shall be authenticated by the seal thereof affixed thereto, and the judicial proceedings of the courts of any state, etc., by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal, if any, of the court annexed, with a certificate of the judge, chief justice or presiding magistrate that the attestation is in due form, and shall then have such faith and credit "as they have by law or usage in the courts of the state from which they are taken."

See Story, Confl. Laws; Freeman; Black, Judgt. 596; Dalloz, Étranger; Piggott, Foreign Judgments; 4 L. Mag. & Rev. 417; CONFLICT OF LAWS; JUDGMENT; FOREIGN LAW; FOREIGN CORPORATION; DIVORCE.

FOREIGN JURISDICTION. The exercise by one government, within the territory of another, of powers acquired by it in any manner whatsoever, whether by treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, or otherwise.

A jurisdiction other than that of the forum.

FOREIGN JURY. One drawn from a county other than that in which issue is joined. See JURY.

FOREIGN KINGDOM. One under the dominion of a foreign prince. King v. Parks, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 375.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE. When in an action of slander the words complained of were spoken in German a declaration setting forth the words in English is not sufficient; the words must be stated in the foreign language as spoken, with an averment of the signification in English, and that they were understood by those who heard them; Wormouth v. Cramer, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 394, 20 Am. Dec. 706. See also Cro. Eliz. 496, 865; SLANDER.

When a will was made and proved in French and in the probate it was translated into English, but, as it appeared, falsely, held that the court might determine according to what the translation ought to be; 1 P. Wms. 526.

FOREIGN LAW. The laws of a foreign country.

The courts do not take judicial notice of foreign laws; and they must, therefore, be proved as matters of fact; 4 Mood. Parl. Cas. 21; Armendiaz v. De La Serna, 40 Tex. 291; Territt v. Woodruff, 19 Vt. 182; Chouteau v. Pierre, 9 Mo. 3; Patterson v. Carrell, 60 Ind. 128; Champion v. Wilson, 64 Ga. 184; Legg v. Legg, 8 Mass. 99; Brackett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 517, 10 Am. Dec. 179; Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 158, 36 Am. Dec. 158; Dakin v. Pomeroy, 9 Gill (Md.) 1; and pleaded; Crosby v. R. Co., 158 Fed. 144; written laws, by the text, or a collection printed by authority, or a copy certified by a proper officer, or, in their absence, perhaps, by the opinion of experts as secondary evidence; Story, Confl. Laws § 641; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 486; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. (U. S.) 426, 14 L. Ed. 472; 8 Ad. & E. 208; Lincoln v. Battele, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 475; Inge v. Murphy, 10 Ala. 885; Burton v. Anderson, 1 Tex. 93; Clarke v. Bank, 10 Ark. 516, 52 Am. Dec. 248; they may be construed with the aid of text-books as well as of experts; The Pawa-shick, 2 Low. 142, Fed. Cas. No. 10,851; where experts are called, the sanction of an oath is said to be required; Brackett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 517, 10 Am. Dec. 179; Dyer v. Smith, 12 Conn. 384. See State v. Rood, 12 Vt. 396; Story, Confl. Laws § 641; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 488, note. As to the manner of proving unwritten laws of foreign countries, the decisions show a divergence of opinion; the rule, as laid down by Lowell, J., in the case of The Pashawick, 2 Low. 142, Fed. Cas. No. 10,851 where the reasoning of Lord Stowell, in Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, 2 Hagg. Consist. 54, is cited with approval, is, that the unwritten law of England may be proved in the United States courts not by experts only, but also by text-writers of authority, and by the printed reports of adjudged cases; Whart. Ev. § 300. But mere citations of English statutes and authorities cannot be accepted as proving English laws; Dickerson v. Matheson, 50 Fed. 73. But in respect to the laws of other foreign countries, where a system obtains wholly different from our own, the rigid proof by the testimony of experts alone should be insisted on. See 11 Cl. & F. 85; 1 Wall. Jr. C. C. 47; Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 507; as to who can prove such laws; Hall v. Costello, 48 N. H. 176, 2 Am. Rep. 207; Kenny v. Clarkson, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, 3 Am. Dec. 336; Isabella v. Pecot, 2 La. Ann. 391. It need not be a lawyer; Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 74 Ill. 197; Pickard v. Bailey, 26 N. H. 152; Liverpool & Great Western Steam Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788; 8 C. B. 812. The United States courts take judicial notice of the laws of every state; Breed v. R. Co., 35 Fed. 642; whether depending upon statutes or upon judicial opinions and without plea or proof; Lamar v. Micou, 114 U. S. 223, 5 Sup. Ct. 857, 29 L. Ed. 94; but the decisions of the various state courts are not harmonious on this point as far as regards the laws of each other. In Tennessee; Hobbs v. R. Co., 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 873; and Rhode Island; Paine v. Ins. Co., 11 R. I. 411; the courts will take judicial notice of the laws of sister states; in Illinois, of the jurisdiction of courts in other states; Rae v. Hulbert, 17 Ill. 577; and the supreme court has decided that where a state recognizes acts done in pursuance of the laws of another state, the courts of the first state should take judicial cognizance of such laws so far as may be necessary to judge of the acts alleged to be done under them; Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 513, 19 L. Ed. 426. Where a statute of another state has been properly brought to the notice of the court, it will in all future cases take notice of that statute and presume the law of the foreign state to be the same until some change is shown; Graham v. Williams, 21 La. Ann. 594; Cochran v. Ward, 5 Ind. App. 89, 29 N. E. 795, 31 N. E. 581, 51 Am. St. Rep. 229. In Pennsylvania it has been held that the courts should take notice of the local laws of a sister state in the same manner as the supreme court of the United States would do on a writ of error to a judgment; Ohio v. Hinchman, 27 Pa. 479; but see, contra, Rape v. Heaton, 9 Wis. 328, 76 Am. Dec. 269; 20 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 385. A copy of the authorized statute-book is recognized as proof of a foreign law; Mullen v. Morris, 2 Pa. 85; and the construction of those statutes may be proved either by the reports of cases, or by one familiar therewith; Bollinger v. Gallagher, 163 Pa. 245, 29 Atl. 751, 43 Am. St. Rep. 791.

In 19 Harv. L. R. 401, it is said that, in the absence of proof as to what the law of a foreign state or country is, the court, when it takes judicial notice that the foreign state has fundamentally the same system of law as that of the forum, will presume that the law of the foreign state is the same (exclusive of statutory changes) as that of the law of the forum. For instance, where both states are composed of territory formerly belonging to one or more of the thirteen original colonies; see McAnally v. O'Neal, 56 Ala. 299 (raising the presumption with respect to Georgia); Gluck v. Cox, 75 Ala. 310 (raising the presumption with respect to Mississippi); Peet v. Hatcher, 112 Ala. 514, 21 South. 711, 57 Am. St. Rep. 45; Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 226. That the common law prevails in England, see Stokes v. Macken, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 145; in the provinces of Canada; Dempster v. Stephen, 63 Ill. App. 126 (in Owen v. Boyle, 15 Me. 147, 32 Am. Dec. 143, the court refused to raise the presumption that the common law of England prevailed in the province of New Brunswick); and in all that part of the territory of the United States east of the Mississippi, excepting Louisiana and Florida. As to Texas, Florida and Louisiana, judicial notice is taken that the fundamental law there is the civil law; Equitable Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. King, 48 Fla. 252, 37 South. 181; Sloan v. Torry, 78 Mo. 623; Peet v. Hatcher, 112 Ala. 514, 21 South. 711, 57 Am. St. Rep. 45; Simms v. Express Co., 38 Ga. 129. So with regard to Mexico, France and other foreign countries; Aslanian v. Dostumian, 174 Mass. 328, 54 N. E. 845, 47 L. R. A. 495, 75 Am. St. Rep. 348 (Asiatic Turkey); Savage v. O'Neil, 44 N. Y. 298 (Russia); Thompson v. Ketchum, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 190, 5 Am. Dec. 332 (Jamaica).

But there are cases in which the law of the forum, even though statutory, is always applied in the absence of proof of the foreign law; Burgess v. Tel. Co., 92 Tex. 125, 46 S. W. 794, 71 Am. St. Rep. 833; Pauska v. Daus, 31 Tex. 67; Mexican Cent. Ry. Co. v. Glover, 107 Fed. 356, 46 C. C. A. 334.

It is said that in Missouri a presumption can be raised only as to states whose territory prior to their becoming members of the Union was subject to the law of England; Silver v. Ry. Co., 21 Mo. App. 5 (denying any presumption with respect to Illinois); Barhydt v. Alexander, 59 Mo. App. 188 (with respect to Iowa); Searles v. Lum, 81 Mo. App. 607 (admitting it with respect to Mississippi).

Where the law of Brazil was the same fundamental system as prevailed in Louisiana, the Louisiana statutory law was applied; Kuenzi v. Elvers, 14 La. Ann. 391, 74 Am. Dec. 434. The cases are collected in Cherry v. Sprague, 67 L. R. A. 41, where cases are also found in which California, under the same fundamental system as a foreign country, applied its own statutory law. In Cavallaro v. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 348, 42 Pac. 918, 52 Am. St. Rep. 94, where the fundamental systems of law in California and the foreign state were different, a presumption was refused and the law of the forum was applied.

There is no general presumption that the law of Cuba is the same as the common law. In two common-law countries the law may be presumed to be the same, but a statute of one would not be presumed to be the statute of the other; Cuba R. Co. v. Crosby, 222 U. S. 473, 56 L. Ed. 274, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 40. A remedy under a foreign law where it is perfectly apparent that complete justice cannot be done, and where it is plain that an equitable result can be accomplished only by the courts of the jurisdiction where the corporation was created, could not be enforced in the New York courts; Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 42 N. E. 419, 34 L. R. A. 757, 51 Am. St. Rep. 654.

Foreign unwritten laws, customs, and usages may be proved, and are ordinarily proved, by parol evidence; and when such evidence is objected to on the ground that the law in question is a written law, the party objecting must show that fact; Dougherty v. Snyder, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 87, 16 Am. Dec. 520; Newsom v. Adams, 2 La. 154, 22 Am. Dec. 126.

The manner of proof varies according to circumstances. As a general rule, the best testimony or proof is required; for no proof will be received which presupposes better testimony attainable by the party who offers it. When the best testimony cannot be obtained, secondary evidence will be received; Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 237, 2 L. Ed. 249. A foreign law must be proved like any other fact, and in the absence of such proof it will be presumed that the common law prevails, in the foreign jurisdiction; Roll v. Mining Co., 52 Mo. App. 60.

Exemplified or sworn copies of written laws and other public documents must, as a general thing, be produced when they can be procured; but should they be refused by the competent authorities, then inferior proof may be admitted; id.

When our own government has promulgated a foreign law or ordinance of a public nature as authentic, that is held sufficient evidence of its existence; Talbot v. Seeman, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 38, 2 L. Ed. 15; Thompson v. Musser, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 462, 1 L. Ed. 222; Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 203.

The usual modes of authenticating them are by an exemplification under the great seal of a state, or by a copy proved by oath to be a true copy, or by a certificate of an officer authorized by law, which must itself be duly authenticated; Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 238, 2 L. Ed. 249; Jones v. Maffet, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 523; Seton v. Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 175, Fed. Cas. No. 12,675; Zimmerman v. Helser, 32 Md. 274; Bowles v. Eddy, 33 Ark. 645; McDeed v. McDeed, 67 Ill. 545.

Witnesses in Cuba examined under a commission touching the execution of a will testified, in general terms, that it was executed according to the law of that country; and, it not appearing from the testimony that there was any written law upon the subject, the proof was held sufficient; In re Roberts' Will, 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 446.

A defendant pleaded infancy in an action upon a contract governed by the law of Jamaica: held that the law was to be proven as a matter of fact, and that the burden lay upon him to show it; Thompson v. Ketchum, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 189, 5 Am. Dec. 332.

Proof of such unwritten law is usually made by the testimony of witnesses learned in the law and competent to state it correctly under oath; Seton v. Delaware Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 175, Fed. Cas. No. 12,675; Dougherty v. Snyder, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 84, 16 Am. Dec. 520; Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 520; 2 Hagg. Adm. App. 15–144; Mowry v. Chase, 100 Mass. 79.

In England, certificates of persons in high authority have been allowed as evidence in such cases; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 767, 769.

The public seal of a foreign sovereign or state affixed to a writing purporting to be a written edict, or law, or judgment, is of itself the highest evidence, and no further proof is required of such public seal; Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 238, 2 L. Ed. 249; Griswold v. Pitcairn, 2 Conn. 85; U. S. v. Johns, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 413, Fed. Cas. No. 15,481, 1 L. Ed. 888; 4 Dall. 413; 9 Mod. 66.

But the seal of a foreign court is not, in general, evidence without further proof, and must, therefore, be established by competent testimony; Delafield v. Hand, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 310; De Sobry v. Laistre, 2 H. & J. (Md.) 193, 3 Am. Dec. 535; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 526, note; 3 East 221.

By the act of May 26, 1790, it is provided "that the acts of the legislatures of the several states shall be authenticated by having the seal of their respective states affixed thereto;" R. S. § 905. See RECORD. It may here be observed that the rules prescribed by acts of congress do not exclude every other mode of authentication, and that the courts may admit proof of the acts of the legislatures of the several states, although not authenticated under the acts of congress. Accordingly, a printed volume, purporting on its face to contain the laws of a sister state, is admissible as prima facie evidence to prove the statute law of that state; Young v. Bank, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 384, 2 L. Ed. 655; Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 203; Cochran v. Ward, 5 Ind. App. 89, 29 N. E. 795, 31 N. E. 581, 51 Am. St. Rep. 229; Falls v. Loan & Building Co., 97 Ala. 417, 13 South. 25, 24 L. R. A. 174, 38 Am. St. Rep. 194; Leach v. Linde, 70 Hun 145, 24 N. Y. Supp. 176; Williams v. Williams, 53 Mo. App. 617; contra, State v. Twitty, 9 N. C. 441, 11 Am. Dec. 779; Bailey v. McDowell, 2 Harr. (Del.) 34; Packard v. Hill, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 411; Phillips v. Murphy, 2 La. Ann. 654; Rape v. Heaton, 9 Wis. 328, 76 Am. Dec. 269. By act of Aug. 8, 1846, a standard copy of the laws and treaties of the United States is fixed, and made competent evidence in all courts without further proof or authentication. R. S. § 908.

Foreign laws have, as such, no extra-territorial force, but have an effect by comity; Sto. Const. § 1305. In the absence of pleading and proof to the contrary, the laws of another state are presumed to be like those of the state in which the action is brought; Haggin v. Haggin, 35 Neb. 375, 53 N. W. 209; Scrooggin v. McClelland, 37 Neb. 644, 56 N. W. 208, 22 L. R. A. 110, 40 Am. St. Rep. 520; Mortimer v. Marder, 93 Cal. 172, 28 Pac. 814; Bollinger v. Gallagher, 144 Pa. 205, 22 Atl. 815; In re Hamilton's Will, 76 Hun 200, 27 N. Y. Supp. 813. See Coghlan v. R. Co., 142 U. S. 101, 12 Sup. Ct. 150, 35 L. Ed. 951; Sandidge v. Hunt, 40 La. Ann. 766, 5 South. 55; Bagwell v. McTighe, 85 Tenn. 616, 4 S. W. 46. While a state court is bound to take judicial cognizance of the principles of common law as it prevails in other states, this is not true of the statutes of such states; Sandidge v. Hunt, 40 La. Ann. 766, 5 South. 55; Thorn v. Weatherly, 50 Ark. 237, 7 S. W. 33; Continental Nat. Bank v. McGeoch, 73 Wis. 332, 41 N. W. 409; Templeton v. Brown, 86 Tenn. 50, 5 S. W. 441; Ligget v. Himle, 38 Minn. 421, 38 N. W. 201. But see Ufford v. Spaulding, 156 Mass. 65, 30 N. E. 360. Until the fact is shown, they will be assumed to be the same as those of the forum; Harper v. Hampton, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 687. See 5 Cl. & F. 14; 3 H. L. C. 19; LEX FORI.

A person claiming title under a foreign corporation is chargeable with knowledge of its chartered powers and restrictions; Hoyt v. Thompson's Ex'r, 19 N. Y. 207.

The effect of foreign laws when proved is properly referable to the court; the object of the proof of foreign laws is to enable the court to instruct the jury what is, in point of law, the result from foreign laws to be applied to the matters in controversy before them. The court are, therefore, to decide what is the proper evidence of the laws of a foreign country; and when evidence is given of those laws, the court are to judge of their applicability to the matter in issue; Story, Confl. Laws § 638; Greenl. Ev. 486; De Sobry v. De Laistre, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 193, 3 Am. Dec. 535; Brackett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 517, 10 Am. Dec. 179,

Where foreign statutes (here Mexican) are the basis of a claim in the United States circuit court, parol evidence of an expert is admissible upon the construction thereof upon any matter of reasonable doubt, notwithstanding they are in evidence by a certified copy and an agreed translation; Slater v. R. Co., 194 U. S. 120, 24 Sup. Ct. 581, 48 L. Ed. 900. Statutes and decisions having been proved or otherwise properly brought to the attention of the court, it may itself deduce from them an opinion as to what the law of the foreign jurisdiction is, without being conclusively bound by the testimony of a witness who gives his opinion as to the law which he deduces from these very statutes and opinions; Finney v. Guy, 189 U. S. 335, 23 Sup. Ct. 558, 47 L. Ed. 839. No witness can conclude a court by his opinion of the construction and meaning of statutes and decisions already in evidence; Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 16 Sup. Ct. 366, 40 L. Ed. 525. But it is held that the testimony of lawyers of a foreign country that certain proven acts, documents and records had the effect of creating complainant a corporation under the laws of such country is sufficient prima facie to establish the corporate character of complainant. The court will not undertake to construe the statutory law of such country for itself to determine if such testimony is incorrect; Badische Anilin & Soda Fabrik v. A. Kliptein & Co., 125 Fed. 543.

See CONFLICT OF LAWS; JUDICIAL NOTICE; PRECEDENT; LEX FORI.

FOREIGN MATTER. Matter which must be tried in another county. Blount. Matter done or to be tried in another county. Cowell.

FOREIGN MINISTER. An ambassador or envoy from a foreign country. See AMBASSADOR.

FOREIGN MONEY. By Act Aug. 27, 1894, the director of the mint estimates quarterly "the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations," and, thereafter, quarterly beginning on the 1st day of January, etc., the secretary of the treasury proclaims the same; the values so proclaimed are followed in estimating the value of imports.

FOREIGN OFFICE. The department of state through which the British sovereign communicates with foreign powers.

FOREIGN PLEA. See PLEA.

FOREIGN PORT. A port or place which is wholly without the United States. King v. Parks, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 375; The Eliza, 2 Gall. 4, 7, Fed. Cas. No. 4,346; The Adventure,

1 Brock. 235, Fed. Cas. No. 93. A port without the jurisdiction of the court; 1 Dods. 201; 6 Exch. 886. The ports of the several states are foreign to each other so far as regards the authority of masters to pledge the credit of their vessels for supplies; The Lulu, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 192, 19 L. Ed. 906; Selden v. Hendrickson, 1 Brock. 396, Fed. Cas. No. 12,639; Negus v. Simpson, 99 Mass. 388. Practically, the definition has become, for most purposes of maritime law, a port at such distance as to make communication with the owners of the ship very inconvenient or almost impossible. See 1 Pars. Mar. Law 142, n.; DOMESTIC PORT; PORT.

FOREIGN SERVICE. Servitium forinsecum. See FORINSECUS.

FOREIGN STATE. A foreign nation or country. The states are considered as foreign to each other with respect to those subjects which are controlled by their municipal law. See FOREIGN JUDGMENT; EXTRADITION; FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE; FOREIGN LAW; FOREIGN BILL OF EXCHANGE.

FOREIGN TRADE. The exportation and importation of commodities to or from foreign countries, as distinguished in the United States from interstate or coastwise trade. See U. S. v. Patten, 1 Holmes 421, Fed. Cas. No. 16,007; FOREIGN COMMERCE.

FOREIGN TROOPS. The grant of permission to foreign troops to cross any part of the United States has been frequently considered by the federal executive. In 1790, Washington, having advised on the subject with Adams, Jefferson and Hamilton, on the advice of the first against the inclination of the last two, declined to allow the passage of British troops through United States territory from Detroit to the Mississippi, presumably because the only purpose of such movement would be an attack upon Spanish possessions on the Mississippi, with which country we were at peace.

In 1862 permission was given by Secretary Seward to the British government to land troops at Portland for transport to Canada because the St. Lawrence was closed by ice. Pursuant to action by the senate of Maine, the governor of that state applied to Secretary Seward for information on the subject. In a communication dated January 17, 1862, from Seward to Governor Washburn, the facts were set forth and the propriety of the original order was argued at length, but it concluded that if the state of Maine would feel aggrieved the directions in question would be cheerfully modified. This letter is quoted at length in 2 Moore's Int. L. Dig. 390.

In 1875 permission was granted to Canada by the United States to transport "through its territory certain supplies designed for the use of . . . Canadian mounted police force," but whether any permission was asked from the governor of the state does not appear.

The request of the French government to the state department for permission to send French seamen to the Chicago World's Fair to guard the French exhibit in 1893 was referred to the governor of Illinois for his consent by Secretary Foster.

The request of the London Artillery Company to enter the United States in uniform with arms, to pass through New York and other states, was referred by Secretary Bayard to the governors of those states. See 2 Moore's Int. L. Dig. 395, 397.

In Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264, Brown, J., said (obiter): "While no act of congress authorizes the executive department to permit the introduction of foreign troops, the power to give such permission without legislative assent was probably assumed to exist from the authority of the president as commander in chief of the military and naval forces of the United States."

The application for leave must be made by the representative at Washington of the foreign power. The grant of passage implies a waiver of all jurisdiction over the troops during their passage; Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 432, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264.

The cases are considered in 2 Moore, Int. L. Dig. 390, and in Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264.

FOREIGN VESSEL. A vessel owned by residents in or sailing under the flag of a foreign nation. It does not mean a vessel in which foreigners domiciled in the United States have an interest; The Sally, 1 Gal. 58, Fed. Cas. No. 12,257. An omission in the registry and enrollment of an American vessel does not make her foreign, but, at best, only deprives her of her American privileges. Fox v. Paine, Crabbe 271, Fed. Cas. No. 5,014. See FLAG. The patent laws were not intended to apply to and govern a vessel of a foreign, friendly nation; Brown v. Duchesne, 19 How. (U. S.) 183, 15 L. Ed. 595.

FOREIGN VOYAGE. A voyage whose termination is within a foreign country. 3 Kent 177. The length of the voyage has no effect in determining its character, but only the place of destination; 1 Stor. 1; U. S. v. Rogers, 3 Sumn. 342, Fed. Cas. No. 16,189.

FOREIGN WATERS. By U. S. R. S. § 4370, tugboats towing in whole or in part in foreign waters are exempt from a penalty therein imposed on foreign tugboats for towing vessels of the United States.

Where the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of June 15, 1846, fixed the boundary between the two countries in the strait of San Juan de Fuca by a line following the middle of the strait, but also secured to each nation a right of free navigation over all the waters of the strait, all the waters north of the boundary line were held to be "foreign waters," within the meaning of said section; The Pilot, 50 Fed. 437, 1 C. C. A. 523; reversing The Pilot, 48 Fed. 319.

FOREIGNER. One who is not a citizen. Cowell.

In the Old English Law, it seems to have been used of every one not an inhabitant of a city, at least with reference to that city; 1 H. Bla. 213. See Cowell, Foreigne.

In the United States, any one who was born in some other country than the United States, and who owes allegiance to some foreign state or country. Spratt v. Spratt, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 343, 349, 7 L. Ed. 171. An alien. See ALIEN; CITIZEN; NATURALIZATION.

FOREJUDGE. To deprive a man of the thing in question by sentence of court.

Among foreign writers, says Blount, forejudge is to banish, to expel. In this latter sense the word is also used in English law of an attorney who has been expelled from court for misconduct. Cowell; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FOREMAN. The presiding member of a grand or petit jury. See GRAND JURY; JURY.

FORENSIC. See FORENSIS.

FORENSIC MEDICINE. See MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

FORENSIS. Forensic. Belonging to court. Forensis homo, a man engaged in causes. A pleader; an advocate. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

FORESCHOKE. Forsaken; especially with reference to lands abandoned by the tenant. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

FORESHORE. That part of the land immediately in front of the shore; the part of it which is between high and low water marks, and alternately covered with water and left dry by the flux and reflux of the tides. It is indicated by the middle line between the highest and lowest tides (spring and neap). This term is usually used in England. The foreshore is prima facie the property of the crown, but it may belong to an individual if he can show a grant from the crown, or a user from which such grant can be inferred. The public may walk over it to reach the sea for the purposes of navigation, or fishery, but not for amusement or bathing or for gathering seaweed or stones. The public may navigate over it at high tide and anchor (but may not place moorings) and may fish; see [1904] 2 Ch. 313; [1909] 2 Ch. 709; [1899] 2 Ch. p. 709; [1897] 2 Q. B. 318; Odgers, C. L. 13. Public meetings cannot be held there; 72 J. P. 318. See SEA-SHORE.

FOREST. A certain territory of wooded ground and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in the safe protection of the prince for his princely delight and pleasure, having a peculiar court and officers. Man. For. Laws, cap. 1, num. 1; Termes de la Ley; 1 Bla. Com. 289.

A royal hunting-ground which lost its peculiar character with the extinction of its courts or when the franchise passed into the hands of a subject. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell; Man. For. Laws, cap. 1; 2 Bla. Com. 83; 1 Steph. Com. 665.

FOREST COURTS. Courts instituted for the government of the king's forest in different parts of the kingdom, and for the punishment of all injuries done to the king's deer or venison, to the vert or greensward, and to the covert in which the deer were lodged. They comprised the courts of attachments or woodmote, of regard, of swanimote, and of justice-seat (which several titles see); but since the revolution of 1688 these courts, it is said, have gone into absolute desuetude. 3 Steph. Com. 439; 2 Bla. Com. 71. But see 8 Q. B. 981, where a mandamus to the verderers of a royal forest was refused, on the ground that the court of the Chief Justice in Eyre had power to compel the verderers to permit the exercise of the rights sought to be enforced.

FOREST LAW. The old law relating to the forest, under which the most horrid tyrannies were exercised, in the confiscation of lands for the royal forests. Hallam's Const. Hist. ch. 8.

The privilege of reserving the forest for the use of the sovereign alone was instituted by the Saxon kings, who, however, occasionally conferred it upon a subject by special license. Under the Norman kings the national property became a royal demesne. The document called Constitutiones Cnuti de Foresta, attributed to Cnute, is a forgery. The law which it contains is the early Anglo-Norman law of William I. Brunner, Sources of English Law, 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 18. Forest laws were made absolutely at the king's will. Mrs. J. R. Green, 1 id. 113. There were four chiefs of the forest (primarii) who administered justice; under these were four mediocres who undertook the care of the venison and vert; and who in turn superintended two tithing-men whose duties were to care for the vert and venison by night and who, if slaves, became free on being appointed to this office. Complaints against the mediocres and the tithing-men were heard by the primarii and by them disposed of, and complaints against the primarii were dealt with by the king himself; Hallam, Anc. Laws and Inst. sec. 10. If a freeman used violence towards a primarius of the forest, he lost his freedom and his goods; if a villein, he lost his right hand; and for a repetition of the offence by either, he forfeited his life. Offences against the vert were dealt with leniently as compared with those against the venison, and there was also a difference in the penalties imposed for killing a royal beast and a beast of the forest; thus for killing the latter, a freeman was fined, while for the former he lost his liberty. A difference was also recognized according to the rank of the offender, as, if a bishop, abbot, or baron killed a royal beast he was subject to a fine, at the pleasure of the king, while for the same offence a slave lost his life. Certain animals are enumerated in this document for the killing of which no penalty was attached, and the wild boar is especially mentioned as never having been held to be an animal of venison; id. sec. 27.

Under the Confessor these laws were not enforced with the rigidity of Cnute, the penalties for trespass were moderate, and the administration of the forest law did not seem to be a subject of complaint from any class of people, but William the Conqueror soon altered this condition of affairs. The hunting of wild beasts of the forest being his chief pastime he immediately claimed absolute and exclusive right to all forests then existing, and allowed no one to enter without his license; he extended those already existing by laying waste (afforestation) whole towns and villages; and he devastated vast tracts in Hampshire and Yorkshire to form the new forest, "denuding the land of both God and man to make of it a home for wild beasts." Lappenburg, England, under the Anglo-Norman Kings 214. Sometimes he drove out the people and sometimes permitted them to remain under severe laws. The Conqueror appointed new judges of the forests to supersede the former judges and keepers; he created the office of chief justice of the forest and the verderers subordinate to the chief justice, who could convict offenders and send them before the chief justice, but who had no power to punish such offenders. The verderers sat at Swanimote and all within the limits of the forest were bound to attend this court thrice a year, and to serve on inquests and juries when required. The agistators, the forestarii, and the regarders were also appointed by the Normans as officers of the forest, but without judicial powers. The highest penalty enforced for offences in the forest during the reign of William I. seems to have been the loss of a limb or the eyes of the offender, and this was enforced and fines were imposed for the most trivial offences; Sax. Chronicles.

These abuses were continued until about the year 1215, the most extensive afforestations having been made under Richard I. and John. In the 47th and 48th clauses of the great charter certain provisions are found relating to the forest, but although the belief that John issued a charter distinct from these clauses is very ancient, it is erroneous; the document given in Matthieu Paris under the name, being the forest charter of Henry III. with an altered salutation. Stubbs' Charters 338. In the great charter the heavy burden of attending the forest courts is remitted and this provision was conferred in the charta de foresta, and thus the exact analogy established by Henry II. between the courts of the shire and those of the forest was abolished. The charta de foresta disafforested the lands appropriated by Richard and John and all those seized by Henry II. which had operated to the injury of the land-owners and outside of the royal demesne; it greatly mitigated the punishment for destroying game, and provided that for that offence no man should lose life or limb, and that his punishment shall be limited to a fine or imprisonment for a year and a day; the following curious provision occurs in cap. ii.: "Whatsoever archbishop, bishop, earl, or baron coming to us at our commandment, passing by our forest, it shall be lawful for him to take and kill one or two of our deer by view of our forester, if he be present; or else he shall cause him to blow a horn for him, that he seem not to steal our deer; and likewise they shall do returning from us," and this clause is still unrepealed. By reason of "the cruel and insupportable hardships which those forest laws created for the subject," says Blackstone, "we find the immunities of charta de foresta as warmly contended for, and extorted from the king with as much difficulty, as those of Magna Charta itself"; 2 Com. 416.

After this charter was issued, the forest laws not being enforced fell gradually into desuetude, until Charles I. attempted to revive them in order to replenish his exchequer, and the forest court of justice seat fined certain persons heavily for alleged encroachments on the ancient boundaries of the forest, although the right to such land was fortified by several centuries of possession. This was one of the first grievances on which the long parliament acted, and since the passing of the act "certainty of forests"; 16 Car. I. c. 16, where it was declared that all land should be held disafforested where no justice seat, swanimote, or court of attachment had been holden for sixty years next before the first year of the reign of Charles I., the laws of the forest have practically ceased, and by acts 14 and 15 Vict. c. 43, 16 and 17 Vict. c. 42, and 19 and 20 Vict. c. 32, many of the royal forests have been disafforested on the plea of public necessity. See Hallam, Hist. Eng. Const.; Stubbs' Charters; Inderwick, King's Peace; Turner, Select Pleas of the Forest; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 340; Encycl. Laws of England; Manwood, Forest Laws; Stubbs, Const. Hist. Charter of Forest; CHARTA DE FORESTA; FOREST COURTS.

In 1851, the greater part of the control of the forests was given to the commissioner of woods, forests and land revenues.

FORESTAGIUM. A tribute payable to the king's foresters. Cowell.

FORESTALL. To intercept or obstruct a passenger on the king's highway. Cowell; Blount. To beset the way of a tenant so as to prevent his coming on the premises. 3 Bla. Com. 170. To intercept a deer on his way to the forest before he can regain it. Cowell. See FORESTALLING THE MARKET.

FORESTALLER. One who commits the offence of forestalling. Used, also, to denote the crime itself; namely, the obstruction of the highway, or hindering a tenant from coming to his land. 3 Bla. Com. 170. Stopping a deer before he regains the forest. Cowell.

FORESTALLING THE MARKET. Buying victuals on their way to the market before they reach it, with the intent to sell again at a higher price. Cowell; Blount; 4 Bla. Com. 158. Every device or practice, by act, conspiracy, words, or news, to enhance the price of victuals or other provisions; Co. 3d Inst. 196; 1 Russ. Cri. 169; 4 Bla. Com. 158. See 13 Viner, Abr. 430; 1 East 132; 3 M. & S. 67. At common law, as well as by stat. 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 14, this was an indictable offence against public trade, but since the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24, the practice of forestalling is no longer illegal. See ENGROSS.

In the United States forestalling the market takes the form of "corners" or of "trusts," which are attempts by one person or a conspiracy or combination of persons to monopolize an article of trade or commerce, or to control or regulate, or to restrict its manufacture or production in such a manner as to enhance the price; Wright v. Crabbs, 78 Ind. 487; Arnot v. Coal Co., 68 N. Y. 558, 23 Am. Rep. 190. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

FORESTARIUS. A forester. An officer who takes care of the woods and forests. De forestario apponendo, a writ which lay to appoint a forester to prevent further commission of waste when a tenant in dower had committed waste. Bracton 316; Du Cange.

FORESTER. A sworn officer of the forest, appointed by the king's letters patent to walk the forest, watching both the vert and the venison, attaching and presenting all trespassers against them within their own bailiwick or walk. These letters patent were generally granted during good behavior; but sometimes they held the office in fee. Blount; Cowell.

FORFANG. A taking beforehand. A taking provisions from any one in fairs or markets before the king's purveyors are served with necessaries for his majesty. Blount; Cowell.

FORFEIT. To lose as the penalty of some misdeed or negligence. The word includes not merely the idea of losing, but also of having the property transferred to another without the consent of the owner and wrongdoer.

Lost by omission or negligence or misconduct. Nolander v. Burns, 48 Minn. 13, 50 N. W. 1016.

This is the essential meaning of the word, whether it be that an offender is to forfeit a sum of money, or an estate is to be forfeited to a former owner for a breach of condition, or to the king for some crime. Cowell says that forfeiture is general and confiscation a particular forfeiture to the king's exchequer. The modern distinction, however, seems to refer rather to a difference between forfeiture as relating to acts of the owner and confiscation as relating to acts of the government; Clark v. Ins. Co., 1 Sto. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 157, 10 L. Ed. 105; Fontaine v. Ins. Co., 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 293. Confiscation is more generally used of an appropriation of an enemy's property; forfeiture, or the taking possession of property to which the owner, who may be a citizen, has lost title through violation of laws. See 1 Kent 67; Clark v. Ins. Co., 1 Sto. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832.

A provision in an agreement, that for its breach the party shall "forfeit" a fixed sum, implies a penalty, not liquidated damages; Salters v. Ralph, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 273; Richards v. Edick, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 260; a contract to forfeit and pay a specified sum in default of performance is an agreement for liquidated damages; Nilson v. Jonesboro, 57 Ark. 168, 20 S. W. 1093; even where under the contract a bond is given as an earnest of good faith; id.

FORFEITABLE. Subject to forfeiture; as a franchise for misuser or non-user, or lands or property for crime.

FORFEITURE. A punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereby he loses all his interest therein, and they become vested in the party injured as a recompense for the wrong which he alone or the public together with himself, hath sustained. 2 Bla. Com. 267. A sum of money to be paid by way of penalty for a crime. Maclin v. Wilson, 21 Ala. 672; Anglea v. Com., 10 Gratt. (Va.) 700.

Forfeiture by alienation. By the English law, estates less than a fee may be forfeited to the party entitled to the residuary interest by a breach of duty in the owner of the particular estate; as if a tenant for his own life aliens by feoffments or fine for the life of another, or in tail, or in fee, or by recovery; there being estates, which either must or may last longer than his own, the creating them is not only beyond his power, but is a forfeiture of his own particular estate; 2 Bla. Com. 274; 1 Co. 14 b. But no forfeiture resulted from alienation of a fee tail by the particular tenant, the alienee holding the estate during the life of the tenant in tail, at whose death it went to the heir in tail. This was called a discontinuance of the estate tail. 3 Bla. Com. 171. See DISCONTINUANCE OF ESTATES.

In this country such forfeitures are almost unknown, and the more just principle prevails that the conveyance by the tenant operates only on the interest which he possessed, and does not affect the remainderman or reversioner; 4 Kent 81, 424; McMillan's Lessee v. Robbins, 5 Ohio 30; Stevens v. Winship, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 318, 11 Am. Dec. 178; Redfern v. Middleton's Ex'rs, Rice (S. C.) 459; Stump v. Findlay, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 168, 19 Am. Dec. 632; French v. Rollins, 21 Me. 372. See, also, Stearn, Real Act. 11; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 121, n.; Wms. R. P. 25; 1 Washb. R. P. 92, 197.

Forfeiture for crimes. Under the constitution and laws of the United States, Const. art. 3, § 3; Act of April 30, 1790, § 24, forfeiture for crimes is nearly abolished. And when it occurs the state recovers only the title which the owner had. See, also, Dalr. Feuds, p. 145; Fost. Cr. Law 95; 1 Washb. R. P. 92; Story, Const. 1296; Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 240, 6 S. E. 794.

Forfeiture for treason. The constitution of the United States, art. 3, § 2, provides that no attainder of treason shall work forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted. The Confiscation Act provided that only the life estate of the convicted person can be condemned and sold; Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 350, 19 L. Ed. 696; Day v. Micou, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 156, 21 L. Ed. 860. It was merely an exercise of the war power; Miller v. U. S., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 304, 20 L. Ed. 135; and did not apply to the confiscation of enemies' property; The Confiscation Cases, 1 Woods 221, Fed. Cas. No. 3,097.

Forfeiture by non-performance of conditions. An estate may be forfeited by a breach or non-performance of a condition annexed to the estate, either expressed in the deed at its original creation, or implied by law, from a principle of natural reason; 2 Bla. Com. 281; Littleton § 361; 1 Prest. Est. 478; Tud. Lead. Cas. 794; Hayden v. Inhabitants of Stoughton, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 528; Andrews v. Senter, 32 Me. 394; Bowen v. Bowen, 18 Conn. 535; Stafford v. Walker, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 190; Drown v. Ingels, 3 Wash. 424, 28 Pac. 759. Such forfeiture may be waived by acts of the person entitled to take advantage of the breach; Chalker v. Chalker, 1 Conn. 79, 6 Am. Dec. 206; Jackson v. Crysler, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 126; 1 Washb. R. P. 454; Hukill v. Myers, 36 W. Va. 639, 15 S. E. 151. In order to authorize a claim to forfeiture of valuable property on account of violation of a condition, proceedings to enforce must be had at once; Huston v. Bybee, 17 Or. 140, 20 Pac. 51, 2 L. R. A. 568;

Equity will not lend its aid to enforce a forfeiture because of a breach of condition subsequent in a deed, although the aid is sought upon the special ground of removing a cloud on the title; Douglas v. Life Ins. Co., 127 Ill. 101, 20 N. E. 51; nor will it concern itself to make up the loss of interest to one who refused the principal in the hope that he could enforce, upon purely technical grounds, a forfeiture of lands sold and all payments made thereon, under the terms of a harsh and unconscionable contract; Cheney v. Bilby, 74 Fed. 52, 20 C. C. A. 291. But where a covenant to build, in a lease, has been broken by the lessee, a court of bankruptcy acting as a court of equity may declare a forfeiture; Lindeke v. Realty Co., 146 Fed. 630, 77 C. C. A. 56; and equity will not prevent forfeiture if the lessee has been at fault; Kann v. King, 204 U. S. 43, 27 Sup. Ct. 213, 51 L. Ed. 360. But equity will relieve against a forfeiture where it would be unconscionable to enforce it; Maginnis v. Ice Co., 112 Wis. 385, 88 N. W. 300, 69 L. R. A. 833; and if there is some rule by which damages for the failure to perform a condition can be accurately measured in money; Gordon v. Richardson, 185 Mass. 492, 70 N. E. 1027, 69 L. R. A. 867; Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 415, 50 Am. Dec. 44; it is a question for the discretion of the court; 22 Ont. Rep. 1. Equity may relieve against forfeitures but not enforce them; South Carolina & G. R. Co. v. R. Co., 107 Ga. 164, 33 S. E. 36; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. R. Co., 76 Pa. 481.

Forfeiture by waste. Waste is a cause of forfeiture. 2 Bla. Com. 283; Co. 2d Inst. 299; 1 Washb. R. P. 118.

Forfeiture of property and rights cannot be adjudged by legislative acts, and confiscation without a judicial hearing after due notice would be void as not being due process of law; Walker v. McLoud, 204 U. S. 302, 27 Sup. Ct. 293, 51 L. Ed. 495. Nor can a party by his misconduct so forfeit a right that it may be taken from him without judicial proceedings, in which the forfeiture shall be declared in due form; Cooley, Const. Law 450; Griffin v. Mixon, 38 Miss. 434. Where no express power of removal is conferred upon the executive, he cannot declare an office forfeited for misbehavior; the forfeit must be declared by judicial proceedings; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 648; State v. Pritchard, 36 N. J. L. 101.

Forfeiture of wages. A provision in a contract for service to the effect that the wages of an employé shall be forfeited for neglect or misconduct which brings damage to a company, should be strictly construed as against the company; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Blanchard, 35 Ill. App. 481. Where, after being discharged, a railroad employé sues for wages, claiming to have been hired by the month, and this being admitted by the company, which sets up the defence that he was dismissed for cause, it is error to instruct the jury that they may find for the plaintiff if they believe from the evidence that he was hired by the month; Evans v. Ry. Co., 16 Mo. App. 522, reconciled in White v. R. Co., 20 Mo. App. 564.

Forfeiture of vessel. R. S. U. S. § 5283, provides for the forfeiture of every vessel which, within the limits of the United States, is fitted out and armed, or attempted to be so, to be employed in the service of any foreign prince, state, or people, to commit hostilities against the subjects, citizens, or property of a prince, state, or people with which the United States are at peace. Held, that under this section no forfeiture can be claimed of a vessel which is only employed to transport arms and munitions of war to a vessel fitting out to pursue the forbidden warlike enterprises; The Robert and Minnie, 47 Fed. 84; United States v. Trumbull, 48 Fed. 99; The Itata, 49 Fed. 646.

Forfeiture of charter. A corporation may be dissolved by a forfeiture of its charter for the non-user or misuser of its franchises; Boston Glass Mfg. v. Langdon, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 52, 35 Am. Dec. 292; State v. Jockey Club, 200 Mo. 34, 92 S. W. 182, 98 S. W. 539, New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336, 22 Sup. Ct. 691, 46 L. Ed. 936. It is only for the violation of an express provision of the organic law under which a corporation derives its powers or privileges, or for such a misuse or nonuse of them as results in a substantial failure to fulfil the purpose of its organization, that a forfeiture of a franchise will be decreed; Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Doud, 105 Fed. 123, 44 C. C. A. 389, 52 L. R. A. 481; State v. Bridge Co., 91 Ia. 517, 60 N. W. 121; State v. Farmers' College, 32 Ohio St. 487; Harris v. R. Co., 51 Miss. 602; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. People, 73 Ill. 541; State v. Bank, 5 Ark. 595, 41 Am. Dec. 109; State v. Société, 9 Mo. App. 114; State v. Water Co., 92 Wis. 496, 66 N. W. 512, 32 L. R. A. 391.

Accidental negligence or abuse of power will not warrant a forfeiture; there must be some plain abuse of its powers or neglect to exercise its franchises, and the acts of misuse or non-use must be wilful and repeated; Harris v. R. Co., 51 Miss. 602; State v. Turnpike Co. (Tenn.) 17 S. W. 128. Thus long-continued neglect on the part of a turnpike company to repair its road is cause of forfeiture; State v. Turnpike Co., 8 R. I. 182; id., 8 R. I. 521, 94 Am. Dec. 123. So of a bridge company, if it neglect for a long time to rebuild a bridge which has been carried away by a flood; People v. Turnpike Road, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 254; and deliberate attempts to evade the insurance law of a state in one of its most important provisions; International Fraternal Alliance v. State, 86 Md. 550, 39 Atl. 512, 40 L. R. A. 187; or wilful disregard of an act requiring the corporation to pay in the capital stock within two years after incorporation; People v. Stone & Cement Co., 131 N. Y. 140, 29 N. E. 947, 15 L. R. A. 240; or failure to make an annual report required by statute; id.; or charging illegal rates for furnishing water; State v. Waterworks Co., 107 La. 1, 31 South. 395, affirmed, New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336, 22 Sup. Ct. 691, 46 L. Ed. 936; or holding lands contrary to the law; Com. v. R. Co., 132 Pa. 591, 19 Atl. 291, 7 L. R. A. 634. Neglect to have corporate property listed for taxation was held not sufficient ground for forfeiture; North & South Rolling Stock Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 234, 35 N. E. 608, 24 L. R. A. 462.

A forfeiture must be judicially declared; La Grange & M. R. Co. v. Rainey, 7 Cold. (Tenn.) 420; In re Brooklyn, W. & N. Ry. Co., 72 N. Y. 245; Wicks v. Monihan, 130 N. Y. 232, 29 N. E. 139, 14 L. R. A. 243. A forfeiture can be enforced by scire facias or a quo warranto only at the suit of the government which created the corporation; State v. Coal Co., 46 Md. 1; Com. v. Small, 26 Pa. 31; Elizabethtown Gas Light Co. v. Green, 46 N. J. Eq. 118, 18 Atl. 844; Bass v. Navigation & Water-Power Co., 111 N. C. 439, 14 S. E. 402, 19 L. R. A. 247. But not at the suit of an individual; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344; Frost v. Coal Co., 24 How. (U. S.) 278, 16 L. Ed. 637; Williams v. Ry. Co., 130 Ind. 71, 29 N. E. 408, 15 L. R. A. 64, 30 Am. St. Rep. 201. The state may waive a cause of forfeiture; People v. President & Directors of Manhattan Co., 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 351; State v. Morris, 73 Tex. 435, 11 S. W. 392; and it will not interfere, if the unauthorized acts of a corporation affect merely stockholders and creditors who have an adequate legal remedy; State v. Mfg. Co., 40 Minn. 213, 41 N. W. 1020, 3 L. R. A. 510.

Equity has no jurisdiction in the matter; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 10, 40; Attorney General v. Stevens, 1 N. J. Eq. 369, 22 Am. Dec. 526; State v. Merchants' Ins. & Trust Co., 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 253. But where there was a franchise to construct a street railway in a specified time, and in case of failure the franchise to be forfeited, the right was lost without suit, there having been a failure; Oakland R. Co. v. R. Co., 45 Cal. 365, 13 Am. Rep. 181.

Forfeiture for contesting a will. It is not against public policy for a will to provide that any contestant shall forfeit his interest under the will; In re Hite's Estate, 155 Cal. 436, 101 Pac. 443, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993. As to what amounts to such contest, resulting in forfeiture, the rule seems to be that, where the legatee seeks to thwart the testator's expressed wishes, it is a contest; In re Hite's Estate, 155 Cal. 436, 101 Pac. 443, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993. Disputes over construction of wills are not contests; Black v. Herring, 79 Md. 146, 28 Atl. 1063; Woodward v. James, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 95; Ir. L. R. 11 Eq. 409; nor where the legatee appears by attorney and cross-examines witnesses at the probate of a will; In re Bratt, 10 Misc. 491, 32 N. Y. Supp. 168. But if the legatee deny the ownership of the testator, there is contest and forfeiture; Smithsonian Inst. v. Meech, 169 U. S. 398, 18 Sup. Ct. 396, 42 L. Ed. 793; or if one legatee advise and aid another in a contest; Donegan v. Wade, 70 Ala. 501. An infant is not responsible for proceedings by a guardian ad litem; Bryant v. Thompson, 59 Hun 545, 14 N. Y. Supp. 28; id., 128 N. Y. 426, 28 N. E. 522, 13 L. R. A. 745. See Chew's Appeal, 45 Pa. 228, holding that such clauses are to be construed strictly and when merely denouncing such contests and making no gift over, they are considered as only in terrorem.

FORFEITURE OF A BOND. A failure to perform the condition on which the obligee was to be excused from the penalty in the bond. Courts of equity and of law in modern practice will relieve from the forfeiture of a bond; and, upon proper cause shown, criminal courts will, in general, relieve from the forfeiture of a recognizance to appear. See Respublica v. Cobbet, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 93; Stegars v. State, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 104; Elliott v. Armstrong, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 200.

FORFEITURE OF MARRIAGE. A penalty incurred by a ward in chivalry when he or she married contrary to the wishes of his or her guardian in chivalry.

The latter, who was the ward's lord, had an interest in controlling the marriage of his female wards, and he could exact a price for his consent; and at length it became customary to sell the marriage of wards of both sexes; 2 Bla. Com. 70.

When a male ward refused an equal match provided by his guardian, he was obliged, on coming of age, to pay him the value of the marriage,—that is, as much as he had been bona fide offered for it, or, if the guardian chose, as much as a jury would assess, taking into consideration all the real and personal property of the ward; and the guardian could claim this value although he might have made no tender of the marriage; Co. Litt. 82 a; Co. 2d Inst. 92; 5 Co. 126 b; 6 id. 70 b.

When a male ward between the age of fourteen and twenty-one refused to accept an offer of an equal match (one without disparagement), and during that period formed an alliance elsewhere without his guardian's permission, he incurred forfeiture of marriage,—that is, he became liable to pay double the value of the marriage. Co. Litt. 78 b, 82 b.

FORFEITURE OF SILK. In English Law. When the importation of silk was prohibited it was customary at each term of the Exchequer to proclaim a forfeiture of such as was suffered to lie in the docks.

FORGE. To fabricate by false imitation; especially, in law, to make a false instrument in similitude of an instrument by which one person could be obligated to another for the purpose of fraud and deceit. People v. Mitchell, 92 Cal. 590, 28 Pac. 597, 788. See State v. McKenzie, 42 Me. 392.

FORGERY. The falsely making or materially altering, with intent to defraud, any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy or the foundation of a legal liability. 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 523; Smith v. State, 29 Fla. 408, 10 South. 894.

The fraudulent making and alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right. 4 Bla. Com. 247. The essence of forgery consists in making an instrument appear to be that which it is not; L. R. 1 C. C. R. 200.

Bishop, 2 Cr. Law § 523, n., has collected nine definitions of forgery, and remarks that the books abound in definitions. Coke says the term is "taken metaphorically from the smith, who beateth upon his anvil and forgeth what fashion and shape he will." Co. 3d Inst. 169.

A person may commit forgery by fraudulently making, over his own signature, a paper writing which, if genuine, would possess legal efficacy, and might operate to the prejudice of another's rights; Luttrell v. State, 85 Tenn. 232, 1 S. W. 886, 4 Am. St. Rep. 760. One may have authority to sign the name of another to an instrument for the payment of money in a stated amount, or for a legal purpose, and yet commit a forgery by signing for a larger amount, or for an illegal purpose with intent to defraud; Claiborne v. State, 51 Ark. 88, 9 S. W. 851.

A clerk in the telegraph office who sent to a bookmaker a telegram offering to bet on a certain horse, which purported to be sent before the race, and to be signed by a person who had authorized him to telegraph bets in his name, but which was in fact sent after the clerk knew that the horse had won the race, was held guilty of forgery under a statute against procuring money by virtue of any forged or altered instrument. Lord Russell, C. J., and Vaughan Williams, J., doubted as to the statute, but not that it was forgery at common law; [1896] 1 Q. B. 309.

The making of a whole written instrument in the name of another with a fraudulent intent is undoubtedly a sufficient making; although otherwise where one executes a promissory note as agent for a principal from whom he has no authority; Mann v. People, 15 Hun 155; but a fraudulent insertion, alteration, or erasure, even of a letter, in any material part of the instrument, whereby a new operation is given to it, will amount to a forgery; State v. Floyd, 5 Strobh. (S. C.) 58, 53 Am. Dec. 689; L. R. 1 C. C. R. 200; and this, although it be afterwards executed by a person ignorant of the deceit; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 855.

The fraudulent application of a true signature to a false instrument for which it was not intended, or vice versa, will also be a forgery; Powell v. Com., 11 Gratt. (Va.) 822; Pennsylvania v. Misner, Add. (Pa.) 44. For example, it is forgery in an individual who is requested to draw a will for a sick person in a particular way, instead of doing so, to insert legacies of his own head, and then procure the signature of such sick person to the paper without revealing to him the legacies thus fraudulently inserted; F. Moore 759; Co. 3d Inst. 170; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 70, s. 2; 2 Russ. Cr. 318; Bacon, Abr. Forgery (A); so held of one who was employed to draw a will and fraudulently omitted a legacy; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 70, § 6; 3 Chitty, Cr. L. 1038. One was held not to be guilty of forgery, who in writing a promissory note for an illiterate person to execute, inserts therein an amount larger than directed; Wells v. State, 89 Ga. 788, 15 S. E. 679.

It has been intimated by Lord Ellenborough that a party who makes a copy of a receipt and adds to such copy material words not in the original, and then offers it in evidence on the ground that the original has been lost, may be prosecuted for forgery; 5 Esp. 100.

It is a sufficient making where, in the writing, the party assumes the name and character of a person in existence; 2 Russ. Cri. 327. But the adoption of a false description and addition where a false name is not assumed and there is no person answering the description, is not a forgery; 1 Russ. & R. 405.

Making an instrument in a fictitious name, or the name of a non-existing person, is as much a forgery as making it in the name of an existing person; 2 Russ. Cri. 328; Brewer v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 74, 22 S. W. 41, 40 Am. St. Rep. 760; Lascelles v. State, 90 Ga. 347, 16 S. E. 945, 35 Am. St. Rep. 216; and although a man may make the instrument in his own name, if he represent it as the instrument of another of the same name, when in fact there is no such person, it will be a forgery in the name of a non-existing person; 2 Leach 775; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 963; U. S. v. Turner, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 132, 8 L. Ed. 633; (See State v. Bauman, 52 Ia. 68, 2 N. W. 956.) But the correctness of this decision has been doubted; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 384. One who, with intent to forge the check of "R. & M.," signs the name "A. E. R. & Co." thereto, believing it to be the true name of the firm, is not guilty of forgery; People v. Elliott, 90 Cal. 586, 27 Pac. 433.

The offence may be complete without a publication of the forged instrument; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 855.

The presumption is that a drawee bank knows the signature of its own customers; Neal v. Coburn, 92 Me. 139, 42 Atl. 348, 69 Am. St. Rep. 495; First Nat. Bank of Danvers v. Bank, 151 Mass. 280, 24 N. E. 44, 21 Am. St. Rep. 450. But this presumption is conclusive only when the party receiving the money has in no way contributed to the success of the fraud or mistake of fact under which the payment was made. In the absence of actual fault on the part of the drawee, his constructive fault in not knowing the signature of the drawer, and detecting the forgery will not preclude his recovery from one who took the check under circumstances of suspicion without proper precaution, or whose conduct has been such as to mislead the drawee or to induce him to pay the check without the usual security against fraud; id.; Ford v. Bank, 74 S. C. 180, 54 S. E. 204, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 63, 114 Am. St. Rep. 986, 7 Ann. Cas. 744.

Where the payee cut a note signed by three school trustees from an order blank for school supplies and transferred such note to another instrument for the payment of money, held that the alteration being made with criminal intent, it was forgery; State v. Mitton, 37 Mont. 366, 96 Pac. 926, 127 Am. St. Rep. 732.

With regard to the thing forged, it may be observed that it has been holden to be forgery at common law fraudulently to falsify or falsely make records and other matters of a public nature; 1 Rolle, Abr. 65, 68; a parish register; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 70; a letter in the name of a magistrate, or of the governor of a gaol directing the discharge of a prisoner; 6 C. & P. 129; Mood. 379; the making a false municipal certificate with intent to defraud is forgery, notwithstanding the city has not power to issue such certificates; State v. Eades, 68 Mo. 150, 30 Am. Rep. 780; the alteration of a document to prevent the discovery of an embezzlement; 11 Crim. L. Mag. 47.

With regard to private writings, forgery may be committed of any writing which, if genuine, would operate to the foundation of another man's liability or the evidence of his right; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 103; Com. v. Ward, 2 Mass. 397; Butler v. Com., 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 237, 14 Am. Dec. 679; State v. Smith, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 150; as, a check; Hendrick v. Com., 5 Leigh (Va.) 707; an assignment of a legal claim; an indorsement of a promissory note; Powell v. Com., 11 Gratt. (Va.) 822; State v. Carragin, 210 Mo. 351, 109 S. W. 553, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561; writing the name of the payee falsely and fraudulently on the back of a treasury warrant payable to order; U. S. v. Jolly, 37 Fed. 108; a receipt or acquittance; Com. v. Ladd, 15 Mass. 526; an acceptance of a bill of exchange, or an order for the delivery of goods; 8 C. & P. 629; Com. v. Ayer, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 150; Hendricks v. State, 26 Tex. App. 176, 9 S. W. 555, 557, 8 Am. St. Rep. 463; Reddick v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 587, 21 S. W. 684; or an order for money; Gibson v. State, 79 Ga. 344, 5 S. E. 76; a deposition to be used in court; State v. Kimball, 50 Me. 409; a private act of parliament; 4 How. St. Tr. 951; a copy of any instrument to be used in evidence in the place of a real or supposed original; State v. Smith, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 150; false entries in the books of a mercantile house, but not necessarily so in every case; Biles v. Com., 32 Pa. 529, 75 Am. Dec. 568; State v. Young, 46 N. H. 266, 88 Am. Dec. 212; a letter of recommendation of a person as a man of property and pecuniary responsibility; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 365; People v. Abeel, 182 N. Y. 415, 75 N. E. 307, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, 3 Ann. Cas. 287; a false testimonial to character; Templ. & M. 207; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 492; Dearsl. 285; a railway pass; 2 C. & K. 604; a railroad-ticket; Com. v. Ray, 3 Gray (Mass.) 441; a certified bill of costs; Luttrell v. State, 85 Tenn. 232, 1 S. W. 886, 4 Am. St. Rep. 760; or of a contract which, if genuine, would be void as against public policy; People v. Munroe, 100 Cal. 664, 35 Pac. 326, 24 L. R. A. 33, 38 Am. St. Rep. 323. Forgery may be of a printed or engraved as well as of a written instrument; Com. v. Ray, 3 Gray (Mass.) 441; Henshaw v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 312; Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 8 Sup. Ct. 1240, 32 L. Ed. 234; but falsely to subscribe a person's name to a recommendation of a medicine is not forgery; Miller v. Rittinger, 2 Pear. (Pa.) 351; nor to alter a lease by interlineations in order to conform it to the purpose of parties; Pauli v. Com., 89 Pa. 432; nor is the private memorandum-book of a public officer, not required to be kept by law, the subject of forgery; Downing v. Brown, 3 Colo. 571; nor the changing the date of tax receipts which still show on their face that they were given for the taxes of the year previous; Cox v. State, 66 Miss. 14, 5 South. 618; a forgery must be of some document or writing; therefore, the printing an artist's name in the corner of a picture, in order falsely to pass it off as an original picture by that artist, is not a forgery; 1 Dearsl. & B. 460; Clark, Cr. L. 295.

Knowingly to utter a false letter by which the sentiments, character, prospects, interests, etc., of the person whose utterance the writing purports to be are misrepresented, whereby the writer induced a woman to promise to marry him, was held to be forgery, though not injurious to the person whose name was forged; People v. Abeel, 182 N. Y. 415, 75 N. E. 307, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, 3 Ann. Cas. 287.

The seal of a corporation is a "character" within the meaning of the New Jersey Crimes Act (relating to forgery) and the forgery of such seal is a crime thereunder; U. S. v. Andem, 158 Fed. 996.

The intent must be to defraud another; Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. v. Butler, 83 Ia. 128, 48 N. W. 1026; McDonald v. State, 83 Ala. 46, 3 South. 305; but it is not requisite that any one should have been injured; it is sufficient that the instrument forged might have proved prejudicial; Arnold v. Cost, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 220, 22 Am. Dec. 302; U. S. v. Moses, 4 Wash. C. C. 726, Fed. Cas. No. 15,825; Crawford v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 51, 19 S. W. 766; it has been holden that the jury ought to infer an intent to defraud the person who would have to pay the instrument, if it were genuine, although from the manner of executing the forgery, or from the person's ordinary caution, it would not be likely to impose upon him; and although the object was general to defraud whoever might take the instrument, and the intention of the defrauding in particular the person who would have to pay the instrument, if genuine, did not enter into the contemplation of the prisoner; Russ. & R. 291; State v. Cross, 101 N. C. 770, 7 S. E. 715, 9 Am. St. Rep. 53; State v. Gryder, 44 La. Ann. 962, 11 South. 573, 32 Am. St. Rep. 358. See Russ. Cri. b. 4, c. 32, s. 3; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 853; 1 Leach 367; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 400; Clark, Cr. L. 300.

Most, and perhaps all, of the states have passed laws making certain acts to be forgery with the result, upon the whole, of enlarging the meaning of the term, and the national legislature has also enacted several on this subject; but these statutes do not take away the character of the offence as a misdemeanor at common law, but only provide additional punishment in the cases particularly enumerated in the statutes; Com. v. Ayer, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 150; Com. v. Ray, 3 Gray (Mass.) 441.

It has been held that the crime of uttering forged commercial paper is included in the common-law definition of the word "forgery" as used in a treaty, and that a prisoner charged with it should be surrendered, although under the law of the other treaty power that crime is known as "fraud" by means of forgery, and "forgery" is only falsification of public documents; In re Adutt, 55 Fed. 376.

The act of offering for sale and selling a forged instrument is a sufficient representation as to its genuineness; State v. Calkins, 73 Ia. 128, 34 N. W. 777.

When separate instruments are forged on the same date and as part of the same general transaction, the forgery of each constitutes a separate offense; U. S. v. Carpenter, 151 Fed. 214, 81 C. C. A. 194, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043, 10 Ann. Cas. 509; Barton v. State, 23 Wis. 587.

Although counts for forgery and uttering a forged instrument may be joined in the same indictment, a conviction cannot be had on both; State v. Carragin, 210 Mo. 351, 109 S. W. 553, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561.

See Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, cc. 51, 70; 3 Chitty, Cr. L. 1022; 2 Russ. Cr. b. 4, c. 32; 2 Bish. Cr. L. c. 22; 2 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 398; 1 Whart. Cr. L. c. 9; COUNTERFEIT; UTTERING; CHECK; INDORSEMENT.

FORHERDA. In Old English Law. A headland, or foreland. Cowell.

FORI DISPUTATIONES. In Civil Law. Arguments in court. Disputations or arguments before a court. Eminent citizens and statesmen often debated in the forum, and their answers to questions put were gradually adopted by the courts and incorporated into the body of the Roman law under this name. 1 Kent 530; Vicat, Voc. Jur. verb. Disputatio.

FORINSECUS (Lat.), FORINSIC. Outward; on the outside; without; foreign; belonging to another manor. Silio forinsecus, the outward ridge or furrow. Servitium forinsecum, the payment of aid, scutage, and other extraordinary military services. Forinsecum manerium, the manor, or that part of it which lies outside the bars or town and is not included within the liberties of it. Cowell; Blount; Cunningham, Law Dict.; Jacob, Foreign Service; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 273.

Forinsec service was the service due to the crown upon land; service due between grantor and grantee was termed intrinsic. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 158. See 1 Poll. & Maitl. 217.

FORIS (Lat.). Out at the doors, out of door; abroad; without. Harp. Lat. Dict.

FORIS FAMILIATION. The separation of a child from the father's family. Bell; Toml.

One who is no longer an heir of the parent was termed forisfamiliatus. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell. Similar in some degree to the modern practice of advancement.

FORISBANITUS. Banished. Mat. Par. 1245.

FORISFACERE (Lat.). To forfeit. To lose on account of crime. It may be applied not only to estates, but to a variety of other things, in precisely the popular sense of the word forfeit. Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange.

To confiscate. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

To commit an offence; to do a wrong. To do something beyond or outside of (foris) what is right (extra rationem). Du Cange. To do a thing against or without law. Co. Litt. 59 a.

To disclaim. Du Cange.

FORISFACTUM (Lat.). Forfeited. Bona forisfacta, forfeited goods; 1 Bla. Com. 299. A crime. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

FORISFACTURA (Lat.). A crime or offence through which property is forfeited. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 32.

A fine or punishment in money.

Forfeiture. The loss of property or life in consequence of crime. Spelman, Gloss.

Forisfactura plena. A forfeiture of all of a man's property. Things which were forfeited. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

FORISFACTUS (Lat.). A criminal. One who has forfeited his life by commission of a capital offence. Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange. Si quispiam forisfactus poposcerit regis misericordiam, etc. (if any criminal shall have asked pardon of the king, etc.). Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 18.

Forisfactus servus. A slave who has been a free man but has forfeited his freedom by crime. Leg. Athelstan, c. 3; Du Cange.

FORISFAMILIATED, FORISFAMILIATUS. In Old English Law. Portioned off. A son was forisfamiliated when he had a portion of his father's estate assigned to him during his father's life, in lieu of his share of the inheritance, when it was done at his request and he assented to the assignment. The word etymologically denotes put out of the family (foris familiam ponere, from which is forisfamiliare; Glanv. l. 7, c. 3) mancipated. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. L. 110; Bract, fol. 64.

FORISJUDICATIO (Lat.). In Old English Law. Forejudger. A forejudgment. A judgment of court whereby a man is put out of possession of a thing. Co. Litt. 100 b; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FORISJUDICATUS (Lat.). Forejudged; sent from court; banished. Deprived of a thing by judgment of court. Bracton, 250 b; Co. Litt. 100 b; Du Cange.

FORISJURARE (Lat.). To forswear; to abjure; to abandon. Forisjurare parentilam. To remove oneself from parental authority. The person who did this lost his rights as heir. Du Cange; Leg. Hen. I. c. 88.

Provinciam forisjurare. To forswear the country, Spelman, Gloss.; Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 6.

FORJUDGE. See FOREJUDGE.

FORJURER (L. Fr.). In Old English Law. To abjure; to forswear. Forjurer royalme, to abjure the realm. Britt. cc. 1, 16.

FORLER-LAND. Land in the diocese of Hereford, which had a peculiar custom attached to it, but which has been long since disused, although the name is retained. Butl. Surv. 56.

"Some of the peculiar customs of Hereford are recently published, as that 'the reeve of the borough may have been directly accountable to the king,' while 'in most cases the king's farmer was the sheriff of the shire.' Maitl. Domesd. Book and Beyond 209. So also, 'at Hereford the reeve's consent was necessary when a burgage was to be sold, and he took a third of the price.' When a burgess died the king got his horse and arms (these Hereford burgesses were fighting men); if he had no horse, then ten shillings 'or his land with the houses.' Any one who was too poor to do his service might abandon his tenement to the reeve without having to pay for it. Such an entry as this seems to tell us that the services were no trivial return for the tenements;" id. 199.

FORM. The model of an instrument or legal proceeding, containing the substance and the principal terms, to be used in accordance with the laws.

The legal order or method of legal proceedings or construction of legal instruments.

Form is usually put in contradistinction to substance. For example, by the operation of the statute of 27 Eliz. c. 5, s. 1, all merely formal defects in pleading, except in dilatory pleas, are aided on general demurrer. The difference between matter of form and matter of substance, in general, under this statute, as laid down by Lord Hobart, C. J., is that "that without which the right doth sufficiently appear to the court is form;" but that any defect "by reason whereof the right appears not" is a defect in substance; Hob. 233. A distinction somewhat more definite is that if the matter pleaded be in itself insufficient, without reference to the manner of pleading it, the defect is substantial; but that if the fault is in the manner of alleging it, the defect is formal; Dougl. 683.

For example, the omission of a consideration in a declaration in assumpsit, or of the performance of a condition precedent, when such condition exists, of a conversion of property of the plaintiff, in trover, of knowledge in the defendant, in an action for mischief done by his dog, of malice, in an action for malicious prosecution, and the like, are all defects in substance. On the other hand, duplicity, a negative pregnant, argumentative pleading, a special plea, amounting to the general issue, omission of a day, when time is immaterial, of a place, in transitory actions, and the like, are only faults in form; Bacon, Abr. Pleas, etc. (N 5, 6); Comyns, Dig. Pleader (Q 7); 10 Co. 95 a; 2 Stra. 694; Gould, Pl. c. 9, § 18; 1 Bla. Com. 142.

At the same time that fastidious objections against trifling errors of form, arising from mere clerical mistakes, are not encouraged or sanctioned by the courts, it has been justly observed that "infinite mischief has been produced by the facility of the courts in overlooking matters of form; it encourages carelessness, and places ignorance too much upon a footing with knowledge amongst those who practise the drawing of pleadings;" 1 B. & P. 59; Comm. v. Emery, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 434.

FORMA. Form; the prescribed or established form or method of legal proceedings; applied to obsolete actions "which are frequently mere establishments, Forma et figura judicii," the form and shape of judicial action. 3 Bla. Com. 271.

FORMA PAUPERIS. See IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

FORMALITIES. Customary behavior, dress, or ceremony; ceremonial. Cent. Dict.

In England. Robes worn by the magistrates of a city or corporation, etc., on solemn occasions. Encyc. Lond.

FORMALITY. The conditions which must be observed in making contracts, and the words which the law gives to be used in order to render them valid; it also signifies the conditions which the law requires to make regular proceedings.

FORMATA. Canonical letters. Spelman.

FORMATA BREVIA. See BREVIA FORMATA.

FORMED ACTION. An action for which a form of words is provided which must be exactly followed. 10 Mod. 140.

FORMEDON. An ancient writ provided by stat. Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I.) c. 1, for him who hath right to lands or tenements by virtue of a gift in tail. Stearn, Real Act. 322; Andr. Steph. Pl. 66.

It is a writ in the nature of a writ of right, and is the highest remedy which a tenant in tail can have. Co. Litt. 316.

This writ lay for those interested in an estate-tail who were liable to be defeated of their right by a discontinuance of the estate-tail, who were not entitled to a writ of right absolute, since none but those who claimed in fee-simple were entitled to this; Fitzh. N. B. 255. It is called formedon because the plaintiff in it claimed per formam doni.

It is of three sorts: See the following titles. Abolished by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

FORMEDON IN DESCENDER. Lies where a gift is made in tail and the tenant in tail aliens the lands or is disseised of them and dies, for the heir in tail to recover them, against the actual tenant of the freehold; Fitzh. N. B. 211; Littleton § 595.

If the demandant claims the inheritance as an estate-tail which ought to come to him by descent, from some ancestor to whom it was first given, his remedy is by a writ of formedon in descender; Stearn, Real Act. 322. It must have been brought within twenty years from the death of the ancestor who was disseised; 21 Jac. I. c. 16; 3 Brod. & B. 217; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 193, n.

FORMEDON IN THE REMAINDER. Lies where lands are given to one for life or in tail with remainder to another in fee or in tail, and he who had the particular estate dies without issue, and a stranger intrudes upon him in remainder and keeps him out of possession. Fitzh. N. B. 211; Littleton § 597; 3 Bla. Com. 293.

FORMEDON IN THE REVERTER. Lies where there is a gift in tail, and afterwards, by the death of the donee or his heirs without issue of his body, the reversion falls in upon the donor, his heirs or assigns.

In this case the demandant must suggest the gift, his own right as derived from the donor, and the failure of heirs of the donee; 3 Bla. Com. 293; Stearn, Real Act. 323; Fitzh. N. B. 212; Littleton § 597.

FORMER ACQUITTAL. See AUTREFOIS ACQUIT.

FORMER JEOPARDY. See JEOPARDY.

FORMER RECOVERY. A recovery in a former action. The term former adjudication is sometimes, though infrequently, used.

It is a general rule that in a real or personal action a judgment unreversed, whether it be by confession, verdict, or demurrer, is a perpetual bar, and may be pleaded to any new action of the same or a like nature, for the same cause; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (I 12, n. 2); 6 Co. 7; Hob. 4, 5.

There are two exceptions to this general rule. First, in the case of mutual dealings between the parties, when the defendant omits to set off his counter-demand, he may recover in a cross action. Second, when the defendant in ejectment neglects to bring forward his title, he may avail himself of a new suit; Le Guen v. Gouverneur, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 492, 502, 510, 1 Am. Dec. 121. It is evident that in these cases the cause of the second action is not the same as that of the first, and, therefore, a former recovery cannot be pleaded. In real actions, one is not a bar to an action of a higher nature; 6 Co. 7. See Kent v. Kent, 2 Mass. 338; RES JUDICATA.

FORMER TRIAL. Testimony given on a former trial may be given in evidence from the judge's notes or from notes of any other person who will swear to their accuracy, or by any person who will swear to its having been given; 3 Taunt. 262, per Mansfield, C. J.; so of any witness who will swear from his memory to its having been given; Johnson v. Powers, 40 Vt. 611. A justice of the peace may testify as to evidence given before him on a former trial; McGeoch v. Carlson, 96 Wis. 138, 71 N. W. 116. To impeach a witness by showing that he testified differently at a former trial one who had heard him testify is competent; McRorie v. Monroe, 203 N. Y. 426, 96 N. E. 724, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 94. It is no objection that the legally appointed stenographer could give better evidence; State v. McDonald, 65 Me. 466. See DEPOSITIONS.

FORMIDO PERICULI (Lat.). Fear of danger. 1 Kent, Com. 23.

FORMS OF ACTION. This term comprehends the various classes of personal action at common law, viz.: trespass, case, trover, detinue, replevin, covenant, debt, assumpsit, scire facias, and revivor, as well as the nearly obsolete actions of account and annuity, and the modern action of mandamus. They are now abolished in England by the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875, and in many of the states of the United States, where a uniform course of proceeding under codes of procedure has taken their place. But the principles regulating the distinctions between the common-law actions are still found applicable even where the technical forms are abolished.

FORMULA. In common-law practice, a set form of words used in judicial proceedings. In the civil law, an action. Calvin; Black.

FORMULÆ. In Roman Law. Directions sent by the magistrate to the judge for the dispositions of cases, with respect to which the legis actiones (established actions, or, more accurately according to English legal idiom, forms of action) were inadequate. Sand. Just. Introd. lxviii.

The introduction of the formulæ marked a distinct change in the Roman system of civil process, and they were in turn succeeded by an equally radical change. These periods have been designated as three great epochs. First, was the system of the legis actiones, defined as "certain hard, sharply defined forms which a rude civilization prescribed for all proceedings." These, as civilization advanced, were necessarily replaced by more convenient forms of action, and were finally practically suppressed. The new system of formulæ was a very flexible form of organizing the proceedings adopted by the prætors, by which they were "enabled to give a means enforcing every right which the more enlarged views of an advancing civilization pronounced to be founded on equity." The prætors (in the provinces, præfects) sat as magistrates. From them the directions were sent to the judge in formal shape for each case; and the different forms in which these directions were given were expressed by the formulæ. They were binding on the judge, but no form was binding on the magistrate, who could avail himself "of any equitable doctrine, which a more refined jurisprudence or his own sense of what was right suggested to him," and so "vary the formula, so as to render substantial justice." "These formulæ (which were preserved and collected), so flexible in their general character, yet couched in terms always precise and simple, furnish one of many admirable instances of the power of the Romans to express correctly the subtlest legal ideas; and it was by this machinery that the prætors principally introduced their great legal changes."

The formula ordinarily consisted of these three parts:

The demonstratio or statement of the fact or facts which the plaintiff alleges as the ground of his case.

The intentio, the really important part of the formula, a precise statement of the demand which the plaintiff made against (tendebat in) his adversary. It was necessary that it should exactly meet the law which would govern the facts alleged by the plaintiff if true.

The condemnatio, the direction to condemn or absolve according to the true circumstances of the case. In three actions, —to divide a family inheritance, or property held in common, or settle boundaries, the judge was required to adjudicate. This was termed the adjudicatio. In these actions, therefore, the parts of the formula would be four—demonstratio, intentio, adjudicatio, and condemnatio, in case, as might happen, the judge should order a payment in money by some of the parties to equalize the division; the condemnatio, under this system, being always pecuniary.

This system finally gave place to that which prevailed in the third period of the Roman system, "that of the extraordinaria judicia, by which, under the later emperors, the supreme authority took the whole conduct of the proceeding into its own hands, and arrived at what seemed to it to be just, in as direct and speedy a manner as it found possible." See a clear and satisfactory statement of the Roman system of civil process during these three periods; Sand. Just. Introd. lxi. See also Mackeld. Rom. Law § 204.

FORMULARIES. A collection of the forms of proceedings among the Franks and other early European nations. Co. Litt. Butler's note, 77.

FORNAGIUM. The fee taken by a lord of his tenants bound to bake in his common oven, for liberty to use their own. Cowell; Moz. & W.

FORNICATION. Unlawful carnal knowledge by an unmarried person of another, whether the latter be married or unmarried.

Fornication is distinguished from adultery by the fact that the guilty person is not married. Four cases of unlawful intercourse may arise: where both parties are married; where the man only is married; where the woman only is married; where neither is married. In the first case such intercourse must be adultery; in the second case the crime is fornication only on the part of the woman, but adultery on the part of the man; in the third case it is adultery in the woman, and fornication (by statute in some states, adultery) in the man; in the last case it is fornication only in both parties.

It is criminal intercourse between unmarried persons; Territory v. Whitcomb, 1 Mont. 359, 25 Am. Rep. 740; Neil v. State, 117 Ga. 14, 43 S. E. 435; or it is held to be intercourse between a married or unmarried man and an unmarried woman; Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263, 26 Am. Rep. 21.

Simple incontinence is not punishable at common law; Com. v. Jones, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 555; simple fornication, without issue born, is not an indictable offence; Smith v. Minor, 1 N. J. L. 16; State v. Rahl, 33 Tex. 76; in the District of Columbia; Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225, 23 L. Ed. 308; merely getting an unmarried woman with child is not indictable; but living in notorious fornication is; Lumpkins v. Justice, 1 Ind. 557.

In some states it is indictable by statute; State v. Way, 6 Vt. 311; 2 Tayl. C. 165; Com. v. Jones, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 555; and where it is there may be a conviction for this offence on an indictment for adultery; State v. Cowell, 26 N. C. 231; 1 Bish. Crim. L. 795. In Pennsylvania it is a misdemeanor for which an indictment lies, and is also a constituent of incest, adultery, seduction under promise of marriage, and rape; Com. v. Arner, 149 Pa. 35, 24 Atl. 83.

FORNIX (Lat. a vault or arch). A brothel,—so-called because formerly situated in underground vaults. Fornication. Fornix et cætera. Fornication and the rest; fornication and bastardy (qq. v.).

FORO. In Spanish Law. The place where tribunals hear and determine causes,—exercendarum litium locus. This word, according to Varo, is derived from ferendo, and is so called because all lawsuits have reference to things that are vendible, which presupposes the administration of justice to take place in the markets.

FORPRISE. An exception; reservation; excepted; reserved. Anciently, a term of frequent use in leases and conveyances. Cowell; Blount.

In another sense, the word is taken for any exaction. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FORSCHET. A strip of land lying next to the highway. Cowell.

FORSPEAKER. An attorney or advocate. One who speaks for another. Blount.

FORSTAL. An intercepting or stopping in the highway. See FORESTALL.

To be quit of amerciaments and cattle arrested within your land.

See FORESTALLER; FORESTALL.

FORSWEAR. To swear to a falsehood.

This word has not the same meaning as perjury. It does not, ex vi termini, signify a false swearing before an officer or court having authority to administer an oath, on an issue. A man may be forsworn by making a false oath before an incompetent tribunal, as well as before a lawful court. Hence, to say that a man is forsworn will or will not be slander, as the circumstances show that the oath was or was not taken before a lawful authority; Heard, Lib. & S. §§ 16, 34; Cro. Car. 378; Bacon, Abr. Slander (B, 3); Cro. Eliz. 609; Fisher v. Chandler, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 505; Niven v. Munn, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 48; Chapman v. Smith, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 80.

FORT. Something more than a mere military camp, post, or station; it implies a fortification or a place protected from attack by some such means as a moat, wall, or parapet. U. S. v. Tichenor, 12 Fed. 424.

FORTALICE, or FORTELACE. A fortress or place of strength which anciently did not pass without a special grant. 11 Hen. VII. c. 18. They were originally built for the defence of the country, either against foreign invasions, or civil commotions; and were anciently held to be inter regalia, corresponding with the Roman res publicæ, such as navigable rivers, ports, ferries, and the like, but they now pass with the lands in every charter; Ersk. Pr. 165.

FORTAXED. Wrongly or extortionately taxed.

FORTHCOMING BOND. A bond given for the security of the sheriff, conditioned to produce the property levied on when required; Downman v. Chinn, 2 Wash. (Va.) 189; Hill v. Manser, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 522; Clary v. Haines, 61 Ga. 520; Aycock v. Austin, 87 Ga. 566, 13 S. E. 582.

The measure of damages for breach of a forthcoming bond would be the value of the property at the time the bond was given, provided that value did not exceed the amount of the execution, debt, interest, and costs; Whelchel v. Duckett, 91 Ga. 132, 16 S. E. 643. See BOND.

FORTHWITH. As soon as by reasonable exertion, confined to the object, it may be accomplished. (Approved in Dickerman v. Trust Co., 176 U. S. 193, 20 Sup. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423.) This is the import of the term; it varies, of course, with every particular case; 4 Tyrwh. 837; Edwards v. Ins. Co., 75 Pa. 378. See Scammon v. Ins. Co., 101 Ill. 621; 11 H. L. Cas. 337; Bennett v. Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 274; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Reichert, 58 Md. 261; Meriden Silver Plate Co. v. Flory, 44 Ohio St. 437, 7 N. E. 753. It is not as promptly as immediately; in some cases it might mean within a reasonable time; 7 Dowl. 789.

When a defendant is ordered to plead forthwith, he must plead within twenty-four hours; Wharton. In other matters of practice, the word has come to have the same meaning; 2 Edw. 328; Dickerman v. Trust Co., 176 U. S. 193, 20 Sup. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423. A demand for an account forthwith is not the same in substance and effect as a demand for an account within 15 days; Green v. Kelley, 64 Vt. 309, 24 Atl. 133. Where a verdict was returned between noon and one p. m. on Saturday, while the justice was hearing other cases, an entry of judgment on the verdict on Monday was sufficient under a statute requiring it to be rendered "forthwith"; Sorenson v. Swensen, 55 Minn. 58, 56 N. W. 350, 43 Am. St. Rep. 472. Where a chattel mortgage must "be forthwith deposited" to affect subsequent bona fide purchasers, the filing more than three months after execution was notice to purchasers who took title after the filing; Vickers v. Carnahan, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 305, 23 S. W. 338. A statute providing that an order to revive an action may be made forthwith, means at the first term after plaintiff's death; Horsley v. Asher's Heirs, 94 Ky. 314, 22 S. W. 434. When an insurance policy required notice of loss to be given forthwith, it was sufficient twelve days after the fire when no harm was caused by delay; Capitol Ins. Co. v. Wallace, 50 Kan. 453, 31 Pac. 1070.

FORTIA (Lat.). A word of art, signifying the furnishing a weapon of force to do the fact, and by force whereof the fact was committed, and he that furnished it was not present when the act was done. Co. 2d Inst. 182.

The general meaning of the word is an unlawful force. Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange. Fortia frisca. Fresh force (q. v.).

FORTILITY. In Old English Law. A fortified place; a castle; a bulwark. Cowell; 11 Hen. VII. c. 18.

FORTIOR (Lat.). Stronger. A term applied in the law of evidence to that species of presumption, arising from facts shown in evidence, which is strong enough to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party. Burr. Circ. Ev. 64.

FORTIORI. See A FORTIORI.

FORTIS (Lat.). Strong. Fortis et sana, strong and sound; staunch and strong; as a vessel. Townsh. Pl. 227.

FORTUIT (Fr.). Accidental; casual; fortuitous. Cas fortuit, a fortuitous event. Fortuitment, accidentally; by chance.

FORTUITOUS. Depending on or happening by chance; casual; not designed; adventitious. In Civil Law. Resulting from unavoidable causes.

FORTUITOUS COLLISION. An accidental collision.

FORTUITOUS EVENT. In Civil Law. That which happens by a cause which cannot be resisted.

That which neither of the parties has occasioned or could prevent. Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. 2. An unforeseen event which cannot be prevented. Dict. de Jurisp. Cas fortuit.

There is a difference between a fortuitous event, or inevitable accident, and irresistible force. By the former, commonly called the act of God, is meant any accident produced by physical causes which are irresistible; such as a loss by lightning or storms, by the perils of the seas, by inundations and earthquakes, or by sudden death or illness. By the latter is meant such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable. Of this nature are losses occasioned by the inroads of a hostile army, or by public enemies. Story, Bailm. § 25; Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. 2, § 1.

Fortuitous events are fortunate or unfortunate. The accident of finding a treasure is a fortuitous event of the first class. Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. 2, § 2.

Involuntary obligations may arise in consequence of fortuitous events. For example, when to save a vessel from shipwreck, it is necessary to throw goods overboard, the loss must be borne in common; there arises, in this case, between the owners of the vessel and of the goods remaining on board, an obligation to bear proportionately the loss which has been sustained. Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. 2, § 2. See ACT OF GOD.

FORTUNA (Lat.). Fortune; also treasure-trove. Jac.; Moz. & W.

FORTUNE-TELLER. One who pretends to be able to reveal future events; one who pretends to the knowledge of futurity.

It was a practice during the Middle Ages, and is still far from dying out, though laws for its suppression have been passed; in England, Stat. 39 Eliz. Ch. 4; in Delaware, Code of 1852, amended 1893; see State v. Durham, 5 Pennewill, 105, 58 Atl. 1024.

FORTUNIUM. In Old English Law. A tournament or fighting with spears, and an appeal to fortune therein.

FORTY-DAYS-COURT. The court of attachments (q. v.) in the forests.

FORUM. At Common Law. A place. A place of jurisdiction. The place where a remedy is sought. Jurisdiction. A court of justice.

Forum actus. The forum of the place where an act was done.

Forum conscientiæ. The conscience.

Forum contentiosum. A court. 3 Bla. Com. 211.

Forum contractus. Place of making a contract. 2 Kent 463.

Forum domesticum. A domestic court. 1 W. Blackst. 82.

Forum domicilii. Place of domicil. 2 Kent 463.

Forum ecclesiasticum. An ecclesiastical court.

Forum ligeantiæ rei. The forum of the allegiance of the defendant.

Forum originis. The forum of birth.

Forum regium. The court of the king. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 43.

Forum rei. This expression is used alternatively for the forum of the defendant's domicil, in which case it is the genitive of reus, or the forum of the thing in controversy, when it is the genitive of res.

Forum rei gestæ. Place of transaction. 2 Kent 463.

Forum rei sitæ. The place where the thing is situated.

The tribunal which has authority to decide respecting something in dispute, located within its jurisdiction: therefore, if the matter in controversy is land or other immovable property, the judgment pronounced in the forum rei sitæ is held to be of universal obligation, as to all matters of right and title on which it professes to decide, in relation to such property. And the same principle applies to all other cases of proceedings in rem, where the subject is movable property, within the jurisdiction of the court pronouncing judgment. Story, Confl. Laws §§ 532, 545, 551, 591, 592; Kaimes, Eq. b. 3, c. 8, § 4; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 541.

Forum seculare. A secular court.

In Roman Law. The paved open space in cities, particularly in Rome, where were held the solemn business assemblies of the people, the markets, the exchange (whence cedere foro, to retire from 'change, equivalent to "to become bankrupt"), and where the magistrates sat to transact the business of their office. It corresponded to the ἀγορά of the Greeks. Dion. Hal. l. 3, p. 200. It came afterwards to mean any place where causes were tried, locus exercendarum litium. Isidor. l. 18, Orig. A court of justice.

The obligation and the right of a person to have his case decided by a particular court.

It is often synonymous with that signification of judicium which corresponds to our word court, in the sense of jurisdiction: e. g., foro interdicere, l. 1, § 13, D. 1, 12; C. 9, § 4, D. 48, 19; fori præscriptio, l. 7, pr. D. 2, 8; l. 1, C. 3, 24; forum rei accusator sequitur, l. 5, pr. C. 3, 13. In this sense the forum of a person means both the obligation and the right of that person to have his cause decided by a particular court. 5 Glück, Pand. 237. What court should have cognizance of the cause depends, in general, upon the person of the defendant, or upon the person of some one connected with the defendant.

Jurisdictions depending upon the person of the defendant. By modern writers upon the Roman law, this sort of jurisdiction is distinguished as that of common right, forum commune, and that of special privilege, forum privilegiatum.

(a.) Forum generale. General jurisdiction was of two kinds, the forum originis, which was that of the birthplace of the party, and the forum domicilii, that of his domicil. The forum originis was either commune or proprium. The former was that legal status which all free-born subjects of the empire, wherever residing, had at Rome when they were found there and had not the jus revocandi domum (i. e., the right of one absent from his domicil of transferring to the forum domicilii a suit instituted against him in the place of his temporary sojourn). L. 2, §§ 3, 4, 5, D. 5, 1; l. 28, § 4, D. 4, 6; 3 Glück, Pand. 188. After the privilege of Roman citizenship was conferred by Caracalla upon all free-born subjects of the empire, the city of Rome was considered the common home of all, communis omnium patria, and every citizen, no matter where his domicil, could, unless protected by special privilege, be sued at Rome while there present. Noodt, Com. ad Dig. 5, 1 p. 153; Hofacker, Pr. Jur. Civ. § 4221. The forum originis proprium, or forum originis speciale, was the court of that place of which at the time of the party's birth his father was a citizen, though that might possibly be neither his own birthplace nor the actual domicil of his father. Except in particular places, as Delphi and Pontus, where the nativity of the mother conferred the privilege of citizenship upon her son, the birthplace of the father only was regarded. L. 1, § 2, D. 50, 1. The case of the nullius filius was also an exception. Such a person having no known father derived his forum originis from the birthplace of his mother. L. 9, D. 50, 1.

Adoption might confer a twofold citizenship, that of the natural and that of the adoptive father; l. 7, C. 8, 48; but the latter was lost by emancipation; L. 16, D. 50, 1. In general, the birthplace of the father alone fixed the forum originis of the son. Amaya, Com. ad Tit. Cod. de incolis, n. 21, seq. 99. The forum originis was unchangeable, and continued although the party had established his domicil in another place: consequently, he could always be sued in the courts of that jurisdiction whenever he was there present; 6 Glück, Pand. p. 260.

Forum domicilii. The place of the domicil exercised the greatest influence over the rights of the party. (See DOMICIL.) In general, one was subject to the laws and courts of his domicil alone, unless specially privileged. L. 29, D. 50, 1. This legal status, forum domicilii, was universal, in the sense that all suits of whatever nature, real or personal, petitory or possessory, might be instituted in the courts of the defendant's domicil even when the thing in dispute was not situated within the jurisdiction of such court, and the defendant was not present at such place at the commencement of the suit; 6 Glück, Pand. 287 et seq. It seems, however, that as regarded real actions the forum domicilii was concurrent with the forum rei sitæ; id. 290, and, in general, was concurrent with special jurisdictions of all kinds; although in some exceptional cases the law conferred exclusive cognizance upon a special jurisdiction, forum speciale. In cases of concurrence the plaintiff had his election of the jurisdiction.

In another sense the forum domicilii was personal, as it did not necessarily descend to the heir of defendant. See jurisdiction ex persona alterius, at the end of this article.

Forum speciale, particular jurisdiction. These were very numerous. The more important are: (1.) Forum continentiæ causarum. Sometimes two or more actions or disputed questions are so connected that they cannot advantageously be tried separately, although in strictness they belong to different jurisdictions. In such cases the modern civil law permits them to be determined in a single court, although such court would be incompetent in regard to a portion of them taken singly. This beneficial rule did not exist in the Roman law, though formerly supposed to be derived thence. See 11 Glück, Pand. § 750, and cases there cited. (2.) Forum contractus, the court having cognizance of the action on a contract. If the place of performance was ascertained by the contract, the court of that place had exclusive jurisdiction of actions founded thereon; 6 Glück, Pand. 296. If the place of performance was uncertain, the court of the place where the contract was made might have jurisdiction, provided the defendant at the time of the institution of the suit was either present at that place or had attachable property there. Id. 298.

(3.) Forum delicti, forum deprehensionis, is the jurisdiction of the person of a criminal, and may be the court of the place where the offence was committed, or that of the place where the criminal was arrested. The latter jurisdiction, forum deprehensionis, extended at most only to the preliminary examination of the person arrested; and even this was abolished by Justinian, Nov. lxix. c. 1, cxxxiv. c. 5, on the ground that the examination as well as the punishment should take place on the spot where the crime was committed; 6 Glück, Pand. § 517.

(4.) Forum rei sitæ is the jurisdiction of the court of that place where is situated the thing which is the object of the action. Such court had jurisdiction over all actions affecting the possession of the thing, and over all petitory actions in rem against the possessor in that character, and all such actions in personam so far as they were brought for the recovery of the thing itself. But such court had not jurisdiction of purely personal actions. Id. § 519.

Forum arresti is a jurisdiction unknown to the Roman law, but of frequent occurrence in the modern civil law. It is that over persons or things detained by a judicial order, and corresponds in some degree to the attachment of our practice. Id. § 519.

Forum gestæ administrationis, the jurisdiction over the accounts and administration of guardians, agents, and all persons appointed to manage the affairs of third parties. The court which appointed such administrator, or wherein the cause was pending in which such appointment was made, or within whose territorial limits the business of the administration was transacted, had exclusive jurisdiction over all suits arising out of his acts or brought for the purpose of compelling him to account, or brought by him to recover compensation for his outlays; L. 1, C. 3, 21; 6 Glück, Pand. § 521.

Privileged jurisdictions, forum privilegiatum. In general, the privileged jurisdiction of a person held the same rank as the forum domicilii, and, like that, did not supplant the particular jurisdictions above named save in certain exceptional cases. The privilege was general in its nature, and applied to all cases not specially excepted, but it only arose when the person possessing it was sued by another; for he could not assert it when he was the plaintiff, the rule being, actor sequitur forum rei, the plaintiff must resort to the jurisdiction of the defendant. It was in general limited to personal actions; all real actions brought against the defendant in the character of possessor or the thing in dispute followed the forum speciale. The privilege embraced the wife of the privileged person and his children so long as they were under his potestas. And lastly, when a forum privilegiatum purely personal conflicted with the forum speciale, the former must yield; 6 Glück, Pand. 339-341. To these rules some exceptions occur, which will be mentioned below.

Privileged persons were: 1. Personæ miserabiles, who were persons under the special protection of the law on account of some incapacity of age, sex, mind, or condition. These were entitled, whether as plaintiffs or defendants, to carry their causes directly before the emperor, and, passing over the inferior courts, to demand a hearing before his supreme tribunal, whenever they had valid grounds for doubting the impartiality or fearing the procrastination of the inferior courts, or for dreading the influence of a powerful adversary; 6 Glück, Pand. § 522. On the other hand, if their adversary, on any pretext whatever, had himself passed by the inferior courts and applied directly to the supreme tribunal, they were not bound to appear there if this would be disadvantageous to them, but in order to avoid the increase of costs and other inconveniences, might decline answering except before their forum domicilii. The personæ miserabiles thus privileged were minor orphans, widows, whether rich or poor, persons afflicted by chronic disease or other forms of illness (diuturno morbo fatigati et debiles), which included paralytics, epileptics, the deaf, the dumb, and the blind, etc., persons impoverished by calamity or otherwise distressed, and the poor when their adversary was rich and powerful, præsertim cum alicujus potentiam perhorrescant. This privilege was, however, not available, when both parties were personæ miserabiles; when it had been waived either expressly or tacitly; when the party had become persona miserabilis since the institution of the action,—except always the case of reasonable suspicion in regard to the impartiality of the judge; when the party had become persona miserabilis through his own crime or fraud; when the cause was trivial, or belonged to the class of unconditionally privileged cases having an exclusive forum; and when the cause of action was a right acquired from a persona non miserabilis. 6 Glück, Pand. § 522.

Clerici, the clergy. The privilege of clerical persons to be impleaded only in the episcopal courts commenced under the Christian emperors. Justinian enlarged the jurisdiction of these courts, not only by giving them exclusive cognizance of affairs and offences purely ecclesiastical, but also by constituting them the ordinary primary courts for the trial of suits brought against the clergy even for temporal causes of action. Nov. 83, Nov. 123, cap. 8, 21, 22, 23. The causes of action cognizable in the forum ecclesiasticum were—1. causæ ecclesiasticæ mero tales, purely ecclesiastical, i. e., those pertaining to doctrine, church services, and ceremonies, and right to membership; those relating to the synodical assemblies and church discipline; those relating to offices and dignities and to the election, ordination, translation, and deposition of pastors and other office-bearers of the church, and especially those relating to the validity of marriages and to divorce; or, 2. causæ ecclesiasticæ mixtæ, mixed causes, i. e., disputes in regard to church lands, tithes, and other revenues, their management and disbursement, and legacies to pious uses, in regard to the boundaries of ecclesiastical jurisdictions, in regard to patronage and advowsons, in regard to burials and to consecrated places, as graveyards, convents, etc., and, lastly, in regard to offences against the canons of the church, as simony, etc. But the privilege here treated of was the personal privilege of the clergy when defendant in a suit to have the cause tried before the episcopal court: when plaintiff, the rule actor sequitur forum rei prevailed. All persons employed in the church service in an official capacity, even though not in holy orders, were thus privileged. But the privilege did not embrace real actions, nor personal actions brought to recover the possession of a thing: these must be instituted in the forum rei sitæ. The jurisdiction extended to all personal actions, criminal as well as civil; although in criminal actions the ecclesiastical courts had no authority to inflict corporeal or capital punishment, being restricted to the canonical judgments of deprivation, degradation, excommunication, etc. 6 Glück, Pand. § 523.

Academici. In the modern civil law the officers and students of the universities are privileged to be sued before the university courts. This species of privilege was unknown to the Roman law. See 6 Glück, Pand. § 524.

Milites. Soldiers had special military courts as well in civil as criminal cases. In civil matters, however, the forum militare had preference only over the courts of the place where the soldier defendant was stationed; as he did not forfeit his domicil by absence on military duty, he might always be sued for debt in the ordinary forum domicilii, provided he had left there a procurator to transact his business for him, or had property there which might be proceeded against. L. 3, C. 2, 51; l. 6, eodem; l. 4, C. 7, 53. Besides this, the privilege of the forum militare did not extend to such soldiers as carried on a trade or profession in addition to their military service and were sued in a case growing out of such trade, although in other respects they were subject to the military tribunal. L. 7, C. 3, 13. If after an action had been commenced the defendant became a soldier, the privilege did not attach, but the suit must be concluded before the court which had acquired jurisdiction of it. The forum militare had cognizance of personal actions only. Actions arising out of real rights could be instituted only in the forum rei sitæ. In the Roman law, ordinary crimes of soldiers were cognizable in the forum delicti. The modern civil law is otherwise. 6 Glück, Pand. 418, 421.

There are many classes of persons who are privileged in respect to jurisdiction under the modern civil law who were not so privileged by the Roman law. Such are officers of the court of the sovereign, including ministers of state and councillors, ambassadors, noblemen, etc. These do not require extended notice.

Jurisdiction ex persona alterius. A person might be entitled to be sued in a particular court on grounds depending upon the person of another. Such were—1. The Wife, who, if the marriage had been legally contracted, acquired the forum of her husband; l. 65, D. 5, 1; l. ult. D. 50, 1; l. 19, D. 2, 1; and retained it until her second marriage; l. 22, § 1, D. 50, 1; or change of domicil; § 93, Voet. Com. ad Pand. D. 5, 1. 2. Servants, who possessed the jurisdiction of their master as regarded the forum domicilii, and also the forum privilegiatum, so far at least as the privilege was that of the class to which such master belonged and was not purely personal, Glück, Pand. § 510 b. 3. The hæres, who in many cases retained the jurisdiction of his testator. When sued in the character of heir in respect to causes of action upon which suit had been commenced before the testator's death, he must submit to the forum which had acquired cognizance of the suit; Ll. 30, 34, D. 5, 1. When the cause of action accrued, but the action was not commenced, in the lifetime of the testator, the heir must submit to special jurisdictions to which the testator would have been subjected, as the forum contractus or gestæ administrationis, especially if personally present or possessing property within such jurisdiction; L. 19, D. 5, 1. But it is even now disputed whether in such case he was bound to submit to the general jurisdiction, forum domicilii, or the privileged jurisdiction, forum privilegiatum, of his testator; though the weight of the authorities is on the side of the negative; Glück, Pand. § 560 b. If the cause of action arose after the death of the testator, as in the case of the querela inofficiosi testamenti, of partition, of suits to recover a legacy or to enforce a testamentary trust, the heir must be pursued in his own jurisdiction, i. e., the forum domicilii or forum rei sitæ; 6 Glück, Pand. 252, and authorities there cited. And, a fortiori, if the action against the heir was not in that character, but merely in the capacity of possessor of the thing in dispute, the suit must be brought before the forum to which he was himself subject; id. p. 251.

FORUTH. A long slip of ground. Cowell.

FORWARDING MERCHANT. A person who receives and forwards goods, taking upon himself the expenses of transportation, for which he receives a compensation from the owners, but who has no concern in the vessels or wagons by which they are transported, and no interest in the freight.

Such a one is not deemed a common carrier, but a mere warehouseman or agent; Roberts v. Turner, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 232, 7 Am. Dec. 311; Platt v. Hibbard, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 497; see Christenson v. Exp. Co., 15 Minn. 270 (Gil. 208), 2 Am. Rep. 122; 2 Wheel. Abr. 142; nor is he an insurer; Hooper v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 27 Cal. 11, 85 Am. Dec. 211. He is required to use only ordinary diligence in sending the property by responsible persons; Northern R. Co. v. R. Co., 6 Allen (Mass.) 254; Stannard v. Prince, 64 N. Y. 300. See Story, Bailm. § 502; Brown v. Denison, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 594; COMMON CARRIERS.

FOSSA (Lat.). In English Law. A ditch full of water, where formerly women who had committed a felony were drowned; the grave. Cowell. See FURCA ET FOSSA.

FOSSAGE, FOSSAGIUM. In Old English Law. A composition paid in lieu of the duty of cleaning out and repairing the moat surrounding a fortified town. A tax paid for that work.

FOSSATORUM OPERATIO (Lat.). The service of laboring done by the inhabitants and adjoining tenants, for repair and maintenance of the ditches round a city or town. A contribution in lieu of such work, called fossagium, was sometimes paid. Kennett; Cowell.

FOSSATUM. A canal; a moat; a place inclosed by a ditch; a trench.

FOSSELUM. A small ditch. Cowell.

FOSSEWAY, or FOSSE. One of the four great roads of England built by the Romans; so called from the ditch on each side. Trevisa describes it thus: "The first and gretest of the foure weyes is called fosse, and stretches oute of the southe into the north, and begynneth from the corner of Cornewaile, and passeth forth by Devenshyre by Somersete, and forth besides Tetbury, upon Cotteswold, besides Coventre, unto Leyster, and so forth, by wylde pleynes towards Newerke, and endeth at Lincoln" (Polychron l. 1, c. xiv.). Wharton. Watling-Street is the best known of them, reaching from Dover to London and to Anglesey in Wales.

FOSTER-LAND. Land given for finding food for any person, as for monks in a monastery. Cowell.

FOSTER-LEAN (Sax.). A nuptial gift; the jointure for the maintenance of a wife. Toml.

FOSTERING. An ancient custom in Ireland, in which persons put away their children to fosterers. Fostering was held to be a stronger alliance than blood, and the foster children participated in the fortunes of their foster fathers. Hallam's Const. Hist. ch. 18; Moz. & W.

FOUND. A person is said to be found within a state when actually present therein, but as applied to a corporation it is necessary that it is doing business in such state through an officer or agent or by statutory authority in such manner as to render it liable then to suit and to constructive or substituted service of process. See Romaine v. Ins. Co., 55 Fed. 751; FOREIGN CORPORATION; SERVICE; NON EST INVENTUS.

FOUNDATION. The establishment of a charity. That upon which a charity is founded and by which it is supported.

This word, in the English law, is taken in two senses, fundatio incipiens, and fundatio perficiens. As to its political capacity, an act of incorporation is metaphorically called its foundation; but as to its dotation, the first gift of revenues is called the foundation. 10 Co. 23 a.

FOUNDER. One who endows an institution. One who makes a gift of revenues to a corporation. 10 Co. 33; 1 Bla. Com. 481.

In England, the king is said to be the founder of all civil corporations; and where there is an act of incorporation, he is called the general founder, and he who endows is called the perficient founder. 1 Bla. Com. 481.

FOUNDERS' SHARES. In English Company Law. Shares issued to the founders of (or vendors to) a public company as a part of the consideration for the business, or concession, etc., taken over, and not forming a part of, the ordinary capital. As a rule, such shares only participate in profits after the payment of a fixed minimum dividend on paid-up capital. Encyc. Dict.

FOUNDEROSUS. Out of repair. Cro. Car. 366.

FOUNDLING. A new-born child abandoned by its parents, who are unknown.

The settlement of such a child is in the place where found. Foundling hospitals are charitable institutions which exist in many countries for the care of such children. In England they are regulated by stat. 13 Geo. II. c. 29.

FOUR (Fr.). An oven; kiln; bakehouse. Four banal (banal of a manner; common), an oven owned by the proprietor of the estate, to which the tenants were obliged to bring their bread for baking. Also the proprietary right to maintain such an oven.

FOUR CORNERS. The four corners of an instrument means that which is contained on the face of it (without any aid from the knowledge of the circumstances under which it was made). This is said to be within its four corners, because every deed is still supposed to be written on one entire skin, and so to have but four corners. Wharton.

FOUR SEAS. The seas surrounding England. These were divided into the Western, including the Scotch and Irish; The Northern, or North Sea; The Eastern, being the German Ocean; The Southern, being the British Channel. Selden, Mare Clausum, lib. 2, c. 1.

Within the four seas means within the jurisdiction of England; 4 Co. 125; Co. 2d Inst. 252. See LIMITATION.

FOURCHER (Fr. to fork), or FOURCH. In English Law. A method of delaying an action formerly practised by defendants.

When an action was brought against two, who, being jointly concerned, were not bound to answer till both appeared, and they agreed not to appear both in one day, and the appearance of one excused the other's default, who had a day given him to appear with the other: the defaulter, on the day appointed, appeared; but the first then made default: in this manner they forked each other, and practised this for delay. See Co. 2d Inst. 250; Booth, Real Act. 16; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 470, 512.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT. The Fourteenth Amendment of the constitution of the United States became a part of the organic law July 28, 1868, and its importance entitles it to special mention.

The resolution of congress proposing the amendment was adopted June 16, 1866, 14 St. L. 358. On July 20, 1868, Secretary Seward issued a proclamation reciting the ratification of the amendment by twenty-nine states, of which two had by legislative action attempted to withdraw such ratification (which attempted withdrawal was declared to be of doubtful and uncertain effect), and declaring the ratification of the amendment if the withdrawing resolutions were of no effect. 15 St. L. 706. On July 21, 1868, a concurrent resolution was adopted by congress, reciting the ratification by the twenty-nine states (making no mention of the efforts at withdrawal by two states, which were included in those enumerated) and declaring the amendment to be a part of the constitution and directing its promulgation as such. Accordingly, July 28, 1868, Secretary Seward issued a second proclamation, reciting the resolution of congress and the proceedings of the state legislatures in detail, with dates, and certifying the adoption of the amendment. 15 St. L. 708.

Scope of the Amendment. Summarizing the several sections of the amendment in order, the first is that of the most general application, and which has mainly engaged the attention of the courts. It creates or at least recognizes for the first time a citizenship of the United States, as distinct from that of the states (see CITIZEN); forbids the making or enforcement by any state of any law abridging the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States (see PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES); and secures all "persons" against any state action which is either deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or denial of the equal protection of the laws (see DUE PROCESS OF LAW; EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS; LIBERTY; PROPERTY; PERSON).

The last clause secures against state action one of the most comprehensive guaranties of the fundamental rights which, in the Vth Amendment as construed by the courts, was secured against action by the federal government.

The other sections are of special application and concern themselves with the results of the civil war.

Section 2 provides for the apportionment of representatives among the states according to population, with the proviso that if any state shall abridge the right to vote "except for participation in rebellion, or other crime," the basis of representation shall be reduced. The question of the bearing of this provision upon the constitutional or statutory qualifications of voters so designed as to discriminate in fact, though not in terms, against any particular class of voters, has not been judicially settled.

It has been decided that this section does not amend Art. II of the constitution, under which the state legislatures have exclusive power to prescribe the manner of appointing electors of president and vice president, and a state law providing for their election by districts is valid; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 869, affirming 92 Mich. 377, 52 N. W. 469, 16 L. R. A. 475, 31 Am. St. Rep. 587.

Section 3 provides for the exclusion from certain federal and state offices of persons who, having taken the oath to support the constitution of the United States, had engaged in insurrection or rebellion, or given aid and comfort to the enemies thereof. This disability is made removable by congress by a two-thirds vote of each house. Whether the creation of this disability was a bar to other punishment was argued in the case of Jefferson Davis, Chase 1, Fed. Cas. No. 3,621a. The judges differed in opinion, the circuit justice, Chase, being of opinion that the provision of the XIVth Amendment did operate as a bar, and the district judge, Underwood, that it did not. The question was accordingly certified to the Supreme Court, but the matter was not considered there, the indictments having been dismissed after the general amnesty proclamation of December, 1868. So, as the report of the case, supra, concluded, "the certificate [of disagreement] rests among the records of the Supreme Court, undisturbed by a single motion for either a hearing or a dismissal." Id.

This provision is not self-executing; Griffin's Case, Chase 364, Fed. Cas. No. 5,815; Rothermel v. Meyerle, 136 Pa. 250, 20 Atl. 583, 9 L. R. A. 366; Com. v. Deinno, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 371. The disability did not operate at once to vacate offices and render official acts void; In re Griffin, Chase 364, 25 Tex. Supp. 623, Fed. Cas. No. 5,815; but was intended to operate by legislation; id.; Powell v. Boon & Booth, 43 Ala. 469. It disqualified any person who held office under the Confederate government as a county attorney; In re Tate, 63 N. C. 308; or a sheriff; Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N. C. 199. The result of the early decision of Chief Justice Chase was the enactment of the legislation known as the enforcement acts. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

Section 4 provides for the validity of the public debt, including that incurred for pensions, and prohibits the assumption or payment by the United States or any state of "any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave," all such debts or claims being expressly declared void.

A contract to pay in Confederate money is void as being payment of a debt in aid of rebellion; Smith v. Nelson, 34 Tex. 516; but one made in a state in insurrection, if not in aid of rebellion, is valid; Hale v. Wilkinson, 21 Grat. (Va.) 75. That a debt was incurred in violation of this provision, or on any consideration forbidden by the constitution of the United States, is not a matter of judicial notice, but must be pleaded and proved; Keith v. Clark, 97 U. S. 454, 24 L. Ed. 1071.

Section 5 gives power to congress to enforce the amendment by appropriate legislation.

General Principles of Construction. Though the language of the proclamations might suggest some questions respecting the validity of the ratification (Guthrie, XIVth Amdt. 1, note), that question was not afterwards seriously raised in cases before the supreme court involving its construction and it has been uniformly treated as duly incorporated into the constitution; Miller, Const. 655. The adoption of this amendment undoubtedly resulted in broadening the sphere of the federal government and greatly enlarging the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Guthrie, XIVth Amdt.; 1 Burgess, Pol. Sc. & Const. L. 225; 1 Hare, Am. Const. L. 747. Fortunately the supreme court entered upon the duty of defining its limitations and construing its provisions in a spirit of marked judicial impartiality.

The amendment was first authoritatively construed within five years after its adoption, in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; and a long line of subsequent cases have served to establish well-settled rules of decision which, although, in some cases, modifying expressions contained in the opinion in the first case, have not departed from its essential principles.

It was judicially recognized that the purpose of the amendment, together with the XIIIth and XVth, was to secure to the colored race in the South the benefit of the freedom accorded to them; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 71, 21 L. Ed. 394; Cooley, Const. Lim. 498; in other words to establish the citizenship of the negro; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 26 L. Ed. 664; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. Ed. 667; Frasher v. State, 3 Tex. App. 263, 30 Am. Rep. 131. By force of it negroes born in the United States are entitled to vote and are protected by the act of May 31, 1870, R. S. § 2004; U. S. v. Canter, 2 Bond 389, Fed. Cas. No. 14,719.

Nevertheless, it was held that it did not follow that "no one else but the negro can share in this protection," but, "if other rights are assailed by the states which properly and necessarily fall within the protection of these articles, that protection will apply;" Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 667; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 382, 385, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 676, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890. It is a restriction on the states as distinguished from the restrictions on the federal government in the Vth Amendment; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. Ed. 667; U. S. v. Stanley, 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835; Le Grand v. U. S., 12 Fed. 581; Santa Clara County v. R. Co., 18 Fed. 385. It is prohibitory on the states only, but the legislation authorized to be enacted by congress for enforcing it is not direct legislation on matters respecting which the states are prohibited from making or enforcing certain laws, or doing certain acts, but it is corrective legislation, such as may be necessary or proper for counteracting and reducing the effect of such laws or acts; U. S. v. Stanley, 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835; see also Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429. In these cases, known as the Civil Rights Cases, sections 1 and 2 of the Civil Rights Act, intended to secure to all persons equal facilities, etc., in inns, public conveyances, theatres, etc., and prescribing penalties for violations, were declared unconstitutional, as direct legislation; id. The XIVth and XVth Amendments operate solely on state action and not on individual action; Hodges v. U. S., 203 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 51 L. Ed. 65. But indictments were sustained against state officers or persons charged with a duty in the selection of jurors, under section 4 of the act, providing that no person, otherwise qualified, shall be disqualified by race, color, etc.; In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 667. If, however, the states do not conform their legislation to the amendment congress has authority to enforce it by appropriate legislation; U. S. v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 1 Sup. Ct. 601, 27 L. Ed. 290.

The amendment "adds nothing to the rights of one person as against another. It simply furnishes an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the states, upon the fundamental rights which belong to every citizen as a member of society." This principle controls both clauses, being applied to that securing due process of law and repeated with respect to equal protection of the laws; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 554, 23 L. Ed. 588. The United States has not conferred the right of suffrage on any one; id.; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 178, 22 L. Ed. 627. The duty of protecting all citizens in the enjoyment of the fundamental rights mentioned in the amendment "was originally assumed by the states; and it still remains there. It does not add to the privileges and immunities of citizens, but only protects those which they already have; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627.

The power of congress to protect rights secured by the XIVth Amendment may be grouped in three classes: (1) Denial by state legislation, or hostile acts of state officers, of rights secured by the amendment; (2) congressional interference, regardless of fault on the part of the state, by plenary legislation creating direct rights within the state, to protect a right which is only an immunity to be exempt from invidious discrimination at the hands of the state, and which can never bring any right into being, or authorize any action of congress, unless the state first makes such wrongful discrimination; (3) legislation by congress which confused rights dependent upon the constitution or laws with rights secured only by state laws, entwining them without distinction in the grasp of a statute whose provisions were incapable of separation, thus vitiating the enactment because broader than the power conferred; U. S. v. Powell, 151 Fed. 649.

The "amendment did not radically change the whole theory of the relations of the state and federal governments to each other, and of both governments to the people. The same person may be at the same time a citizen of the United States and a citizen of a state. Protection to life, liberty and property rests primarily with the states and the amendment furnishes an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the states upon those fundamental rights which belong to citizenship, and which the state governments were created to secure;" In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519, citing U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588, and Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394.

The only obligation resting on the United States is to see that the states do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, but no more; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 555, 23 L. Ed. 588; Arrowsmith v. Harmoning, 118 U. S. 194, 6 Sup. Ct. 1023, 30 L. Ed. 243; In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 11 Sup. Ct. 191, 34 L. Ed. 796; Morley v. Ry. Co., 146 U. S. 162, 13 Sup. Ct. 54, 36 L. Ed. 925; McNulty v. California, 149 U. S. 645, 13 Sup. Ct. 959, 37 L. Ed. 882; Marchant v. R. Co., 153 U. S. 380, 14 Sup. Ct. 894, 38 L. Ed. 751. The continuous and systematic administration of a state law or municipal ordinance which so operates as to violate the amendment will be corrected. Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567; Arrowsmith v. Harmoning, 118 U. S. 194, 6 Sup. Ct. 1023, 30 L. Ed. 243; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 18 Sup. Ct. 583, 42 L. Ed. 1012. It is applicable not only to the state but to all of its instrumentalities and agencies and to the executive and legislative bodies of its cities and counties; In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 667; Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546; In re Tiburcio Parrott, 6 Sawy. 349, 1 Fed. 481. It limits the exercise of all the powers of the state which can touch the individual or his property; County of San Mateo v. R. Co., 13 Fed. 722, 8 Sawy. 238; and applies in the case of a law of which the apparent purpose is to make extortion possible and which interferes with the power of congress to regulate intercourse with foreign nations; Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 550.

It was not the intention of the XIVth Amendment to subvert the general and special taxing systems of the states; it affords the same protection against arbitrary state legislation as is afforded by the Vth Amendment against legislation by congress; Detroit v. Parker, 181 U. S. 399, 21 Sup. Ct. 624, 45 L. Ed. 917; Tonawanda v. Tyon, 181 U. S. 389, 21 Sup. Ct. 609, 45 L. Ed. 908, where it was said that it was not intended to hold otherwise in Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443; see DUE PROCESS OF LAW. Its prohibitions were not intended to prevent the state from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, or from imposing different taxes on different trades, etc.; Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 26 Sup. Ct. 232, 50 L. Ed. 451, where it was held that a license tax on a meat packing house doing both interstate and domestic business applied to the latter only and was not open to review. "It is important for this court to avoid extracting, from the very general language of the XIVth Amendment, a system of delusive exactness in order to destroy methods of taxation which were well known when that amendment was adopted and which it is safe to say that no one then supposed would be disturbed;" Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pav. Co., 197 U. S. 430, 25 Sup. Ct. 466, 49 L. Ed. 819. Nor was it designed to compel the states to adopt an ironclad rule of equality to prevent classification for taxation; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 26 Sup. Ct. 459, 50 L. Ed. 744.

"Exact wisdom and nice adaptation of remedies are not required by the XIVth Amendment nor the crudeness nor the impolicy nor even the injustice of state laws redressed by it." Heath & Milligan Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 338, 28 Sup. Ct. 114, 52 L. Ed. 236. Its prohibitions are not confined to state action through the legislative, executive or judicial authority, but relate to all instrumentalities through which the state acts; Raymond v. Traction Co., 207 U. S. 20, 28 Sup. Ct. 7, 52 L. Ed. 78, 12 Ann. Cas. 757.

In an action properly instituted against a state officer, the XIth Amendment is not a barrier to a judicial inquiry whether the XIVth Amendment has been disregarded by state enactments; the constitution and the amendments are one instrument; Prout v. Starr, 188 U. S. 537, 23 Sup. Ct. 398, 47 L. Ed. 584 (a bill for an injunction to test the validity of a Nebraska act regulating railroads and the defense was set up that it was in effect a suit against the state).

The constitutional guaranty of a republican form of government to each of the states, however, must be enforced by the political department of the government and cannot be availed of in connection with the XIVth Amendment to obtain a revision by the supreme court of the judgment of the highest court of the state in the case of a contested election of governor and lieutenant governor; Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 548, 20 Sup. Ct. 890, 1009, 44 L. Ed. 1187.

A state is not prohibited by the XIVth Amendment from prescribing the jurisdiction of the several courts, either as to their territorial limits, or the subject matter, amount, or penalties of their respective judgments; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989.

The mere fact that state legislation is unjust or will result in hardship is not necessarily fatal to it; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238; Missouri P. Ry. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 520, 6 Sup. Ct. 110, 29 L. Ed. 463; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 566, 570, 14 Sup. Ct. 437, 38 L. Ed. 269; nor will the federal courts determine the mere question of its expediency; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 704, 26 L. Ed. 238. The sole question to be considered is that of power and not of wisdom; Ex parte McCardle, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 506, 514, 19 L. Ed. 264; Doyle v. Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 541, 24 L. Ed. 148; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 710, 5 Sup. Ct. 730, 28 L. Ed. 1145; Missouri P. Ry. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 520, 6 Sup. Ct. 110, 29 L. Ed. 463; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 661, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 204, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 319, 10 Sup. Ct. 862, 34 L. Ed. 455; Angle v. R. Co., 151 U. S. 1, 18, 14 Sup. Ct. 240, 38 L. Ed. 55.

As in the Slaughter-House Cases, a difference of opinion as to the scope of the amendment was emphasized by a division of the court into five and four; its purpose and scope was, in the later case of Barbier v. Connolly, declared by Mr. Justice Field, without dissent, in terms having no relation to the race question which had furnished the immediate occasion for its adoption. It was there said that the prohibitions upon state action in the last two clauses of section 1 were undoubtedly intended to prevent the "arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty or arbitrary spoliation of property"; to secure "equal protection and security" under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights, "the right" to "pursue happiness and acquire and enjoy property," like access to the courts "for protection of persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts"; that all should be alike exempt from any special impediment to pursuits, or unusual burdens or different punishment. But neither this nor any other amendment was designed to interfere with the police power of the state "to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources and add to its wealth and prosperity." Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923; Butchers' Union Slaughter-House & Live Stock Landing Co. v. Slaughter-House Co., 111 U. S. 746, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 25 Sup. Ct. 18, 49 L. Ed. 169.

In construing the amendment the supreme court has generally refrained from attempting to define the scope of its various provisions except so far as required for the decision of the case in hand, and has adopted by preference the "gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion, as the cases presented for decision shall require, with the reasoning on which such decisions may be founded." Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 104, 24 L. Ed. 616; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780.

Though securing to the African race the rights of citizenship, it has been doubted whether this amendment adds to those the guaranties contained in the state constitutions any protection to individual rights. It does, however, by making a principle of state constitutional law a part of the United States constitution, make the United States supreme court the final arbiter of alleged violations of those rights; Cooley, Const. Lim. (4th ed.) 361. An accused person cannot of right demand a mixed jury, some of which shall be of his race, nor is a jury of that kind guaranteed by the XIVth Amendment to any race; Martin v. Texas, 200 U. S. 316, 26 Sup. Ct. 338, 50 L. Ed. 497. The guaranty of personal rights in the amendment is not confined to citizens, but secures them to every person within the jurisdiction of a state; Fraser v. McConway & Torley Co., 82 Fed. 257; Steed v. Harvey, 18 Utah 367, 54 Pac. 1011, 72 Am. St. Rep. 789.

FOUTGELD. See FOOTGELD.

FOWLS OF WARREN. Such fowls as are preserved under the game-laws in warrens. According to Manwood, these are partridges and pheasants. According to Coke, they are either campestres, as partridges, rails, and quails, sylvestres, as woodcocks and pheasants, or aquatiles, as mallards and herons. Co. Litt. 233. See FREE WARREN.

FOX'S LIBEL ACT. An act passed in England in 1792, which provided that in prosecutions for libel, the jury might give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter put at issue upon the indictment, and should not be required by the court to find the defendant guilty merely upon proof of the publication of the alleged libel, in the sense ascribed to it in the indictment.

FRACTION OF A DAY. A portion of a day. The dividing a day.

Generally, the law does not allow the fraction of a day, and the day on which an act is done must therefore be either entirely included or excluded; 2 Bla. Com. 141; Raym. 84; State v. Town of Winter Park, 25 Fla. 371, 5 South. 818; President, etc., Portland Bank v. Bank, 11 Mass. 204; Duffy v. Ogden, 64 Pa. 240; In re Welman, 20 Vt. 653, Fed. Cas. No. 17,407; and, therefore, judgments entered on the same day are regarded as entered at the same time, and create liens equal in point of priority; Rockhill v. Hanna, 4 McLean 555, Fed. Cas. No. 11,980; Mechanics' Bank v. Gorman, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 304; but this is merely a legal fiction, which does not apply where it is necessary to distinguish between the two parts of a day; 3 Burr. 1344; 11 H. L. Cas. 411; and, therefore, it has been said that there is no such general rule of law, but that common sense and common justice sustain the propriety of considering fractions of a day whenever it will promote the purposes of substantial justice; First Nat. Bank v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 689, 25 L. Ed. 766; Grosvenor v. Magill, 37 Ill. 239; Tufts v. Carradine, 3 La. Ann. 430; thus, the bankrupt act of 1841 was repealed by the act of March 3, 1843, which was not signed by the president till the evening of that day; proceedings in bankruptcy begun on the morning of that day were held to have been begun before the passage of the act; Louisville v. Bank, 104 U. S. 475, 26 L. Ed. 775, citing with approval In re Richardson, 2 Sto. 571, Fed. Cas. No. 11,777; tobacco stamped, sold, and removed in the morning of March 3, 1875, was not considered subject to an increased tax-rate imposed by the act of that date, which was not signed by the president until a later hour of that day; Burgess v. Salmon, 97 U. S. 381, 24 L. Ed. 1104, approved in Louisville v. Bank, 104 U. S. 477, 26 L. Ed. 775; where a township voted aid bonds on the morning of an election day in Illinois, at which a constitutional provision was adopted forbidding the issuing of such bonds, the court found as a fact that the township vote was had before the adoption of the constitution, and, therefore, sustained the validity of the bonds; Louisville v. Bank, 104 U. S. 469, 26 L. Ed. 775. But it was held in Re Welman, Fed. Cas. No. 17,407; Wood v. Fort, 42 Ala. 641; that an act is in force all of the day in which it was approved; and in New York that an act is not in force until the day after its approval; In re Foley, 8 Misc. 57, 28 N. Y. Supp. 608.

Although the law does not generally consider fractions of a day, yet when substantial justice requires it, courts may ascertain the precise time when a statute is approved or an act done; Taylor v. Brown, 147 U. S. 640, 13 Sup. Ct. 549, 37 L. Ed. 313. In U. S. v. Norton, 97 U. S. 170, 24 L. Ed. 907, following Lapeyre v. U. S., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 191, 21 L. Ed. 606, the court held that the president's proclamation of June 13, 1865, removing restrictions upon trade, etc., took effect as of the beginning of that day and refused to consider the fraction of a day. In computing the time for the performance of official duties, each fraction of a day is to be considered as a full day.

The doctrine applies chiefly, if not entirely, to judicial and other public proceedings, and not to transactions of parties whose priority of right becomes a question of fact; Maynard v. Esher, 17 Pa. 222. Thus judgments entered on the same day have equality of lien; In re Boyers' Estate, 51 Pa. 432, 91 Am. Dec. 129; so of liens; Appeal of Hendrickson, 24 Pa. 363; but a mortgage recorded on the same day as the entry of a judgment, but earlier in the day, has priority; First Nat. Bank v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 689, 25 L. Ed. 766, citing Follett v. Hall, 16 Ohio 111, 47 Am. Dec. 365. Service of a declaration on the same day as filing, but earlier in the day, is good; Rusk v. Van Benschoten, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 149. See FROM; AGE; TIME; DAY; INFANT; MAJORITY.

FRACTITIUM. Arable land. Toml.

FRACTURA NAVIUM. Breaking up of ships or wreck of shipping at sea. Very like naufrage (q. v.).

FRAIS DE JUSTICE. Costs incurred incidentally to the action. See 1 Troplong, 135, n. 122; 4 Low. C. 77. Frais d'un procès. Costs of a suit.

FRAIS JUSQU'À BORD (Fr.). In French Commercial Law. Expenses up to the time that goods are actually shipped on board of a vessel, including such items as packing, porterage, or cartage, commissions, etc. Bartels v. Redfield, 16 Fed. 336. A shipment on which the seller pays the frais jusqu'à bord, would correspond to a sale of the goods "free on board" (q. v.)

FRANC. A French coin, of the value of about twenty cents.

FRANC ALEU. In French Law. An absolutely free inheritance. Allodial lands.

Land freely and absolutely owned, not held. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 66; Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. 236. It is said that, generally, the word denotes an inheritance free from seignorial rights, though held subject to the sovereign. Dumoulin, Cout. de Par. § 1; Guyot, Rép. Univ.; 3 Kent 498, n.; 8 Low. C. 95.

FRANC TENANCIER. In French Law. A freeholder.

FRANCE. A republic of Europe. The National Assembly, February 17, 1871, declared itself the depositary of sovereign power, and in August elected M. Thiers president. The law of February 25, 1875, with a second law voted soon after and a third on July 16, 1876, and with modifications voted in 1879 and 1884, forms the present constitution. The executive is a president who appoints the ministry. The legislative department is vested in a national assembly, composed of a senate, elected by an electoral college, tracing back to universal suffrage, for nine years, and a chamber of deputies, elected by universal suffrage for a term of four years. The president is elected for seven years by the senate and chamber of deputies. He initiates legislation concurrently with the two houses and makes all civil and military appointments. All his acts must be countersigned by a minister, and he cannot declare war without the previous consent of the two chambers. With the consent of the senate he may dissolve the chamber of deputies, but in such an event there must be a new election held within three months. The ministry is chiefly chosen from the two chambers. They can sit in both chambers and address them, but cannot vote unless they are members of the house. See Poincaré, How France is Governed; COURTS OF FRANCE.

FRANCHILANUS. A freeman. Chart. Hen. IV. A free tenant. Spel. Gloss.

FRANCHISE. A special privilege conferred by government on individuals, and which does not belong to the citizens of the country generally by common right. Ang. & A. Corp. § 4; Abbott v. Refining Co., 4 Neb. 416, 420.

A certain privilege conferred by grant from government and vested in individuals. 3 Kent 458.

A royal privilege or branch of the king's prerogative subsisting in the hands of a subject. Finch 1. 164; 2 Bla. Com. 37; 3 Cruise, Dig. 278; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 595, 10 L. Ed. 274; State v. Coal Co., 36 W. Va. 802, 15 S. E. 1000, 17 L. R. A. 385.

Maitland (Domesday and Beyond 43) finds in the history of early English tenures a universality of oppressive services which literally made life a burden to the average land-holder, considers the first use of the terms "liberty" and "franchise" to be an expression of the relief of the possessor from some part of this burden. He says: "Lastly in our thirteenth century we learn that privileges and exceptional immunities are 'liberties' and 'franchises.' What is our definition of a liberty, a franchise? A portion of royal power in the hands of a subject. In Henry III.'s day we do not say that the Earl of Chester is a freer man, more of a liber homo, than is the Earl of Gloucester, but we do say that he has more, greater, higher liberties."

The right or privilege of being a corporation, and of doing such things, and such things only, as are authorized by the corporation's charter. Fietsam v. Hay, 122 Ill. 293, 13 N. E. 501, 3 Am. St. Rep. 492.

"The word franchise is generally used to designate a right or privilege conferred by law. What is called 'the franchise of forming a corporation,' is really but an exemption from the general rule of the common law prohibiting the formation of corporations. The right of forming a corporation, and of acting in a corporate capacity under the general incorporation laws, can be called a franchise only in the sense in which the right of forming a limited partnership, or of executing a conveyance of land by deed is a franchise." Horton, C. J., in State v. Canal Co., 40 Kan. 96, 19 Pac. 349, 10 Am. St. Rep. 166.

It is a privilege emanating from the sovereign power of the state, owing its existence to a grant or, as at common law, to prescription, which presupposes a grant, and vested in individuals or a body politic something not belonging to the citizen of common right. Hazelton Boiler Co. v. Boiler Co., 137 Ill. 231, 28 N. E. 248.

Commenting on Blackstone's definition, Thompson says: "It has been well observed that, under our American systems of government and laws, this definition is not strictly correct; since our franchises spring from contracts between the sovereign power and private citizens, made upon a valuable consideration, for purposes of public benefit as well as of individual advantage." 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5335.

There are two franchises, distinct in their nature, and yet governed by substantially the same rules as to grant and exercise, which may be enjoyed by a corporation. One is the franchise of being or existing as a corporation, that is, possessing a unity and continuity of existence, though composed of an aggregate of changing members; the other is the exercise of rights, like the right of eminent domain or the partial appropriation of public property by exclusive use, as in ferries. Either of these franchises is a branch of sovereignty. 1 Bouv. Inst. 1690; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 166 U. S. 185, 17 Sup. Ct. 604, 41 L. Ed. 965.

"Franchise" means the right of a corporation to exist as such, which right does not partake of the incidents of property, and it also means the right of an existing corporation to carry on a particular enterprise, which right is property; Blackrock Copper Min. & Mill. Co. v. Tingey, 34 Utah 369, 98

"Corporate franchises are legal estates vested in the corporation itself as soon as it is in esse. They are not mere naked powers granted to the corporation, but powers coupled with an interest which vest in the corporation, upon the possession of its franchise, and whatever may be thought of the corporators, it cannot be denied that the corporation itself has a legal interest in such franchise." Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 594, 606, 18 L. Ed. 897.

A franchise to be a corporation, however, is distinct from a franchise to maintain and operate a railway; the latter may be mortgaged, without the former, and pass to a purchaser at foreclosure sale; Memphis & L. R. Co. v. Commissioners, 112 U. S. 609, 5 Sup. Ct. 299, 28 L. Ed. 837.

The grant of letters patent for an invention is said to be a franchise; (1891) 2 Q. B. 263; and so is a charter of incorporation from the state; State v. Coal Co., 36 W. Va. 802, 15 S. E. 1000, 17 L. R. A. 385.

To be a franchise, the right possessed must be such as cannot be exercised without the express permission of the sovereign power—a privilege or immunity of a public nature which cannot be legally exercised without legislative grant; State v. Mfg. Co., 40 Minn. 213, 41 N. W. 1020, 3 L. R. A. 510; Dike v. State, 38 Minn. 366, 38 N. W. 95.

In a case already cited it is said that a franchise, or the right to be and act as an artificial body, is vested in the individuals who compose the corporation, and not in the corporation itself; Fietsam v. Hay, 122 Ill. 293, 13 N. E. 501, 3 Am. St. Rep. 492. "But this," it is said, "is an imperfect statement of the true conclusion,—which is, that a primary franchise, that is to say, the franchise of being a corporation, vests in the individuals who compose the corporation; while those secondary franchises which are vendible by the corporation, necessarily, and for that reason alone, must be deemed to vest in the corporation. However, judicial theory is so confused on the subject, that proceedings by information in the nature of a quo warranto, to vacate the franchises of corporations, are sometimes brought against the individuals who compose the corporation, and sometimes against the corporation itself." 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5337.

Franchises are only grantable by the sovereign power, and in the U. S. they are usually held by corporations created for the purpose, and can be held only under legislative grant; In re Fay, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 243; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. People, 73 Ill. 541; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; People v. Ins. Co., 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 358, 8 Am. Dec. 243; Spotswood v. Morris, 12 Idaho 360, 85 Pac. 1094, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665; and may be accompanied with such conditions as its legislature may judge most befitting to its interest and policy; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 10 Sup. Ct. 593, 33 L. Ed. 1025; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 12 Sup. Ct. 403, 36 L. Ed. 164.

Where a corporation is created with power to use the streets of a city, upon the consent of the city, and by ordinance such consent is granted, the grant is a license and not a franchise; City of Chicago v. Tel. Co., 230 Ill. 157, 82 N. E. 607, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084, 12 Ann. Cas. 109; so of a telephone company; Dakota Cent. Tel. Co. v. City of Huron, 165 Fed. 226.

A franchise to lay pipes and conduits or erect poles and supply the inhabitants of a city with artificial light is an incorporeal hereditament—is real estate in the nature of an easement, pertaining to the streets of a city in which it is exercisable. It is inseparably annexed to the soil and has a local situation only in the place where the right is actually exercised; Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 313, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511.

That franchises requiring for their enjoyment the use of corporeal property, such as railroad, canal, telegraph, gas, water, bridge and similar companies, constitute a property fixed and immovable in its character, like realty, is, in contemplation of law, real property—an easement appurtenant to the streets is held in People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 46, 18 N. E. 692, 2 L. R. A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684; City of Chicago v. Baer, 41 Ill. 306; Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 313, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511.

The state is presumed to grant corporate franchises in the public interest, and to intend that they shall be exercised through the proper officers and agencies of the corporation, and does not contemplate that corporate powers will be delegated to others. Any conduct which destroys their functions, or maims or cripples their separate activity, by taking away the right to freely and independently exercise the functions of their franchise, is contrary to a sound public policy; McCutcheon v. Capsule Co., 71 Fed. 787, 19 C. C. A. 108, 31 L. R. A. 415.

Persons or corporations enjoying public franchises and engaged in a public employment owe a duty to the public; Gibbs v. Gas Co., 130 U. S. 396, 9 Sup. Ct. 553, 32 L. Ed. 979; or to individuals who, in compliance with established customs or rules, make demands upon them for the beneficial use of the privileges and advantages due to the public by reason of the aid so given by public authority; Coy v. Gas Co., 146 Ind. 655, 46 N. E. 17, 36 L. R. A. 535, where the failure of a natural gas company to supply gas to a consumer was held to be a tort as well as a breach of contract.

The grant of a franchise by the legislature is a contract and cannot be resumed by the state or its benefits impaired or diminished without the consent of the parties; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 519, 4 L. Ed. 629; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137; 3 Kent Com. 458; it is within the protection of that clause of the United States constitution which forbids the states from impairing the obligation of contracts; Union Bank of Tennessee v. State, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 490; Oliver v. R. Co., 30 Ark. 128; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. v. Loftin, id. 693; but this does not apply to mere personal privileges to members of a corporation, such as the exemption of a servant of such body from militia duty, or serving on juries, etc.; Neely v. State, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 316; such an exemption was held in this case unconstitutional; contra, Johnson v. State, 88 Ala. 176, 7 South. 253, where such an exemption was held part of the franchise granted to the corporation; and it may become a vested right which cannot be taken away by subsequent legislation; Ex parte Goodin, 67 Mo. 637 (overruling In re Powell, 5 Mo. App. 220). Franchises (of public service corporations) are property; Willcox v. Gas Co., 212 U. S. 19, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034. See IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

By the constitution or laws of many states, charters can only be granted subject to amendment or repeal. As to the power of the legislature in such cases, see Mayor, etc., of Worcester v. Norwich, 109 Mass. 103; Railroad Com'rs v. R. Co., 63 Me. 269, 18 Am. Rep. 208; Rodemacher v. R. Co., 41 Ia. 297, 20 Am. Rep. 592; Hamilton Gas Light Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 258, 13 Sup. Ct. 90, 36 L. Ed. 963; but municipal franchises are entirely under the control of the legislature; Cooley, Const. Lim. 336; Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Nesbit, 10 How. (U. S.) 402, 13 L. Ed. 469; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 9 Sup. Ct. 47, 32 L. Ed. 377.

The grant of a franchise is construed strictly and in case of doubt most favorably to the public; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. R. Co., 130 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 409, 32 L. Ed. 837; Talcott Mountain Turnpike Co. v. Marshall, 11 Conn. 185; Rockland Water Co. v. Water Co., 80 Me. 544, 15 Atl. 785, 1 L. R. A. 388; Bartram v. R. Co., 25 Cal. 283; East Line & R. R. R. Co. v. Cushing, 69 Tex. 306, 6 S. W. 834; Justices of Inferior Court of Pike County v. Plank-Road Co., 9 Ga. 475; Indianapolis Cable St. R. Co. v. R. Co., 127 Ind. 369, 24 N. E. 1054, 26 N. E. 893, 8 L. R. A. 539; and in the absence of doubt the obvious meaning of the words is to be followed; Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Jones, 34 Fed. 579; Birmingham & Pratt M. St. R. Co. v. St. Ry. Co., 79 Ala. 465, 58 Am. Rep. 615; such a grant is not held to be exclusive unless from its nature a presumption arises that it was so intended; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773; Dyer v. Bridge Co., 2 Port. (Ala.) 296, 27 Am. Dec. 655; White River Turnpike Co. v. R. Co., 21 Vt. 590; Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 17 Conn. 40, 42 Am. Dec. 716; id. 17 Conn. 454, 44 Am. Dec. 556; Mohawk Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 554; nor is a proviso to be so interpreted as to defeat the grant; Whitaker v. Canal Co., 87 Pa. 34.

Franchises are held subject to the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

See EMINENT DOMAIN; FERRY.

They are also said to be liable for the debts of the owner; 2 Washb. R. P. 24; but it is the general rule that they cannot be levied upon and sold under execution without authority or statute; New Orleans, S. F. & L. R. R. Co. v. Delamore, 34 La. Ann. 1225; Arthur v. Bank, 9 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 394, 48 Am. Dec. 719; Baxter v. Turnpike Co., 10 Lea (Tenn.) 488; though it may be otherwise provided by statute; Philadelphia & B. C. R. Co. v. Company's Appeal, 70 Pa. 355. See McNeal Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Howland, 111 N. C. 615, 16 S. E. 857, 20 L. R. A. 743; Gregory v. Blanchard, 98 Cal. 311, 33 Pac. 199. See as to levy on franchises, 4 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 138; 15 Am. Dec. 595, note.

As a general rule franchises cannot be sold or assigned without the consent of the legislature; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 930; Youngman v. R. Co., 65 Pa. 278; Randolph v. Larned, 27 N. J. Eq. 557; Chollette v. R. Co., 26 Neb. 159, 41 N. W. 1106, 4 L. R. A. 135. Legislative consent to the transfer is not alone sufficient. There must be a release from the obligations of the company to the public; Chollette v. R. Co., 26 Neb. 159, 41 N. W. 1106, 4 L. R. A. 135. The primary franchise to be a corporation, and such others as involve the performance of public duties are inalienable; Com. v. Smith, 10 Allen (Mass.) 448, 459, 87 Am. Dec. 672; Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 484; Appeal of Stewart, 56 Pa. 413; State v. Coal Co., 46 Md. 1; Pearce v. R. Co., 21 How. (U. S.) 441, 16 L. Ed. 184; Pullan v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 35, Fed. Cas. No. 11,461; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Eckford, 71 Tex. 274, 8 S. W. 679; 11 C. B. 775; Naglee v. R. Co., 83 Va. 707, 3 S. E. 369, 5 Am. St. Rep. 308; Thomas v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. Ed. 950.

The secondary franchises of a quasi-public corporation cannot be aliened without legislative authority; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Car Co., 139 U. S. 24, 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55; 6 H. L. Cas. 113; Atlantic & P. Telegraph Co. v. Ry. Co., 1 Fed. 745, 1 McCrary 541; Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Telegraph Co., 3 Fed. 417; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Ry. Co., 3 Fed. 423, 430. The same principles apply to a mortgage or lease of a franchise, see cases cited, and also, Black v. Canal Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 455; Middlesex R. Co. v. R. Co., 115

Mass. 347; Thomas v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. Ed. 950. The power to sell includes the power to mortgage; Willamette Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Bank, 119 U. S. 191, 7 Sup. Ct. 137, 30 L. Ed. 384.

The franchises which pass by a judicial sale of a railroad and franchises are those which are essential to the operation of the corporation but do not include such special privileges as an exemption from taxation; Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 23 L. Ed. 860. A corporation having public duties cannot transfer a portion of them; Board of Com'rs of Tippecanoe Co. v. R. Co., 50 Ind. 85; but the attempt to divide the franchise only concerns the public and cannot be objected to by a rival company; Oakland R. Co. v. R. Co., 45 Cal. 365, 13 Am. Rep. 181. An irrigation company may make a valid conveyance of all its property and right of way; State v. Canal Co., 40 Kan. 96, 19 Pac. 349, 10 Am. St. Rep. 166; Martin v. Zellerbach, 38 Cal. 300, 99 Am. Dec. 365.

A state has power to tax the franchises of a corporation at a different rate from tangible property in the state, so far as the United States constitution is concerned; Coulter v. R. Co., 196 U. S. 599, 25 Sup. Ct. 342, 49 L. Ed. 615.

See, generally, as to the sale of franchises, 4 Thomp. Corp. ch. cxvi.; as to their constitutional protection see the IMPAIRING OF OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; as to their control and regulation by the state, see POLICE POWER; as to the regulation of tolls and charges, see RATES; and as to their taxation, see that title.

The remedy for a non-user or misuser of a franchise by a corporation duly created and organized is by quo warranto or scire facias, which titles see. A court of equity will not in such case interfere or declare the franchise to be forfeited; Attorney General v. Stevens, 1 N. J. Eq. 369, 22 Am. Dec. 526; Attorney General v. Utica Ins. Co., 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 371; but see 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4538. Where a franchise is asserted in a proceeding to claim a right under it, its existence may be denied by way of defence; Zanesville v. Gas-Light Co., 47 Ohio St. 1, 23 N. E. 55. But a franchise set up by a corporation in defence, if it is in de facto possession of it, cannot be disputed except by a person or corporation who in the proceeding claims a better title; Weaverville & Minersville Wagon Road Co. v. Trinity County, 64 Cal. 69, 28 Pac. 496. See also as to quo warranto for misuser, People v. R. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 113, 30 Am. Dec. 48; and as to compulsory exercise of franchises, Rushville v. Gas Co., 132 Ind. 575, 28 N. E. 853, 15 L. R. A. 321.

See FORFEITURE; DISSOLUTION; MANDAMUS.

In a popular sense, franchise is used synonymously with right or privilege; as, the elective franchise.

FRANCIGENA. Born in France. A designation formerly given to aliens in England.

FRANCUS. Free; a freeman; a Frank. Spel. Glos.

Francus bancus. Free bench (q. v.).

Francus homo. A freeman.

Francus plegius. Frank pledge (q. v.).

Francus tenens. A freeholder. See ESTATE OF FREEHOLD.

FRANK. In Old English Law. Free. Usually employed in compounds, as frank-bank, free bench (q. v.).

To send letters and other mail matter free of postage. See FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

FRANK-CHASE. A liberty or right of free chase. Cowell.

FRANK-FEE. Lands not held in ancient demesne. Called "lands pleadable at common law." Reg. Orig. 12, 14; Fitzh. N. B. 161; Termes de la Ley.

That which a man holds to himself and his heirs and not by such service as is required in ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor. The opposite of copyhold. Cowell. A fine had in the king's court might convert demesne-lands into frank-fee; 2 Bla. Com. 368.

FRANK-FERME. Lands or tenements where the nature of the fee is changed by feoffment from knight's service to yearly service and whence no homage but such as is contained in the feoffment may be demanded. Britton, c. 66, n. 3; Cowell; 2 Bla. Com. 80.

FRANK-FOLD. The right of the lord to fold his tenant's sheep for manuring the land. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Keilw. 198. See FOLDAGE.

FRANK-LAW. An obsolete expression signifying the rights and privileges of a citizen, and seeming to correspond to our term "civil rights."

FRANK-MARRIAGE. A species of estate-tail where the donee had married one of kin (as daughter or cousin) to the donor and held the estate subject to the implied condition that the estate was to descend to the issue of such marriage. On birth of issue, as in other cases of estate-tail before the statute De donis, the birth of issue was regarded as a condition performed, and the estate thereupon became alienable by the donee; 1 Cruise, Dig. 71; 1 Washb. R. P. 67.

The estate is said to be in frank-marriage because given in consideration of marriage and free from services for three generations of descendants; Blount; Cowell. See, also, 2 Bla. Com. 115; 1 Steph. Com. 232.

FRANK-PLEDGE. A pledge or surety for freemen. Termes de la Ley. Also called FRITHBORH.

The bond or pledge which the inhabitants of a tithing entered into for each one of their number that he should be forthcoming to answer every violation of law. Each boy, on reaching the age of fourteen, was obliged to find some such pledge, or be committed to prison; Blount; Cowell; 1 Bla. Com. 114. See VIEW OF FRANK PLEDGE; TITHING; VILL.

It was in force in Pennsylvania; Meyers, Immigr. of Quakers.

FRANK-TENEMENT. A freehold. See LIBERUM TENEMENTUM.

FRANKALMOIN, FRANKALMOIGNE. A species of ancient tenure, in England, whereby a religious corporation, aggregate or sole, holds its lands of the donor, in consideration of the religious services it performs. The tenant holds in "free alms." It came to mean a gift to a religious person or body. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 27.

The services rendered being divine, the tenants are not bound to take an oath of fealty to a superior lord. A tenant in frankalmoigne is not only exempt from all temporal service, but the lord of whom he holds is also bound to acquit him of every service and fruit of tenure which the lord paramount may demand of the land held by this tenure. The services to be performed are either spiritual, as prayers to God, or temporal, as the distribution of alms to the poor. Of this latter class is the office of the queen's almoner, which is usually bestowed upon the Archbishop of York, with the title of Lord High Almoner. The spiritual services which were due before the Reformation are described by Littleton § 135; since that time they have been regulated by the liturgy or Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England; Co. 2d Inst. 502; Co. Litt. 93, 494 a. Hargr. ed. note (b); 2 Bla. Com. 101.

After Edward I. this tenure became of diminishing importance, due to the statutes of mortmain and quia emptores; the former prevented indiscriminate gifts of land to the religious; the latter forbade subinfeudation. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 29.

In the United States religious corporations hold land by the same tenure as other corporations and persons; some states by statute limit the quantity which they may hold.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE. The privilege of sending certain matter through the public mails without payment therefor.

It was first claimed by the house of commons in 1660, and was confirmed by statute in 1764. On the establishment of the penny postage in 1840 it was abolished. See 1 Bla. Com. 323; 2 Steph. Com. 632.

It was formerly enjoyed by various officers of the federal government, including members of both houses of congress, theoretically for the public good.

By the act of January 31, 1873, the franking privilege was abolished from and after July 1, 1873, and the act of March 3, 1873, repealed all laws permitting the transmission by mail of any free matter whatever. The act of March 3, 1875, s. 5, permits members of congress to send free public documents and acts; a qualified exercise of the privilege has been extended to certain officials, where public convenience seemed to require it. By act of March 3, 1877, it is made lawful to transmit through the mail free of postage, any letters, packages, or other matters relating exclusively to the business of the United States, provided that every such letter or package bears over the words "Official Business," an endorsement showing the name of the department or bureau from whence transmitted. This provision was extended by act of March 3, 1879, to all officers of the government and made applicable to all official mail matter. By the act of January 12, 1895, members of congress are entitled to send through the mails free, under their frank, any mail matter to any government official or to any person, correspondence not exceeding one ounce in weight, upon official or departmental business. They may also frank the Congressional Record or any part thereof. U. S. R. S. 1 Supp. 70. By act of April 28, 1904, the vice president and members, members-elect, delegates and delegates-elect may send free any mail matter to any government official, or to any person correspondence not exceeding four ounces in weight, upon official or departmental business. By act of June 26, 1906, lending the privilege to any committee or organization is forbidden.

FRANKLEYN (spelled, also, Francling and Franklin). A freeman; a freeholder; a gentleman; francus homo. Blount; Cowell.

FRASSETUM. A wood or wood ground where ash trees grow. Co. Litt. 4 b.

FRATER (Lat.). Brother.

Frater consanguineus. A brother born from the same father, though the mother may be different.

Frater nutricius. A bastard brother.

Frater uterinus. A brother who has the same mother but not the same father. Blount; 2 Bla. Com. 232.

Fratres conjurati. Sworn brothers or companions for the defence of their sovereign or for other purposes. Hoved. 445.

Fratres pyes. Certain friars who were accustomed to wear white and black garments. Walsingham 124. See BROTHER.

FRATERIA. A fraternity, brotherhood, or society of religious persons, who were mutually bound to pray for the good health and life, etc., of their living brethren, and the souls of those that were dead. Cowell.

FRATERNAL ASSOCIATIONS. See ASSOCIATIONS.

FRATERNIA. A fraternity or brotherhood.

FRATERNITY. A body of men associated for business, pleasure, or social intercourse, by some common tie, either natural, as of the like business, interest or character, or formal, as for religious or social purposes.

"Some people of a place united together, in respect of a mystery and business, into a company." 1 Salk. 193.

FRATRIAGE. A younger brother's inheritance.

FRATRICIDE. One who has killed a brother or sister; also the killing of a brother or sister. Black, L. Dict FRAUD. An endeavor to alter rights, by deception touching motives, or by circumvention not touching motives. Bigelow, Fraud 5.

Fraud is sometimes used as a term synonymous with covin, collusion, and deceit, but improperly so. Covin is a secret contrivance between two or more persons to defraud and prejudice another of his rights. Collusion is an agreement between two or more persons to defraud another under the forms of law, or to accomplish an illegal purpose. Deceit is a fraudulent contrivance by words or acts to deceive a third person, who, relying thereupon, without carelessness or neglect of his own, sustains damages thereby. Co. Litt. 357 b; Bacon, Abr. Fraud.

Actual or positive fraud includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice, used to circumvent, cheat, or deceive another. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 186.

For instance, the misrepresentation by word or deed of material facts, by which one exercising reasonable discretion and confidence is misled to his injury, whether the misrepresentation was known to be false, or only not known to be true, or even if made altogether innocently; the suppression of material facts which one party is legally or equitably bound to disclose to another; all cases of unconscientious advantage in bargains obtained by imposition, circumvention, surprise, and undue influence over persons in general, and especially over those who are, by reason of age, infirmity, idiocy, lunacy, drunkenness, coverture, or other incapacity, unable to take due care of and protect their own rights and interests; bargains of such an unconscionable nature and of such gross inequality as naturally lead to the presumption of fraud, imposition, or undue influence, when the decree of the court can place the parties in statu quo; cases of surprise and sudden action, without due deliberation, of which one party takes advantage; cases of the fraudulent suppression or destruction of deeds and other instruments, in violation of, or injury to, the rights of others; fraudulent awards with intent to do injustice; fraudulent and illusory appointments and revocations under powers; fraudulent prevention of acts to be done for the benefit of others under false statements or false promises; frauds in relation to trusts of a secret or special nature; frauds in verdicts, judgments, decrees, and other judicial proceedings; frauds in the confusion of boundaries of estates and matters of partition and dower; frauds in the administration of charities; and frauds upon creditors and other persons standing upon a like equity, are cases of actual fraud. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. c. 6.

Legal or constructive fraud includes such contracts or acts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a fraud, yet by their tendency to deceive or mislead others, or to violate private or public confidence, are prohibited by law.

Thus, for instance, contracts against some general public policy or fixed artificial policy of the law; cases arising from some peculiar confidential or fiduciary relation between the parties, where advantage is taken of that relation by the person in whom the trust or confidence is reposed, or by third persons; agreements and other acts of parties which operate virtually to delay, defraud, and deceive creditors; purchases of property, with full notice of the legal or equitable title of other persons to the same property (the purchaser becoming, by construction, particeps criminis with the fraudulent grantor); and voluntary conveyances of real estate, as affecting the title of subsequent purchasers; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. c. 7. See Bisph. Eq. 205.

According to the civilians, positive fraud consists in doing one's self, or causing another to do, such things as induce the opposite party into error, or retain him there. The intention to deceive, which is the characteristic of fraud, is here present. Fraud is also divided into that which has induced the contract, dolus dans causam contractui, and incidental or accidental fraud. The former is that which has been the cause or determining motive of the contract, that without which the party defrauded would not have contracted, when the artifices practised by one of the parties have been such that it is evident that without them the other would not have contracted. Incidental or accidental fraud is that by which a person, otherwise determined to contract, is deceived on some accessories or incidents of the contract,—for example, as to the quality of the object of the contract, or its price,—so that he has made a bad bargain. Accidental fraud does not, according to the civilians, avoid the contract, but simply subjects the party to damages. It is otherwise where the fraud has been the determining cause of the contract, qui causam dedit contractui: in that case the contract is void. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. liv. 3, t. 3, c. 2, n. § 5, n. 86, et seq.

What constitutes fraud. 1. It must be such an appropriation as is not permitted by law. 2. It must be with knowledge that the property is another's, and with design to deprive him of it. 3. It is not in itself a crime, for want of a criminal intent; though it may become such in cases provided by law. See Poll. Contr. 534.

Fraud, in its ordinary application to cases of contracts, includes any trick or artifice employed by one person to induce another to fall into or to detain him in an error, so that he may make an agreement contrary to his interest; and it may consist in misrepresenting or concealing material facts, and may be effected by words or by actions.

Where a party intentionally or by design misrepresents a material fact or produces a false impression, in order to mislead another, or to obtain an undue advantage of him, there is a positive fraud in the fullest sense of the term; Barnard v. Iron Co., 85 Tenn. 139, 2 S. W. 21. It must relate to facts then existing or which had previously existed; Adams v. Schiffer, 11 Colo. 15, 17 Pac. 21, 7 Am. St. Rep. 202; Gray v. Mfg. Co., 127 Ill. 187, 19 N. E. 874. If a person take upon himself to state as true that of which he is wholly ignorant, he will, if it be false, incur the same legal responsibility as if he had made the statements with knowledge of its falsity; Hexter v. Bast, 125 Pa. 52, 17 Atl. 252, 11 Am. St. Rep. 874; Chatham Furnace Co. v. Moffatt, 147 Mass. 403, 18 N. E. 168, 9 Am. St. Rep. 727; Wells v. McGeoch, 71 Wis. 196, 35 N. W. 769; Middleton v. Jerdee, 73 Wis. 39, 42 N. W. 629; Mooney v. Davis, 75 Mich. 188, 42 N. W. 802, 13 Am. St. Rep. 425; Swayne v. Waldo, 73 Ia. 749, 33 N. W. 78, 5 Am. St. Rep. 712.

While on the one hand, the courts have aimed to repress the practice of fraud, on the other, they have required that before relieving a party from a contract on the ground of fraud, it should be made to appear that on entering into such contract he exercised a due degree of caution. Vigilantibus, non dormientibus, subveniunt leges. A misrepresentation as to a fact the truth or falsehood of which the other party has an opportunity of ascertaining, or the concealment of a matter which a person of ordinary sense, vigilance, or skill might discover, does not in law constitute fraud. See Andrus v. Smelting Co., 130 U. S. 648, 9 Sup. Ct. 645, 32 L. Ed. 1054. The party must not be indolent; 49 Ind. 427. Misrepresentation as to the legal effect of an agreement does not avoid it as against a party whom such misrepresentation has induced to enter into it, —every man being presumed to know the legal effect of an instrument which he signs or of an act which he performs; Ans. Contr. 154. But see Labbe v. Corbett, 69 Tex. 503, 6 S. W. 808. See MISREPRESENTATION.

An intention to violate entertained at the time of entering into a contract, but not afterward carried into effect, does not vitiate the contract; per Tindal, C. J., 2 Scott 588; 4 B. & C. 506; per Parke, B., 4 M. & W. 115, 122; but making a promise as an inducement to a contract, with no intention of performing it, constitutes a fraud for which the contract may be rescinded; Lawrence v. Gayetty, 78 Cal. 126, 20 Pac. 382, 12 Am. St. Rep. 29; Albitz v. Ry. Co., 40 Minn. 476, 42 N. W. 394; Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Seidel, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 278, 113 S. W. 945; Pollard v. McKenney, 69 Neb. 742, 96 N. W. 679, 101 N. W. 9; but see Murray v. Smith, 42 Ill. App. 548. When one person misrepresents or conceals a material fact which is peculiarly within his own knowledge, or, if it is also within the reach of the other party, as a device to induce him to refrain from inquiry, and it is shown that the concealment or other deception was practised with respect to the particular transaction, such transaction will be void on the ground of fraud; 6 Cl. & F. 232; per Tindal, C. J., 3 M. & G. 446, 450. See Emmons v. Moore, 85 Ill. 304; Young v. Hughes, 32 N. J. Eq. 372; 12 Ves. 78. And even the concealment of a matter which may disable a party from performing the contract is a fraud; 9 B. & C. 387.

Misrepresentations must be fraudulently and intentionally made, or so recklessly as to be equivalent to fraud; Pittsburgh Life & Trust Co. v. Ins. Co., 148 Fed. 674, 78 C. C. A. 408; there must be moral turpitude or recklessness and carelessness; Furnas v. Friday, 102 Ind. 129, 1 N. E. 296. It is held that there must be an intent to deceive; Jolliffe v. Collins, 21 Mo. 338; Summers v. Ins. Co., 90 Mo. App. 691; but in Bishop v. Seal, 87 Mo. App. 256, it was held that actual intent is not a necessary element; and in Texas Cotton Products Co. v. Denny Bros. (Tex.) 78 S. W. 557, that intent is not a necessary element, if the misrepresentation was of a character calculated to deceive. In Michigan it is held that a misrepresentation, though made innocently and without intent to mislead, gives a right of action if the other party was misled; Holcomb v. Noble, 69 Mich. 396, 37 N. W. 497.

If the misrepresentation is made without knowledge of the transaction, but it is represented to be within the party's knowledge, it is a fraud; Upchurch v. Mizell, 50 Fla. 456, 40 South. 29; so if it was of a fact within the party's means of knowledge and he had, in fact, no knowledge; Hindman v. Bank, 112 Fed. 931, 50 C. C. A. 623, 57 L. R. A. 108. If there was no intent to deceive, and the party derived no benefit, he is not liable; Jalass v. Young, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 422.

Equitable doctrine of fraud. It is sometimes inaccurately said that such and such transactions amount to fraud in equity, though not in law; according to the popular notion that the law allows or overlooks certain kinds of fraud which the more conscientious rules of equity condemn and punish. But, properly speaking, fraud in all its shapes is as odious in law as in equity. The difference is that, as the law courts are constituted, and as it has been found in centuries of experience that it is convenient they should be constituted, they cannot deal with fraud otherwise than to punish it by the infliction of damages. All those manifold varieties of fraud against which specific relief, of a preventive or remedial sort, is required for the purposes of substantial justice, are the subjects of equity and not of law jurisdiction.

What constitutes a case of fraud in the view of courts of equity, it would be difficult to specify. It is, indeed, part of the equity doctrine of fraud not to define it, not to lay down any rule as to the nature of it, lest the craft of men should find ways of committing fraud which might escape the limits of such a rule or definition. "The court very wisely hath never laid down any general rule beyond which it will not go, lest other means for avoiding the equity of the court should be found out." Per Hardwicke, C., in 3 Atk. 278. It includes all acts, omissions, or concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust or confidence justly reposed, and are injurious to another, or by which an undue and unconscientious advantage is taken of another. "It may be stated as a general rule that fraud consists in anything which is calculated to deceive, whether it be a single act or combination of circumstances, whether it be by suppression of the truth or suggestion of what is false; whether it be by direct falsehood, or by innuendo, by speech or by silence, by word of mouth or by a look or a gesture. Fraud of this kind may be defined to be any artifice by which a person is deceived to his disadvantage." Bisph. Eq. § 206.

It is said by Lord Hardwicke, 2 Ves. Ch. 155, that in equity fraud may be presumed from circumstances, but in law it must be proved. His meaning is, unquestionably, no more than this: that courts of equity will grant relief upon the ground of fraud established by a degree of presumptive evidence which courts of law would not deem sufficient proof for their purposes; that a higher degree, not a different kind, of proof may be required by courts of law to make out what they will act upon as fraud. Both tribunals accept presumptive or circumstantial proof, if of sufficient force. Circumstances of mere suspicion, leading to no certain results, will not, in either, be held sufficient to establish fraud.

The equity doctrine of fraud extends, for certain purposes, to the violation of that class of so-called imperfect obligations which are binding on conscience, but which human laws do not and cannot ordinarily undertake to enforce: as in a large variety of cases of contracts which courts of equity do not set aside, but at the same time refuse to lend their aid to enforce; 2 Kent 39; Parker v. Grant, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 630; 1 Ball & B. 250. The proposition that "fraud must be proved and not assumed," is to be understood as affirming that a contract, honest and lawful on its face, must be treated as such until it is shown to be otherwise by evidence, either positive or circumstantial. Fraud may be inferred from facts calculated to establish it; per Black, C. J., in Kaine v. Weigley, 22 Pa. 179; Jones v. Lewis, 148 Pa. 234, 23 Atl. 985; Walker v. Collins, 59 Fed. 70, 8 C. C. A. 1.

The following classification of frauds as a head of equity jurisdiction is given by Lord Hardwicke in Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. Ch. 125; 1 Atk. 301; 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 428.

1. Fraud, or dolus malus, may be actual, arising from facts and circumstances of imposition. 2. It may be apparent from the intrinsic nature and subject of the bargain itself, such as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make, on the one hand, and no honest or fair man would accept, on the other. 3. It may be inferred from the circumstances and condition of the parties: for it is as much against conscience to take advantage of a man's weakness or necessity as of his ignorance. 4. It may be collected from the nature and circumstances of the transaction, as being an imposition on third persons.

Effect of. Fraud, both at law and in equity, when sufficiently proved and ascertained, avoids a contract ab initio, whether the fraud be intended to operate against one of the contracting parties, or against third parties, or against the public; Ans. Contr. 162; 1 W. Blackst. 465; Dougl. 450; 3 Burr. 1909; 3 V. & B. 42; 1 Sch. & L. 209; see Feltz v. Walker, 49 Conn. 98; but the injured party may elect to allow the transaction to stand; L. R. 2 H. L. 246; Lindsley v. Ferguson, 49 N. Y. 626; Wood v. Goff's Curator, 7 Bush (Ky.) 63.

The fraud of an agent by a misrepresentation which is embodied in the contract to which his agency relates, avoids the contract. But the party committing the fraud cannot in any case himself avoid the contract on the ground of the fraud; Chitty, Contr. 590, and cases cited. The party injured may lose the right to avoid the contract by laches; Hathaway v. Noble, 55 N. H. 508. But no delay will constitute laches except that occurring after the discovery of the fraud; 11 Cl. & F. 714; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. (U. S.) 561, 11 L. Ed. 1076; Humphreys v. Mattoon, 43 Ia. 556; Martin v. Martin, 35 Ala. 560; Kraus v. Thompson, 30 Minn. 64, 14 N. W. 266, 44 Am. Rep. 182. The injured party must repudiate the transaction in toto, if at all; he may not adopt it in part and repudiate it in part; Farmers' Bank v. Groves, 12 How. (U. S.) 51, 13 L. Ed. 889; 25 Beav. 594.

As to frauds in contracts and dealings the common law subjects the wrong-doer, in several instances, to an action on the case, such as actions for fraud and deceit in contracts on an express or implied warranty of title or soundness, etc. But fraud gives no action in any case without damage; 3 Term 56; and in matters of contract it is merely a defence; it cannot in any case constitute a new contract; 7 Ves. 211; Abbott v. Mackinley, 2 Miles (Pa.) 229. It is essentially ad hominem; 4 Term 337.

A person cannot recover for fraudulent representations where he did not rely upon them, but relied upon information from other sources and upon his own judgment; Craig v. Hamilton, 118 Ind. 565, 21 N. E. 315; White v. Smith, 39 Kan. 752, 18 Pac. 931; Lucas v. Crippen, 76 Ia. 507, 41 N. W. 205; Moses v. Katzenberger, 84 Ala. 95, 4 South. 237; Runge v. Brown, 23 Neb. 817, 37 N. W. 660; Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 10 Sup. Ct. 771, 34 L. Ed. 246. Fraud must be clearly proved and it is proper so to instruct the jury; Jones v. Lewis, 148 Pa. 234, 23 Atl. 985. There is no error in charging that fraud is never presumed, and must be shown by satisfactory proof; Walker v. Collins, 59 Fed. 70, 8 C. C. A. 1.

A contracting party, who has been the victim of fraud, may either (1) apply to the court to have the contract cancelled, or (2) elect to confirm the contract and demand its completion or damages for non-completion, or (3) bring an action for damages for deceit, and this even after he has lost his right to avoid the transaction by delaying too long.

It is no defense to say that the plaintiff could have found out the truth; [1881] 20 Ch. D. 1; or that he was only partly induced by the falsehood; 1 L. R. 4 H. L. 79.

In Criminal Law. Without the express provision of any statute, all deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty, are condemned by the common law, and punishable according to the heinousness of the offence; Co. Litt. 3 b; Dy. 295; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 71.

In considering fraud in its criminal aspect, it is often difficult to determine whether facts in evidence constitute a fraud, or amount to a felony. It seems now to be agreed that if the property obtained, whether by means of a false token or a false pretence, be parted with absolutely by the owner, it is a fraud; but if the possession only be parted with, and that possession be obtained by fraud, it will be felony; Bacon, Abr. Fraud; 2 Leach 1066; 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 673.

Of those gross frauds or cheats which, as being "levelled against the public justice of the kingdom," are punishable by indictment or information at the common law; 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 18, § 4, p. 821; the following are examples: Uttering a fictitious bank bill; Com. v. Boynton, 2 Mass. 77; selling unwholesome provisions; 4 Bla. Com. 162; mala praxis of a physician; 1 Ld. Raym. 213; rendering false accounts, and other frauds, by persons in official situations; Rex v. Bembridge, cited 2 East 136; 5 Mod. 179; 2 Campb. 269; 3 Chitty, Cr. Law 666; fabrication of news tending to the public injury; Stark. Lib. 546; and per Scroggs, C. J., Rex v. Harris, Guildhall, 1680; cheats by means of false weights and measures; 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 18, § 3, p. 820; and generally, the fraudulent obtaining the property of another by any deceitful or illegal practice or token (short of felony) which affects or may affect the public; 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 18, § 2, p. 818; as with the common cases of obtaining property by false pretences. See DECEIT; MISREPRESENTATION.

FRAUD ORDER. A name given to orders issued by the post-master general, under R. S. §§ 3929, 4041, for preventing the use of the mails as an agency for conducting schemes for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretences, etc. They are not restricted to schemes which lack all the elements of legitimate business, but the statute applies "when a business, even if otherwise legitimate, is systematically and designedly conducted upon the plan of inducing its patrons by means of false representations to part with their money in the belief that they are purchasing something different from, superior to, and worth more than, what is actually sold;" Harris v. Rosenberger, 145 Fed. 449, 16 C. C. A. 225, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762.

The fraud order is issued to the post-master of the office through which the person affected by it receives his mail. It forbids the post-master to pay any postal money order to the specified person, and instructs the post-master to return all letters to the senders if practicable, or if not, to the dead letter office, stamped in either case with the word "fraudulent." The method of testing the validity of the fraud order is to apply to the federal court for an injunction to restrain the post-master from executing it. The decision of the postmaster-general is not the exercise of a judicial function; if he exceeds his jurisdiction, the party injured may have relief in equity; Degge v. Hitchcock, 229 U. S. 162, 33 Sup. Ct. 639, 57 L. Ed. —.

Fraud orders have been sustained in the case of persons claiming by advertisement to be distillers, but being in fact mere middlemen and falsely advertising whisky as of a certain age; Harris v. Rosenberger, 145 Fed. 449, 16 C. C. A. 225, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762; in selling a medicine whose ingredients and curative properties were grossly misrepresented; Missouri Drug Co. v. Wyman, 129 Fed. 623; the advertisement of a sale of instructions and materials for making artificial flowers which falsely represented that steady employment would be given to the purchasers in making and selling the same; Fairfield Floral Co. v. Bradbury, 89 Fed. 393; but where the advertisement was that of a corporation assuming to heal disease through the influence of the mind, it was held that the effectiveness of such treatment was a mere matter of opinion and not within the statutes, which were intended to cover cases of fraud in fact only; American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 94, 23 Sup. Ct. 33, 47 L. Ed. 90.

FRAUDARE. In Civil Law. To cheat; defraud; deceive.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF. The name commonly given to the statute 29 Car. II. c. 3, entitled "An Act for the Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries."

Sections 1–3 provide that all interest in real estate created by livery of seisin only, or by parol, and not put in writing, and signed by the parties, or their agents authorized by writing, shall have the effect of leases or estates at will only, except leases not exceeding three years.

Section 4 provides that no action shall be brought to charge any executor or administrator upon any special promise to answer damages personally, or to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriages of another; or to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage; or upon any contract or sale of lands, or any interest therein or upon any agreement that is not to be performed within one year; unless the agreement or some memorandum or note thereof shall be in writing, signed by the party to be charged, or his agent.

Section 17 invalidates the sale of any goods, wares and merchandises for the price of ten pounds sterling or upwards, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain or in part of payment, or that some note or memorandum in writing be made and signed by the parties to be charged or their agents.

These are the most important sections; other sections provide additional solemnities in cases of wills; new liabilities imposed in respect of real estate held in trust; the disposition of estates pur auter vie; the entry and effect of judgments and executions.

The statute introduced into the law a distinction between written parol and oral parol transactions, and rendered a writing necessary for the valid performance of the matters to which they relate. Those matters are the following: Conveyances, leases, and surrenders of interests in lands; declarations of trusts of interest in lands; special promises by executors or administrators to answer damages out of their own estate; special promises to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another; agreements made upon consideration of marriage; contracts for the sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them; agreements not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof; contracts for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise for the price of ten pounds sterling or upwards. All these matters must be, by the statute, put in writing, signed by the party to be charged, or his attorney.

As to the acceptance of bills of exchange, see ACCEPTANCE.

A sale by parol of standing timber to be immediately cut, is good; In re Benjamin, 140 Fed. 320; Robbins v. Farwell, 193 Pa. 37, 44 Atl. 260; but not if it would require three or four years to work it up; White v. Fitts, 102 Me. 240, 66 Atl. 533, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 313, 120 Am. St. Rep. 483. A note or memorandum of a sale of real estate is sufficient, though the party did not deliver, but retained it; Lowther v. Potter, 197 Fed. 196.

Where possession is relied upon as part performance, it must be notorious, exclusive, continuous, and in pursuance of the contract; Baldwin v. Baldwin, 73 Kan. 39, 84 Pac. 568, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 957. The statutory period commences with the date of the agreement and not from the time for commencement of performance; Chase v. Hinkley, 126 Wis. 75, 105 N. W. 230, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738, 110 Am. St. Rep. 896, 5 Ann. Cas. 328. An oral agreement to pay back at the purchaser's option the money advanced on a sale of realty and assume the contract is void; Esslinger v. Pascoe, 129 Iowa, 86, 105 N. W. 362, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 147. Where the purchaser orally agrees to pay the owner's debts as part of the consideration, he cannot interpose the statute if the contract has been so far performed that he has received the property; Ackley v. Parmenter, 98 N. Y. 425, 50 Am. Rep. 693; Satterfield v. Kindley, 144 N. C. 455, 57 S. E. 145, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 399, 12 Ann. Cas. 1098. A contemporary promise of one person to pay where the benefit inures to another is a promise to answer for the default of another; when it appears that the credit is not given in the first instance wholly to the person who promises to pay for goods to be delivered to another, then the undertaking is collateral, but if the credit is given direct, then no writing is necessary; Harris v. Frank, 81 Cal. 280, 22 Pac. 856; Hardman v. Bradley, 85 Ill. 162; Johnson v. Bank, 60 W. Va. 320, 55 S. E. 394, 9 Ann. Cas. 893. As a general rule contracts required to be in writing cannot be modified by parol; Nonamaker v. Amos, 73 Ohio St. 163, 76 N. E. 949; 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 980, 112 Am. St. Rep. 708, 4 Ann. Cas. 179; contra, Marsh v. Bellew, 45 Wis. 38; Stearns v. Hall, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 31. An authorization by one to another to purchase stock for him from a third person is not within the statute; Wiger v. Carr, 131 Wis. 584, 111 N. W. 657, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 650, 11 Ann. Cas. 998. A delivery and acceptance of any part of the goods or chattels subsequent to the oral agreement will take the case out of the statute.

A written and signed offer, which is accepted, either in writing or orally, constitutes a sufficient memorandum of contract under the statute of frauds; In re Pettingill & Co., 137 Fed. 143.

A parol submission of matters involving the title to real estate is invalid under the statute; Hewitt v. R. Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 511, 42 Atl. 325; Wilmington Water Power Co. v. Evans, 166 Ill. 548.

As to contracts of indemnity to a third person see INDEMNITY; 42 Am. St. Rep. 186, n.; as to contracts to be performed within a year see Warner v. R. Co., 164 U. S. 418, 17 Sup. Ct. 147, 41 L. Ed. 495.

In regard to contracts for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, the payment of earnest-money, or the acceptance and receipt of part of the goods, etc., dispenses with the written memorandum. See EARNEST; SALE.

The substance of the statute, as regards the provisions above referred to, has been re-enacted in almost all the states; and in many of them, other points coming within the same general policy, but not embodied in the original English statute, have been made the subject of more recent enactments: as, for instance, the requirement of writing to hold a party upon a representation as to the character, credit, etc., of a third person, which was provided in England by 9 Geo. IV. cap. 14, § 6, commonly called Lord Tenterden's Act. For the legislation of the different states see Browne, Statute of Frauds.

See LEASE; SURETY; PERFORMANCE; ACCEPTANCE; GOODS, WARES AND MERCHANDISE. Throop, Val. of Verb. Agr.; Reed; Wood; Browne, Stat. Frauds.

For the date and authorship of the statute, see 134 Law Times 511; 26 Harv. L. Rev. 329.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE. A conveyance, the object, tendency, or effect of which is to defraud another, or the intent of which is to avoid some duty or debt due by or incumbent on the party making it. 2 Kent 440; 4 id. 462; and if fraudulent as to any provision therein, is void in toto as against creditors; Webb v. Ingham, 29 W. Va. 389, 1 S. E. 816.

Fraudulent conveyances received early attention; and the statutes of 13 Eliz. c. 5, and 27 Eliz. c. 4, made perpetual by 29 Eliz. c. 18, declared all conveyances made with intent to defraud creditors, etc., to be void. By a liberal construction, it has become the settled English law that a voluntary conveyance shall be deemed fraudulent against a subsequent purchaser even with notice; 9 East 59; 2 Bla. Com. 296; Roberts, Fraud. Conv. 2, 3; 17 Ad. & El. N. R. 723.

Voluntary conveyances are not so construed in the United States, however, where the subsequent purchaser has notice, especially if there be a good consideration; Wait, Fraud. Convey. 97; Beal v. Warren, 2 Gray (Mass.) 447.

These statutes have been generally adopted as the foundation of all the state statutes upon this subject; 4 Kent 462.

The mere fact of indebtedness alone will not render a voluntary conveyance void, if the grantor has property amply sufficient remaining to pay his creditor; Terry v. O'Neal, 71 Tex. 592, 9 S. W. 673; Joiner v. Van Alstyne, 22 Neb. 172, 34 N. W. 366.

A voluntary settlement, all debts being paid and the settlor retaining a reasonable income, is not fraudulent as against subsequent creditors of the settlor; [1900] 2 Q. B. 508.

In the case of ante-nuptial settlements, the consideration of marriage supports only such limitations as can be justly inferred to have been purchased on behalf of the party claiming such limitation, so that such party was not taking as a volunteer; 1 Atk. 265; 6 H. & N. 849; 5 Ch. Div. 619; [1891] A. C. 264. The voluntary settlement by a husband upon his wife, when this can be done without impairing existing claims of creditors, and without intent to defraud, is valid as against subsequent creditors; Jones v. Clifton, 101 U. S. 225, 25 L. Ed. 908; Schreyer v. Scott, 134 U. S. 405, 10 Sup. Ct. 579, 33 L. Ed. 955. The conveyance must be founded on good consideration and made with a bona fide intent; if defective in either of these particulars, although good as between the parties, it is void as to creditors; Smith v. Muirheid, 34 N. J. Eq. 4; Glenn v. Randall, 2 Md. Ch. 220.

The statute of 27 Eliz., unlike the statute of 13 Eliz., is limited to conveyances of real property; Boice v. Conover, 54 N. J. Eq. 531, 35 Atl. 402; Garrison v. Brice, 48 N. C. 85; Bohn v. Headley, 17 Harr. & J. (Md.) 257; contra, on the ground that the statute is only declaratory of the common law and the common law applies to personal property, for which reason it may be interpreted as defining the nature and effect of fraudulent conveyances generally; Gibson v. Love, 4 Fla. 217; Harper v. Scott, 12 Ga. 125; Avery v. Wilson, 47 S. C. 78, 25 S. E. 286.

A voluntary gift for charitable purposes is not to be treated as "covinous," within the meaning of 27 Eliz. c. 4, and is not avoided by a subsequent conveyance for value; [1892] App. Cas. 412.

When a mortgage is given to one person for the purpose of securing debts due to himself and others, with intent on the part of the mortgagor to defraud other creditors, it is valid as to an innocent beneficiary whose debt is an honest one, although the mortgagee himself is a party to the fraud; Morris v. Lindauer, 54 Fed. 23, 4 C. C. A. 162, 6 U. S. App. 510.

Voluntary conveyances by a debtor who is financially embarrassed are prima facie fraudulent as to existing creditors, and where a conveyance is made mala fide, and the fraud is participated in by both parties thereto, it cannot be upheld in derogation of the claims of creditors, existing or subsequent; Walsh v. Byrnes, 39 Minn. 527, 40 N. W. 831; Driggs & Co.'s Bank v. Norwood, 50 Ark. 42, 6 S. W. 323, 7 Am. St. Rep. 78; Neal v. Foster, 36 Fed. 29. But although such conveyance is void as regards purchasers and creditors, it is valid as between the parties; Reichart v. Castator, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 109, 6 Am. Dec. 402; Sherk v. Endress, 3 W. & S. (Pa.)

255; Worth v. Northam, 26 N. C. 102; Clapp v. Tirrell, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 247; Burgett's Lessee v. Burgett, 1 Ohio 469, 13 Am. Dec. 634; Hendricks v. Mount, 5 N. J. L. 738, 8 Am. Dec. 623; Osborne v. Moss, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 161, 5 Am. Dec. 252; 1 W. Bla. 262; Romans v. Maddux, 77 Ia. 203, 41 N. W. 763. An offence within 13 Eliz. c. 5, § 3, is also indictable; 6 Cox, Cr. Cas. 31.

This subject is fully treated in a note to Twyne's case, 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. (continued in 18 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 137), and in Bump; May, Fraud. Conv. See BADGES OF FRAUD.

FRAUS (Lat.). Fraud. The term of the civil law was, however, dolus (q. v.). It has been said that fraus was distinguished from dolus and had a more extended meaning. Calv. Lex.

FRAUS DANS LOCUM CONTRACTUI. A misrepresentation or concealment of some fact that is material to the contract, and had the truth regarding which been known the contract would not have been made as made, is called a "fraud dans locum contractui," i. e. a fraud occasioning the contract, or giving place or occasion for the contract.

FRAUS LEGIS (Lat.). Fraud of law. In Civil Law. The institution of legal proceedings for a fraudulent purpose. See IN FRAUDUM LEGIS.

FRAXINETUM. In Old English Law. A wood of ashtrees; a place where ashtrees grow. Co. Litt. 4 b; Shep. Touchst. 95.

FRAY. See AFFRAY.

FRECTUM. Freight. Quoad frectum navium suarum, as to the freight of his vessels. Blount.

FREDSTOLE, FREEDSTOLE. The seat of peace, a name given to a seat or chair near the altar, to which all fled who sought to obtain the privilege of sanctuary. Encyc. Dict. A sanctuary. Gib. Cod.

FREDUM. A fine paid for obtaining pardon when the peace had been broken. Spelman, Gloss.; Blount. A sum paid the magistrate for protection against the right of revenge. 1 Robertson, Charles V., App. note xxiii.

Freda was a Frankish term answering to the Saxon "wites." Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 278.

FREDWIT, or FREDWITE. A liberty to hold courts and take up the fines for beating and wounding. Jacob, Law Dict.

FREE. Not bound to servitude. At liberty to act as one pleases. This word is put in opposition to slave. U. S. Const. art. 1, § 2. Used in distinction from being bound as an apprentice.

The Declaration of Independence asserts that all men are born free; and in this sense the term is usually supposed to mean all mankind; though this seems to be doubted in Scott v. Sanford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. Ed. 691.

Certain: as, free services. These were also more honorable.

Confined to the person possessing, instead of being held in common; as, free fishery.

FREE ALMS. See FRANK-ALMOIN.

FREE BENCH. The right of the widow of a copyholder to a provision out of his lands. Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 6, cap. 13, num. 2; Fitzh. N. B. 150; Plowd. 411; Jenks, Mod. Land C. 70.

Dower in copyhold lands. 2 Bla. Com. 129. The quantity varied in different sections of England; Co. Litt. 110 b; L. R. 16 Eq. 592; incontinency was a cause of forfeiture, except, in the west of England, on the performance of a ridiculous ceremony of coming into the court of the manor, riding backwards on a black ram, etc.; see Jacob, Law Dict.; Cowell; Blount.

FREE BORD. An allowance of land outside the fence which may be claimed by the owner. An allowance, in some places, of two and a half feet wide outside the boundary or enclosure. Blount; Cowell.

FREE BOROUGHMEN. Such great men as did not engage like the frank-pledge men for their decennier. Jac. L. Dict. See FRIBURGUS.

FREE CHAPEL. A chapel founded by the king and exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. It may be one founded or endowed by a private person under a grant from the king; Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

FREE COURSE. Having the wind from a favorable quarter. To prevent collision of vessels, it is the duty of the vessel having the wind free to give way to a vessel beating up to windward and tacking; 3 Hagg. Adm. 215. At sea, such vessel meeting another close-hauled must give way, if necessary to prevent the danger of collision; 3 C. & P. 528. See 2 W. Rob. 225.

FREE ENTRY, INGRESS AND EGRESS. The right to go upon land from time to time as required to assert any right, as to take emblements.

FREE FISHERY. See FISHERY.

FREE FOLD. See FOLDAGE; FRANK-FOLD.

FREE MEN. Before the Norman Conquest, a free man might be a man of small estate dependent on a lord. Every man, not himself a lord, was bound to have a lord or be treated as unworthy of a free man's right. Among free men there was a difference in their estimation for Wergild. See LIBER HOMO.

FREE ON BOARD. A phrase applied to the sale of goods which denotes that the seller has contracted for their delivery on the vessel, cars, etc., without cost to the buyer for packing, portage, cartage, and the like. See FRAIS JUSQU'À BORD; F. O. B.

In such a contract the seller is under no obligation to act until the buyer names the ship to which the delivery is to be made; Dwight v. Eckert, 117 Pa. 508, 12 Atl. 32. Abbreviated in common use to f. o. b.

FREE PLEDGE. See FRANKPLEDGE.

FREE SERVICES. Such as it was not unbecoming the character of a soldier or freeman to perform; as, to serve under his lord in the wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bla. Com. 62; 1 Washb. R. P. 25.

FREE SHIPS. Neutral ships. "Free ships make free goods" is a phrase often used in treaties to denote that the goods on board neutral ships shall be free from confiscation even though belonging to an enemy; Wheat. Int. L. 507; 1 Kent 126. "It was first recognized by Holland in the seventeenth century as against the prevailing rule of the 'Consolato del Mare' (see CODE), by which the ownership of property determined its liability to capture." The doctrine was recognized, except as to goods contraband of war, in the Declaration of Paris (1856), q. v. This declaration, while a great step in favor of neutrals, does not free neutral commerce from the belligerent right of search for the purpose of ascertaining the true character of a ship sailing under a neutral flag, and for contraband goods. While the United States was not a party to the Declaration of Paris, yet during the civil war, its second and third articles, relating to this subject, were adhered to by both parties, as also during the war with Spain in 1898. See FLAG; NEUTRALITY; DECLARATION OF PARIS.

FREE SOCAGE. Tenure in free socage is a tenure by certain and honorable services which yet are not military. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 52; Dalrymple, Feuds, c. 2, § 1; 1 Washb. R. P. 25; called, also, free and common socage. See SOCAGE.

FREE SOCMEN. Tenants in free socage. 2 Bla. Com. 79.

FREE TENURE. Freehold tenure.

FREE WARREN. A franchise for the preserving and custody of beasts and fowls of warren. 2 Bla. Com. 39, 417; Co. Litt. 233. This franchise gave the grantee sole right of killing, so far as his warren extended, on condition of excluding other persons. 2 Bla. Com. 39.

FREEDMAN. In Roman Law. A person who had been released from a state of servitude. See LIBERTINE.

The term is frequently applied to the emancipated slaves in the southern states. By the fourteenth amendment of the constitution, citizenship was conferred upon them; Cooley, Const. Lim. 361. See Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394. The fifteenth amendment protects the elective franchise of freedmen and others of African descent; and this was the object of its adoption; Cooley, Const. Lim. 752.

FREEDOM. The condition of one to whom the law attributes the single individual right of personal liberty, limited only, in the domestic relations, by powers of control which are associated with duties of protection. See APPRENTICE; MARRIED WOMEN; PARENT AND CHILD; GUARDIAN; MASTER AND SERVANT.

This right becomes subject to judicial determination when the law requires the public custody of the person as the means of vindicating the rights of others. The security of the liberty of the individual and of the rights of others is graduated by the intrinsic equity of the law, in purpose and application. The means of protecting this liberty of the individual without hazarding the freedom of others must be sought in the provisions of the remedial and penal law.

Independently of forfeiture of personal liberty under such laws and of its limitations in the domestic relations, freedom, in this sense, is a status which is invariable under all legal systems. It is the subject of judicial determination when a condition incompatible with the possession of personal liberty is alleged against one who claims freedom as his status. A community wherein law should be recognized, and wherein nevertheless, this status should not be enjoyed by any private person, is inconceivable; and, wherever its possession is thus controverted, the judicial question arises of the personal extent of the law which attributes liberty to free persons. The law may attribute it to every natural person, and thereby preclude the recognition of any condition inconsistent with its possession. This universal extent of the law of free condition will operate in the international as well as in the internal private law of the state. In most European countries the right of one, under the law of a foreign country, to control the person of another who by such law had been his slave or bondman is not recognized under that international rule for the allowance of the effect of a foreign law which is called comity, because the law of those countries attributes personal liberty as a right to every natural person. 1 Hurd, Law of Freedom §§ 116, 300.

In other countries the power of the master under a foreign law is recognized in specified cases by a statute or treaty, while an otherwise universal attribution of personal liberty precludes every other recognition of a condition of bondage. On this principle, in some of the United States, an obligation to render personal service or labor, and the corresponding right of the person to whom it is due, existing under the law of other states, were not enforced except in cases of claim within art. 4, sec. 2, ¶ 3 of the constitution of the United States; Com. v. Aves, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 193; Lemmon v. People, 20 N. Y. 562.

Legal rights are the effects of civil society. No legal condition is the reservation of a state of nature anterior to civil society. Freedom, as here understood, is the effect of law, not a pre-existing natural element. It is, therefore, not necessarily attributed to all persons within any one jurisdiction. But personal liberty, even though not attributed universally, may be juridically regarded as a right accordant with the nature of man in society; and the effect of this doctrine will appear in a legal presumption in favor of free condition, which will throw the burden of proof always on him who denies it. This presumption obtained in the law of Rome (XII Tab. T. vi. 5; Dig. lib. 40, tit. 5, l. 53; lib. 43, tit. 29, s. 3, l. 9; lib. 50, tit. 17, ll. 20, 22) even when slavery was derived from the jus gentium, or that law which was found to be received by the general reason of mankind; 1 Hurd, Law of Freedom § 157.

In English law, this presumption in favor of liberty has always been recognized, not only in the penal and remedial law, but in applying the law of condition, at a time when involuntary servitude was lawful; Fortesque, cc. 42, 47; Co. Litt. fol. 124 b; Wood, Inst. c. 1, § 5. In the slave-holding states, a presumption against the freedom of persons of negro descent arose or was declared by statute; Cooper, Justin. 485; Bell v. Dozier, 12 N. C. 336; Macon & W. R. Co. v. Holt, 8 Ga. 157. In interpreting manumission clauses in wills, the rule differed in the states according to their prevailing policy; Cobb, Slav. 298.

The condition of a private person who is legally secured in the enjoyment of those rights of action, in social relations, which might be equally enjoyed by all private persons.

The condition of one who may exercise his natural powers as he wills is not known in jurisprudence, except as the characteristic of those who hold the supreme power of the state. The freedom which one may have by his individual strength resembles this power in kind, and is no part of legal freedom. The legal right of one person involves correlative obligations on others. All persons must be restricted by those obligations which are essential to the freedom of others; 2 Harr. Cond. La. 208; but these are not inconsistent with the possession of rights which may be enjoyed equally by all. Such obligations constitute a condition opposed to freedom only as things which mutually suppose and require each other. Where the law imposes obligations incompatible with the possession of such rights as might be equally enjoyed by all, a condition arises which is contrary to freedom, see BONDAGE, and the condition of those who hold the rights correlative to such obligations becomes superior to freedom, as above defined, or is merged in the superiority of a class or caste. The rights and obligations of all cannot be alike; men must stand towards each other in unlike relations, since the actions of all cannot be the same. In the possession of relative rights they must be unequal. But individual (absolute) rights, which exist in relations towards the community in general, and capacity for relative rights in domestic relations, may be attributed to all in the same circumstances of natural condition. It is in the possession of these rights and this capacity that this freedom exists. As thus defined, it comprehends freedom in the narrower sense, as the greater includes the less; and when attributed to all who enjoy freedom in the narrower sense, as at the present day in the greater part of Europe and formerly in the free states of the Union, the latter is not distinguished as a distinct condition. But some who enjoy personal liberty might yet be so restricted in the acquisition and use of property, so unprotected in person and limited in the exercise of relative rights, that their condition would be freedom in the narrower sense only. During the middle ages, in Europe, it was possible to discriminate the existing free conditions as thus different; and the restrictions formerly imposed on free colored persons in the slave-holding states of the Union created a similar distinction between their freedom and that which, in all the states, was attributed to all persons of white race.

Freedom, in either sense, is a condition which may exist anywhere, under the civil power; but its permanency will depend on the guarantees by which it is defended. These are of infinite variety. In connection with a high degree of guarantee against irresponsible sovereign power, freedom, in the larger sense above described, may be called civil freedom, from the fact that such guarantee becomes the public law of the state. Such freedom acquires specific character from the particular law of some one country, and becomes the topic of legal science in the juridical application of the guarantees by which the several rights incident to it are maintained. This constitutes a large portion of the jurisprudence of modern states, and embraces, particularly in England and America, the public or constitutional law. The bills of rights in American constitutions, with their great original, Magna Charta, are the written evidences of the most fundamental of these guarantees. The provisions of the constitution of the United States which have this character operate against powers held by the national government, but not against those reserved to the states; Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 243, 8 L. Ed. 672; Sedgw. Const. 597. It has been judicially declared that a person "held to service or labor in one state under the laws thereof escaping into another" is not protected by any of these provisions, but may be delivered up, by national authority, to a claimant, for removal from the state in which he is found, in any method congress may direct, and that any one claimed as such fugitive may be seized and removed from such state by private claimant, without regard either to the laws of such state or the acts of congress; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 597, 10 L. Ed. 274.

The other guarantees of freedom in either sense are considered under the titles EVIDENCE; ARREST; BAIL; TRIAL; HABEAS CORPUS; DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO.

Irresponsible superiority, whether of one or of many, is necessarily antagonistic to freedom in others. Yet freedom rests on law, and law on the supreme power of some state. The possession of this power involves a liberty of action; but its possession by a body of persons, each one of whom must submit to the will of the majority, is not in itself a guarantee of the freedom of any one individual among them. Still, the more equally this power is distributed among those who are thus individually subject, the more their individual liberty of action in the exercise of this power approximates to a legal right,—though one beyond any incident to civil freedom as above defined,—and its possession may be said to constitute political freedom, so far as that may be ascribed to private persons which is more properly ascribed to communities. In proportion as this right is extended to the individual members of a community, it becomes a guarantee of civil freedom, by making a delegation of the power of the whole body to a representative government possible and even necessary, which government may be limited in its action by customary or written law. Thus, the political liberties of private persons and their civil freedom become intimately connected; though political and civil freedom are not necessarily coexistent. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 6, n., 127, n.

Political freedom is to be studied in the public law of constitutional states and in England and America, particularly in those provisions in the bills of rights which affect the subject more in his relations towards the government than in his relations towards other private persons. See LIBERTY. The terms freedom and liberty are words differing in origin (German and Latin); but they are, in use, too nearly synonymous to be distinguished in legal definition. See LIBERTY; Lieber, Civ. Lib. etc. 37, n.

FREEDOM OF THE CITY. In English Law. Immunity from county jurisdiction, and the privilege of corporate taxation and self-government held under a charter from the crown. This freedom is enjoyed of right, subject to the provision of the charter, and is often conferred as an honor on princes and other distinguished individuals. The freedom of a city carries the parliamentary franchise. Encyc. Dict. The rights and privileges possessed by the burgesses or freemen of a municipal corporation under the old English law; now of little importance, and conferred chiefly as a mark of honor. See 11 Chic. L. J. 357.

The phrase has no place in American law, and as frequently used in addresses of welcome made to organizations visiting an American city, particularly by mayors, has no meaning whatever except as an expression of good will.

The form of the grant made by the city of New York to Andrew Hamilton of Philadelphia is quoted at large in 14 Law Notes 150.

FREEDOM OF CONTRACT. See LIBERTY OF CONTRACT.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS. See LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH. See LIBERTY OF SPEECH.

FREEHOLD. See ESTATE OF FREEHOLD.

FREEHOLD IN LAW. A freehold which has descended to a man, upon which he may enter at pleasure, but which he has not entered on. Termes de la Ley.

FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETIES. Societies in England designed for the purpose of enabling mechanics, artisans, and other working-men to purchase at the least possible price a piece of freehold land of a sufficient yearly value to entitle the owner to the elective franchise for the county in which the land is situated. Wharton.

FREEHOLDER. The owner of a freehold estate. Such a man must have been anciently a freeman; and the gift to any man by his lord of an estate to him and his heirs made the tenant a freeman, if he had not been so before. See 1 Washb. R. P. 29, 45. One who owns land in fee or for life, or for some indeterminate period. The estate may be equitable or legal. State v. Ragland, 75 N. C. 13. Boards of freeholders exist in New Jersey. It is the designation of the governing board of a county.

FREEMAN. One who is not a slave. One born free or made so.

In Old English Law. A freeholder, as distinguished from a villein.

An inhabitant of a city. Stat. 1 Hen. VI. c. 11, 3 Steph. Com. 196.

In Vermont (Acts 1903, p. 3) mention is made of freemen's meetings.

FREEMAN'S ROLL. A list of persons admitted as burgesses or freemen for the purposes of the rights reserved by the Municipal Corporation Act. 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76. Distinguished from the Burgess Roll; 3 Steph. Com. 197. The term was used, in early colonial history, of some of the American colonies.

FREIGHT. In Maritime Law. The sum agreed on for the hire of a ship, entirely or in part, for the carriage of goods from one port to another. 13 East 300. All rewards or compensation paid for the use of ships. Giles v. The Cynthia, 1 Pet. Adm. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 5,424; 2 B. & P. 321; Sansom v. Ball, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 459, 1 L. Ed. 908; Cheriot v. Barker, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 346, 3 Am. Dec. 437; Chitty, Com. L. 407. The price to be paid for the actual transportation of goods by sea from one place to another. Hagar v. Donaldson, 154 Pa. 242; The Norman Prince, 185 Fed. 169.

It is an inherent element in a contract of affreightment that a vessel shall enter on the voyage named and begin the carriage of the goods shipped, or, as it is technically called, "break ground," before a claim for freight can arise, unless the shipper of the goods, the vessel remaining ready to enter on the voyage, undertakes to reclaim the goods. The circumstances under which the contract was entered into continuing the same, so far as respects the vessel, the shipper cannot reclaim the goods without paying the full freight; The Tornado, 108 U. S. 342, 2 Sup. Ct. 746, 27 L. Ed. 747; The Norman Prince, supra.

The amount of freight is usually fixed by the agreement of the parties; and if there is no agreement, the amount is to be ascertained by the usage of the trade and the circumstances and reason of the case; 3 Kent 173. See RATES. When the merchant hires the whole ship for the entire voyage, he must pay the freight though he does not fully lade the ship; Chitty, Com. L. 407; Heckscher v. McCrea, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 304; he is, of course, only bound to pay in proportion to the goods he puts on board, when he does not agree to provide a full cargo. If the merchant agrees to furnish a return cargo, and he furnishes none, and lets the ship return in ballast, he must make compensation to the amount of the agreed freight; Giles v. The Cynthia, 1 Pet. Adm. 207, Fed. Cas. No. 5,424; 2 Vern. 210. See L. R. 6 Q. B. 528; DEAD FREIGHT.

The general rule is that the delivery of the goods at the place of destination, in fulfilment of the agreement of the charter-party or bill of lading, is required, to entitle the master or owner of the vessel to freight; Frith v. Barker, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 327; China Mut. Ins. Co. v. Force, 142 N. Y. 90, 36 N. E. 874, 40 Am. St. Rep. 576; Thibault v. Russell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 293; Brittan v. Barnaby, 21 How. (U. S.) 527, 16 L. Ed. 177. If prepaid, it may be recovered back on a failure to make delivery unless expressly provided otherwise in the contract; Burn Line v. U. S. & A. S. S. Co., 162 Fed. 298, 89 C. C. A. 278.

An interruption of the regular course of the voyage, happening without the fault of the owner, does not deprive him of his freight if the ship afterwards proceeds with the cargo to the place of destination, as in the case of capture and recapture; 3 C. Rob. 101; 3 Kent 223; but where a voyage is broken up by reason of the inexcusable delay of the ship, resulting in damage to the shippers, he need not pay the freight; Hoadley v. The Lizzie, 39 Fed. 44. In case of the blockade of, or the interdiction of, commerce with the port to which the cargo is destined, and the return of the goods to the owner, no freight will be due; Scott v. Libby, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 336, 3 Am. Dec. 431; 10 East 526; but see Morgan v. Ins. Co., 4 Dall. (U. S.) 455, 1 L. Ed. 907.

A shipowner, who is prevented from performing the voyage by a wrongful act of the charterer, is prima facie entitled to the freight that he would have earned, less what it would have cost him to earn it; The Gazelle, 128 U. S. 474, 9 Sup. Ct. 139, 32 L. Ed. 496.

When the ship is forced into a port short of her destination, and cannot finish the voyage, if the owner of the goods will not allow the master a reasonable time to repair, or to proceed in another ship, the master will be entitled to the whole freight; and if, after giving his consent, the master refuses to go on, he is not entitled to freight. See DEVIATION.

When the merchant accepts of the goods at an intermediate port, it is the general rule that freight is to be paid according to the proportion of the voyage performed; and the law will imply such contract; Bork v. Norton, 2 McLean 423, Fed. Cas. No. 1,659; Robinson v. Ins. Co., 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 323. The acceptance must be voluntary, and not one forced upon the owner by any illegal or violent proceedings, as from it the law implies a contract that freight pro rata parte itineris shall be accepted and paid; 2 Burr. 883; Gray v. Waln, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 229, 7 Am. Dec. 642; Caze v. Baltimore Ins. Co., 7 Cra. (U. S.) 358, 3 L. Ed. 370; Welch v. Hicks, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 504, 16 Am. Dec. 443; 3 Kent 182; Com. Dig. Merchant (E 3), note, pl. 43.

If the master refuse to repair his vessel and send on the goods, or to procure other vessels for that purpose and the owner of the goods then receives them, such an acceptance will not be such a voluntary one as to make him liable for freight pro rata; Welch v. Hicks, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 504, 16 Am. Dec. 443; Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bird, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 195; and where the port designated in the charter-party was unsafe, the master was held justified in discharging part of his cargo at another port in order to be able to proceed with the rest to the point designated; [1896] 1 Q. B. 586; L. R. 6 P. D. 68.

When the ship has performed the whole voyage, and has brought only a part of her cargo to the place of destination, there is a difference between a general ship and a ship chartered for a specific sum for the whole voyage. In the former case, the freight is to be paid for the goods which may be delivered at their place of destination; in the latter, it has been questioned whether the freight could be apportioned; and it seems that in such case a partial performance is not sufficient, and that a special payment cannot be claimed except in special cases; Post v. Robertson, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 24; 2 Campb. 466. Proof that a vessel received the number of cases of oil stated in the bills of lading, that none were stolen during the voyage, and that all on board were delivered alongside by her tackles into lighters, entitles her to freight on all shown by the bills of lading, though there may have been a shortage when the oil reached its destination; Steamship Den of Ogil Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 189 Fed. 1020. Where a cargo owner is allowed, as damages against a vessel, for loss of cargo, its full value at the port of delivery, he is not entitled to a reduction in freight on account of the loss; Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Anderson, 186 Fed. 145, 108 C. C. A. 257.

If goods are laden on board, the shipper is not entitled to their return and to have them relanded without paying the expenses of unloading and the whole freight and surrendering the bill of lading or indemnifying the master against any loss or damage he may sustain by reason of the non-delivery of the bill; Bartlett v. Carnley, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 194. In general, the master has a lien on the goods, and need not part with them until the freight is paid; Brittan v. Barnaby, 21 How. (U. S.) 527, 16 L. Ed. 177; and when the regulations of the revenue require them to be landed in a public warehouse, the master may enter them in his own name and preserve the lien; Abb. Ship. pt. 3, ch. 3, § 11. His right to retain the goods may, however, be waived either by an express agreement at the time of making the original contract, or by his subsequent agreement or consent. The refusal of a master to deliver a cargo until security is furnished for the freight gives no right of action to the charterer, as the cargo is subject to a lien for freight; The Ira B. Ellems, 48 Fed. 591. See LIEN; MARITIME LIEN; AVERAGE.

If freight be paid in advance and the goods are not conveyed and delivered according to the contract, it can, in all cases, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, be recovered back by the shipper; Phelps v. Williamson, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 578.

The captor of an enemy's vessel is entitled to freight from the owner of the goods if he perform the voyage and carries the goods to the port of original destination; 1 Kent 131; but in such cases the doctrine of freight pro rata is entirely rejected; 4 Rob. Rep. 278; 5 id. 67; 6 id. 269.

See COMMON CARRIERS; HARTER ACT; SHIP; SEAWORTHY; IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; RATES; INTER-STATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

FREIGHTER. He to whom a ship or vessel has been hired, and who loads her under his contract. He who loads a general ship. 3 Kent 173; 3 Pardessus, n. 704.

The freighter is entitled to the enjoyment of the vessel according to contract, and the vessel hired is the only one that he is bound to take; there can, therefore, be no substitution without his consent. When the vessel has been chartered only in part, the freighter is only entitled to the space he has contracted for; and in case of his occupying more room or putting on board a greater weight, he must pay freight on the principles mentioned under the article of FREIGHT.

The freighter hiring a vessel is required to use the vessel agreeably to the provisions of the charter-party, or, in the absence of any such provisions, according to the usages of trade; he cannot load the vessel with merchandise which would render it liable to condemnation for violating the laws of a foreign state; Smith v. Elder, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 105. He is also required to return the vessel as soon as the time for which he chartered her has expired, and to pay the freight.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS. On January 20, 1885 (23 Stat. L. 283), congress authorized all citizens of the United States or their legal representatives, to present to the court of claims valid claims which they had against France for spoliations of property on the high seas prior to 1801. These spoliations were committed by French war vessels and privateers in pursuance of governmental orders, inspired by alleged violations of the treaty of 1778 by the United States, and extended from about 1796 to 1801. The United States authorized retaliatory measures in 1798. Napoleon having succeeded to the Directory, made a treaty with the United States by which the respective pretensions of the two nations were abandoned. The claimants insisted that this proceeding was a trading off of their claims against France for a national consideration, and that their own government became liable therefor.

In making appropriations, congress did not intend to determine conclusively what persons were entitled thereto; the payments were for the next of kin of the original sufferers; the person receiving the appropriation and filing an account is held to have submitted to such court the question of who were entitled to the money; Buchanan v. Patterson, 190 U. S. 353.

Under the act of March 3, 1891, the payments were by way of gratuity and grace, and went to the next of kin, excluding creditors, etc. Next of kin were those living at the date of the act, to be determined by the statute of distribution of the respective state of the domicil of the original sufferer; Buchanan v. Patterson, 190 U. S. 353, 23 Sup. Ct. 764, 47 L. Ed. 1093.

French spoliation cases rest upon the just and equitable principles of international law and are not matters of strict legal right; The Hiram, 24 Ct. Cl. 31. The actual loss is all that the claimant is entitled to; transactions of parties as owners, insurers, etc., cannot be considered; id.

The act of Congress (March 3, 1891) provides that claims shall be awarded to the next of kin; Rutledge v. Tunno, 63 S. C. 205, 41 S. E. 308; Healey v. Cole, 95 Me. 272, 49 Atl. 1065; to be distributed under the statute of distributions of the domicil of the original sufferer at the time of his death; id.

A probate court can appoint an administrator for the sole purpose of collecting these claims, though the fund will not be liable for the debts of the intestate, but will go to the particular persons; Sargent v. Sargent, 168 Mass. 420, 47 N. E. 121. An administrator c. t. a. collecting such claim does not deprive the next of kin of their interest; In re Warren, 105 App. Div. 582, 94 N. Y. Supp. 286.

See NEXT OF KIN.

FRENDLESMAN (Sax.). An outlaw. So called because of his outlawry he was denied all help of friends after certain days. Cowell; Blount.

FRENDWITE. A fine exacted from him who harbored an outlawed friend. Cowell; Cunningham. A quittance for for. fang (exemption from the penalty of taking provisions before the king's purveyors had taken enough for the king's necessities). Cowell.

FREOBORGH. A free-surety or free-pledge. Spelman, Gloss. See FRANK-PLEDGE.

FREQUENT. To visit often; to resort to often or habitually. Green v. State, 109 Ind. 175.

FRESH DISSEISIN. Such disseisin as a man may seek to defeat of himself, and by his own power, without the help of the king or judges. There was no limit set to the time within which this might be done. It is set in one case as a disseisin committed within fifteen days. Bracton, lib. 4, cap. 5. In another case it was held a fresh disseisin when committed within a year. Britton, cap. 32, 43, 65.

FRESH FINE. A fine levied within a year. Stat. Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I.), cap. 45.

FRESH FORCE. Force done within forty days. Fitzh. N. B. 7; Old N. B. 4. The heir or reversioner in a case of disseisin by fresh force was allowed a remedy in chancery by bill before the mayor. Cowell.

The Assize of Fresh Force has recently been elucidated by the investigations of W. C. Bolland; see Selden Society's Year Books Series, Vol. VIII, Introd. xxxvi; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 628.

FRESH SUIT. Where a man robbed follows the robber with all diligence, apprehends and convicts him of felony by verdict, even if it requires a year, it is called fresh suit, and the party shall have his goods again. The same term was applied to other cases; Cowell; 1 Bla. Com. 297.

FRESHET. A flood or overflowing of a river by means of rains or melted snow; an inundation. Stover v. Ins. Co., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 42.

FRETTUM. Freight. Moz. & W.

FRETUM. A strait. Fretum Brittanicum, the strait between Dover and Calais.

FRIAR. A member of an order of religious persons, of whom there were four principal branches: 1. Minors, Grey Friars, or Franciscans. 2. Augustines. 3. Dominicans, or Black Friars. 4. White Friars, or Carmelites. Cowell; Whart.; Moz. & W.

FRIBURGH. (Also, Frithborg, Frithborgh, Friborg, Froborg, and Freoburgh.) (Sax.) A kind of frank-pledge whereby the principal men were bound for themselves and servants. Fleta, lib. 1, cap. 47. Cowell says it is the same as frank-pledge.

FRIBUSCULUM. In Civil Law. A slight dissension between husband and wife, which produced a momentary separation, without any intention to dissolve the marriage,—in which it differed from a divorce. Pothier, Pand. lib. 50, s. 106; Vicat. Voc. Jur. This amounted to a separation in our law. See SEPARATION.

FRIEND OF THE COURT. See AMICUS CURIÆ.

FRIENDLESS MAN. An outlaw. Cowell.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES. Associations for the purpose of affording relief to the members and their families in case of sickness or death. They are governed by numerous acts of parliament, and were first authorized in 1793.

FRIENDLY SUIT. A suit brought by a creditor in chancery against an executor or administrator, being really a suit by the executor or administrator, in the name of a creditor against himself, in order to compel the creditors to take an equal distribution of the assets. 2 Wms. Ex. 1915. See AMICABLE ACTION; CASE STATED.

FRIGHT. See MENTAL SUFFERING.

FRIGIDITY. Impotence.

FRILING, or FREOLING. A freeman born. Jac. L. Dict.; Spel. Gloss.

FRISCUS. Fresh uncultivated ground. Mon. Angl. tit. 2, p. 56. Fresh, not salt. Reg. Orig. 97. Recent or new.

FRITHBORGH. See FRIBURGH.

FRITHBOTE. A satisfaction or fine for a breach of the peace. See FREDUM.

FRITHBREACH. The breaking of the peace. Cowell.

FRITHGEAR. The year of jubilee or of meeting for peace and friendship. Jac. L. D.

FRITHGILD. A guild hall. A company or fraternity for the maintenance of peace and security; a fine for breach of the peace. Jac. L. Dict.

FRITHMAN. A member of a company or fraternity. Blount.

FRITHSOCNE. Surety of defence. Jurisdiction of the peace. The franchise of preserving the peace. Cowell.

FRITHSOKE, or FRITHSOKEN. The right to take a view of frank-pledge. Fleta. See FRITHSOCNE, which seems to be interchangeable. Cowell.

FRIVOLOUS. An answer or plea is frivolous which controverts no material allegation in the complaint, and which is manifestly insufficient. Under the English common-law amendment act, and by the codes of some of the states, the court is authorized to strike out such a plea, so that the plaintiff can obtain judgment without awaiting the regular call of the cause; Lefferts v. Snediker, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 41; New Jersey Zinc Co. v. Blood, 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 149; Brown v. Jenison, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 732; Dobson v. Hallowell, 53 Minn. 98, 54 N. W. 939; Lerdall v. Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 430, 8 N. W. 280. See Hubber Co. v. McAllester, 1 Misc. 483, 21 N. Y. Supp. 767.

An answer cannot be stricken out on the ground that it is frivolous, where an extended argument or illustration is required to demonstrate its frailty; Deuel v. Sanford, 67 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 354; Exchange Fire Ins. Co. of New York City v. Norris, 74 Hun 527, 26 N. Y. Supp. 823. A pleading interposed for delay is frivolous, but a pleading is not frivolous because vague; Farmers' & Millers' Bank v. Sawyer, 7 Wis. 383; Kelly v. Barnett, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 135; Yerkes v. Crum, 2 N. D. 72, 49 N. W. 422.

Frivolous is not synonymous with irrelevant; Fasnacht v. Stehn, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 338, 343; id., 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 650.

FRODMORTEL, or FREOMORTEL. An immunity for committing manslaughter. Mon. Angl. t. 1. 173.

FROM. The legal effect of this word has been a fruitful subject of judicial discussion resulting in a great diversity of construction of the word as used with respect to both time and place. Many attempts have been made to lay down a general rule to determine whether it was to be treated as inclusive or exclusive of a terminus a quo, whether of time or place. Very long ago a critical writer, after reviewing the cases up to that date, undertook to formulate such a rule thus: From, as well in strict grammatical sense, as in the ordinary import thereof, when referring to a certain point as a terminus a quo, always excludes that point; though in vulgar acceptation it were capable of being taken indifferently, either inclusively or exclusively, yet in law it has obtained a certain fixed import and is always taken as exclusive of the terminus a quo. Powell, Powers 449. This conclusion states a rule applied in the majority of cases, and it was said that the prepositions "from," "until," "between," generally exclude the day to which they relate, but the general rule will yield to the intent of parties; Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 94. But the rule has not been unvarying, and many courts have not hesitated to follow the views of Lord Mansfield, in Cowp. 714 (overruling his own decision of three years before, id. 189), that it is either exclusive or inclusive according to context and subject-matter, and the court will construe it to effectuate the intent of parties and not to destroy it.

As to time, after an examination of authorities, Washington, J., laid down what he considered the settled principles to be deduced from them: (1) When time is computed from an act done, the day of its performance is included; (2) when the words are from the date, if a present interest is to commence, the day is included, if it is a terminus from which to impute time the day is excluded; Pearpoint v. Graham, 4 Wash. C. C. 240, Fed. Cas. No. 10,877; where the latter principle was applied to a lease, as it was also in Lord Raym. 84; and to a bond; Lysle v. Williams, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 135; and the first proposition has been laid down with reference to the words "from and after the passage of this act;" Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cra. (U. S.) 104, 3 L. Ed. 671; U. S. v. Williams, 1 Paine 261, Fed. Cas. No. 16,723; U. S. v. Arnold, 1 Gall. 348, Fed. Cas. No. 14,469; contra, Lorent v. Ins. Co., 1 Nott. & McC. (S. C.) 505. See U. S. v. Heth, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 399, 2 L. Ed. 479. From is generally held a word of exclusion; Wilcox v. Wood, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 346; Oatman v. Walker, 33 Me. 67; Ordway v. Remington, 12 R. I. 319, 34 Am. Rep. 646; Atkins v. Sleeper, 7 Allen (Mass.) 487. But a promise made November 1st, 1811, and sued November 1st, 1817, was held barred by statute of limitation; Presbrey v. Williams, 15 Mass. 193. In many cases it is held to be either exclusive or inclusive according to the intention of the parties; Deyo v. Bleakley, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Houser v. Reynolds, 2 N. C. 114, 1 Am. Dec. 551. Where an act was to be done in a given number of days from the time of the contract, the day on which the contract was made was included; Brown v. Buzan, 24 Ind. 194; but if the contract merely says in so many days it means so many days from the day of date, and that is excluded; Blake v. Crowninshield, 9 N. H. 304. A fire policy from one given date to another includes the last day; whether the first is included was not decided; L. R. 5 Exch. 296. In most cases when something is required to be done in a given time from the day on which an event has happened, that day is excluded, as in case of proving claims against the estate of a decedent or insolvent; Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, 50 Am. Dec. 249; enrolling deeds, after execution; Seawell v. Williams, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 283; appeal from arbitrators, afterward; Browne v. Browne, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 496; issuing a scire facias to revive a judgment, after entry; Appeal of Green, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 327; the time an execution runs, after its date; Homan v. Liswell, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 659; redemption from execution sale; id. 518; allowing appeal from a justice; Ex parte Dean, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 605, 14 Am. Dec. 521. The principle is thus well expressed. When time is to be computed from a particular day or a particular event, as when an act is to be performed within a specified period from or after a day named, that day is excluded and the last day included; Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 177, 17 L. Ed. 822. But it was held that in considering the question of barring a writ of error, the day of the decree is included; Chiles v. Smith's Heirs, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 460.

From the expiration of a policy means from the expiration of the time from which the policy was effected and not the time at which the risk is terminated by alienation; Sullivan v. Ins. Co., 2 Mass. 318. Six months from testator's death allowed a legatee to give security not to marry, are exclusive of that day; 15 Ves. 248. Where an annuity is given, and from and after the payment thereof and subject thereto, the principal over, the gift over is subject to make up deficiency of income; aliter if the gift over were from and after the annuitant's death, merely; L. R. 2 Ch. App. 644, reversing L. R. 4 Eq. 58. From time to time, as applied to the payment of expenses or damages caused by building a railroad; L. R. 5 Ex. 6; or the appointment, by a married woman, of rents and profits; 1 Ves. Jr. 189 and note; 3 Bro. C. C. 340; 12 Ves. 501; do not require periodical payments or appointments, nor restrain the party from a sweeping discharge or disposition of the whole subject-matter at once. From time to time is not sufficient in a bail bond which under the statute should stipulate for appearance from term to term; Forbes v. State (Tex.) 25 S. W. 1072. From day to day, in reference to adjournments, usually means to the next day but, under a statute authorizing the adjournment of a sale from day to day, a sale is good if made by adjournment to a day, certain, which did not immediately succeed the first; Burns v. Lyon, 4 Watts (Pa.) 363. From henceforth in a lease means from the delivery; 5 Co. 1; so also does one from March 25th last past (the execution being March 25th); 4 B. & C. 272; or one from an impossible date (as February 30th), or no date, but if it has a sensible date, the word date in other parts of it means date, not delivery; 4 B. & C. 908. Where authority is given to commissioners to build a bridge and then and from thenceforth, the county to be liable, means only after the bridge is built; 16 East 305.

Whenever they are used with respect to places it is said that "from," "to," and "at" are taken inclusively according to the subject-matter; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 23 L. Ed. 428 (fixing the terminus of a railroad under an act of congress). From an object to an object in a deed excludes the terminus referred to; Bonney v. Morrill, 52 Me. 252; State v. Bushey, 84 Me. 459, 24 Atl. 940. From place to place means from one place in a town to another in the same town; Com. v. Inhabitants of Cambridge, 7 Mass. 158; Com. v. Waters, 11 Gray (Mass.) 81. From a street means from any part of it according to circumstances; City of Pittsburg v. Cluley, 74 Pa. 259. From a town is not always and indeed is seldom exclusive of the place named; it generally means from some indefinite place within that town; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Key, 3 Cra. C. C. 599, 606, Fed. Cas. No. 2,649. Authority in a railroad charter to construct a railroad from a city to another point gives power to construct the road from any point within the city; Hazlehurst v. Freeman, 52 Ga. 244; Appeal of Western Pennsylvania R. Co., 99 Pa. 155; Tennessee & A. R. Co. v. Adams, 3 Head (Tenn.) 596; contra North-Eastern R. Co. v. Payne, 8 Rich. L. (S. C.) 177. And see Farmers' Turnpike Road v. Coventry, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 389, where in a similar case "to" was construed "into;" and Mohawk Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 6 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 554, where, "at or near" was held equivalent to "within." But from a town to another in an indictment for transportation of liquor does not charge it as done within the town; State v. Bushey, 84 Me. 459, 24 Atl. 940. To construe reasonably the expression a road from a village to a creek within the same village, in a statute, requires that it be taken inclusively; Smith v. Helmer, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 416. Sailing from a port means out of it; U. S. v. La Coste, 2 Mass. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 15,548.

Descent from a parent cannot be construed to mean through a parent, it must be immediate, from the person designated; Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 58, 86, 7 L. Ed. 347; Case v. Wildridge, 4 Ind. 51; but the words from the part of the father include a descent, either immediately from the father or from any person in the line of the father; Shippen v. Izard, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 222.

The words to be paid for in from six to eight weeks have no definite meaning and it was properly left to the jury to say if the suit was brought prematurely; L. R. 9 C. P. 20. From the loading in a marine policy ordinarily means that the risk is covered after the goods are on board, but this meaning may be qualified by any words in the policy indicating a different intention; 16 East 240; L. R. 7 Q. B. 580, 702. A contract to deliver from one to three thousand bushels gives the seller an option to deliver any quantity he chooses within the limits named; Small v. Quincy, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 497. Appraisers living from one to one and a half miles away, in a fairly well settled community, are prima facie from the neighborhood; State v. Jungling, 116 Mo. 162, 22 S. W. 688.

FRONT. Ordinarily, as applied to a lot or tract of land, that part of it which abuts on, or gives access from, it to a highway whether natural or artificial. But sometimes as in a covenant to keep up sidewalks, the front of a corner lot may mean the side; City of Des Moines v. Dorr, 31 Ia. 89.

When the contract of sale calls for a store fifty-six feet front and rear and the deed describes the lot as nineteen feet wide, there being visible monuments,—side walls,—the latter control, and front and rear will be taken as the depth of the lot, though the natural meaning would be the width; McWhorter v. McMahan, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 386.

A covenant not to open or put out a door to the front of the street means a door giving access to the street and not close upon it, and the covenant is broken if the door be eight feet back of the actual front; Dowl. & Ry. 556, 563.

The words front to the river (in French and Spanish deeds, face au fleuve, or frente al rio), used in describing part of a plantation, prima facie designate a riparian estate, unless, taken in such sense, they have an incongruous or absurd result; Morgan v. Livingston, 6 Mart. O. S. (La.) 19, 224, in which the meaning of this expression was learnedly and elaborately defined. It is otherwise as to a sale of part of a tract when at the time of sale the vendor owned another part between that sold and the river; in the last case the words are descriptive of the situation of the property; Cambre v. Kohn, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 572.

And the words front of the levee (fronte à la levee) when there was land outside of the levee susceptible of ownership does not signify a boundary on the river; Livingston v. Heerman, 9 Mart. O. S. (La.) 656, 719.

FRONT FOOT. As used in an act providing that property shall be assessed in proportion to the "front foot" has been held synonymous with "abutting foot." Moberly v. Hogan, 131 Mo. 19, 32 S. W. 1014. See ASSESSMENT.

FRONT OF AN ACRE. An expression which "has no proper application to a line, and has not a natural or generally acknowledged and received sense. It is too vague to determine the length of the front line of a lot as a basis for a decree for specific performance;" Crockett v. Green, 3 Del. Ch. 466.

FRONTAGE, FRONTAGER. In English Law. A frontager is a person owning or occupying land which abuts on a highway, river, sea-shore, or the like. The term is generally used with reference to the liability of frontagers on streets to contribute towards the expense of paving, draining, or other works on the highway carried out by a local authority, in proportion to the frontage of their respective tenements. Public Health Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. There is no liability at common law binding a frontager on the sea to maintain a sea-wall on his land; 1 Q. B. D. 225.

The corresponding American term is abutter (q. v.). See ASSESSMENT; FORESHORE.

FROSTA-THING. See GULA-TIHNG.

FROZEN SNAKE. A term used to impute ingratitude and held libelous, the court taking judicial notice of its meaning without an innuendo. 12 Ad. & El. 624.

FRUCTUARIUS (Lat.). One entitled to the use of profits, fruits, and yearly increase of a thing. A lessee; a fermor. Bracton, 241; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

Sometimes, as applied to a slave, he of whom any one has the usufruct. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FRUCTUS (Lat.). The right of using the increase of fruits: equivalent to usufruct.

That which results or springs from a thing: as, rents, interest, freight from a ship, etc.

All the natural return, increase, or addition which is added by nature or by the skill of man, including all the organic products of things. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; 1 Mackeldey, Civil Law § 154.

FRUCTUS CIVILES (Lat. civil fruits). All revenues and recompenses which, though not fruits properly speaking, are recognized as such by the law. 1 Kauffmann, Mackeld. § 154; Calvinus, Lex.

FRUCTUS INDUSTRIALES (Lat.). Those products which are obtained by the labor and cultivation of the occupant: as, corn or peaches; 1 Kauffmann, Mackeld. § 154, n.; Purner v. Piercy, 40 Md. 212, 17 Am. Rep. 591; Townsend v. Hargraves, 118 Mass. 325. Emblements are such in the common law; 2 Steph. Com. 258; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

Fruits and vegetables produced by cultivation, as distinguished from the products of perennials; such as trees, bushes, etc., which are fructus naturales. Sparrow v. Pond, 49 Minn. 412, 52 N. W. 36, 16 L. R. A. 103, 32 Am. St. Rep. 571.

FRUCTUS LEGIS. The fruit of the law, i. e. execution.

FRUCTUS NATURALES (Lat.). Those products which are produced by the powers of nature alone: as wool, metals, milk, the young of animals, and the fruit of trees and other perennial plants. 1 Kauffmann, Mackeld. § 154; Calvinus, Lex. See FRUCTUS INDUSTRIALES.

FRUCTUS PENDENTES (Lat.). The fruits united with the thing which produces them. These form a part of the principal thing; 1 Kauffmann, Mackeld. § 154. Sometimes called fructus stantes, standing fruits.

FRUCTUS REI ALIENAE. Fruits taken from another's estate; the fruits of another's property.

FRUCTUS SEPARATI. In Civil Law. Separate fruits, the fruits of a thing when they are separated from it. Dig. 7, 4, 13.

FRUGES (Lat.). Anything produced from vines, underwood, chalk-pits, stone-quarries. Dig. 50. 16. 77.

Grains and leguminous vegetables. In a more restricted sense, an esculent growing in pods. Calvinus, Lex.

FRUIT. The produce of a tree or plant which contains the seed or is used for food.

This term, in legal acceptation, is not confined to the produce of those trees which, in popular language, are called fruit trees, but applies also to the produce of oak, elm, and walnut trees. It denotes the produce not only of orchard, but of timber trees. 5 B. & C. 847. It has a wide meaning as including profits of all sorts.

FRUIT, FALLEN. The produce of any possession detached therefrom, and capable of being enjoyed by itself. Thus a next presentation, when a vacancy has occurred, is a fruit fallen from the advowson. Whart.

FRUITS OF CRIME. Material objects acquired by means and in consequence of the commission of crime, and sometimes the subject-matter of the crime. Burr. Circ. Ev. 445; Benth. Jud. Ev. 31.

FRUMENTUM. In Civil Law. Grain. That which grows in an ear. Dig. 50.

FRUMGYLD. The first payment made to the kindred of a slain person in recompense for his murder. Blount; Termes de la Ley; Leg. Edmundi, cap. ult.

FRUMSTOL (Sax.). A chief seat or mansion-house. Cowell. An original or paternal dwelling. Anct. Inst. Eng.

FRUSCA TERRA. In Old Records. Uncultivated and desert ground. 2 Mon. Angl. 327; Cowell.

FRUSSURA. Plowing; a breaking. Cowell.

FRUSTRUM TERRÆ. A piece or parcel of land lying by itself. Co. Litt. 5 b.

FRUTECTUM, FRUTETTUM, or FRUTICETUM. A place where shrubs or herbs grow. Jac.; Blount; Spel. Gloss.

FRUTOS. In Spanish Law. Fruits; products; profits; grains. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

FRYMITH, FYNMITH. In English Law. The affording harbor and entertainment to any one. Anc. Inst. Eng.

FRYTH (Sax.). In Old English Law. A plain between woods. Co. Litt. 5 b. An arm of the sea, or a strait between two lands. Cowell.

FUAGE, FOCAGE. Hearth-money. A tax laid upon each fireplace or hearth. 1 Bla. Com. 324; Spelman, Gloss. A shilling for every hearth, levied by the Black Prince in his dukedom of Aquitaine.

FUER. To fly. It may be by bodily flight, or by non-appearance when summoned to appear in a court of justice, which is flight in the interpretation of the law. Cowell; Toml.; Whart.

FUERO. In Spanish Law. Compilations or general codes of law.

The usages and customs which, in the course of time, had acquired the force of unwritten law.

Letters of privilege and exemption from payment of certain taxes, etc.

Charters granted to cities or towns on condition of their paying certain dues to the owner of the land of which they had enjoyment.

Acts of donation granted by some lord or proprietor in favor of individuals, churches, or monasteries.

Ordinances passed by magistrates in relation to the dues, fines, etc., payable by the members of a community.

Letters emanating from the king or some superior lord, containing the ordinances and laws for the government of cities and towns, etc.

This term has many and very various meanings, as is shown above, and is sometimes used in other significations beside those here given. See, also, Schmidt, Span. Law 64; Escriche, Dict. Razz. Fuero.

Fuero de Castilla. The body of laws and customs which formerly governed the Castilians.

Fuero de Correos y Caminos. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the post-office and roads.

Fuero de Guerra. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters in relation to persons serving in the army.

Fuero Juzgo. The code of laws established by the Visigoths for the government of Spain, many of whose provisions are still in force. See the analysis of this work in Schmidt's Span. Law 30.

Fuero de Marina (called, also, Jurisdiccion de Marina). A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the navy and to the persons employed therein.

Fuero Municipal. The body of laws granted to a city or town for its government and the administration of justice.

Fuero Real. A code of laws promulgated by Alonzo el Sabio in 1255, and intended as an introduction to the larger and more comprehensive code called Las Siete Partidas, published eight years afterwards. For an analysis of this code, see Schmidt, Span. Law 67.

Fuero Viejo. The title of a compilation of Spanish Law, published about A. D. 992. Schm. Civil Law, introd. 65.

FUGA CATALLORUM. In Old English Law. A drove of cattle. Fleta; Blount.

FUGACIA. A chase. Cowell; Blount.

FUGAM FECIT (Lat. he fled). In Old English Law. A phrase in an inquisition, signifying that a person fled for treason or felony. The effect of this is to make the party forfeit his goods absolutely, and the profits of his lands until he has been pardoned or acquitted.

FUGATOR. In English Law. A privilege to hunt. Blount.

A driver. Fugatores carrucarum, drivers of wagons. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 78.

FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE. One who, having committed a crime, flees from the jurisdiction within which it was committed, to escape punishment.

In the absence of direct evidence on the question of flight, if it appear from the indictment or affidavit produced that the crime charged is atrocious in its nature, was recently committed, and the prosecution promptly instituted, the unexplained presence of the accused in another state immediately after the commission of the crime ought perhaps to be regarded as prima facie evidence of flight, sufficient, at least, to warrant an order of arrest. The order of surrender is not required, by the act of congress, to be made at the same time with the order of arrest, and time, therefore, can be taken, in doubtful cases, after the accused is arrested and secured, to hear proofs to establish or rebut such prima facie evidence; 6 Am. Jur. 226; 7 Bost. Law Rep. 386.

One convicted of a crime, who when called for sentence is found in another state, is a fugitive from justice; Hughes v. Pflanz, 138 Fed. 980, 71 C. C. A. 234.

The accused person may be arrested to await a demand; Ex parte Cubreth, 49 Cal. 436; but he cannot be surrendered before a formal demand is made; Botts v. Williams, 17 B. Monr. (Ky.) 687. But if he be so surrendered and returned to the state from which the requisition came, this is not a ground of discharge then; In re Dow, 18 Pa. 39.

The surrender of the accused must be made to an agent of the executive authority of the demanding state, duly appointed to receive the fugitive.

The proceedings of the executive authorities are subject to be reviewed on habeas corpus by the judicial power, and if found void the prisoner may be discharged; Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean 121, Fed. Cas. No. 12,968; In re Fetter, 23 N. J. L. 311, 57 Am. Dec. 382; Ex parte Thornton, 9 Tex. 635; Ex parte White, 49 Cal. 434; Kingsbury's Case, 106 Mass. 223; People v. Brady, 56 N. Y. 182; In re Cook, 49 Fed. 833. But the courts have no jurisdiction to compel the executive to comply with a requisition; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. (U. S.) 66, 16 L. Ed. 717; Ex parte Manchester, 5 Cal. 237. Nor have the federal courts such jurisdiction; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. (U. S.) 66, 16 L. Ed. 717. Nor will the court on habeas corpus try the validity of the indictment under which he is charged; Ex parte Pearce, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 301, 23 S. W. 15.

See EXTRADITION.

FUGITIVE'S GOODS. Under the old English Law, where a man fled for felony, and escaped, his own goods were not forfeited as bona fugitivorum until it was found by proceedings of record (e. g. before the coroner in the case of death) that he fled for the felony. Foxley's Case, 5 Co. 109 a. See FUGAM FECIT; WAIFS.

FUGITIVE SLAVE. One who, held in bondage, flees from his master's power.

Prior to the adoption of the constitution of the United States, the duty of surrendering slaves fleeing beyond the jurisdiction of the state or colony where they were held to service was not regarded as a perfect obligation, though, on the ground of inter-state comity, they were frequently surrendered to the master. Instances of such surrender or permission to reclaim occur in the history of the colonies as early as 1685; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 592. As slavery disappeared in some states, the difficulty of recovering in them slaves fleeing from those where it remained was greatly increased, and on some occasions reclamations became quite impracticable. The subject engaged the attention of the convention of 1787; and, at the instance of members from slaveholding states, a provision was inserted in the constitution for the surrender of such persons escaping from the state where they owed service, into another, which provision was considered a valuable accession to the security of that species of property; 4 Elliott Debates 487, 492; 5 id. 176, 286.

This provision is contained in art. iv. sec. 2 of the constitution, and is as follows:

"No person held to service or labor in one state, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due."

Congress, conceiving it to be the duty of the federal government to provide by law, with adequate sanctions, for the execution of the duty thus enjoined by the constitution, by the act of February 12, 1793, and again by the amendatory and supplementary act of September 18, 1850, regulated the mode of arrest, trial, and surrender of such fugitives. Some of the states have, also, at times passed acts relating to the subject; but it has been decided by the supreme court of the United States that the power of legislation in the matter was vested exclusively in congress, and that all state legislation inconsistent with the laws of congress was unconstitutional and void; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 608, 10 L. Ed. 1060; Thornton's Case, 11 Ill. 332.

These acts of congress were held to be constitutional and valid in all their provisions; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 608, 10 L. Ed. 1060; Wright v. Deacon, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 62; Glen v. Hodges, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 67; In re Martin, 2 Paine, 348, Fed. Cas. No. 9,154; In re Sims, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 285; Ex parte Robinson, 6 McLean, 355, Fed. Cas. No. 11,935.

The 3d and 4th sections of act of 1793, 1 Stat. L. 302, authorized the arrest of a slave by the owner, his agent or attorney, and on proof before a United States judge or a magistrate, a certificate of ownership should be given and would be a warrant for removal. Under the act of 1850, 9 Stat. L. 462, the marshals of the United States were required to arrest such slaves.

The act of 1850, and the 3d and 4th sections of the act of 1793 were repealed by the act of June 28, 1864, 13 Stat. at L. 200. For some decisions as to the question of the interference between the acts of 1793 and 1850, see Miller v. McQuerry, 5 McLean, 469, Fed. Cas. No. 9,583; Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. (U. S.) 429, 14 L. Ed. 210.

In the practical application of the provisions of the acts of 1793 and 1850 for the reclamation of fugitive slaves, it was held that the owner was clothed with authority in every state of the Union to seize and recapture his slave wherever he could do it without any breach of the peace or illegal violence; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 608, 10 L. Ed. 1060; that he might arrest him on Sunday, in the night-time, or in the house of another if no breach of the peace was committed; Johnson v. Tompkins, Baldw. 577, Fed. Cas. No. 7,416; that if the arrest was by agent of the owner, he must be authorized by written power of attorney executed and authenticated as required by the act; Weimer v. Sloane, 6 McLean, 259, Fed. Cas. No. 17,363; and if his authority was demanded it should be shown; Driskill v. Parrish, 3 McLean, 631, Fed. Cas. No. 4,089; but he was not required to exhibit it to every one who might mingle in the crowd which obstructed him; Giltner v. Gorham, 4 McLean 402, Fed. Cas. No. 5,453; that, if resisted by force in making the arrest, the owner might use sufficient force to overcome the unlawful resistance offered without being guilty of the offence of riot; 3 Am. L. J. 258; Van Metre v. Mitchell, 7 Pa. L. J. 115; that whilst the examination was pending before the magistrate who had jurisdiction of the case, the person arrested was in custody of the law and might be imprisoned for safekeeping; In re Martin, 2 Paine, 348, Fed. Cas. No. 9,154; Worthington v. Preston, 4 Wash. C. C. 461, Fed. Cas. No. 18,055; Ex parte Robinson, 6 McLean 355, Fed. Cas. No. 11,935; that the act of Sept. 18, 1850, did not operate as a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus; 5 Op. Attys. Genl. 254; but that that writ could not be used by state officers to defeat the jurisdiction acquired by the federal authorities in such cases; In re Sims, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 285; Norris v. Newton, 5 McLean 92, Fed. Cas. No. 10,307; Charge to Grand Jury, 1 Blatchf. 635; Fed. Cas. No. 18,261; Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. (U. S.) 506, 16 L. Ed. 169.

The provisions of the constitution and laws above cited were held to extend only to cases where persons held to service or labor in one state or territory by the laws thereof escaped into another. Hence, if the owner voluntarily took his slave into such other state or territory, and the slave left him there or refused to return, he could not institute proceedings under those laws for his recovery; Ex parte Simmons, 4 Wash. C. C. 396, Fed. Cas. No. 12,863; Kauffman v. Oliver, 10 Pa. 517; Strader v. Graham, 10 How. (U. S.) 82, 13 L. Ed. 337. And children, born in a state where slavery prevailed, of a negro woman who was a fugitive slave, were not fugitive slaves or slaves who had escaped from service in another state, within the meaning of the constitution and acts of congress; Fields v. Walker, 23 Ala. 155.

Since the adoption of the thirteenth amendment of the U. S. constitution, the above is entirely obsolete and possesses only an historical interest.

FULL. Complete; entire; detailed.

FULL AGE. See AGE; INFANT.

FULL ANSWER. One which meets all the legal requirements.

FULL BLOOD. Whole blood; generally used to denote brothers and sisters who descend from the same father and mother.

FULL CONFIDENCE. Under a bequest to the wife of testator "absolutely, with full power for her to dispose of the same as she may think fit for the benefit of my family, having full confidence that she will do so," the words full confidence do not constitute a trust, but are merely an expression of the testator's wishes and belief, as distinguished from a direction amounting to an obligation; 8 Ch. D. 540.

FULL COURT. A court in banc with all the judges on the bench who are qualified to sit. It is not unusual for counsel in a case of great public importance, in the absence of one or more of the judges to ask for a postponement of a trial or argument in order that the cause may be heard and determined by a full court and not by a mere quorum. The granting of such an application is not a matter of right, but, in a case which appears to the court to justify it, the course proposed will generally be taken. Such applications are not unusual in the United States Supreme Court, in cases involving grave constitutional questions, and in the state courts in cases involving the life of a party or some grave public question. Sometimes where a case has been decided by a majority of a quorum, but a minority of the whole number of judges, a motion for a rehearing by the full court is allowed.

Formerly in England the expression was used when other judges sat with the judge who regularly held the court. Thus the Full Court of Appeal in Chancery consisted of the Lord Chancellor and Lords Justices sitting together. The Full Court in Divorce and Matrimonial Causes consisted of the Judge Ordinary and at least two other members of the court. These arrangements are, nominally at least, superseded under the Judicature Acts.

FULL DEFENCE. See DEFENCE.

FULL FAITH AND CREDIT. A phrase used in the constitution of the United States, which provides that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. See FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

FULL LIFE. Life in fact and in law.

FULL POWERS. A document issued by the government of a state empowering its diplomatic agent to conduct special business with a foreign government.

FULL PROOF. In Civil Law. Proof of two witnesses, or a public instrument. Halifax, Civil Law b. 3, c. 9, nn. 25, 30; 3 Bla. Com. 370.

Evidence which satisfies the minds of the jury of the truth of the fact in dispute, to the entire exclusion of every reasonable doubt. Kane v. Ins. Co., 38 N. J. L. 450, 20 Am. Rep. 409. See PLENA PROBATIO.

FULL RIGHT. The union of a good title with actual possession.

FULL WAGES. The seventh article of the Laws of Oleron provides: That if a mariner be taken sick on the voyage, he ought to be put on shore, and care should be taken of him at the expense of the ship; when the vessel is ready to sail, she is not to wait for him; but, still he is to be entitled to his full wages if he recover; and if he does not, his wife, or next of kin, is to have them; deducting only such charges as the master has been at for him. The phrase full wages means the same wages which he would have been entitled to had he lived and served out the whole voyage of the vessel. Sims v. Jackson, 1 Wash. C. C. 414, Fed. Cas. No. 12,890; 2 H. Bla. 606, note.

FULLUM AQUÆ. A fleam, or stream of water. Blount.

FUMAGE, FUAGE, or FOUAGE. A tax paid to the sovereign for every house that had a chimney. It is probable that the hearth-money imposed by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 10, took its origin hence. This hearth-money was declared a great oppression, and abolished by 1 W. & M. Stat. 1, c. 10, but a tax was afterwards laid upon houses, except cottages, and upon all windows, by 1 Wm. III. c. 18. The window duty was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36. Whart. See HEARTH MONEY.

FUNCTION. The occupation of an office: by the performance of its duties, the officer is said to fill his function. Dig. 32. 65. 1.

FUNCTIONARY. One who is in office or in some public employment.

FUNCTUS OFFICIO (Lat.). A term applied to something which once has had life and power, but which has become of no virtue whatsoever.

For example, a warrant of attorney on which a judgment has been entered is functus officio, and a second judgment cannot be entered by virtue of its authority. When arbitrators cannot agree and choose an umpire, they are said to be functi officio. Wats. Arb. 94. If a bill of exchange be sent to the drawee, and he passes it to the credit of the holder, it is functus officio, and cannot be further negotiated; Savage v. Merle, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 85. When an agent has completed the business with which he was intrusted, his agency is functus officio.

FUND. "Merely a name for a collection or an appropriation of money. It may be nothing but a designation of one branch of the accounts of the state; or of a certain amount of money, when collected to be applied to a particular purpose. It may have no property and represent no investments; and what are called its revenues may include all the moneys appropriated or directed to be paid to it, or for its benefit, or that of the objects it represents." People v. R. Co., 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 135. See Stephens' Ex'rs v. Milnor, 24 N. J. Eq. 358; 7 H. L. Cas. 273; Miller v. Bradish, 69 Ia. 278, 28 N. W. 594.

FUNDAMENTAL. This word is applied to those laws which are the foundation of society. Those laws by which the exercise of power is restrained and regulated are fundamental. The constitution of the United States is the fundamental law of the land. See Wolffius, Inst. Nat. § 984.

FUNDAMUS. We found. One of the words by which a corporation was created in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 473; 3 Steph. Comm. 173. See CORPORATION.

FUNDATIO (Lat.). A founding.

FUNDATOR. A founder (q. v.).

FUNDI PATRIMONIALES. Lands of inheritance.

FUNDI PUBLICI. Public lands.

FUNDING SYSTEM. The practice of borrowing money to defray the expenses of government.

In the early history of the system it was usual to set apart the revenue from some particular tax as a fund to the principal and interest of the loan. The earliest record of the funding system is found in the history of Venice. In the year 1171, during a war between the republic and the Byzantine emperor Manual Commenas, a Venetian fleet ravaged the eastern coasts, but, being detained by negotiations at Chios, suffered severely from the plague. The remnant of the expedition, returning, took with it the frightful pestilence, which ravaged Venice and produced a popular commotion in which the doge was killed. To carry on the war, the new doge, Sebastian Giani, ordered a forced loan. Every citizen was obliged to contribute one-hundreth of his property, and he was to be paid by the state five per cent. interest, the revenues being mortgaged to secure the faithful performance of the contract. To manage the business, commissioners were appointed, called the Chamber of Loans, which after the lapse of centuries grew into the Bank of Venice. Florence and other Italian republics practised the system; and it afterwards became general in Europe. Its object is to provide large sums of money for the immediate exigencies of the state, which it would be impossible to raise by direct taxation.

In England the funding system was inaugurated in the reign of William III. The Bank of England, like the Bank of Venice and the Bank of St. George at Genoa, grew out of it. In order to make it easy to procure money to carry on the war with France, the government proposed to raise a loan, for which, as usual, certain revenues were to be set aside, and the subscribers were to be made a corporation, with exclusive banking privileges. The loan was rapidly subscribed for, and the Bank of England was the corporation which it brought into existence. It was formerly the practice in England to borrow money for fixed periods; and these loans were called terminable annuities. Of late years, however, the practice is different,—loans being payable only at the option of the government; these are termed interminable annuities. The rate of interest on the earlier loans was generally fixed at three and a half per cent. and sold at such a rate below par as to conform to the state of the money-market. It is estimated that two-fifths of the entire debt of England consists of this excess over the amount of money actually received for it. The object of such a plan was to promote speculation and attract capitalists; and it is still pursued in France.

Afterwards, however, the government receded from this policy, and, by borrowing at high rates, were enabled, when the rate of interest declined, by offering to pay off the loan, to reduce the interest materially. The national debt of England consists of many different loans, all of which are included in the term funds. Of these, the largest in amount and importance are the "three per cent. consolidated annuities," or consols, as they are commonly called. They originated in 1751, when an act was passed consolidating several separate three per cent. loans into one general stock, the dividends of which are payable on the 5th of January and 5th of July at the Bank of England. The bank being the fiscal agent of the government, pays the interest on most of the funds, and also keeps the transfer-books. When stock is sold, it is transferred on the books at the bank to the new purchaser, and the interest is paid to those parties in whose names the stock is registered, at the closing of the books a short time previous to the dividend-day. Stock is bought and sold at the stock exchange generally through brokers. Time sales, when the seller is not the actual possessor of the stock, are illegal, but common. They are usually made deliverable on certain fixed days, called accounting-days; and such transactions are called "for account," to distinguish them from the ordinary sales and purchases for cash. Stock-jobbers are persons who act as middlemen between sellers and purchasers. They usually fix a price at which they will sell and buy, so that sellers and purchasers can always find a market for stock, or can purchase it in such quantities as they may desire, without delay or inconvenience.

In America the funding system has been fully developed. The general government, as well as those of all the states, have found it necessary to anticipate their revenue for the promotion of public works and other purposes. The many magnificent works of internal improvement which have added so much to the wealth of the country were mainly constructed with money borrowed by the states. The canals of New York, and many railroads in the western states, owe their existence to the system.

The funding system enables the government to raise money in exigencies, and to spread over many years the taxation which would press too severely on one. It affords a ready method of investing money on good security, and it tends to identify the interest of the state and the people. But it is open to many objections,—the principal of which is that it induces statesmen to countenance expensive and oftentimes questionable projects who would not dare to carry out their plans were they forced to provide the means from direct taxation. McCulloch, Dict. of Comm.; Sewell, Banking.

FUNDITORES. Pioneers. Jac. L. Dict.

FUNDS. Cash on hand: as, A B is in funds to pay my bill on him. Stocks: as, A B has one thousand dollars in the funds. By public funds is understood the taxes, customs, etc., appropriated by the government for the discharge of its obligations.

In England "The Funds" are synonymous with "Government Funds," or "Public Funds;" 7 H. L. C. 280; and generally mean funded securities guaranteed by the English government: 27 L. J. Ch. 448; but do not include foreign bonds guaranteed by England; 2 Coll. 324; nor bank stock; 7 H. L. C. 273.

FUNDUS (Lat.). Land. A portion of territory belonging to a person. A farm. Lands, including houses; 4 Co. 87; Co. Litt. 5 a; 3 Bla. Com. 209.

FUNERAL EXPENSES. Money expended in procuring the interment of a corpse.

The person who orders the funeral is responsible personally for the expenses, and if the estate of the deceased should be insolvent, he must lose the amount. But if there are assets sufficient to pay these expenses, the executor or administrator is bound, upon an implied assumpsit, to pay them; 1 Campb. 298; Gregory v. Hooker's Adm'r, 8 N. C. 394, 9 Am. Dec. 646; 13 Viner, Abr. 563; O'Donnell v. Slack, 123 Cal. 285, 55 Pac. 906, 43 L. R. A. 388; Huhna v. Theller, 35 Misc. 296, 71 N. Y. Supp. 752.

Frequent questions arise as to the amount which is to be allowed to the executor or administrator for such expenses. It is exceedingly difficult to gather any certain rule from the numerous cases which have been decided upon this subject. Courts have taken into consideration the circumstances of each case, the rank in life of the decedent, whether his estate was insolvent or not, and when the executors have acted with common prudence or in obedience to the will, their expenses have been allowed. In a case where the testator directed that his remains should be buried at a church thirty miles distant from the place of his death, the sum of sixty pounds sterling was allowed; 3 Atk. 119. In another case, under peculiar circumstances, six hundred pounds were allowed; Chanc. Prec. 29. Where the intestate left a considerable estate, and no children, $258.75 was allowed, the greater part of which had been expended in erecting a tombstone over a vault in which the body was interred; Appeal of McGlinsey, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 64. A sum of $127 for burial expenses is not unreasonable where deceased left an estate worth $800; Kittle v. Huntley, 67 Hun 617, 22 N. Y. Supp. 519.

In an estate of $2,800, the sum of $700 for a burial lot and monument was held excessive; In re Erlacher, 3 Redf. Sur. (N. Y.) 9; so was $490 for a casket and box for an infant whose estate was under $7,000; In re Kiernan, 38 Misc. 394, 77 N. Y. Supp. 924; and so $329 out of an estate of $500, for funeral expenses; In re Primmer's Estate, 49 Misc. 413, 99 N. Y. Supp. 830; and $810, out of an estate of $1,167 of a domestic servant; Estate of Cullen, 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 494; and $455 for funeral expenses out of an estate of less than $5,000; Foley v. Brocksmit, 119 Ia. 457, 93 N. W. 344, 60 L. R. A. 571, 97 Am. St. Rep. 324; but not $31 for carriages where the estate was $2,400; In re Osburn's Estate, 36 Or. 8, 58 Pac. 521. The expense of a gravestone comes under the head of funeral expenses; Van Emon v. Superior Court, 76 Cal. 589, 18 Pac. 877, 9 Am. St. Rep. 258; Owens v. Bloomer, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 296; In re Howard's Estate, 3 Misc. 170, 23 N. Y. Supp. 836; Pease v. Christman, 158 Ind. 642, 64 N. E. 90.

Funeral expenses usually have priority in the order of payment of debts.

A husband is liable for the funeral expenses of his wife; 1 H. Bla. 90; 12 C. B. N. S. 344; Cunningham v. Reardon, 98 Mass. 538, 96 Am. Dec. 670; Kenyon v. Brightwell, 120 Ga. 606, 48 S. E. 124, 1 Ann. Cas. 169. In some cases it is held that when he has paid them the husband is not entitled to reimbursement out of the wife's separate estate; Smyley v. Reese, 53 Ala. 89, 25 Am. Rep. 598; Appeal of Staples, 52 Conn. 425; In re Weringer's Estate, 100 Cal. 345, 34 Pac. 825; contra, 33 Ch. Div. 575; 6 Madd. 90; McCue v. Garvey, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 562; McClellan v. Filson, 44 Ohio St. 184, 5 N. E. 861, 58 Am. Rep. 814: (where the wife's executor paid them); Pache v. Oppenheim, 93 App. Div. 221, 87 N. Y. Supp. 704; Nashville Trust Co. v. Carr (Tenn.) 62 S. W. 204. The rule is not affected by the fact that the wife was separated by her fault from the husband; Seybold v. Morgan, 43 Ill. App. 39; or that she bequeathed money to another person who assisted in managing the funeral; Sears v. Giddey, 41 Mich. 590, 2 N. W. 917, 32 Am. Rep. 168.

A son-in-law is not liable to pay the funeral expenses of his mother-in-law; Kraan's Estate, 31 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 93. They are chargeable to the succession in Louisiana; Succession of McNeely, 50 La. Ann. 823, 24 South. 338. If a third party incurs a debt, the estate is not liable; Kenyon v. Brightwell, 120 Ga. 606, 48 S. E. 124, 1 Ann. Cas. 169. See 2 Wms. Exec. 166, n.; 3 id. 275, n.; 2 Bla. Com. 508; 3 Atk. 249; Bacon, Abr. Executors, etc. (L 4); Viner, Abr. Funeral Expenses.

See, generally, 27 Am. St. Rep. 732, n.; Wilson v. Staats, 33 N. J. Eq. 524-529; DEAD BODY.

FUNGIBLE. A term applicable to things that are consumed by the use, as wine, oil, etc., the loan of which is subject to certain rules, and governed by the contract called mutuum. See Schmidt, Civ. Law of Spain and Mexico 145; Story, Bailm.

FUNGIBLE THINGS. When the subject of the obligation is a thing of a given class, the thing is said to be fungible; i. e., the delivery of any object which answers to the generic description will satisfy the obligation. Campbell's, Austin, 61.

FUR (Lat.). A thief. One who stole without using force, as distinguished from a robber. See FURTUM.

FUR. Skins valuable chiefly on account of the fur. Skins is a term appropriated to those valuable chiefly for the skin. The word hides is inapplicable to fur skins. Astor v. Ins. Co., 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 202, 214.

FUR MANIFESTUS (Lat.). In the Civil Law. A manifest thief. A thief who is taken in the very act of stealing.

FURANDI ANIMUS. An intention of stealing.

FURCA. A fork. A gallows or gibbet. Bract. fol. 56.

FURCA ET FLAGELLUM (Lat. gallows and whip). The meanest of servile tenures, where the bondman was at the disposal of the lord for life and limb. Cowell.

FURCA ET FOSSA (Lat. gallows and pit). A jurisdiction of punishing felons,—the men by hanging, the woman by drowning. Skene; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell.

FURIGELDUM. A mulct paid for theft. Jac. L. Dict.

FURIOSITY. Madness by which the judgment is prevented from being applied to the ordinary purposes of life. Bell. It is distinguished from fatuity or idiotcy. Toml.

FURIOSUS (Lat.). An insane man; a madman; a lunatic.

In general, such a man can make no contract, because he has no capacity or will; Furiosus nullum negotium gerere potest, quia non intelligit quod agit. Inst. 3. 20. 8. Indeed, he is considered so incapable of exercising a will, that the law treats him as if he were absent; Furiosi nulla voluntas est. Dig. L. 17, 40. Furiosus absentis loco est. Dig. L. 17, 124. See INSANE; NON COMPOS MENTIS.

FURLINGUS (Lat.). A furlong, or a furrow one-eighth part of a mile long. Co. Litt. 5 b.

FURLONG. A measure of length, being forty poles, or one-eighth of a mile.

FURLOUGH. A permission given in the army and navy to an officer or private to absent himself for a limited time.

FURNAGE (from furnus, an oven). A sum of money paid to the lord by the tenants, who were bound by their tenure to bake at the lord's oven, for the privilege of baking elsewhere. The word is also used to signify the gain or profit taken and received for baking.

FURNITURE. Personal chattels in the use of a family.

"The word relates, ordinarily, to movable personal chattels. It is very general, both in meaning and application; and its meaning changes, so as to take the color of, or be in accord with, the subject to which it is applied. Thus, we hear of the furniture of a parlor, of a bed-chamber, of a kitchen, of shops of various kinds, of a ship, of a horse, of a plantation, etc. The articles, utensils, implements, used in these various connections, as also those used in a drug or other store, as the furniture thereof, differ in kind according to the purpose which they are intended to subserve; yet being put and employed in their several places as the equipment thereof, for ornament, or to promote comfort, or to facilitate the business therein done, and being kept, or intended to be kept, for those or some one of those purposes, they pertain to such places respectively, and collectively constitute the furniture thereof;" Fore v. Hibbard, 63 Ala. 410.

The expression household furniture must be understood to mean those vessels, utensils, or goods, which, not becoming fixtures, are designed chiefly for use in the family, as instruments of the household and for conducting and managing household affairs. It does not include a trunk nor a cabinet intended for keeping jewelry, etc.; Towns v. Pratt, 33 N. H. 345, 66 Am. Dec. 726.

It is held that by the term household furniture in a will, all personal chattels will pass which may contribute to the use or convenience of the householder or the ornament of the house: as, plate, linen, china (both useful and ornamental), and pictures; Bunn v. Winthrop, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329; 1 S. & S. 189; 2 Will. Ex. 752; Jarm. Wills 712, n.; Marquam v. Sengfelder, 24 Or. 2, 32 Pac. 676; Endicott v. Endicott, 41 N. J. Eq. 93, 3 Atl. 157; bronzes, statuary, and pictures; Endicott v. Endicott, 41 N. J. Eq. 93, 3 Atl. 157; but a watch will not; Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535; nor will books; 3 Ves. 311; or furniture of a school-room in a boarding school kept by a teacher; Appeal of Hoopes, 60 Pa. 220, 100 Am. Dec. 562; or silver plate used in a hotel; Dayton v. Tillou, 1 Rob. (N. Y.) 21. A sewing machine and piano were held exempt from attachment as "household furniture"; Von Storch v. Winslow, 13 R. I. 23, 43 Am. Rep. 10; but a doubt was expressed as to the piano, and as to that it was held contra in Dunlap v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 224; Tanner v. Billings, 18 Wis. 163, 86 Am. Dec. 755.

FURNITURE OF A SHIP. This term includes everything with which a ship requires to be furnished or equipped to make her seaworthy; it comprehends all articles furnished by ship-chandlers, which are almost innumerable. Weaver v. S. G. Owens, 1 Wall. Jr. 369, Fed. Cas. No. 17,310.

FURNIVAL'S INN. A place in Holborn, in London, which was formerly an Inn of Chancery. 1 Steph. Com. 19, n. See INNS OF COURT.

FURST AND FONDONG. Time to advise or take counsel. Jac. L. Dict.

FURTA. A right or privilege derived from the king as supreme lord of a state to try, condemn, and execute thieves and felons within certain bounds or districts of an honour, manor, etc. Cowell seems to be doubtful whether this word should not read furca, which means directly a gallows. Cowell; Holthouse, L. Dict.

FURTHER ADVANCE. A second or subsequent loan of money to a mortgagor by a mortgagee, either upon the same security as the original loan was advanced upon, or an additional security. Equity considers the arrears of interest on mortgage security converted into principal, by agreement between the parties, as a further advance. Whart.

FURTHER ASSURANCE. See COVENANT FOR FURTHER ASSURANCE.

FURTHER CONSIDERATION. It frequently happens that a decree in Chancery directs accounts and inquiries to be taken before the chief clerk. The hearing of any question arising out of such inquiries is called a hearing on further consideration. Hunt. Eq. Rules Sup. Ct. xl. 10.

FURTHER DIRECTIONS. When accounts in Chancery were taken before Masters, a hearing after a master had made his report in pursuance of the directions of the decree was called a hearing on further directions. This stage of suit is now called a hearing on further consideration. Hunt. Eq. See 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. (5th ed.) 1233, n.

FURTHER HEARING. Hearing at another time.

Prisoners are frequently committed for further hearing, either when there is not sufficient evidence for a final commitment, or because the magistrate has not time, at the moment, to hear the whole of the evidence. The magistrate is required by law, and by every principle of humanity, to hear the prisoner as soon as possible after a commitment for further hearing; and if he neglects to do so within a reasonable time, he becomes a trespasser; 10 B. & C. 28; 5 M. & R. 53. Fifteen days was held an unreasonable time, unless under special circumstances; 4 C. & P. 134; Com. v. Ross, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 427.

In Massachusetts, magistrates may, by statute, adjourn the case for ten days; Gen. Stat. c. 170, § 17. It is the practice in England to commit for three days, and then from three days to three days; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 74.

FURTHER MAINTENANCE OF ACTION, PLEA TO. A plea grounded upon some fact or facts which have arisen since the commencement of the suit, and which the defendant puts forward for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff should not further maintain his action. Brown.

FURTIVE. In Old English Law. Stealthily; by stealth. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, 3.

FURTUM (Lat.). Theft. The fraudulent appropriation to one's self of the property of another, with an intention to commit theft, without the consent of the owner. Fleta, l. 1, c. 36; Bract. 150; Co. 3d Inst. 107.

The thing which has been stolen. Bract. 151.

FURTUM CONCEPTUM (Lat.). The theft which was disclosed when, upon searching any one in the presence of witnesses in due form, the thing stolen is found. Detected theft is perhaps, the nearest concise translation of the phrase, though not quite exact. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FURTUM GRAVE (Lat.). Aggravated theft. Formerly there were three classes of this theft: first, by landed men; second, by a trustee or one holding property under a trust; third, theft of the majora animalia (larger animals), including children. Bell, Dict.

FURTUM MANIFESTUM (Lat.). Open theft. Theft where a thief is caught with the property in his possession. Bract. 150 b.

FURTUM OBLATUM (Lat.). The theft committed when stolen property is given to any one so as not to be found in the thief's possession. The crime of receiving stolen property. Calvinus, Lex.

FUSTIGATIO. In English Law. A beating with sticks or club; one of the ancient kinds of punishment of malefactors. Bract. fol. 104 b, lib. 3, tr. 1, c. 6.

FUSTIS. In Old English Law. A staff used in making livery of seisin. Bract. fol. 40.

FUTHWITE, or FITHWITE. A fine for fighting or breaking the peace. Cowell; Cun. L. Dict.

FUTURE ACQUIRED PROPERTY. Mortgages, especially of railroad companies are frequently made in terms to cover after-acquired property; such as rolling stock, etc. Such mortgages are valid; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 366, 3 Am. Rep. 596; Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 484; Shaw v. Bill, 95 U. S. 10, 24 L. Ed. 333; L. R. 16 Eq. 383. This may include future net earnings; Dunham v. Isett, 15 Ia. 284; the proceeds to be received from the sale of surplus lands; L. R. 2 Ch. 201; a ditch or flume in process of construction, which was held to cover all improvements and fixtures thereafter to be put on the line thereof; De Arguello v. Greer, 26 Cal. 620; rolling stock, etc.; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 366, 3 Am. Rep. 596; Benjamin v. R. Co., 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 441. Future calls of assessments on stock cannot be mortgaged; L. R. 10 Eq. 681; but calls already made can be; id.

Locomotives bought under a conditional sale, reserving title in the vendor, pass under an after-acquired clause to a mortgagee of the railroad, subject to the vendor's rights; Contracting & Building Co. of Kentucky v. Trust Co., 108 Fed. 1, 47 C. C. A. 143.

A power in a Kentucky hotel company's charter to mortgage "all its property" does not sustain a mortgage covering after-acquired personal property; In re New Galt House Co., 199 Fed. 533, following Kentucky cases, but the authorities are contra; In re Medina Quarry Co., 179 Fed. 929; Trust Co. of America v. City of Rhinelander, 182 Fed. 64; Zartman v. Bank, 189 N. Y. 267, 82 N. E. 127, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1083.

By statutes in most of the states a will speaks as of the death of the testator and ordinarily passes property acquired after its date. See SALE; EXPECTANCY; MORTGAGE.

FUTURE ADVANCES. See MORTGAGE.

FUTURE ESTATE. An estate which is to commence in possession in the future (in futuro). It includes remainders, reversions, and estates limited to commence in futuro without a particular estate to support them, which last are not good at common law except in the case of terms for years. See 2 Bla. Com. 165. In New York law it has been defined "an estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination by lapse of time, or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time," thus excluding reversions, which cannot be said to be created at the same time, because they are a remnant of the original estate remaining in the grantor; 11 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 3d ed. 9, § 10. See, also, How.

St. Mich. § 5526; Gen. St. Minn. 1878, c. 45, § 10; L'Etourneau v. Henquenet, 89 Mich. 428, 50 N. W. 1077, 28 Am. St. Rep. 310.

FUTURE USES. See CONTINGENT USES.

FUTURES. This term has grown out of those purely speculative transactions, in which there is a nominal contract of sale for future delivery, but where in fact none is ever intended or executed. The nominal seller does not have or expect to have the stock or merchandise he purports to sell, nor does the nominal buyer expect to receive it or pay the price. Instead of that, a percentage or "margin" is paid, which is increased or diminished as the market rates go down or up and accounted for to the buyer. This is simple speculation and gambling; mere wagering on prices within a given time. King v. Quidnick Co., 14 R. I. 138. See GAMING.

FUTURI (Lat.). Those who are to be. Part of the commencement of old deeds. "Sciant præsentes et futuri, quod ego, talis, dedi et concessi," etc. (Let all men now living and to come know that I, A B, have, etc.). Bract. 34 b.

FYGTWITE. One of the fines incurred for homicide. See FIGHTWITE.

FYKE. A bow-net for catching fish. Pub. St. Mass. 1882, p. 129. Fyke nets are prohibited in Pennsylvania by Act of 1901.

FYNDERINGA (Sax.). An offence or trespass for which the fine or compensation was reserved to the king's pleasure. Leges Hen. I. c. 10. Its nature is not known. Spelman reads fynderinga, and interprets it treasure trove; but Cowell reads fyrderinga, and interprets it a joining of the king's fird or host, a neglect to do which was punished by a fine called firdwite. See Spelman, Gloss. Du Cange agrees with Cowell.

FYRD, or FYRDUNG. The military array or land force of the whole country. Contribution to the fyrd was one of the imposts forming the trinoda necessitas. Whart.

FYRDWITE. A fine for neglect of military duty. If the lord did not respond to the king's call for the quota of milites which he was required to send, he must pay the fine for each man short. The man was bound to the lord, not to the king. Maitl. Domesd. Book and Beyond 159, 161. See FYRTHWITE.

FYRTHWITE, or FRIDWITE. A mulct paid by one who deserted the army. Cowell; Cun. L. Dict. Doubtless these words and Fyrdwite (q. v.) were different forms of the same thing.

G

G. The seventh letter of the alphabet. In Law French it is often used at the beginning of words for the English W, as in gage for wage, garranty for warranty, gast for waste.

GABEL (Lat. vectigal). A tax, imposition, or duty. This word is said to have the same signification that gabelle formerly had in France. Cunningham, Dict. But this seems to be an error; for gabelle signified in that country, previous to its revolution, a duty upon salt. Merlin, Rép. Coke says that gabel or gavel, gablum, gabellum, gabelletum, galbelletum, and gavilletum, signify a rent, duty, or service yielded or done to the king or any other lord. Co. Litt. 142 a. See GAVEL.

GABELLA. A tax or duty on personalty. Cowell; Spel. Gloss.

GABLATORES. Those who paid gabel.

GABLUM (spelled, also, gabulum, gabula). The gable-end of a building. Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. p. 201; Cowell.

A tax. Du Cange.

See GAFOL.

GABULUS DENARIORUM. Money rent. Seld. Tit. 321.

GADSDEN PURCHASE. A term commonly applied to the territory acquired by the United States from Mexico by treaty of December 30, 1853, known as the Gadsden Treaty. It extended the southern boundary of Arizona south of the Gila river, and extended the southern boundary of New Mexico, adding extensively to those territories. The treaty gave the United States freedom of transit for mails, merchandise and troops across the Isthmus of Tehauntepec, and abrogated Art. XI of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which bound the United States to prevent incursions of Indians from the United States into Mexico and to restore Mexican prisoners captured by such Indians. The boundary line between Mexico and the United States was marked by joint commissioners in 1855 and 1891. The report of the second commission was published in 1899.

GAFOL (spelled, also, gabella, gavel), Rent; tax; interest of money. Rent or customary performance of agricultural services. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 224.

Gafol gild. Payment of such rent, etc. Gafol land was land liable to tribute or tax; Cowell; or land rented; Saxon Dict. See Taylor, Hist. of Gavelkind pp. 26, 1021; Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng.; Maitl. Domesd. 44.

GAGE, GAGER (Law Lat. vadium). Personal property placed by a debtor in possession of his creditor as a security for the payment of his debt; a pawn or pledge (q. v.). Granv. lib. 10, c. 6; Britton c. 27.

There was also a gage of land, which, in mediæval English law, was characterized by delivery of immediate possession to the gagee, who was then as in modern times a creditor who took the gage as a security. There were two forms, the usufruct gage and the property gage. The former included the vadium vivum and the vadium mortuum.

The property gage involved the feature of forfeiture, either (1) where the gagee received possession at once, but not proprietorship until default, and (2) where he acquired immediate proprietorship, terminable, however, upon payment of the debt by a certain day. In each case forfeiture followed default without reference to the relative values of the land and the debt.

The modern idea of a gage of land as a security for a debt, with possession in the debtor, was a development of the period after the Norman Conquest, in which there was so rapid a growth in English law of the tendency to foster the creation of credits and facilities for the use of all kinds of property as security for loans and debts. This change of the point of view was pari passu with the development of the more numerous and effective forms of actions and executions. The gage of property, whether real or personal, became the creation of a mere security by mortgage, pledge, or other lien. As to the historical development of the gage of land, see two papers by H. D. Haseltine in 17 Harv. L. Rev. 549, 18 id. 36 (3 Sel. Essays Anglo-Amer. L. H. 661).

To pledge; to wage. Webster Dict.

Gager is used both as noun and verb: e. g. gager del ley, wager of law; Jacobs; gager ley, to wage law; Britton c. 27; gager deliverance, to put in sureties to deliver cattle distrained; Termes de la Ley; Kitchen, fol. 145; Fitzh. N. B. fol. 67, 74.

Estates in gage are those held in vadio or pledge; vivum vadium is a vifgage or living pledge; a mortgage is mortuum vadium, a dead-gage or pledge; for, whatsoever profit it yields, it redeems not itself, unless the whole amount secured is paid at the appointed time. Cowell.

GAGER DELIVERANCE. One who had distrained and was sued, but had delivered the cattle distrained, was obliged not only to avow the distress but also to furnish pledge or surety to deliver them, or, as it was called, gager deliverance, literally, to deposit or undertake for the discharge. See Fitz. N. B. 67; Kelham, Dict.

GAGER DEL LEY. Wager of law (q. v.). See GAGE.

GAINAGE. Wainage, or the draught-oxen, horses, wain, plough, and furniture for carrying on the work of tillage. Also, the land tilled itself, or the profit arising from it. Old N. B. fol. 117.

GAINER. To obtain by husbandry. Gainure. Tillage. Gainery. Tillage or the profit therefrom or from the beasts used in it. Gainé, gaignent (que), who plough or till. Kelham; Stat. Westm. 1, cc. 16, 17.

GAINOR. One who occupies or cultivates arable land; a sokeman (q. v). Old N. B. 12.

GALE. The payment of a rent or annuity. GABEL.

GALLON. A liquid measure, containing two hundred and thirty-one cubic inches, or four quarts. The imperial gallon contains about 277 and the ale gallon 282 cubic inches.

GALLOWS. A structure on which to hang criminals condemned to death. In the thirteenth century there was in certain cases power given to him who caught a thief with stolen goods upon him, to hang him, and it is said that "the manorial gallows was a common object of the country." 1 Poll. & Maitl. 564. See INFANGENETHEF; UTFANGENETHEF.

GAMACTA. A stroke or blow. Spel. Gloss.

GAMALIS. A child born in lawful wedlock; also one born to betrothed but unmarried parents. Spel. Gloss.

GAMBLE. To engage in unlawful play. To play games for stakes or bet in them. It is the most apt word in the language to express these ideas; Bennett v. State, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 472.

A gambler is one who follows or practices games of chance or skill with the expectation and purpose of thereby winning money or other property. Buckley v. O'Niel, 113 Mass. 193, 18 Am. Rep. 466. A common gambler is one who furnishes facilities for gambling, or keeps or exhibits a gambling table, establishment, device, or apparatus. People v. Sponsler, 1 Dak. 291, 46 N. W. 459, citing cases. A gambling policy is a life-insurance policy taken out by one who has no insurable interest in the life of the assured. See INSURABLE INTEREST. A gambling device is any contrivance or apparatus by which it is determined who is the winner or loser in a chance or contest on which money or value is staked or risked; Portis v. State, 27 Ark. 362; State v. Grimes, 49 Minn. 443, 52 N. W. 42; and the courts look to the substance of the game and not to the name merely; Smith v. State, 17 Tex. 191. The words "or other device" in an anti-gambling statute are not too loose and vague to be the basis of an indictment; U. S. v. Speeden, 1 Cra. C. C. 535, Fed. Cas. No. 16,366; contra; State v. Mann, 2 Or. 238. The term does not include implements used also for innocent amusement, as a pack of cards; State v. Hardin, 1 Kan. 474; nor is a horse-race a gambling device; State v. Lemon, 46 Mo. 375; nor the "game of cards commonly called poker"; State v. Mann, 2 Or. 238, where it was said that a device must be something tangible, and a game is not that but merely the result of using the device; but this ruling is criticized by Deady, J., in In re Lee Tong, 18 Fed. 253, with which also should be examined State v. Gitt Lee, 6 Or. 428. See 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1465; GAMING; LOTTERY; FUTURES; STOCK; WAGER.

GAMBLING CONTRACTS. See WAGER.

GAME. Birds and beasts of a wild nature, obtained by fowling and hunting. Bacon, Abr. See Coolidge v. Choate, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 79.

As applied to animals it is to be understood in its ordinary sense, in the absence of statutory definition; Gunn v. State, 89 Ga. 341, 15 S. E. 458.

A contest. Playing golf alone on Sunday is not playing the game of golf; [1908] E. D. C. 43 (So. African).

GAME LAWS. Laws regulating the killing or taking of birds, and beasts, as game. The English game laws are founded on the idea of restricting the right of taking game to certain privileged classes, generally landholders, and are said to be directly descended from the old forest laws. The doctrine as laid down by Blackstone that the sole right of hunting and killing game was at common law vested in the crown has been controverted by Prof. Christian who clearly demonstrated that the owner of the soil, or the lessee or occupier, if no reservation was made in the lease, possessed the exclusive right to such game restriction. In 1831 the English law was so modified as to enable any one to obtain a certificate or license to kill game on payment of a fee.

The laws relating to game in the United States were generally, if not universally, framed with reference to protecting the game from indiscriminate and unreasonable havoc, leaving all persons free to take game under certain restrictions as to the season of the year and the means of capture. But the more recent acts have provided other restrictions, such as requiring licenses, etc.

As the most effective means of enforcing such statutes, most of them prohibit all persons, including licensed dealers, under penalty, from buying or selling or even having in possession or control any game purchased within a certain period after the commencement of the close season. The enforcement of these penalties has been fruitful of much litigation.

A statute forbidding any one to kill, sell, or have in possession woodcock, etc., between specified days has been held not to apply to such lawfully taken in another state; Com. v. Hall, 128 Mass. 410, 35 Am. Rep. 387; Roth v. State, 51 Ohio St. 209, 37 N. E. 259, 46 Am. St. Rep. 566 (followed in State v. Rodman, 58 Minn. 393, 59 N. W. 1099); Com. v. Wilkinson, 139 Pa. 298, 21 Atl. 14; contra as to game unlawfully taken in another state; 35 Am. Rep. 390, note; State v. Saunders, 19 Kan. 127, 27 Am. Rep. 98; L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 553; People v. O'Neil, 71 Mich. 325, 39 N. W. 1; it has been held not to be an offence to expose live birds for sale under a statute prohibiting the killing or having possession of certain birds after the same are killed; People v. Fishbough, 134 N. Y. 393, 31 N. E. 983, reversing 58 Hun 404, 12 N. Y. Supp. 24; and the mere possession of game during the closed season does not constitute an offence if it were killed during the open season; State v. Bucknam, 88 Me. 385, 34 Atl. 170, 51 Am. St. Rep. 406; but a statute which forbids the sale or having in possession for the purpose of sale, of such game during the close season, is constitutional and a valid exercise of the police power, even if it were killed out of the state; In re Deininger, 108 Fed. 623.

A state may forbid those in rightful possession of game taken within the state from selling it; Ex parte Blardone, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 189, 115 S. W. 838, 116 S. W. 1199, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607; American Express Co. v. People, 133 Ill. 649, 24 N. E. 758, 9 L. R. A. 138, 23 Am. St. Rep. 641; Ex parte Kenneke, 136 Cal. 527, 69 Pac. 261, 89 Am. St. Rep. 177; State v. Dow, 70 N. H. 286, 47 Atl. 734, 53 L. R. A. 314; State v. Heger, 194 Mo. 707, 93 S. W. 252; or may make it an offence to have in possession, for the purpose of transportation beyond the state, birds which have been lawfully killed within the state; Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793. Such legislation is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce; id.; New York v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 29 Sup. Ct. 10, 53 L. Ed. 75; Organ v. State, 56 Ark. 267, 19 S. W. 840. An act declaring it unlawful in a non-resident to hunt or fish at any season of the year was held unconstitutional as denying the equal protection of the law to the non-resident land owner which was afforded to the resident land owner; State v. Mallory, 73 Ark. 236, 89 S. W. 955, 67 L. R. A. 773, 3 Ann. Cas. 852. The Lacey Act provides that all bodies of foreign game birds, the importation of which is prohibited, or of any game birds transported into any state, shall be subject therein to the operation of its laws; People v. Hesterberg, 184 N. Y. 126, 76 N. E. 1032, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 163, 128 Am. St. Rep. 528, 6 Ann. Cas. 353; New York v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 29 Sup. Ct. 10, 53 L. Ed. 75; Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, 37 Pac. 402, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129; State v. Rodman, 58 Minn. 393, 59 N. W. 1098; Roth v. State, 51 Ohio St. 209, 37 N. E. 259, 46 Am. St. Rep. 566; a statute forbidding the possession of game in the close season extends to game in cold storage; State v. Judy, 7 Mo. App. 524; one forbidding the sale of trout applies to trout artificially propagated; Com. v. Gilbert, 160 Mass. 157, 35 N. E. 454, 22 L. R. A. 439. A statute forbidding the transportation of game includes deer in a private park; Dieterich v. Fargo, 119 App. Div. 315, 104 N. Y. Supp. 334.

An act prohibiting the taking of game by aliens and forbidding their possession of a gun or rifle is not obnoxious to the XIVth Amendment or the treaty with Italy; Com. v. Patsone, 231 Pa. 46, 79 Atl. 928, affirmed in Supreme Court of United States, 232 U. S. 138, 34 Sup. Ct. 281, 58 L. Ed. —— (January, 1914).

See, generally, Austin, Farm and Game Law; and, for the English game laws at the end of the 18th century, Jacob, Law Dict.

GAMING. A contract between two or more persons by which they agree to play by certain rules at cards, dice, or other contrivance, and that one shall be the loser and the other the winner. Gaming is not an offence eo nomine; Harkey v. State (Tex.) 25 S. W. 423.

When considered in itself, and without regard to the end proposed by the players, there is nothing in it contrary to natural equity, and the contract will be considered as a reciprocal gift, which the parties make of the thing played for, under certain conditions.

There are some games which depend altogether upon skill, others which depend upon chance, and others which are of a mixed nature. Billiards is an example of the first; lottery, of the second; and backgammon, of the last. See State v. Gupton, 30 N. C. 271. The decisions as to what constitutes gaming have not been uniform; but under the statutes making it a penal offence, it may be defined as a staking on chance where chance is the controlling factor; In re Lee Tong, 18 Fed. 253; that betting on a horse race is so, see Ellis v. Beale, 18 Me. 337, 36 Am. Dec. 726; Tatman v. Strader, 23 Ill. 439; Cheesum v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 332, 44 Am. Dec. 771; Wade v. Deming, 9 Ind. 35; Shrophire v. Glascock, 4 Mo. 536, 31 Am. Dec. 189; Garrison v. McGregor, 51 Ill. 473; contra, State v. Rorie, 23 Ark. 726; State v. Hayden, 31 Mo. 35; Com. v. Shelton, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 592; that a billiard table is a gaming table; People v. Harrison, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 247; State v. Bishel, 39 Ia. 42; contra, State v. Hope, 15 Ind. 474; Blewett v. State, 34 Miss. 606. Baseball is a game of skill within the criminal offence of betting on such a game; Mace v. State, 58 Ark. 79, 22 S. W. 1108. The following are additional examples of illegal gaming: cock fighting and betting thereon; Com. v. Tilton, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 232; Bagley v. State, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 486; the game of "equality;" U. S. v. Speeden, 1 Cra. C. C. 535, Fed. Cas. No. 16,366; a "gift enterprise;" Bell v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 507; Eubanks v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 488; "keno;" Miller v. State, 48 Ala. 122; City of New Orleans v. Miller, 7 La. Ann. 651; "loto;" Lowry v. State, 1 Mo. 722; betting on "pool;" State v. Jackson, 39 Mo. 420; State v. Sanders, 86 Ark. 353, 111 S. W. 454, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913; a ten-pin alley; Spaight v. State, 29 Ala. 32; contra, State v. King, 113 N. C. 631, 18 S. E. 169; see State v. Hall, 32 N. J. L. 158; stock-clock; State v. Grimes, 49 Minn. 443, 52 N. W. 42; crap; Bell v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 187, 22 S. W. 687; playing pool, billiards or ten pins; Hopkins v. State, 122 Ga. 583, 50 S. E. 351, 69 L. R. A. 117, 2 Ann. Cas. 617; Murphy v. Rogers, 151 Mass. 118, 24 N. E. 35; throwing dice or playing any game of hazard, to determine who shall pay for liquor or other article bought; Com. v. Taylor, 14 Gray (Mass.) 26; Com. v. Gourdier, 14 Gray (Mass.) 390; or throwing dice for money; Parmer v. State, 91 Ga. 152, 16 S. E. 937; one who keeps tables on which "poker" is played, but is not directly interested in the game, is not guilty of gaming under the Virginia code; Nuckolls v. Com., 32 Gratt. (Va.) 884; merely betting at "faro" is not carrying on the game; Ex parte Ah Yem, 53 Cal. 246; the law against any game cannot be evaded by changing the name of the game; Smith v. State, 17 Tex. 191; athletic contests, when not conducted brutally, even when played for a stake, have been held lawful; 2 Whar. Cr. L. § 1465; betting upon a foot race is gaming within the meaning of a statute; Jones v. Cavanaugh, 149 Mass. 124, 21 N. E. 306; pin pool has been held not to be a gambling game; State v. Quaid, 43 La. Ann. 1076, 10 South. 183, 26 Am. St. Rep. 207.

The mere fact that the loser of the game paid the charges thereon is held to constitute gaming; Hamilton v. State, 75 Ind. 586; State v. Miller, 53 Ia. 154, 4 N. W. 900; State v. Leighton, 23 N. H. 167; Ward v. State, 17 Ohio St. 32; contra, State v. Quaid, 43 La. Ann. 1076, 10 South. 183, 26 Am. St. Rep. 207; Breninger v. Treasurer of Town of Belvidere, 44 N. J. L. 350; People v. Forbes, 52 Hun 30, 4 N. Y. Supp. 757. See State v. Sanders, 86 Ark. 353, 111 S. W. 454, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913.

In general, at common law, all games are lawful, unless some fraud has been practised or such games are contrary to public policy. Each of the parties to the contract must have a right to the money or thing played for. He must have given his full and free consent, and not have been entrapped by fraud. There must be equality in the play. The play must be conducted fairly. But, even when all these rules have been observed, the courts will not countenance gaming by giving too easy a remedy for the recovery of money won at play; Bacon, Abr. It has been held that money lost at a game of "five-up" may be recovered; Shinn v. Wimberly (Miss.) 12 South. 333. See also Crooks v. McMahon, 48 Mo. App. 48; Smith v. Ray, 89 Ga. 838, 16 S. E. 90.

But when fraud has been practised the contract is void; and in some cases, when the party has been guilty of cheating, by playing with false dice, cards, and the like, he may be indicted at common law; 1 Russ. Cr. 406.

Statutes have been passed in perhaps all the states forbidding gaming for money at certain games, and prohibiting the recovery of money lost at such games; and equity will not lend its aid in a gambling transaction either to the winner to compel payment of his unpaid accounts or to the loser who has paid his losses to enable him to recover them back, whether the loser pays his losses in cash or in negotiable securities; Albertson v. Laughlin, 173 Pa. 525, 34 Atl. 216, 51 Am. St. Rep. 777.

An act subjecting a building used for gambling to a judgment of an informer for money lost there at play is not a taking without due process of law; Marvin v. Trout, 199 U. S. 212, 26 Sup. Ct. 31, 50 L. Ed. 157, affirming 70 Ohio St. 437, 72 N. E. 1161; Trout v. Marvin, 62 Ohio St. 132, 56 N. E. 655. Nor is an act authorizing the seizure and destruction of gambling devices; J. B. Mullen & Co. v. Mosley, 13 Idaho 457, 90 Pac. 986; Frost v. People, 193 Ill. 635, 61 N. E. 1054, 86 Am. St. Rep. 352; Collins v. Lean, 68 Cal. 284, 9 Pac. 173; People v. Adams, 176 N. Y. 351, 68 N. E. 636, 63 L. R. A. 406, 98 Am. St. Rep. 675; Kite v. People, 32 Colo. 5, 74 Pac. 886; State v. Soucie's Hotel, 95 Me. 518, 50 Atl. 709. It is said "the legislature may determine when that which is property shall cease to be such, if kept against law"; Woods v. Cottrell, 55 W. Va. 476, 47 S. E. 275, 65 L. R. A. 616, 104 Am. St. Rep. 1004, 2 Ann. Cas. 933; 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 394, note.

Statutes which forbid or regulate places of amusement that may be resorted to for the purpose of gaming or which forbid altogether the keeping of instruments made use of for unlawful games, are within the police power of the legislature; Cooley, Const. Lim. 749. See Com. v. Colton, 8 Gray (Mass.) 488; State v. Hay, 29 Me. 457.

The uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is sufficient to warrant a conviction of gaming; Grant v. State, 89 Ga. 393, 15 S. E. 488.

Option contracts on grain, etc., or stock, which are intended to be settled by payment of differences, are invalid; Pearce v. Foote, 113 Ill. 228, 55 Am. Rep. 414; as are option contracts to sell or buy at a future time any grain, etc.; Schneider v. Turner, 130 Ill. 28, 22 N. E. 497, 6 L. R. A. 164. These cases were held not to apply to a contract for future delivery where there was no evidence that delivery was not contemplated, and where a settlement by payment of differences only was intended; Clews v. Jamieson, 182 U. S. 461, 21 Sup. Ct. 845, 45 L. Ed. 1183; to the same effect; Clement v. U. S., 149 Fed. 317, 79 C. C. A. 243; In re A. B. Baxter & Co., 152 Fed. 137, 81 C. C. A. 359. Such a contract, legitimate on its face, cannot be held void as a wagering contract because one of the parties understood it to be so. The proof must show that such understanding was mutual; In re A. B. Baxter & Co., 152 Fed. 137, 81 C. C. A. 359. Where the issue was as to whether a sale of commodities on margin was a gambling contract, the buyer may testify as to his intention not to receive delivery; Pope v. Hanke, 155 Ill. 617, 40 N. E. 839, 28 L. R. A. 568; Waite v. Frank, 14 S. D. 626, 86 N. W. 645.

See GAMING HOUSES; WAGER; HORSE RACE; PRIZE FIGHT; BUCKET SHOP; JOCKEY CLUBS.

GAMING CONTRACTS. See WAGER; FUTURES.

GAMING HOUSES. Houses kept for the purpose of permitting persons to gamble for money or other valuable thing. They are nuisances in the eyes of the law, being detrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other corrupt practices; 1 Russ. Cr. 299; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 663; People v. Jackson, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 101, 45 Am. Dec. 449. See Haring v. State, 51 N. J. L. 386, 17 Atl. 1079; id., 53 N. J. L. 664, 23 Atl. 581; State v. Eaton, 85 Me. 237, 27 Atl. 126; State v. Mosby, 53 Mo. App. 571.

In an indictment under a statute prohibiting gaming houses, the special facts making such a house a nuisance must be averred; Whar. Cr. Law § 1466; Whar. Cr. Pl. and Pr. §§ 154, 230; U. S. v. Ringgold, 5 Cra. 378, Fed. Cas. No. 16,167. The proprietor of a gaming establishment cannot take advantage of a statute enabling a person losing money at a game of chance to recover it back; Brown v. Thompson, 14 Bush (Ky.) 538, 29 Am. Rep. 416.

They are sometimes prosecuted as disorderly houses (q. v.)

GANANCIAL. In Spanish Law. Property held in community.

The property of which it is formed belongs in common to the two consorts, and, on the dissolution of the marriage, is divisible between them in equal shares. It is confined to their future acquisitions durante el matrimonio, and the frutos or rents and profits of the other property. See 1 Burge, Confl. Laws 418; Aso & M. Inst. b. 1, t. 7, c. 5, § 1.

All that which is increased or multiplied during marriage. By multiplied is understood all that is increased by onerous cause or title, and not that which is acquired by a lucrative one; Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 254. See Cartwright v. Cartwright, 18 Tex. 634; COMMUNITY.

GANANCIAS. In Spanish Law. Gains or profits from the employment of ganancial property. White, N. Rec. b. 1, tit. 7, c. 5.

GANG-WEEK. In England, the time when the bounds of the parish are lustrated or gone over by the parish officers—Rogation week. Lond. Encyc.

GANGIATORI. Officers in ancient times whose duty it was to examine weights and measures. Skene.

GANTELOPE. A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man. Lond. Encyc. This was called "running the gauntlett," the word itself being pronounced "gauntlett."

GAOL. (This word, sometimes written jail, is said to be derived from the Spanish jaulu, a cage (derived from caula), in French gêole, gaol. 1 M. & G. 222, note a.) A place for the confinement of persons arrested for debt or for crime and held in the custody of the sheriff. Webst. Dict.

A prison or building designated by law or used by the sheriff for the confinement or detention of those whose persons are judicially ordered to be kept in custody. See Day v. Brett, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 22; 14 Viner, Abr. 9; Bacon, Abr.; Dane, Abr. Index; 4 Com. Dig. 619. It may be used also for the confinement of witnesses; and, in general, now there is no distinction between a jail and a prison, except that the latter belongs to a greater extent of country; thus, we say a state's prison or penitentiary and a county jail. Originally, a jail seems to have been a place where persons were confined to await further proceedings—e. g. debtors till they paid their debts, witnesses and accused persons till a certain trial came on, etc.—as opposed to prison, which was for confinement, as punishment. See 2 Poll. & Maitl. 514, 518. A gaol is an inhabited dwellinghouse, and a house within the statutes against arson; 2 W. Bla. 682; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1020; People v. Cotteral, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 115; Stevens v. Com., 4 Leigh. (Va.) 683. See PENITENTIARY; PRISON.

GAOL-DELIVERY. In English Law. To insure the trial, within a certain time, of all prisoners, a patent, in the nature of a letter, was issued from the king to certain persons, appointing them his justices and authorizing them to deliver his gaols. 3 Bla. Com. 60; 4 id. 269. This was the humblest of the temporary judicial commissions so frequent in the fourteenth century; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 179; but so few men were kept in prison, that the work was regarded as easy work which might be entrusted to knights of the shire; 2 id. 642. See GENERAL GAOL DELIVERY; OYER AND TERMINER.

GAOL LIBERTIES, GAOL LIMITS. A space marked out by limits, which is considered as a part of the prison, and within which prisoners are allowed to go at large on giving security to return. Owing to the rigor of the law which allowed capias, or attachment of the person, as the first process against a debtor, statutes were from time to time passed enlarging the gaol liberties, in order to mitigate the hardships of imprisonment: thus, the whole city of Boston was held the "gaol liberties" of its county gaol. And so with a large part of New York City. Act of March 18, 1830. The prisoner, while within the limits, is considered as within the walls of the prison; Peters v. Henry, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 121, 5 Am. Dec. 196.

GAOLER. The keeper of a gaol or prison; one who has the legal custody of the place where prisoners are kept.

It is his duty to keep the prisoners in safe custody, and for this purpose he may use all necessary force; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 601; and a prisoner who assaults him in endeavoring to break gaol may be lawfully killed by him; 1 Russ. Cr. Sharsw. ed. 860, 895. But any oppression of a prisoner, under a pretended necessity, will be punished; for the prisoner, whether he be a debtor or a criminal, is entitled to the protection of the laws from oppression. He was indictable if by oppression he induced a prisoner to accuse another; 4 Bla. Com. 128; but this statute was repealed by 4 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 1 id. note. He is also indictable for suffering an escape (q. v.), or for extortion; 1 Russ. Cr. Sharsw. ed. 208.

When a county court delivers persons convicted by it of murder to a gaoler for safekeeping till brought back for execution, the governor has no authority to countermand a subsequent order of that court requiring the gaoler to deliver them up, nor will the fact that a writ of error and supersedeas had been awarded each of the prisoners by the supreme court justify the gaoler in refusing to deliver up the prisoners on the order of the court that committed them; but the fact that a court having jurisdiction has granted the prisoners a writ of habeas corpus will justify such a refusal; Cardoza v. Epps (Va.) 23 S. E. 296.

GARANDA, or GARANTIA. A warranty. Spel. Gloss.

GARANTIE. In French law, this word corresponds to warranty or covenants for title in English law. In the case of a sale this garantie includes two things: (1) Peaceful possession of the thing sold; and (2) absence of undisclosed defects (défauts cachés). Brown.

GARAUNTOR. In Old English Law. A warrantor or vouchee, who is obliged by his warranty (garauntie) to warrant (garaunter) the title of the warrantee (garaunte), that is, to defend him in his seisin, and if he do not defend, and the tenant be ousted, to give him land of equal value. Britt. c. 75.

GARBLE. In English statutes, to sort or cull out the good from the bad in spices, drugs, etc. Cowell.

A garbler of spices was anciently in London an officer to inspect drugs and spices, with power to enter and search any shop or warehouse and garble and clean the goods or direct it to be done. Stat. 6 Anne, c. 16; Mozl. & Whit.

GARDE, or GARDIA (Garder, to watch). Wardship; custody; care. The judgment. The wardship of a city. Kelham.

GARDEN. A piece of ground appropriated to raising plants and flowers.

A garden is a parcel of a house, and passes with it; 2 Co. 32; Plowd. 171; Co. Litt. 5 b, 56 a, b; Wood, Landl. and Ten. 309. But see F. Moore 24; Bac. Abr. Grants, I. See CURTILAGE.

GARDIANUS. A guardian; defender; protector.

A warden. Gardianus ecclesiæ, a churchwarden. Gardianus quinque portuum, warden of the Cinque Ports (q. v.). In feudal law, gardio. Spelman, Gloss.

GARDIEN. A constable; a keeper; a guardian. Kelham.

GARNESTURA. In Old English Law. Victuals, arms, and other implements of war, necessary for the defence of a town. Mat. Par. 1250. See GARNISTURA.

GARNISH. In English Law. Money paid by a prisoner to his fellow-prisoners on his entrance into prison.

To warn. To garnish the heir is to warn the heir. Obsolete.

GARNISHEE. In Practice. A person who has money or property in his possession belonging to a defendant, which money or property has been attached in his hands, with notice to him of such attachment; he is so called because he has had warning or notice of the attachment.

From the time of the notice of the attachment, the garnishee is bound to keep the money or property in his hands, to answer the plaintiff's claim, until the attachment is dissolved or he is otherwise discharged. See Serg. Att. 88; Wade, Att. 331; Drake, Att.; Comyns., Dig. Attachment, E.

See GARNISHMENT.

GARNISHMENT. A warning to any one for his appearance, in a cause in which he is not a party, for the information of the court and explaining a cause. Cowell.

Now generally used of the process of attaching money or goods due a defendant in the hands of a third party. The person in whose hands such effects are attached is the garnishee, because he is garnished, or warned, not to deliver them to the defendant, but to answer the plaintiff's suit. The use of the form "garnishee" as a verb is a prevalent corruption in this country.

It is attachment in the hands of a third person, and so is a species of seizure by notice; Beamer v. Winter, 41 Kan. 297, 21 Pac. 251; id., 41 Kan. 596, 21 Pac. 1078.

For example, when a writ of attachment issues against a debtor, in order to secure to the plaintiff a claim due by a third person to such debtor, it is served on such third person, which notice or service is a garnishment, and he is called the garnishee.

There are garnishees also in the action of detinue. They are persons against whom process is awarded, at the prayer of the defendant, to warn them to come in and interplead with the plaintiff; but in detinue, the defendant cannot have a sci. fa. to garnish a third person unless he confess the possession of the chattel or thing demanded. And when the garnishee comes in, he cannot vary or depart from the allegation of the defendant in his prayer of garnishment. The plaintiff does not declare de novo against the garnishee; but the garnishee, if he appears in due time, may have oyer of the original declaration to which he pleads.

See Brooks, Abr. Detinue.

The process of garnishment is directly founded upon the writ of attachment as by custom of London, as to the history and character of which see ATTACHMENT.

This writ reached the effects of the defendant in the hands of third persons. Its effect is simply to arrest the payment of a debt due the defendant, to him, and to compel its payment to the plaintiff, or else to reach personal property in the hands of a third person. It is known in England and in most of the states of the United States as garnishment, or the garnishee process; but in some, as the trustee process and factorizing, with the same characteristics. As affects the garnishees, it is in reality a suit by the defendant in the plaintiff's name; Moore v. Stainton, 22 Ala. 831; Tunstall v. Worthington, Hempst. 662, Fed. Cas. No. 14,239.

Garnishment is an effectual attachment of the defendant's effects in the garnishee's hands; Kennedy v. Brent, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 187, 3 L. Ed. 194; Blaisdell v. Ladd, 14 N. H. 129; Tillinghast's Ex'rs v. Johnson, 5 Ala. 514; Bryan v. Lashley, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 284; Hacker v. Stevens, 4 McLean 535, Fed. Cas. No. 5,887; Beamer v. Winter, 41 Kan. 297, 21 Pac. 251; id., 41 Kan. 596, 21 Pac. 1078. It is essentially a legal remedy; and through it equities cannot be settled between the defendant and the garnishee; Harris v. Miller, 71 Ala. 26; Hoyt v. Swift, 13 Vt. 129, 37 Am. Dec. 586; Webster v. Steele, 75 Ill. 544; Perry v. Thornton, 7 R. I. 15; Massachusetts Nat. Bank v. Bullock, 120 Mass. 86; Sheedy v. Bank, 62 Mo. 17, 21 Am. Rep. 407. The plaintiff, through it, acquires no greater rights against the garnishee than the defendant has, except in cases of fraud; and he can hold the garnishee only so long as he has, in the attachment suit, a right to enforce his claim against the defendant; Price v. Higgins, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 274; Harris v. Ins. Co., 35 Conn. 310; Waldron v. Wilcox, 13 R. I. 518; Richardson v. Lester, 83 Ill. 55. No judgment can be rendered against the garnishee until judgment against the defendant shall have been recovered; Housmans v. Heilbron, 23 Ga. 186; Washburn v. Mining Co., 41 Vt. 50.

The basis of a garnishee's liability is either an indebtedness to the defendant, or the possession of personal property of the defendant capable of being seized and sold under execution: Maine Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Weeks, 7 Mass. 438; Rundlet v. Jordan, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 47; Haven v. Wentworth, 2 N. H. 93; Hutchins v. Hawley, 9 Vt. 295; Walke v. McGehee, 11 Ala. 273. And to be a subject of garnishment, the claim must be one for which the principal defendant can maintain an action at law, if due at the time or to become due thereafter; Farwell v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 316, 28 N. W. 859; Edney v. Willis, 23 Neb. 56, 36 N. W. 300. The existence of such indebtedness, or the possession of such property, must be shown affirmatively, either by the garnishee's answer or by evidence aliunde; Porter v. Stevens, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 530; Lomerson v. Huffman, 25 N. J. L. 625; Cameron v. Boyle, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 154; Hunt v. Coon, 9 Ind. 537; Reagan v. R. R., 21 Mo. 30. The demand of the defendant against the garnishee, which will justify a judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the garnishee, must be such as would sustain an action of debt, or indebitatus assumpsit; Hall v. Magee, 27 Ala. 414.

A non-resident of the state in which the attachment is obtained cannot be held as garnishee, unless he have in that state property of the defendant's in his hands, or be bound to pay the defendant money, or to deliver him goods, at some particular place in that state; Nye v. Liscombe, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 263; Jones v. Winchester, 6 N. H. 497; Baxter v. Vincent, 6 Vt. 614; Miller v. Hooe, 2 Cranch, C. C. 622, Fed. Cas. No. 9,573; Lovejoy v. Albee, 33 Me. 414, 54 Am. Dec. 630; Cronin v. Foster, 13 R. I. 196. A debt may be attached in any state where the debtor can be found if the law of the forum authorize attachments; Harvey v. Ry. Co., 50 Minn. 405, 52 N. W. 905, 17 L. R. A. 84.

The right to garnish debts due to non-residents payable in a foreign jurisdiction has given rise to much conflict in state courts. The question turns on the doctrine that a debt has a situs and the difference of opinion is as to where it is. Some courts hold that it is at the domicil of the creditor of the garnishment; Nat. Bank of Wilmington & Brandywine v. Furtick, 2 Marv. (Del.) 35, 42 Atl. 479, 44 L. R. A. 115, 69 Am. St. Rep. 99; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Nash, 118 Ala. 477, 23 South. 825, 41 L. R. A. 331, 72 Am. St. Rep. 181; High v. Padrosa, 119 Ga. 649, 46 S. E. 859; Glower v. Varnish Co., 120 Ga. 983, 48 S. E. 355; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Brinson, 109 Ga. 354, 34 S. E. 597, 77 Am. St. Rep. 382; Bullard v. Chaffee, 61 Neb. 83, 84 N. W. 604, 51 L. R. A. 715. In the decisions to this effect it is sometimes admitted that "this fiction always yields to laws for attaching the property of a non-resident, because such laws necessarily assume that the property has a situs distinct from the owner's domicil"; Wyeth Hardware & Mfg. Co.

v. Lang, 127 Mo. 242, 29 S. W. 1010, 27 L. R. A. 651, 48 Am. St. Rep. 626. In other cases it is held that statutes and the custom of London may, and often do, for the purpose of garnishment give the debt a situs at the domicil of the debtor; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 17 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144; King v. Cross, 175 U. S. 396, 20 Sup. Ct. 131, 44 L. Ed. 211; Swedish-American Nat. Bank of Minneapolis v. Bleecker, 72 Minn. 383, 75 N. W. 740, 42 L. R. A. 283, 71 Am. St. Rep. 492; Douglass v. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 209, 33 N. E. 938, 20 L. R. A. 118, 34 Am. St. Rep. 448; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Corbetts, 165 Ill. 592, 46 N. E. 631, 36 L. R. A. 640, 56 Am. St. Rep. 275; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Allen, 58 W. Va. 388, 52 S. E. 465, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 608, 112 Am. St. Rep. 975. Though generally the situs of a debt is constructively with the creditor, it is within the competence of the sovereign of the residence of the debtor to pass laws subjecting the debt to seizure within its territory; Reimers v. Mfg. Co., 70 Fed. 573, 17 C. C. A. 228, 30 L. R. A. 364. See also Pomeroy v. Rand, McNally & Co., 157 Ill. 176, 41 N. E. 636; Bragg v. Gaynor, 85 Wis. 468, 55 N. W. 919, 21 L. R. A. 161; Newland v. Reilly, 85 Mich. 151, 48 N. W. 544. In many of the cases cited, neither debtor nor creditor residing in the state where it was sought to attach, the question whether the situs was with the debtor or creditor was considered immaterial; Swedish-American Nat. Bank of Minneapolis v. Bleecker, 72 Minn. 383, 75 N. W. 740, 42 L. R. A. 283, 71 Am. St. Rep. 492; Douglass v. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 209, 33 N. E. 938, 20 L. R. A. 118, 34 Am. St. Rep. 448; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dooley, 78 Ala. 524; and in the cases supporting the doctrine that the debt follows the person of the creditor, the decision is usually rested not upon that doctrine (which is merely referred to as a general principle), but upon some other proposition, although the rule has been distinctly adopted and applied; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Sharitt, 43 Kan. 375, 23 Pac. 430, 8 L. R. A. 385, 389, 19 Am. St. Rep. 143. In Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 17 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144, already cited, it is said: "The essential service of foreign attachment laws is to reach and arrest the payment of what is due and might be paid to a non-resident to the defeat of his creditors. To do this he must go to the domicil of his debtor, and can only do it under the laws and procedure in force there. This is a legal necessity and considerations of situs are somewhat artificial. If not artificial, whatever of substance there is must be with the debtor. He, and he only, has something in his hands. That something is a res and gives character to the action as known in the nature of a proceeding in rem," citing Mooney v. Mfg. Co., 72 Fed. 32, 18 C. C. A. 421.

It was held that a debt expressly payable at the domicil of the creditor was not subject to attachment at the domicil of the debtor; Drake v. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 168, 37 N. W. 70, 13 Am. St. Rep. 382; Bullard v. Chaffee, 61 Neb. 83, 84 N. W. 604, 51 L. R. A. 715; that a debt is subject to garnishment at the domicil of the debtor, if it be not payable elsewhere; Walker v. Fairbanks, 55 Mo. App. 478; but this qualification was repudiated in Wyeth Hardware & Mfg. Co. v. Lang, 127 Mo. 242, 29 S. W. 1010, 27 L. R. A. 651, 48 Am. St. Rep. 626. Some cases hold, where both debtor and creditor are nonresidents, that to give jurisdiction to garnish the debt it must be expressly payable in the state of the garnishment, or at least contracted there and payable there by legal implication; Reimers v. Mfg. Co., 70 Fed. 573, 17 C. C. A. 228, 30 L. R. A. 364; Green v. Bank, 25 Conn. 452; McKinney v. Mills, 80 Minn. 478, 83 N. W. 452, 81 Am. St. Rep. 278; Bush v. Nance, 61 Miss. 237; Sawyer v. Thompson, 24 N. H. 510; Lancaster v. Spotswood, 41 Misc. 19, 83 N. Y. Supp. 572; Balk v. Harris, 124 N. C. 467, 32 S. E. 799, 45 L. R. A. 258, 70 Am. St. Rep. 606, reversed in Harris v. Balk, 198 U. S. 215, 25 Sup. Ct. 625, 49 L. Ed. 1023, 3 Ann. Cas. 1084. In that case the principle was established that a debt may be garnished in a state in which neither debtor nor creditor resides if personal jurisdiction may be acquired over the debtor, and it was not necessary that the debt should have been contracted in or expressly payable in that state; Harris v. Balk, 198 U. S. 215, 25 Sup. Ct. 625, 49 L. Ed. 1023; Wyeth Hardware & Mfg. Co. v. Lang, 127 Mo. 242, 29 S. W. 1010, 27 L. R. A. 651, 48 Am. St. Rep. 626; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Allen, 58 W. Va. 389, 52 S. E. 465, 112 Am. St. Rep. 975, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 608, and note, which see as to this and the following:

A debt due from a foreign corporation to a non-resident, served constructively only, is subject to garnishment in a state in which such corporation does business, even though the debt be not payable in that state, and did not arise out of business transacted therein; Mooney v. Mfg. Co., 72 Fed. 32, 18 C. C. A. 421; National Fire Ins. Co. v. Ming, 7 Ariz. 6, 60 Pac. 720; German Bank v. Ins. Co., 83 Ia. 491, 50 N. W. 53, 32 Am. St. Rep. 316; Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Bartels, 108 Ky. 216, 56 S. W. 152; Howland v. Ry. Co., 134 Mo. 474, 36 S. W. 29; National Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford v. Chambers, 53 N. J. Eq. 468, 32 Atl. 663; and so also where the garnishee, though originally incorporated elsewhere, was also incorporated within the state in which the garnishment proceeding was instituted; Georgia & A. Ry. v. Stollenwerck, 122 Ala. 539, 25 South. 258; Wabash R. Co. v. Dougan, 142 Ill. 248, 31 N. E. 594, 34 Am. St. Rep. 74; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Barnhill, 91 Tenn. 395, 19 S. W. 21, 30 Am. St. Rep. 889.

On the other hand, it was held that the jurisdiction of the courts of a state in which a foreign corporation is doing business is limited, so far as debts due from the corporation to a non-resident not personally within the jurisdiction are concerned, to those which arise out of business transacted within the state, or which are payable within the state; Central Trust Co. of New York v. R. Co., 68 Fed. 685; Reimers v. Mfg. Co., 70 Fed. 573, 17 C. C. A. 228, 30 L. R. A. 364; Everett v. Ins. Co., 4 Colo. App. 509, 36 Pac. 616; National Bank of Wilmington and Brandywine v. Ins. Co., 2 Marv. (Del.) 35, 42 Atl. 479, 44 L. R. A. 115, 69 Am. St. Rep. 99; Swedish-American Nat. Bank of Minneapolis v. Bleecker, 72 Minn. 383, 75 N. W. 740, 42 L. R. A. 283, 71 Am. St. Rep. 492; Strause v. Ins. Co., 126 N. C. 223, 35 S. E. 471, 48 L. R A. 452; Allen v. Cigar Stores Co., 39 Misc. 500, 80 N. Y. Supp. 401; Morawetz v. Ins. Office, 96 Wis. 175, 71 N. W. 109, 65 Am. St. Rep. 43.

An act declaring that the situs of a debt shall, for the purposes of attachment and garnishment, be at the residence of the garnishee, is not unconstitutional, as an attempt to pass an act having an extra-territorial effect; Harvey v. Thompson, 128 Ga. 147, 57 S. E. 104, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 765, 119 Am. St. Rep. 373; contra, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Nash, 118 Ala. 483, 23 South. 825, 41 L. R. A. 331, 72 Am. St. Rep. 181.

Ordinarily all persons or corporations who may be sued may also be summoned as garnishees. Neither the national nor state government can be subjected to garnishment; Buchanan v. Alexander, 4 How. (U. S.) 20, 11 L. Ed. 857; nor counties; Ward v Hartford County, 12 Conn. 404; Dollar v. Commission Co., 78 Miss. 274, 28 South. 876 (the courts have jurisdiction, but must sustain an objection); nor, on the weight of authority, municipal corporations; Merwin v. City of Chicago, 45 Ill. 133, 92 Am. Dec. 204; Hawthorn v. City of St. Louis, 11 Mo. 59, 47 Am. Dec. 141; Bank of Southwestern Ga. v. Americus, 92 Ga. 361, 17 S. E. 287; Leake v. Lacey, 95 Ga. 747, 22 S. E. 655, 51 Am. St. Rep. 112; Baird v. Rogers, 95 Tenn. 492, 32 S. W. 630; Van Cott v. Pratt, 11 Utah 209, 39 Pac. 827; Porter & Blair Hardware Co. v. Perdue, 105 Ala. 293, 16 South. 713, 53 Am. St. Rep. 124; Fast v. Wolf, 38 Ill. App. 27; First Nat. Bank of Ottawa v. City of Ottawa, 43 Kan. 294, 23 Pac. 485; contra, City of Newark v. Funk, 15 Ohio St. 462.

On the same principle no person deriving his authority from the law, and obliged to execute it according to the rules of the law, can be charged as garnishee in respect of any money or property held by him in virtue of that authority; Brooks v. Cook, 8 Mass. 246. Hence it has been held that an administrator cannot, in respect of moneys in his hand as such, be charged as garnishee of a creditor of his intestate; Waite v. Osborne, 11 Me. 185; Marvel v. Houston, 2 Harr. (Del.) 349; Thorn v. Woodruff, 5 Ark. 55; Fowler v. McClelland, id. 188; though he may be, by a proper tribunal, adjudged and ordered to pay a certain sum to such creditor; Marble v. Marble, 5 N. H. 374; Fitchett v. Dolbee, 3 Harr. (Del.) 267; Curling & Robertson v. Hyde, 10 Mo. 374; Harrington v. La Rocque, 13 Or. 344, 10 Pac. 498; contra, Thorn v. Woodruff, 5 Ark. 55; Fowler v. McClelland, id. 188; nor is an executor chargeable as garnishee in respect of a legacy bequeathed by his testator; Barnes v. Treat, 7 Mass. 271; Winchell v. Allen, 1 Conn. 385; Beckwith v. Baxter, 3 N. H. 67; Shewell v. Keen, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 332, 30 Am. Dec. 266; nor a guardian; Gassett v. Grout, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 486. Nor is a sheriff subject to garnishment in respect of money collected by him under process; Wilder v. Bailey, 3 Mass. 289; Farmers' Bank of Delaware v. Beaston, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 421, 28 Am. Dec. 226; Jones v. Jones, 1 Bland (Md.) 443, 18 Am. Dec. 327; Blair v. Cantey, 2 Speer (S. C.) 34, 42 Am. Dec. 360; Zurcher v. Magee, 2 Ala. 253; Snell v. Allen, 1 Swan. (Tenn.) 208; Clymer v. Willis, 3 Cal. 363, 58 Am. Dec. 414; or where it was taken from a prisoner; Robinson v. Howard, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 257; Richardson v. Anderson, 4 Wils. (Tex. Ct. App.) 286, 18 S. W. 195; Morris v. Penniman, 14 Gray (Mass.) 220, 74 Am. Dec. 675; Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 482, 93 Am. Dec. 459; Dahms v. Sears, 13 Or. 47, 11 Pac. 891; Halker v. Hennessey, 141 Mo. 527, 42 S. W. 1090, 39 L. R. St. Rep. 822; this is not so, however, in some states if taken bona fide and without trickery; Ex parte Hurn, 92 Ala. 102, 9 South. 515, 13 L. R. A. 120, 25 Am. St. Rep. 23; Oppenheimer v. Marr, 31 Neb. 811, 48 N. W. 818, 28 Am. St. Rep. 539; Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 482, 93 Am. Dec. 459; but where plaintiff in execution paid to the sheriff $1,000 as the value of the debtor's homestead interest, and the land was sold under execution, the money in the sheriff's hands was subject to garnishment at the instance of the other judgment creditors; Self v. Schoenfeld, 60 Ill. App. 65; money taken from a person without his consent by a sheriff acting as trespasser in so doing, and delivered by him to a third person claiming title thereto, is not subject of garnishment in the hands of the sheriff or to the third parties as the property of the person from whom it was taken; Wooding v. Smith, 5 Mass. 183; Farmers' Bank of Delaware v. Beaston, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 421, 28 Am. Dec. 226 (but the interest of a party in the proceeds of a partition sale may be attached in the hands of the trustee to make the sale; Fenton v. Fisher, 106 Pa. 418). When a trust is created by a third party and the trustee is vested with discretion as to term, amount or manner of payments, he cannot be charged as garnishee; Richards v. R. Co., 44 N. H. 127. A government disbursing officer is not subject to garnishment; Chealy v. Brewer, 7 Mass. 259; Bulkley v. Eckert, 3 Pa. 368, 45 Am. Dec. 650; Divine v. Harvie, 7 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 439, 18 Am. Dec. 194; Bank of Tennessee v. Dibrell, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 379; Buchanan v. Alexander, 4 How. (U. S.) 20, 11 L. Ed. 857; nor a receiver; Field v. Jones, 11 Ga. 413; Glenn v. Gill, 2 Md. 1; Taylor v. Gillean, 23 Tex. 508; Jackson v. Lahee, 114 Ill. 287, 2 N. E. 172; Columbian Book Co. v. De Golyer, 115 Mass. 69; Bagby v. R. Co., 86 Pa. 291; nor a United States marshal; Clarke v. Shaw, 28 Fed. 356; nor a board of levee commissioners; McBain v. Rodgers (Miss.) 29 South. 91. A trespasser in possession of another's money or goods cannot be charged as garnishee of the owner; Despatch Line of Packets v. Bellamy Mfg. Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 203.

The defendant in an action of tort cannot be garnished before the recovery of final judgment; Gamble v. Banking Co., 80 Ga. 595, 7 S. E. 315, 12 Am. St. Rep. 276. When the wages of a fisherman are to be paid within thirty days after the arrival of the vessel in port, they are liable to garnishment within the thirty days; Telles v. Lynde, 47 Fed. 912.

A debt due to one partner cannot be attached by a creditor of the firm; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Kirkwood, 184 Ill. 139, 56 N. E. 405; Siegel, Cooper & Co. v. Schueck, 167 Ill. 522, 47 N. E. 855, 59 Am. St. Rep. 309; Ford v. Dock Co., 50 Mich. 358, 15 N. W. 509; contra, Pearce v. Shorter, 50 Ala. 318; Stevens v. Perry, 113 Mass. 380. The garnishment of an agent is insufficient as a garnishment of the principal; Provenchere v. Reifess, 62 Mo. App. 50; but an attorney may be summoned as garnishee of his client in some cases; Mann v. Buford, 3 Ala. 312, 37 Am. Dec. 691; Hancock v. Colyer, 99 Mass. 187, 96 Am. Dec. 730; Ayer v. Brown, 77 Me. 195; White v. Bird, 20 La. Ann. 188, 96 Am. Dec. 393; Narramore v. Clark, 63 N. H. 166.

A debt not due may be attached in the hands of the garnishee, but he cannot be required to pay the same until it becomes due; Sayward v. Drew, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 263; Steuart v. West, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 536; Peace v. Jones, 7 N. C. 256; Branch Bank at Mobile v. Poe, 1 Ala. 396; Dunnegan v. Byers, 17 Ark. 492.

Money which by state statute is exempt from attachment as a benefit or insurance, does not remain so after it has reached the beneficiary; Recor v. Bank, 142 Mich. 479, 106 N. W. 82, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472, 7 Ann. Cas. 754; Bull v. Case, 165 N. Y. 578, 59 N. E. 301; Ettenson v. Schwartz, 38 Misc. 669, 78 N. Y. Supp. 231 (after which the statute was changed to cover such cases); Hathorn v. Robinson, 96 Me. 33, 51 Atl. 236; Martin v. Martin, 187 Ill. 200, 58 N. E. 230; contra, Emmert v. Schmidt, 65 Kan. 31, 68 Pac. 1072; Coleman v. McGrew, 71 Neb. 801, 99 N. W. 663; and after the death of the beneficiary it is subject to garnishment for his debts; Meyer v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 72 Mo. App. 350. So it is held that under R. S. § 4747, pension money is exempt only "while in the course of transmission to the pensioner"; McIntosh v. Aubrey, 185 U. S. 122, 22 Sup. Ct. 561, 46 L. Ed. 834; State v. Building Ass'n, 44 N. J. L. 376; Price v. Society for Savings, 64 Conn. 362, 30 Atl. 139, 42 Am. St. Rep. 198; contra, Reiff v. Mack, 160 Pa. 265, 28 Atl. 699, 40 Am. St. Rep. 720; Crow v. Brown, 81 Ia. 344, 46 N. W. 993, 11 L. R. A. 110, 25 Am. St. Rep. 501 (overruling previous decisions); Bullard v. Goodno, 73 Vt. 88, 50 Atl. 544; and the exemption has been extended to cover the fund when changed in form or invested; Holmes v. Tallada, 125 Pa. 133, 17 Atl. 238, 3 L. R. A. 219, 11 Am. St. Rep. 880; Falkenburg v. Johnson, 102 Ky. 543, 44 S. W. 80, 80 Am. St. Rep. 369; Hissem v. Johnson, 27 W. Va. 644, 55 Am. Rep. 327. See 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472 note.

In most of the states, the garnishee responds to the proceedings against him by a sworn answer to interrogatories propounded to him; which in some states is held to be conclusive as to his liability, but generally may be controverted and disproved, though in the absence of contradictory evidence always taken to be true. In order to charge the garnishee upon his answer alone, there must be in it a clear admission of a debt due to, or the possession of money or other attachable property of, the defendant; Bridges v. North, 22 Ga. 52; Harney v. Ellis, 11

Smedes & M. (Miss.) 348; Davis v. Pawlette, 3 Wis. 300, 62 Am. Dec. 690; Pierce v. Carleton, 12 Ill. 358, 54 Am. Dec. 405; Ellicott v. Smith, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 543, Fed. Cas. No. 4,387; Lomerson v. Huffman, 25 N. J. L. 625; Hunt v. Coon, 9 Ind. 537.

Any rights of the garnishee under existing contracts with the principal debtor, he is entitled to have the benefit of, as against the attaching creditor; North Chicago Rolling Mill Co. v. Steel Co., 152 U. S. 596, 14 Sup. Ct. 710, 38 L. Ed. 565. No judgment can be rendered against a garnishee unless one is obtained against the principal defendant; Merchant v. Howland, 46 Ill. App. 458. It is competent for garnishees to represent in their own defence the rights of a third party to whom they are in law liable; Milwaukee & N. Ry. Co. v. Locomotive Works, 121 U. S. 430, 7 Sup. Ct. 1094, 30 L. Ed. 995. A garnishee has the right to set up any defence against attachment process which he could have done against the debtor in the principal action; Schuler v. Israel, 120 U. S. 506, 7 Sup. Ct. 648, 30 L. Ed. 707. If his debt to the defendant be barred by the statute of limitation, he may take advantage of the statute; Hinkle v. Currin, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 137; Myers v. Baltzell, 37 Pa. 491; McDermott v. Donegan, 44 Mo. 85; Schuler v. Israel, 120 U. S. 506, 7 Sup. Ct. 648, 30 L. Ed. 707; Sauer v. Town of Nevadaville, 14 Colo. 54, 23 Pac. 87. He may set up a failure of consideration; Sheldon v. Simonds, Wright (Ohio) 724; Mathis v. Clark, 2 Mill, Const. (S. C.) 456, 12 Am. Dec. 688; Moser v. Mayberry, 7 Watts (Pa.) 12; and may plead a set-off against the defendant; Swamscot Mach. Co. v. Patridge, 25 N. H. 369; Strong v. Mitchell, 19 Vt. 644.

If by a court having jurisdiction a judgment be rendered against a garnishee, and he satisfy the same under execution, it is a full defence to an action by the defendant against him for the property or debt in respect of which he was charged as garnishee; though the judgment may have been irregular, and reversible on error; Atcheson v. Smith, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 502; Lomerson v. Hoffman, 24 N. J. L. 674; Houston v. Walcott, 1 Ia. 86; Foster v. Walker, 2 Ala. 180; Spring v. Ayer, 23 Vt. 516; Riddle v. Etting 32 Pa. 412.

An attachment plaintiff may be sued for a malicious attachment; the action will be governed by the principles of the common law applicable to actions for malicious prosecution; Jerman v. Stewart, 12 Fed. 266; Young v. Gregory, 3 Call (Va.) 446, 2 Am. Dec. 556; Lindsay v. Larned, 17 Mass. 190; McCullough v. Grishobber, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 201; Tomlinson v. Warner, 9 Ohio 103; Smith v. Story, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 169; Wiley v. Traiwick, 14 Tex. 662; McKellar v. Couch, 34 Ala. 336; Noonan v. Orton, 30 Wis. 356.

Where a law authorizing garnishment under which proceedings were commenced, was repealed, without a saving clause, pending proceedings were thereby quashed; Wooding v. Bonk, 11 Wash. 527, 40 Pac. 223.

GARNISTURA. In Old English Law. Garniture; whatever is necessary for the fortification of a city or camp, or for the ornament of a thing. 8 Rymer 328; Du Cange; Cowell; Blount. See GARNESTURA.

GARROTE. A mode of capital punishment practised in Spain and Portugal formerly by a simple strangulation. The victim, usually in a sitting posture, is fastened by an iron collar to an upright post, and a knob, operated by a screw or lever, dislocates the spinal column, or a small blade severs the spinal cord at the base of the brain. Cent. Dict.; Encyc. Dict.

GARSUMMUNE. In Old English Law. An amercement or fine. Cowell. See GRESSUME; GERSOMA; GERSUMA.

GARTH. In English Law. A yard; a homestead in the north of England. Cowell. A dam or wear. Id.

GAS. An aeriform fluid, used for illuminating purposes and for fuel.

From a legal point of view it is to be considered with respect to the companies by which it is usually furnished, their status and obligations as affected by the nature of the business; and also whether the gas furnished by them is manufactured or natural.

Nature of the business. The business is not an ordinary one in which any person may engage as of common right, but a franchise of a public nature which, in the absence of constitutional restriction, may be granted by the legislature; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Light Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516; Louisville Gas Co. v. Gaslight Co., 115 U. S. 683, 6 Sup. Ct. 265, 29 L. Ed. 510; Grand Rapids E. L. & P. Co. v. Gas Co., 33 Fed. 659; City of Newport v. Light Co., 84 Ky. 166. A grant of the right to lay pipes is valid, but it is a franchise to be strictly construed, and is void if the conditions are not complied with; City of Newport v. Light Co., 84 Ky. 166. Such a company cannot sell, lease, or assign its corporate privileges without consent of the legislature; Brunswick Gaslight Co. v. Light Co., 85 Me. 532, 27 Atl. 525, 35 Am. St. Rep. 385.

They are not, however, always treated as strictly public corporations, but in some cases such a company is said to be simply "a private manufacturing corporation which furnishes gas to individuals as agreed. This of itself does not make it a public corporation;" In re New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Gaslight Co., 63 N. Y. 326. A company furnishing gas to a municipality under contract is not performing such public service as to exempt it from ordinary taxation; New-Light Co. v. City of Newport (Ky.) 20 S. W. 484.

A gas company having power to manufacture and sell gas has an implied power to make all contracts necessary to that end; St. Louis Gaslight Co. v. St. Louis, 86 Mo. 495.

Natural Gas. The gas obtained from wells in coal and oil regions, and used for lighting and heating. In nature and character, such gas has been termed "a mineral with peculiar attributes which require the application of precedents arising out of ordinary mineral rights, with more careful consideration of the principles involved than of the mere decisions. . . . Water and oil, and still more strongly, gas, may be classed by themselves, if the analogy be not too fanciful, as minerals ferœ naturœ. In common with animals, and unlike other minerals, they have the power and the tendency to escape without the volition of the owner. Their 'fugitive and wandering existence within the limits of a particular tract is uncertain;' (per Agnew, C. J. in Brown v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 147). They belong to the owner of the land, and are part of it, so long as they are on or in it, and are subject to his control; but when they escape, and go into other land, or come under another's control, the title of the former owner is gone. Possession of the land, therefore, is not necessarily possession of the gas. If an adjoining, or even a distant, owner, drills his own land, and taps your gas, so that it comes into his well and under his control, it is no longer yours, but his." Per Mitchell, J., in Westmoreland, etc., N. Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 18 Atl. 724, 5 L. R. A. 731.

Under a lease of land for the sole purpose of drilling and operating for oil and gas, the lessee's right in the surface of the land is in the nature of an easement of entry and examination, with a right of possession where the particular place of operation is selected, and the easement of ingress and egress, transportation and storage; id.

Whether the words "other valuable volatile substance" in a lease when they were used with petroleum, rock, or carbon oil, will include gas is a question for a jury, as the words have no settled meaning; Ford v. Buchanan, 111 Pa. 31, 2 Atl. 339. The words oil and gas in a lease have been held not synonymous; Truby v. Palmer (Pa.) 6 Atl. 74; it is a fuel; Citizens' Gas & Min. Co. v. Town of Elwood, 114 Ind. 338, 16 N. E. 624; but it has been held that a company incorporated for supplying heat cannot also furnish natural gas; Emerson v. Com., 108 Pa. 126.

Natural gas is as much an article of commerce as any other product of the earth; State v. Oil, Gas & Min. Co., 120 Ind. 575, 22 N. E. 778, 6 L. R. A. 579; West v. Gas Co., 221 U. S. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. 564, 55 L. Ed. 716, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193. A state statute prohibiting the waste of natural gas and oil is not unconstitutional as depriving the owner of his property without due process of law; Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana, 177 U. S. 190, 20 Sup. Ct. 576, 44 L. Ed. 729, affirming Ohio Oil Co. v. State, 150 Ind. 698, 50 N. E. 1125. See LAND.

The business of transporting and furnishing natural gas is a public use, and the right of eminent domain may be constitutionally granted to companies engaged in it; 5 Cent. Rep. (Pa.) 564; the business is transportation of freight; Carothers v. Philadelphia Co., 118 Pa. 468, 12 Atl. 314. Because of the public nature of the business taxation may be authorized for supplying it to municipal corporations; Fellows v. Walker, 39 Fed. 651; and any unreasonable restraint upon the business is against public policy; People v. Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268, 22 N. E. 798, 8 L. R. A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319. It was held that under the Pennsylvania general incorporation act of 1874, under which companies for the manufacture and supply of gas were formed, natural gas companies could not be incorporated; Emerson v. Com., 108 Pa. 111; Sterling's Appeal, 111 Pa. 35, 2 Atl. 105, 56 Am. Rep. 246. Consequently a general law was passed providing for such companies under which, when lawfully incorporated, they may exercise the right of eminent domain, and the grant of the power is constitutional; State v. Oil, Gas & Min. Co., 120 Ind. 581, 22 N. E. 778, 6 L. R. A. 579; Bloomfield & R. Natural Gas Light Co. v. Richardson, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 437; McDevitt v. Gas Co., 160 Pa. 367, 28 Atl. 948; and the use of city streets for that purpose imposes no additional servitude; id. In Pennsylvania, the courts of common pleas may hear and determine controversies between natural gas companies and municipalities as to the manner of laying their pipes; Appeal of City of Pittsburgh, 115 Pa. 4, 7 Atl. 778.

A right to take natural gas from land under the Pennsylvania act of Apr. 7, 1870, P. L. 58, is not land held in fee, subject to be sold under a special fi. fa against an insolvent corporation; Greensburg Fuel Co. v. Gas Co., 162 Pa. 78, 29 Atl. 274. The lessee for oil and gas, having drilled a well and tapped the gas-bearing strata (the only one in the land), has both the possession of the gas and the right to it, and the owner will be enjoined from drilling; Westmoreland N. Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 18 Atl. 724, 5 L. R. A. 731. A lessee for oil only who took from the well both oil and gas was held not accountable to the lessor for the gas, which is, like air and water, the subject only of qualified property by occupancy; Wood County Petroleum Co. v. Transportation Co., 28 W. Va. 210, 57 Am. Rep. 659. From the nature of the gas, a lease of well-rights is necessarily exclusive so far as concerns the leased premises themselves; id.; Westmoreland Nat. Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 18 Atl. 724, 5 L. R. A. 731. A person who has a natural gas well on his premises has the right to explode nitro-glycerine therein for the purpose of increasing the flow, although such explosion may have the effect to draw gas from the land of another; Greenfield Gas Co. v. Gas Co., 131 Ind. 599, 31 N. E. 61. An act prohibiting the transportation of natural gas in pipes to points outside a state is invalid as interfering with inter-state commerce; West v. Gas Co., 221 U. S. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. 564, 55 L. Ed. 716, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193.

The rights and liabilities of gas companies are, in the main, the same, whether they are engaged in the business of supplying artificial or natural gas.

Municipal lighting. The business is usually carried on by companies acting either under a legislative or municipal franchise or contract, or directly by the municipality under express legislative authority or implied power.

As to the implied power of a municipality to light its streets, etc., see ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANIES.

A municipal corporation having power to light its own streets, and erect and maintain gas works has implied power to contract with others to do so; City of Newport v. Light Co., 84 Ky. 166. A municipal council exceeds its power, in granting an exclusive privilege; Cincinnati Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Avondale, 43 Ohio St. 257, 1 N. E. 527; at least, without legislative authority; 3 Cent. Rep. (Pa.) 921. The authority to lay mains and pipes in streets and provide gas does not give an exclusive right to the use of the streets for that purpose; Hamilton Gaslight & Coke Co. v. City of Hamilton, 21 Ohio L. J. 94.

A city engaged in making and selling gas is quoad hoc a private corporation, not legislating but making contracts which bind it as a natural person, and cannot be impaired by the legislature; Western Sav. Fund Society of Philadelphia v. City of Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 175, 72 Am. Dec. 730.

The grant of an exclusive privilege is a contract none the less because the business requires supervision by public authority, and such grant does not restrict the power of regulation by the state; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Light Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516. A grant by a city, under legislative authority, of an exclusive privilege for a term of years of supplying the city with gas, does not prevent the city from erecting its own gas works under a state law giving it power to do so; Hamilton Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 258, 13 Sup. Ct. 90, 36 L. Ed. 963; the grant of an exclusive privilege with an option to the city to buy the plant does not bind the city to maintain it when the sale of the plant is refused, but the city must elect whether it will purchase at the price fixed by referees before they are chosen, and until the city does so agree it is not a breach of contract for the company to refuse to join in selecting referees; Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. City Council, 87 Ala. 245, 6 South. 113, 4 L. R. A. 616. Under a grant for a term of years of the exclusive privilege for this purpose, the right to use the streets for light other than gas is not implied and must be authorized; City of Newport v. Light Co., 89 Ky. 454, 12 S. W. 1040, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 840. In this case it was held that the city had power to contract with another person for electric lighting, and pay for both gas and electricity, but it could not dispense with the gas company's gas without liability for breach of contract. When an exclusive privilege of lighting the city and using the streets was given by the city to one company for a term of years, in consideration of low rates to citizens, it did not estop the municipal corporation from subscribing to the stock of a new gas company seeking to introduce gas; Memphis v. Dean, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 64, 19 L. Ed. 326. As to municipal authority to light streets, see Opinion of Justices, 150 Mass. 592, 24 N. E. 1084, 8 L. R. A. 487, note; ELECTRIC LIGHT.

The use of highways. The right to lay gas pipes in public highways can in general be granted only by the legislature. Such is the established rule both in England and in this country; 16 Q. B. 1012; 2 El. & El. 650; Jersey City Gas Co. v. Dwight, 29 N. J. Eq. 242; State v. Coke Co., 18 Ohio St. 262. In a city it may be granted by the municipal or local authorities when empowered by the legislature to do so; Norwich Gaslight Co. v. Gas Co., 25 Conn. 19; People v. Bowen, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 24; in Massachusetts it was said to be not clear whether the city could act without authority from the state; per Gray, J., in City of Boston v. Richardson, 13 Allen (Mass.) 160; but in Michigan it was held to be essentially a matter of local control; People v. Gaslight Co., 38 Mich. 154. The city may forbid opening the streets within certain periods as a regulation, but a prohibition of digging up the street to introduce gas on the opposite side of it is an unreasonable exercise of authority; Com'rs of Northern Liberties v. Gas Co., 12 Pa. 318. In rural highways the laying of gas pipes is held to impose a new servitude not contemplated in the condemnation; Bloomfield & R. Natural Gas Light Co. v. Calkins, 62 N. Y. 386; Mills, Em. Dom. § 55; McDevitt v. Gas Co., 160 Pa. 367, 28 Atl. 948; but in city streets it does not; id. See 12 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 334; EMINENT DOMAIN; HIGHWAY; STREET.

Obligation to supply gas. The difference of opinion as to the public character of gas companies necessarily results in contradictory decisions as to whether the companies are under a public duty to supply gas on request. They are usually held to be subject to the duty of furnishing gas upon reasonable terms to any one who applies for it, especially if the franchise is exclusive; Gaslight Co. of Baltimore v. Colliday, 25 Md. 1; Shepard v. Gaslight Co., 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479; and the rule also applies where it is not; Williams v. Gas Co., 52 Mich. 499, 18 N. W. 236, 50 Am. Rep. 266; companies may be compelled to do so by mandamus; People v. Gaslight Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 136. On the other hand it has been held that they are under no public duty to supply gas; McCune v. Gas Co., 30 Conn. 521, 79 Am. Dec. 278; 20 U. C. Q. B. 233; Com. v. Gaslight Co., 12 Allen (Mass.) 75; L. R. 15 Eq. 157; Paterson Gaslight Co. v. Brady, 27 N. J. L. 245, 72 Am. Dec. 360. The last case was put solely on the lack of precedent and is practically overruled; Dayton v. Quigley, 29 N. J. Eq. 77. See Portland Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. State, 34 N. E. 818.

The right to regulate rates has been applied to gas works; Zanesville v. Gaslight Co., 47 Ohio St. 1, 23 N. E. 55. But the right is not arbitrary, even where given to a municipality by the legislature; the right to charge reasonable rates is part of the contract of the company with the state, and this reasonableness is a matter for judicial determination; Capital City Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 72 Fed. 818. See RATES.

A gas company need not leave a gas meter in the house of a citizen who is using electric light, furnished by another company, so that in case of accident to the electric light he may use the gas; Fleming v. Light Co., 100 Ala. 657, 13 South. 618.

Rules and Regulations. In the conduct of their business such companies may make and enforce rules and regulations if fair and reasonable. Regulations have been held to be reasonable, requiring a deposit; Shepard v. Gaslight Co., 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479; Williams v. Gas Co., 52 Mich. 499, 18 N. W. 236, 50 Am. Rep. 266; and that a written application should be signed; Shepherd v. Gaslight Co., 11 Wis. 234; but such an application cannot be made to embrace an agreement to be bound by illegal rules and regulations; Shepherd v. Gaslight Co., 15 Wis. 318, 82 Am. Dec. 679. Regulations may be enforced respecting the care and treatment of meters; Foster v. Gas Works, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 511; but it has been held that visits must be made at stated times and with notice; Shepard v. Gaslight Co., 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479. Regulations held unreasonable or oppressive, and therefore non-enforcible, are that after the admission of gas the pipes may not be opened without a permit under penalty of treble damage; id.; that meters be placed upon main pipes of apartment buildings instead of smaller pipes of individual occupants; Young v. City of Boston, 104 Mass. 95; that rents should be payable half yearly in advance with penalty twenty days after default enforcible by cutting off the attachment until payment of the arrears and additional half year in advance; Dayton v. Quigley, 29 N. J. Eq. 77.

The right to cut off the supply. The company or the municipality has, as a general rule, the right to cut off the supply of gas if the bill for supplying it is not paid within a limited period. Such a provision by ordinance is a reasonable regulation; Com. v. Philadelphia, 132 Pa. 288, 19 Atl. 136; and furnishing gas without objection on account of former indebtedness is not a waiver of the right to shut off the gas for such prior indebtedness; People v. Gaslight Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 136; but the right has been held not to extend to indebtedness of a former occupant of the premises; Morey v. Gaslight Co., 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 185; L. R. 4 C. P. D. 410; Cox v. Gaslight Co., 199 Mass. 324, 85 N. E. 180, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1235, 127 Am. St. Rep. 503. Even when the company has the right by statute to cut off the supply for nonpayment of regular charges it does not extend to charges for special service: 20 U. C. Q. B. 233; nor can the supply be cut off from one house for non-payment for another supplied under a different contract; Gaslight Co. of Baltimore v. Colliday, 25 Md. 1; 7 Grant, U. C. 112; and even when the contract authorizes refusal to continue a supply in case of default in payment for "any premises" of the owner it will apply only to future defaults; Lloyd v. Gaslight Co., 1 Mackey (D. C.) 331. Whenever there is a controversy as to the indebtedness the consumer may have an injunction; Sickles v. Gaslight Co., 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 314; contra, Cox v. Gaslight Co., 199 Mass. 324, 85 N. E. 180, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1235, 127 Am. St. Rep. 503, where the remedy was held to be by mandamus. As to the measure of damages see that title. See also WATER.

Liability for negligence. Gas companies and others using or generating gas, artificial or natural, are subject to the general principle that one who uses a force which he cannot control is liable for the consequences, and where it may be controlled by due care and scientific knowledge and appliances he who receives the profit must bear the responsibility; 3 C. B. 1; they are liable for negligence which must involve the omission of something required by, or the doing of something forbidden by, reasonable care; Hutchinson v. Gaslight Co., 122 Mass. 219; 2 Fost. & F. 437; what is such care is not capable of exact definition but must vary with and conform to the exigencies of the situation; Holly v. Gaslight Co., 8 Gray (Mass.) 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233; Smith v. Gaslight Co., 129 Mass. 318; the obligation is increased by the dangerous character of the force under control; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co., 152 Pa. 355, 25 Atl. 522, 18 L. R. A. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653; Butcher v. Gas Co., 12 R. I. 149, 34 Am. Rep. 626; Fuchs v. City of St. Louis, 133 Mo. 168, 31 S. W. 115, 34 S. W. 508, 34 L. R. A. 118; and it extends to the company's agents and servants; Louisville Gas Co. v. Gutenkuntz, 82 Ky. 432; Butcher

v. Gas Co., 12 R. I. 149, 34 Am. Rep. 626. The company is liable for such consequences as were natural and probable and, in view of the nature of the agency, ought to have been foreseen; Oil City Gas Co. v. Robinson, 99 Pa. 1; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co., 152 Pa. 355, 25 Atl. 522, 18 L. R. A. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653; Hunt v. Gaslight Co., 8 Allen (Mass.) 169, 85 Am. Dec. 697; Emerson v. Gaslight Co., 3 Allen (Mass.) 410. See CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA; Taylor v. Baldwin, 78 Cal. 517, 21 Pac. 124; Lannen v. Gaslight Co., 44 N. Y. 459.

Where the municipality is held liable in damages for an injury resulting from the negligence of a gas company in failing to keep in repair its apparatus located under the sidewalk, the company is liable over to the municipality; Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 16 Sup. Ct. 564, 40 L. Ed. 712.

The company is bound to exercise reasonable care in the location, structure, and repair of its pipes to prevent escape of gas so as to become dangerous to life or property; L. R. 7 Exch. 96; Smith v. Light Co., 129 Mass. 318; Mississinewa Mining Co. v. Patton, 129 Ind. 472, 28 N. E. 1113, 28 Am. St. Rep. 203; whether by reason of explosion or inhalation; Schmeer v. Gas Co., 65 Hun 378, 20 N. Y. Supp. 168; it must also provide with the like care for the inspection of pipes and repairing leaks; Pine Bluff Water & Light Co. v. Schneider, 62 Ark. 109, 34 S. W. 547, 33 L. R. A. 366; 4 Fost. & F. 324; and the discovery of such leaks; Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore City v. Crocker, 82 Md. 113, 33 Atl. 423, 31 L. R. A. 785; Lewis v. Boston Gas Co., 165 Mass. 411, 43 N. E. 178; Evans v. Gas Co., 148 N. Y. 112, 42 N. E. 513, 30 L. R. A. 651, 51 Am. St. Rep. 681; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co., 152 Pa. 355, 25 Atl. 522, 18 L. R. A. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653; and the safe condition of its apparatus authorized to be placed under the streets; Washington Gaslight Co. v. Dist. of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 16 Sup. Ct. 564, 40 L. Ed. 712. The failure to use such care makes the company jointly liable with one who seeks for the leak with a lighted match, for the results of an explosion; Pine Bluff Water & Light Co. v. McCain, 62 Ark. 118, 34 S. W. 549. The mere fact that the gas was exploded by a lighted match will not relieve the company whose negligence caused the leak; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co., 152 Pa. 355, 25 Atl. 522, 18 L. R. A. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653. It is not contributory negligence to search for a gas leak with a lighted match; Pine Bluff Water & Light Co. v. Schneider, 62 Ark. 109, 34 S. W. 547, 33 L. R. A. 366; or a candle; Schmeer v. Gas Co., 147 N. Y. 529, 42 N. E. 202, 30 L. R. A. 653. A city as a manufacturer and distributor of gas is liable for negligence of its officers, and its agents are bound to the exercise of due care in like manner as those of a private corporation; Kibele v. City of Philadelphia, 105 Pa. 41; but not unless there is negligence; Strawbridge v. City of Philadelphia, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 173.

Where the gas company is authorized by the legislature the public may not recover damages, but it will be liable to a private person; People v. Gaslight Co., 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 55; id., 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 467. A gas company before turning on gas into an apartment house must use reasonable precautions to ascertain that the pipes in the building are in such condition that it will not flow out into the apartments of tenants, who have not applied for it, to their injury; per Peckham, J., in Schmeer v. Gaslight Co., 147 N. Y. 529, 42 N. E. 202, 30 L. R. A. 653. For an elaborate note on the liability for negligence in the escape and explosion of gas, see Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. Andrews, 50 Ohio St. 695, 35 N. E. 1059, 29 L. R. A. 337; 16 Alb. L. J. 466. See also NEGLIGENCE. As to gas as a nuisance, see that title.

Remedies. An injunction will be granted to restrain a company from improperly cutting off the supply on the ground of irreparable injury; Sickles v. Gaslight Co., 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 33; L. R. 28 Ch. D. 138; a private owner cannot ask for an injunction against acts of companies in laying pipes until a request to the municipal authorities to do it and their refusal; Kenney v. Gas Co., 142 Mass. 417, 8 N. E. 138; and one company will not be restrained at suit of another; Jersey City Gaslight Co. v. Gas Co., 40 N. J. Eq. 427, 2 Atl. 922. When the gas becomes a nuisance by defective pipes, the municipality may abate it and will not be restrained, but when it is not a nuisance a bill for injunction will not be sustained at suit of the municipality; 5 Cent. Rep. (Pa.) 669.

Mandamus. Will lie to compel a supply of gas either artificial; People v. Gaslight Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 137; or natural; Portland Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. State, 135 Ind. 54, 34 N. E. 818, 21 L. R. A. 639.

A claim that gas is of poor quality is no defence to an action for the supply of it; 32 Gas J. 5; but it may be shown that the gas was put out by air passing through the tubes, the contract being to pay for gas only, and the meter not being conclusive; Healey v. Bauer, 65 Hun 621, 19 N. Y. Supp. 988. An action will not lie against a gas company by a consumer for the failure of the company to give him a supply of gas of the amount and purity required by law; [1896] 1 Q. B. 592.

Connecting a rubber pipe with gas mains and taking off the gas therefrom is larceny; 1 Cr. Cas. Res. 172; Woods v. People, 222 Ill. 293, 78 N. E. 607, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520, 113 Am. St. Rep. 415, 6 Ann. Cas. 736.

As to pipes in the ground, whether real or personal, see 12 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 334; and as to gas fixtures, see FIXTURES.

GASTALDERS. A temporary governor of the country. Blount. A steward or bailiff. Spel. Gloss.

GASTEL (L. Fr.). Wastel; wastelbread; the finest kind of wheat bread. Britt. c. 30; Kelham.

GASTINE (L. Fr.). Waste or uncultivated ground. Britt. c. 57.

GATE (Sax. geat), at the end of names of places, signifies way or path. Cunningham, Law Dict.

In the words beast-gate and cattle-gate, it means a right of pasture: these rights are local to Suffolk and Yorkshire respectively; they are considered as corporeal hereditaments, for which ejectment will lie; 2 Stra. 1084, 1 Term 137; and are entirely distinct from right of common. The right is sometimes connected with the duty of repairing the gates of the pasture: and perhaps the name comes from this.

GAUGER. An officer appointed to examine all tuns, pipes, hogsheads, barrels, and tierces of wine, oil, and other liquids, and to give them a mark of allowance, as containing lawful measure.

GAUGETUM. A guage or guaging; a measure of the contents of any vessel. Cowell.

GAVEL. In Old English Law. Tribute; toll; custom; yearly revenue, of which there were formerly various kinds. Jacob, Law Dict.; Taylor, Hist. Gavelkind, 26, 102. See GABEL.

GAVELBRED. In English Law. Rent reserved in bread, corn, or provision; rent payable in kind. Cowell.

GAVELET. An obsolete writ, a kind of cessavit (q. v.), used in Kent. Cowell.

A custom in Kent which practically amounted to a forfeiture of land held in gavelkind. Hazeltine, 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 661.

GAVELGELD (Sax. gavel, rent, geld, payment). That which yields annual profit or toll. The tribute or toll itself. 3 Mon. Angl. 155; Cowell; Du Cange, Gavelgida.

GAVELHERTE. A customary service of ploughing. Du Cange.

GAVELKIND (Gafolcund; Gaful-gecynd. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc.). The tenure by which almost all lands in England were held prior to the Conquest, and which is still preserved in Kent.

All the sons of a tenant of gavelkind lands take equally, or their heirs male and female by representation. The wife of such tenant is dowable of one-half the lands. The husband of such tenant has curtesy, whether issue be born or not, but only of one-half while without issue. Such lands do not escheat, except for treason or want of heirs. The heir of such lands may sell at fifteen years old, but must himself give livery. The rule as to division among brothers in default of sons is the same as among the sons. Digb. R. P. 46. The youngest son took the hearth. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. 92.

Coke derives gavelkind from "gave all kinde;" for this custom gave to all the sons alike; 1 Co. Litt. 140 a; Lambard, from gavel, rent,—that is, land of the kind that pays rent or customary husbandry work, in distinction from lands held by knight service. Perambulations of Kent, 1656, p. 585.

There have been many suggested derivations of gavelkind. The true derivation connects it with the old English gafol, or gavel, which means rent or customary performance of agricultural services. The tenant was called gavelman, and gavelkind, a compound of gavel and gekynde (kind, quality), meant land of the kind which yielded rent, as distinguished from knight service land held by free military tenure. No doubt in earlier days it denoted land held by this particular tenure, but later it came to be used as the name for the custom by which lands in Kent are, in the absence of proof to the contrary, presumed to be affected, and sometimes in later law to express the fact that lands, in Kent or elsewhere, were divided between male heirs on the death of the ancestor. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 224. See Robinson, Gavelkind.

See Encyc. Brit.; Blount; 1 Bla. Com. 74; 2 id. 84; 4 id. 408; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 165; 2 id. 269, 416.

GAVELLER. An officer of the English crown, who had the management of the mines and quarries in the Forest of Dean and Hundred of St. Briavels, subject, in some respects, to the control of commissioners of woods and forests. He granted gales to free miners in their proper order, accepted surrenders of gales, and kept the registers required by the acts. There was a deputy-gaveller who appears to have exercised most of the gaveller's functions. Sweet.

GAVELMAN. A tenant who is liable to tribute. Somner, Gavelkind, p. 33; Blount. Gavelingmen were tenants who paid a reserved rent, besides customary service. Cowell.

GAVELMED. A customary service of mowing meadow-land or cutting grass (consuetudo falcandi). Somner, Gavelkind, App.; Blount.

GAVELREP. In Old English Law. Bedreap or bidreap; the duty of reaping at the bid or command of the lord. Somner, Gavelkind 19, 21; Cowell.

GAVELSESTER. A certain measure of rent-ale. Cowell.

GAVELWERK (called also Gavelweek). A customary service, either manuopera, by the person of the tenant, or carropera, by his carts or carriages. Phillips, Purveyance; Somner, Gavelkind 24; Du Cange.

GAZETTE. The official publication of the British government, also called the London Gazette. It is evidence of acts of state, and of everything done by the crown in a political capacity. Orders of adjudication in bankruptcy are required to be published therein, and a copy of the Gazette containing such publication is conclusive evidence of the fact, and of the date thereof. Moz. & W.

GEARY ACT. See CHINESE.

GEBOCIAN (from Sax. boc). To convey boc land,—the grantor being said to gebocian the grantee of the land; 1 Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law 21.

See Du Cange, Liber; BOCLAND; FOLCLAND.

GEBUR (Sax.). A boor. His services varied in different places—to work for his lord two or more days a week; to pay gafols in money, barley, etc.; to pay hearth money, etc. He was a tenant with a house and a yard land or virgate or two oxen. Maitl. Domesday and Beyond 37.

GEBURSCIR. Neighborhood or adjoining district. Cowell.

GEBURUS. In Old English Law. A country neighbor; an inhabitant of the same gaburscript, or village. Cowell.

GELD (from Sax. gildan; Law Lat. geldum). A payment, tax, tribute. Laws of Hen. I. c. 2; Charta Edredi Regis apud Ingulfum, c. 81; Mon. Ang. t. 1, pp. 52, 211, 379; t. 2, p. 161; Du Cange; Blount.

A land tax of so much per hide or carucate. Maitl. Domesday Book 120.

The compensation for a crime.

We find geld added to the word denoting the offence, or the thing injured or destroyed, and the compound taking the meaning of compensation for that offence or the value of that thing. Capitulare 3, anno 813, cc. 23, 25; Carl Magn. So, wergeld, the compensation for killing a man, or his value; orfgeld the value of cattle; angeld, the value of a single thing; octogeld, the value eight times over, etc. Du Cange, Geldum.

GELDABILIS. In Old English Law. Taxable.

GELDABLE. Liable to be taxed. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 552; Kelham.

GEMOT (gemote, or mote; Sax., from gemeltand, to meet or assemble; L. Lat. gemotum). An assembly; a mote or moot, meeting or public assembly.

There were various kinds: as, the witenagemot, or meeting of the wise men; the folcgemot, or folc-moot, the general assembly of the people; the shire-gemot or shiremoot or county court; the burghmoot, or borough court; the hundred-moot, or hundred court; the hali-gemot, or court-baron; the halimote, a convention of citizens in their public hall; the holy-mote, or holy court; the swanimote, or forest court; the ward-mote, or ward court; Cunningham, Law Dict. And see the several titles.

GENEALOGY. The summary history or table of a family, showing how the persons there named are connected together.

It is founded on the idea of a lineage or family. Persons descended from the common father constitute a family. Under the idea of degrees is noted the nearness or remoteness of relationship in which one person stands with respect to another. A series of several persons, descended from a common progenitor, is called a line. Children stand to each other in the relation either of full blood or half-blood, according as they are descended from the same parents or have only one parent in common. For illustrating descent and relationship, genealogical tables are constructed, the order of which depends on the end in view. In tables the object of which is to show all the individuals embraced in a family, it is usual to begin with the oldest progenitor, and to put all the persons of the male and female sex in descending, and then in collateral, lines. Other tables exhibit the ancestors of a particular person in ascending lines both on the father's and the mother's side. In this way four, eight, sixteen, thirty-two, etc., ancestors are exhibited, doubling at every degree. Some tables are constructed in the form of a tree, after the model of canonical law (arbor consanguinitatis), with the progenitor beneath, for the root or stem. See CONSANGUINITY.

GENEARCH. The head of the family.

GENEATH. In Saxon Law. A villein, or agricultural tenant (villanus villicus); a hind, or farmer (fimarius rusticus). Spel. Gloss.

GENER (Lat.). A son-in-law.

GENERAL APPEARANCE. See APPEARANCE.

GENERAL APPRAISERS, COURT OF. See COURT OF APPRAISERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY. A name given in some of the states to the senate and house of representatives, which compose the legislative body.

GENERAL ASSIGNMENT. An assignment of all one's property for the benefit of his creditors; it necessarily includes an assignee who shall by the terms of the instrument, or as an inference from those terms, take as a trustee for the creditors. Tompkins v. Bank, 18 N. Y. Supp. 234. See ASSIGNMENT.

GENERAL AVERAGE. A loss arising out of extraordinary sacrifices made, or extraordinary expenses incurred, for the joint benefit of a ship and cargo. Louisville Underwriters v. Pence, 93 Ky. 96, 19 S. W. 10, 40 Am. St. Rep. 176.

A general average clause in a bill of lading, that if the shipowner shall have exercised due diligence to make his ship seaworthy and properly manned, etc. (see Harter Act), the cargo shall contribute in general average with the shipowner, even if the loss result from negligence in navigation, is valid. Under the same circumstances, the cargo owners are entitled to contribution from the shipowner for sacrifices of cargo for the common benefit of ship, cargo and freight subsequent to stranding; The Jason, 225 U. S. 32, 32 Sup. Ct. 560, 56 L. Ed. 969.

The essence is that extraordinary sacrifices made and expenses incurred for the common benefit are to be borne proportionately by all interested; The Jason, 225 U. S. 32, 32 Sup. Ct. 560, 56 L. Ed. 969. The Irrawaddy, 171 U. S. 187, 18 Sup. Ct. 831, 43 L. Ed. 130, goes no further than to decide that while the Harter Act relieved the shipowner from liability for his servant's negligence, it did not of its own force entitle him to share in a general average rendered necessary by such negligence; The Jason, 225 U. S. 54, 32 Sup. Ct. 560, 56 L. Ed. 969.

See AVERAGE; HARTER ACT.

GENERAL BOARD OF THE NAVY. It consists of the Admiral of the Navy, the Aids for Operations and for Material, the Chief Intelligence Officer, the President of the War College, and such additional officers as the Secretary of the Navy may designate. It was established under General Order March 13, 1900. It is a general advisory board to the Secretary of the Navy as to the preparation, maintenance and distribution of the fleet, plans of campaign, number and types of vessels, etc., number and ranks of officers and number and ratings of enlisted men, etc.

GENERAL CHALLENGE. A challenge for cause to a particular juror, upon a ground which disqualifies him from serving in any case. Cal. Pen. Code § 1071.

GENERAL CHARACTER. The general character is the estimation in which a person is held in the community where he has resided, and, ordinarily, the members of that community are the only proper witnesses to testify as to such character. Accordingly a witness who goes to the place of the former residence of a party to learn his character will not be allowed to testify as to the result of his inquiries. Douglass v. Tousey, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 354, 20 Am. Dec. 616. See CHARACTER.

GENERAL CHARGE. The charge or instruction of the court to the jury upon the case, as a whole, or upon its general features and characteristics. See CHARGE.

GENERAL CIRCULATION. That of a general newspaper only, as distinguished from one of a special or limited character; 1 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 114.

GENERAL COUNCIL. A council of bishops, of the Roman Catholic Church, from different parts of the world.

A name sometimes applied to the British parliament.

GENERAL COURT. The Massachusetts legislature is so called.

GENERAL CREDIT. The character of a witness as one generally worthy of credit. There is a disfinction between this and particular credit, which may be affected by proof of particular facts relating to the particular action; Bemis v. Kyle, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 232.

GENERAL CUSTOM. See CUSTOM.

GENERAL DAMAGES. See DAMAGES.

GENERAL DEMURRER. See DEMURRER.

GENERAL DENIAL. See DENIAL; PLEA; TRAVERSE.

GENERAL DEPOSIT. As to money in a bank, it means one to be returned to the depositor in a like sum, but not the same money which was deposited. Mutual Accident Ass'n of the Northwest v Jacobs, 43 Ill. App. 340; Talladega Ins. Co. v. Landers, 43 Ala. 138. See DEPOSIT; SPECIAL DEPOSIT.

GENERAL ELECTION. An election of officers of the general government, either federal or state, as distinguished from an election of local officers.

One held to choose an officer after the expiration of the full term of the former officer, as distinguished from one held to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the full term for which the incumbent was elected. Kenfield v. Irwin, 52 Cal. 164.

GENERAL FUND. A phrase used in some states as a collective designation of all the assets of the state available for the support of the state government and for defraying the ordinary appropriations of the legislature. It is so used in New York; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 575, 588; and also in Delaware in the messages of the governor and other state papers to distinguish such funds as are available in the hands of the state treasurer for general purposes from assets of a special character, such as the school fund.

GENERAL GAOL DELIVERY. In English Law. One of the four commissions issued to judges holding the assizes, which empowers them to try and deliverance make of every prisoner who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whether an indictment has been preferred at any previous assize or not.

It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol delivery for each prisoner, which were called writs de bono et malo; but, these being found inconvenient and oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoners has long been established in their stead. 4 Steph. Com. 333; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 14, 28.

Under this authority it was necessary that the gaol be cleared and delivered of all prisoners in it, whenever or before whomever indicted or for whatever crime. Such deliverance took place when the person is either acquitted, convicted, or sentenced to punishment. Bract. 110. See COURTS OF OYER AND TERMINER AND GENERAL GAOL DELIVERY; GAOL DELIVERY; ASSIZE.

GENERAL IMPARLANCE. In Pleading. One granted upon a prayer in which the defendant reserves to himself no exceptions.

GENERAL ISSUE. In Pleading. A plea which denies or traverses at once the whole indictment or declaration, without offering any special matter to evade it.

It is called the general issue because, by importing an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the indictment or declaration, it amounts at once to an issue. 2 Bla. Com. 305. In the early manner of pleading, the general issue was seldom used except where the party meant wholly to deny the charges alleged against him. When he intended to excuse or palliate the charge, a special plea was used to set forth the particular facts. See 2 Poll. & Maitl. 617. But now, since special pleading is generally abolished, the same result is secured by requiring the defendant to file notice of special matters of defence which he intends to set up at the trial, or obliging him to use a form of answer adapted to the plaintiff's declaration, the method varying in different systems of pleading. Under the English Judicature Acts, the general issue is no longer admissible in ordinary civil actions, except where expressly sanctioned by statute.

In criminal cases the general issue is, not guilty. In civil cases the general issues are almost as various as the forms of action: in assumpsit, the general issue is non assumpsit; in debt, nil debet; in detinue, non detinet; in trespass, non culpabilis (not guilty); in replevin, non cepit, etc. Steph. Pl. 232.

GENERAL LAND-OFFICE. A bureau in the United States government which has the charge of matters relating to the public lands.

It was established by the act of April 25, 1812. It was reorganized by act of July 4, 1836. It was originally a bureau of the treasury department, but was transferred in 1859 to the department of the interior. The statutes on the subject are comprised in U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 446–461. The head of it is the commissioner of the general land-office. He has charge (under the secretary of the interior) of surveying and selling public lands, matters pertaining to private claims of lands, and issuing patents for lands granted by the United States. By act of April 28, 1904, he has all the powers vested formerly in the court of private land claims in the approval of surveys.

GENERAL LAWS. Laws which apply to and operate uniformly upon all members of any class of persons, places, or things, requiring legislation peculiar to themselves in the matters covered by the laws. Binney, Restrictions upon Local and Special Legislation. Quoted in Com. v. State Treasurer, 29 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 578.

Statutes which relate to persons and things as a class. Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 348. Laws that are framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects which, having regard to the purpose of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves. Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. L. 123, 29 Am. Rep. 210.

The later constitutions of many of the states place restrictions upon the legislature as to passing special laws in certain cases. In some states there is a provision that general laws only may be passed, in cases where such can be made applicable. Provisions requiring all laws of a general nature to be uniform in their operation do not prohibit the passage of laws applicable to cities of a certain class having not less than a certain number of inhabitants, although there be but one city in the state of that class; Welker v. Potter, 18 Ohio St. 85; Cooley, Const. Lim. 156. See Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366.

The wisdom of these constitutional provisions has been the subject of grave doubt. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 156, n.

When thus used, the term "general" has a twofold meaning. With reference to the subject-matter of the statute, it is synonymous with "public" and opposed to "private"; Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366; Yellow River Imp. Co. v. Arnold, 46 Wis. 218, 49 N. W. 971; Dwarris, Stat. 629; Sedgw. Stat. L. 30; but with reference to the extent of territory over which it is to operate, it is opposed to "local," and means that the statute to which it applies operates throughout the whole of the territory subject to the legislative jurisdiction; 4 Co. 75 a; 1 Bla. Com. 85; People v. Cooper, 83 Ill. 585; King v. State, 87 Tenn. 304, 10 S. W. 509, 3 L. R. A. 210; Clark v. City of Janesville, 10 Wis. 180. Further, when used in antithesis to "special" it means relating to all of a class instead of to men only of that class; People v. Wright, 70 Ill. 398; Hymes v. Aydelott, 26 Ind. 431; Porter v. Thomson, 22 Ia. 391; Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 348; Sawyer v. Dooley, 21 Nev. 390, 32 Pac. 440.

When the constitution forbids the passing of special or local laws in specified cases, it is within the discretion of the legislature to decide whether a subject not named in the constitution is a proper subject for general legislation; the fact that a special law is passed in relation thereto is evidence that it was thought that a general law would not serve; and in such a case clear evidence of mistake is required to invalidate the enactment; People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 22 Pac. 851, 15 Am. St. Rep. 66; Kelly v. State, 92 Ind. 236; Richman v. Sup'rs Muscatine County, 77 Ia. 513, 42 N. W. 422, 4 L. R. A. 445, 14 Am. St. Rep. 308.

In deciding whether or not a given law is general, the purpose of the act and the objects on which it operates must be looked to. If these objects possess sufficient characteristics peculiar to themselves and the purpose of the legislation is germane thereto, they will be considered as a separate class, and legislation affecting them will be general; Long Branch v. Sloane, 49 N. J. L. 356, 8 Atl. 101; Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Harless, 131 Ind. 446, 29 N. E. 1062, 15 L. R. A. 505; Ripley v. Evans, 87 Mich. 217, 49 N. W. 504; Coal Run Coal Co. v. Finlen, 124 Ill. 666, 17 N. E. 11; Demoville & Co. v. Davidson County, 87 Tenn. 214, 10 S. W. 353; but if the distinctive characteristics of the class have no relation to that purpose of the legislature, or if objects which would appropriately belong to the same class have been excluded, the classification is faulty, and the law not general; Lorentz v. Alexander, 87 Ga. 444, 13 S. E. 632; City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604; City of Topeka v. Gillett, 32 Kan. 431, 4 Pac. 800; Inhabitants of Lodi Tp. v. State, 51 N. J. L. 402, 18 Atl. 749, 6 L. R. A. 56; State v. Boyd, 19 Nev. 43, 5 Pac. 735; Edmonds v. Herbrandson, 2 N. Dak. 270, 50 N. W. 970, 14 L. R. A. 725; Davis v. Clark, 106 Pa. 377. The effect, not the form of the law, determines its character; McAunich v. R. Co., 20 Ia. 338; State v. Tolle, 71 Mo. 645; Dempsey v. Newark, 53 N. J. L. 4, 20 Atl. 886, 10 L. R. A. 700; Marmet v. State, 45 Ohio St. 63, 12 N. E. 463; Commonwealth v. Patton, 88 Pa. 258.

See LEGISLATIVE POWER; STATUTE.

GENERAL OCCUPANT. The man who could first enter upon lands held pur autre vie, after the death of the tenant for life, living the cestui que vie. At common law he held the lands by right for the remainder of the term; but this is now altered by statute, in England, the term going to the executors if not devised; 29 Car. II. c. 3; 14 Geo. II. c. 20; 2 Bla. Com. 258. This has been followed by some states; 1 Md. Code 666, s. 220, art. 93; in some states the term goes to heirs, if undevised; Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 91, § 1.

GENERAL ORDERS. Orders or rules of court, entered for the guidance of practitioners and the general regulation of procedure, or in some branch of its general jurisdiction; as opposed to a rule or an order made in a particular case. The rules of court.

GENERAL OWNER. The general owner of a thing is one who has the primary title to it; as distinguished from a special owner, who has a special interest in the same thing, amounting to a qualified ownership, such, for example, as a bailee lien.

One who has both the right of property and of possession.

GENERAL PARTNERSHIP. See PARTNERSHIP.

GENERAL PROPERTY. The right and property in a thing enjoyed by the general owner (q. v.).

GENERAL RELIEF. In a bill in equity, after praying such relief as is deemed proper, it is usual to add a prayer for general relief. The new supreme court equity rule 25 (33 Sup. Ct. xxv) does not require such prayer.

GENERAL RESTRAINT OF TRADE. A contract which forbids the party to it from engaging in a particular business without limitation either of time or locality. Such contracts are void. 2 Add. Cont., Abb. & Wood ed. 737.

One which forbids the person to employ his talents, industry, or capital in any undertaking within the limits of the state or country. Holbrook v. Waters, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 337. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE; GOOD WILL.

GENERAL RETURN DAY. In any court the day for the return of all process, such as writs of summons, subpœna, etc., issued returnable to a particular term of the court. See RETURN OF WRITS.

GENERAL RULES. Standing orders of a court for the regulation of its practice. See GENERAL ORDERS.

GENERAL SESSIONS. See COURT OF GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

GENERAL SHIP. One which is employed by the charterer or owner on a particular voyage, and is hired by a number of persons, unconnected with each other, to convey their respective goods to the place of destination. A ship advertised for general receipt of goods to be carried on a particular voyage. The advertisement should state the name of the ship and master, the general character of the ship, the time of sailing, and the proposed voyages. See 1 Pars. Mar. Law 130; Abb. Shipp. 123.

The shippers in a general ship generally contract with the master; but in law the owners and the masters are separately bound to the performance of the contract, it being considered as made with the owners as well as with the master; Abb. Shipp. 319.

GENERAL SPECIAL IMPARLANCE. In Pleading. One in which the defendant reserves to himself "all advantages and exceptions whatsoever." 2 Chitty, Pl. 408. See IMPARLANCE.

GENERAL STATUTE. See GENERAL LAWS.

GENERAL TAIL. See FEE-TAIL.

GENERAL TENANCY. A tenancy which is not fixed and made certain, as to its duration, by agreement of the parties. Brown's Adm'rs v. Bragg, 22 Ind. 122.

GENERAL TERM. A phrase used in some jurisdictions to designate the regular session of a court, for the trial and decision of causes, as distinguished from a special term, for the hearing of motions or arguments, or the despatch of routine or formal business, or the trial of a special list or class of causes or a particular case. It is also sometimes used to designate a sitting of the court in banc.

GENERAL TRAVERSE. See TRAVERSE.

GENERAL VERDICT. See VERDICT.

GENERAL WARRANT. A process which used to issue from the state secretary's office, to take up (without naming any person in particular) the author, printer, and publisher of such obscene and seditious libels as were particularly specified in it. The practice of issuing such warrants was common in early English history, but it received its death blow from Lord Camden, in the time of Wilkes. The latter was arrested and his private papers taken possession of under such a warrant, on a charge of seditious libel in publishing No. 45 of the North Briton. He recovered heavy damages against Lord Halifax who issued the warrant. Pratt, C. J., declared the practice to be "totally subversive of the liberty of the subject," and with the unanimous concurrence of the other judges condemned this dangerous and unconstitutional practice. See May, Const. Hist. of England; 5 Co. 91; 2 Wils. 151, 275; Bell v. Clapp, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 263, 6 Am. Dec. 339; Sailly v. Smith, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 500; Cooley, Const. Lim. 369. Such warrants were declared illegal and void for uncertainty by a vote of the house of commons. Com. Jour. 22, April, 1766; Whart. Law Dict.

A writ of assistance.

The issuing of these was one of the causes of the American Revolution. They were a species of general warrant, being directed to "all and singular justices, sheriffs, constables and all other officers and subjects," empowering them to enter and search any house for uncustomed goods, and to command all to assist them. These writs were perpetual, there being no return to them. They were not executed, owing to the eloquent argument of Otis before the supreme court of Massachusetts against their legality. See Tudor, Life of Otis 66; Story, Const. 1901.

GENERAL WARRANTY. See COVENANT OF WARRANTY; WARRANTY.

GENERAL WORDS. Such words of a descriptive character as are used in conveyances in order to convey, not only the specific property described, but also all kinds of easements, privileges, and appurtenances which may possibly belong to the property conveyed. Such words are in general unnecessary; but are properly used when there are any easements or privileges reputed to belong to the property not legally appurtenant to it.

Such words are rendered unnecessary by the English conveyancing act of 1881, under which they are presumed to be included.

See, as to the effect of such words in deeds, 4 M. & S. 423; in a will; 1 P. Wms. 302; in a lease; 2 Moo. 592; in a release; 3 Mod. 277; in a covenant; 3 Moo. 703; in a statute; 1 Bla. Com. 88; 2 Co. 46.

See INTERPRETATION.

GENERATION. A simple succession of living beings in natural descent; the age or period between one succession and another. It is not equivalent to degree. McMillan v. School Committee, 107 N. C. 609, 12 S. E. 330, 10 L. R. A. 823.

GENS (Lat.). In Roman Law. A union of families, who bore the same name, who were of an ingenuous (free) birth, ingenui, none of whose ancestors had been a slave, and who had suffered no capitis diminutio (reduction from a superior to an inferior condition), of which there were three degrees, maxima, media, minima. The first was the reduction of a free man to the condition of a slave, and was undergone by those who refused or neglected to be registered at the census, who had been condemned to ignominious punishments, who refused to perform military service, or who had been taken prisoners by the enemy, though those of the last class, on recovering their liberty, could be reinstated in their rights of citizenship. The second degree consisted in the reduction of a citizen to the condition of an alien (Latinus or peregrinus), and involved in the case of a Latinus, the loss of the right of legal marriage, but not of acquiring property, and in the case of the peregrinus, the loss of both. The third degree consisted in the change of condition of a pater familias into that of a filius familias, either by adoption or by legitimation.

Gentiles sunt, qui inter se eodem nomine sunt; qui ab ingenuis oriundi sunt; quorum majorum nemo servitutem servivit: qui capite non sunt deminuti. This definition is given by Cicero (Topic 6), after Scævola, the pontifex. But, notwithstanding this high authority, the question as to the organization of the gens is involved in great obscurity and doubt. The definition of Festus is still more vague and unsatisfactory. He says, "Gentilis dicitur et ex eodem genere ortus, et is, qui simili nomine appellatur, ut ait Cincius: Gentiles mihi sunt, qui meo nomine appellantur." Gens and genus are convertible terms; and Cicero defines the latter word, "Genus autem est quod sui similes communione quadam, specie autem differentes, duas aut plures complectitur partes." De Oratore, 1, 42. The genus is that which comprehends two or more particulars, similar to one another by having something in common, but differing in species. From this it may fairly be concluded that the gens or race comprises several families, always of ingenuous birth, resembling each other by their origin, general name,—nomen,—and common sacrifices or sacred rites,—sacra gentilitia (sui similes communione quadam),—but differing from each other by a particular name,—cognomen and agnatio (specie autem differentes). It would seem, however, from the litigation between the Claudii and Marcellii in relation to the inheritance of the son of a freedman, reported by Cicero, that the deceased, whose succession was in controversy, belonging to the gens Claudia, for the foundation of their claim was the gentile rights,—gente; and the Marcellii (plebeians belonging to the same gens) supported their pretensions on the ground that he was the son of their freedman. This fact has been thought by some writers to contradict that part of the definition of Scævola and Cicero where they say, quorum majorum nemo servitutem servivit. And Niebuhr, in a note to his history, concludes that the definition is erroneous: he says, "The claim of the patrician Claudii is at variance with the definition in the Topics, which excludes the posterity of freedmen from the character of gentiles: probably the decision was against the Claudii, and this might be the ground on which Cicero denied the title of gentiles to the descendants of freedmen. I conceive in so doing he must have been mistaken. We know from Cicero himself (de Leg. 11, 22) that no bodies or ashes were allowed to be placed in the common sepulchre unless they belonged to such as shared in the gens and its sacred rites; and several freedmen have been admitted into the sepulchre of the Scipios." But in another place he says, "The division into houses was so essential to the patrician order that the appropriate ancient term to designate that order was a circumlocution,—the patrician gentes; but the instance just mentioned shows beyond the reach of a doubt that such a gens did not consist of patricians alone. The Claudian contained the Marcellii, who were plebeians, equal to the Appii in the splendor of the honors they attained to, and incomparably more useful to the commonwealth; such plebeian families must evidently have arisen from marriages of disparagement, contracted before there was any right of intermarriage between the orders. But the Claudian house had also a very large number of insignificant persons who bore its name,—such as the M. Claudius who disputed the freedom of Virginia; nay, according to an opinion of earlier times, as the very case in Cicero proves, it contained the freedmen and their descendants. Thus, among the Gaels, the clan of the Campbells was formed by the nobles and their vassals: if we apply the Roman phrase to them, the former had the clan, the latter only belonged to it." It is obvious that, if what is said in the concluding part of the passage last quoted be correct, the definition of Scævola and Cicero is perfectly consistent with the theory of Niebuhr himself; for the definition, of course, refers to the original stock of the gens, and not to such as might be attached to it or stand in a certain legal relation towards it. In Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, edited by that accomplished classical scholar, Professor Anthon, the same distinction is intimated, though not fully developed, as follows: "But it must be observed, though the descendants of freedmen might have no claim as gentiles, the members of the gens might, as such, have claims against them; and in this sense the descendants of freedmen might be gentiles." This article by George Long is much quoted and contains references to the principal German authorities, and it may be consulted with profit. Hugo, in his history of the Roman Law, vol. 1, p. 83, says, "Those who bore the same name belonged all to the same gens: they were gentiles with regard to each other. Consequently, as the freedmen took the name of their former master, they adhered to his gens, or, in other words, stood in the relation of gentiles to him and his male descendants. Livy refers in express terms to the gens of an enfranchised slave (b. 39, 19), "Tecenicæ Hispalæ . . . gentis enupsio;" and the right of inheritance of the son of a freedman was conferred on the ground of civil relationship,—gente. But there must necessarily have been a great difference between those who were born in the gens and those who had only entered it by adoption, and their descendants; that is to say, between those who formed the original stock of the gens, who were all of patrician origin, and those who had entered the family by their own enfranchisement or that of their ancestors. The former alone were entitled to the rights of the gentiles; and perhaps the appellation itself was confined to them, while the latter were called gentilitii, to designate those against whom the gentiles had certain rights to exercise."

In a lecture of Niebuhr on the Roman Gentes, vol. 1, p. 70, he says, "Such an association, consisting of a number of families, from which a person may withdraw, but into which he cannot be admitted at all, or only by being adopted by the whole association, is a gens. It must not be confounded with the family, the members of which are descended from a common ancestor; for the patronymic names of the gentes are nothing but symbols, and are derived from heroes." Arnold gives the following exposition of the subject: "The people of Rome were divided into the three tribes of the Ramnenses, Titienses, and Luceres, and each of these tribes was divided into ten curiæ; it would be more correct to say that the union of ten curiæ formed the tribe. For the state grew out of the junction of certain original elements; and these were neither the tribes, nor even the curiæ, but the gentes or houses which made up the curiæ. The first element of the whole system was the gens, or house, a union of several families who were bound together by the joint performance of certain religious rites. Actually, where a system of houses has existed within historical memory, the several families who composed a house were not necessarily related to one another; they were not really cousins more or less distant, all descended from a common ancestor. But there is no reason to doubt that in the original idea of a house the bond of union between its several families was truly sameness of blood; such was likely to be the earliest acknowledged tie, although afterwards, as names are apt to outlive their meaning, an artificial bond may have succeeded to the natural one, and a house, instead of consisting of families of real relations, was made up sometimes of families of strangers, whom it was proposed to bind together by a fictitious tie, in the hope that law and custom and religion might together rival the force of nature." 1 Arnold, Hist. 31.

Maine, in his chapter on the origin of property, selects the village community of India as a type of "an organized patriarchal society and an assemblage of co-proprietors" which "ought at once to rivet our attention from its exactly fitting in with the ideas which our studies in the law of persons would lead us to entertain respecting the original condition of property;" Anc. L. 252. After describing it somewhat fully he says: The type with which it should be compared is evidently not the Roman family, but the Roman gens or house. The gens was also a group on the model of a family; it was the family extended by a variety of fictions of which the exact nature was lost in antiquity. In historical times, its leading characteristics were the very two which Elphinstone remarks in the village community. There was always the assumption of a common origin, an assumption sometimes notoriously at variance with fact; and, to repeat the historian's words, "if a family became extinct, its share returned to the common stock." In old Roman Law, unclaimed inheritances escheated to the gentiles. It is further suspected by all who have examined their history that the communities, like the gentes, have been very generally adulterated by the admission of strangers, but the exact mode of absorption cannot now be ascertained; id. 256. Another writer considers that the gens "was something very nearly identical with a Celtic clan, the identity or similarity of name being always supposed to have arisen from relationship, and not from similarity of occupation, as in the case of the Smiths, Taylors, Lorimers, etc., of modern Europe. There was this peculiarity, however, about the gens which did not belong to the clan—viz., that it was possible for an individual born in it to cease to belong to it by capitis diminutio, or by adoption (by a family not of the same gens), or adrogation as it was called when the person adopted was sui juris." Int. Cyc.

A recognized authority on the civil law refers to the obscurity of this subject in treating of successions. Under the twelve tables there were recognized only (1) sui heredes; (2) agnati; (3) gentiles, and in default of the latter the inheritance lapsed to the state. The prætors called the cognati for the first time to the succession, "probably because" says Sandars (Inst. 290), "at the time of the prætor's legislation there were few families that could boast a descent so pure and accurately known as to satisfy the requisite of gentilitas." He also says in the same connection: "The subject of gentilitas is too obscure, and repays investigation too little, to permit us to enter into it here. Probably the original notion of gentiles was that of members of some pure uncorrupted patrician stock, though not necessarily of the same descent, but bearing the same name, and having the same sacra. Probably, also, freedmen and clients of gentiles were in some degree, considered as themselves gentiles; probably if their property was not claimed by their patron it went to the members of his gens, but they had not any claim on the property of any other gentiles. We know also that there were plebeian gentes, formed probably by the marriage of a patrician with a plebeian before the plebs received the connubium. Members of plebeian gentes would, we may suppose, have the rights of gentilitas towards other members of the same plebeian gens, and it would seem that they had them towards the members of the patrician gens, from which they were an offset; Cic. de Orat. 1. 39. Of the mode in which the gentiles took the inheritance, we know nothing of, nor at how late a period of history the gentes were still really in existence. Gaius (iii. 17), treats the subject as one of mere antiquarian interest." In his introduction to the Institutes, Sandars gives generally his understanding of the nature of the gens. The body of Roman citizens was composed of two distinct divisions, the populus and the plebs. The former consisted of three tribes, each of ten curiæ, and each curiæ was divided into ten decuriæ. For the latter another name was gens, "and it included a great number of distinct families, united by having common sacred rites, and bearing a common name. In theory at least, the members of the same gens were descended from a common ancestor, and the families of the gens were subdivisions of the same ancestral stock, but both individuals and groups were occasionally admitted from outside. A pure unspotted pedigree was claimed by every member of a gens, and there was a theoretical equality among all the members of the whole tribe. The heads of the different families in these gentes met together in a great council, called the council of the curies (comitia curiata). A small body of three hundred, answering in number to the gentes in each of the three tribes, and called the senate, was charged with the office of initiating the more important questions submitted to the great council; and a king, nominated by the senate, but chosen by the curies, presided over the whole body, and was charged with the functions of executive government."

The gentiles inherited from each other in the absence of agnates.

GENS DE JUSTICE. In French Law. Officers of a court.

GENTLEMAN. In English Law. A person of superior birth.

According to Coke, he is one who bears coat-armor, the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family. The eldest son had no exclusive claim to the degree; for, according to Littleton, "every son is as great a gentleman as the eldest." Co. 2d Inst. 667. Sir Thomas Smith, quoted by Blackstone, 1 Com. 406, says, "As for gentlemen, they are made good cheap in this kingdom; for whosoever studies the laws of the realm, who studies in the universities, who professeth liberal sciences, and (to be short) who can live idly and without manual labor, and will bear the port, charge, and countenance of a gentleman, shall be called master, and be taken for a gentleman." In the United States, this word is unknown to the law. See Pothier, Proc. Crim. sec. 1, App. § 3; 1 C. P. D. 60; 1 Ch. Div. 577; 3 H. & N. 382.

GENTLEWOMAN. An addition formerly appropriate in England to the state or degree of a woman. Co. 2d Inst. 667.

GENTOO LAW. See HINDU LAW.

GENUINE. Not false, fictitious, simulated, spurious, counterfeit. Baldwin v. Van Deusen, 37 N. Y. 492.

GEORGIA. The name of one of the original thirteen states of the United States of America.

It was called after George II., king of Great Britain, under whose reign it was colonized.

George II. granted a charter, dated June 9, 1732, to a company consisting of General James Oglethorpe, Lord Percival, and nineteen others, who planted a colony, in 1733, on the bank of the Savannah river, a short distance from its mouth.

The corporation thus created was authorized, for twenty-one years, to erect courts of judicature for all civil and criminal causes, and to appoint a governor, judges, and other magistrates. The territory was to be held, as of the manor of Hampton Court in Middlesex, in free and common socage, and not in capite.

This charter was to expire by its own limitation in 1753; and under it the colony was governed by trustees, who, on December 19, 1751, in anticipation of the expiration of the charter, offered to surrender it up to the crown. The offer was accepted and on June 23, 1752, the trustees closed their accounts, made their last grant, and affixed the seal to the deed of surrender, and the colony became a royal province, of which the first governor was appointed August 6, and landed October 29, 1754; the colony having in the meantime been governed by the Board of Trade and Plantations.

A state constitution was adopted in 1777, another in 1789, and a third in 1798, which, with some amendments, remained in force until the civil war. The state seceded January 19, 1861, and was readmitted to the Union under act of congress approved July 15, 1870.

The present constitution, as revised, compiled, and amended, was adopted by a convention at Atlanta and ratified by a vote of the people on 5th December, 1877; amended, 1898.

Paragraph 1, sec. 1, article VII, amended so as to provide pensions for widows of ex-Confederate soldiers, who were married prior to 1870.

August 17, 1911, paragraph 1, sec. 1, article VII, amended so as to provide a uniform system of common schools.

GEREFA. Reeve, which see.

GERMAN. Whole or entire, as respects genealogy or descent: thus "brother-german" denotes one who is brother both by the father's and mother's side; "cousin-german," those in the first and nearest degree, i. e. children of brothers or sisters. Tech. Dict.; 4 M. & G. 56.

GERMANY. An Empire of Europe composed of twenty-six states. The constitution is dated April 16, 1871. It includes all the German states in "an eternal union," under the supervisory power of the King of Prussia as the Deutscher Kaiser (the German Emperor). The legislative power is vested in two bodies, the bundesrath, or federal council, and the reichstag. The members of the bundesrath are annually appointed by the several states. The members of the reichstag are elected by ballot by universal suffrage for a period of five years, and may be prorogued for a period not to exceed ninety days, or it may be dissolved by the emperor. In case of dissolution new elections take place within sixty days and the new session must be opened within ninety days. All imperial laws must receive the votes of the majority of both bodies, and have the assent of the emperor. The bundesrath can declare war, make peace, enter into treaties with foreign nations and appoint and receive ambassadors, but if the territory of the empire is attacked, the emperor does not require the consent of the bundesrath to declare war, but can act independently. In connection with the chancellor the bundesrath also exercises some executive functions, through committees which are substantially boards of administration and consultation.

The Code Napoléon was until later years the common law in many parts of Germany, and the Prussian code of Frederick the Great in other parts. In 1850 a new penal code was promulgated; in 1862 a partial codification was effected; and in 1869 a code of commercial law was enacted which was valid for the North German Confederation. Since 1870 there has been a universal criminal code for the whole empire and a common judicature was established in 1879. For later codes, see CODE.

GERONTOCOMI. In Civil Law. Officers appointed to manage hospitals for poor old persons. Clef des Lois Rom. Administrateurs.

GERSUMA (Sax.). Expense; reward; compensation; wealth; especially, the consideration or fine of a contract: e. g. et pro hac concessione dedit nobis prædictus Jordanus 100 sol. sterling de gersuma. Old charter, cited Somner, Gavelkind, 177; Tabul. Reg. Ch. 377; 3 Mon. Ang. 720; 3 id. 126. It is also used for a fine or compensation for an offence. 2 Mon. Ang. 973.

GESTATION, UTERO-GESTATION. In Medical Jurisprudence. The time during which a female, who has conceived, carries the embryo or fœtus in her uterus.

This directly involves the duration of pregnancy, questions concerning which most frequently arise in cases of contested legitimacy. The descent of property and peerage may be made entirely dependent upon the settlement of this question, as to which see PREGNANCY.

There are some women to whom it is peculiar always to have the normal time of delivery anticipated by two or three weeks. Montgomery, Preg. 264. So, also, there are many cases establishing the fact that the usual period is sometimes exceeded by one, two, or more weeks, the limits of which it is difficult or impossible to determine. Coke seems inclined to adopt a peremptory rule that forty weeks is the longest time allowed by law for gestation. Co. Litt. 123 b. But although the law of some countries prescribes the time from conception within which the child must be born to be legitimate, that of England and America fixes no precise limit, but admits the possibility of the birth's occurring previous or subsequent to the usual time.

A conviction will not be disturbed because the child was born within a shorter time after the alleged intercourse than the ordinary period of gestation; Peterson v. People, 74 Ill. App. 178. It is proper to charge the jury that they must be satisfied that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the complainant within the period in which, in the ordinary course of nature, the child could be begotten; Sonnenberg v. State, 124 Wis. 124, 102 N. W. 233.

The following are cases in which this question will be found discussed: 3 Bro. C. C. 349; Gardner Peerage case, Le Marchant Report; Cro. Jac. 686; 7 Hazard, Reg. of Penn. 363; 2 Wh. & Stillé, Med. Jur. § 4; 2 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 264. See PREGNANCY; FŒTUS; VIABILITY.

GESTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The doing or management of a thing. Negotiorum gestio, the doing voluntarily without authority business of another. L. 20, C. de neg. gest. Gestio negotiorum, one who so interferes with business of another without authority. Gestio pro hærede, behavior as heir; such conduct on the part of the heir as indicates acceptance of the inheritance and makes him liable for ancestor's debts universally: e. g. an entry upon, or assigning, or letting any of the heritable property, releasing any of the heritable property, releasing any of the debtors of the estate, or meddling with the title-deeds or heirship movables, etc. Erskine, Inst. 3. 8. 82 et seq.; Stair, Inst. 3. 6. 1.

GEWRITE. In Saxon Law. Deeds of charters; writings. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 10.

GIFT. A voluntary conveyance or transfer of property; that is, one not founded on the consideration of money or blood.

A voluntary, immediate and absolute transfer of property without consideration. Lewis' Estate, 139 Pa. 640, 22 Atl. 635.

As used by the old text writers, it signified a distinct species of deed, applicable to the creation of an estate tail; while a feoffment was strictly confined to the creation of a fee-simple estate. This use is almost obsolete; Wharton. It has been said that the word denotes rather the motive of the conveyance; so that a feoffment or grant may be called a gift when gratuitous. A gift is of the same nature as a settlement; neither denotes a form of assurance, but the nature of the transaction. Watk. Conv. 199. The operative words of this conveyance are do, or dedi—I give, or I have given. The maker of this instrument is called the donor, and he to whom it is made, the donee, and the entail is the gift or donation, the issue taking per forman doni. 2 Bla. Com. 316;

Littleton 59; Shepp. Touchst. c. 11; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 12, 81, 211.

Gifts inter vivos are gifts made from one or more persons, without any prospect of immediate death, to one or more others. Gifts mortis causa are gifts made in prospect of death.

Gifts inter vivos have no reference to the future, and go into immediate and absolute effect; 2 Kent 439; no further act of the parties is needed to give them effect; Robson v. Jones, 3 Del. Ch. 62. Delivery is essential. Without actual possession, the title does not pass. A mere intention or naked promise to give, without some act to pass the property, is not a gift. There may be repentance (the locus pœnitentiæ) as long as the gift is incomplete in the mode of making it; 1 Pars. Contr. 245; Pearson v. Pearson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 26; but see Poullain v. Poullain, 79 Ga. 11, 4 S. E. 81, where it was held that a donatio inter vivos, as distinguished from a donatio mortis causa, does not require actual delivery, and that it is sufficient to complete a gift inter vivos that the conduct of the parties should show that the ownership of the chattels has been changed.

Under a gift, a person "may take a benefit to accrue at a future day—it may be at the donor's death; but this can be only through the instrumentality of a trust created either in a third person or in the donor. The effect is to divest at once the former property of the donor in the thing given. Such a gift is no more immediate than in the ordinary case." Robson v. Jones, 3 Del. Ch. 62.

The subject of the gift must be certain; and there must be the mutual consent and concurrent will of both parties. There must be an intention on the part of the donor to make a gift; Thornt. Gifts & Adv. § 70, and expressions of it are admissible as part of the res gestæ; 1 Wils. Ch. 212; In re Ward, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 251; Booth v. Cornell, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 261; Stevens v. Stevens, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 265; Williams v. Guile, 117 N. Y. 343, 22 N. E. 1071, 6 L. R. A. 366; and also declarations of the donor prior to the gift; Smith v. Maine, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 33; if followed up by proof of delivery; Larimore v. Wells, 29 Ohio St. 13; and subsequent to the gift to support it; Blalock v. Miland, 87 Ga. 573, 13 S. E. 551; Scott v. Bank, 140 Mass. 157, 2 N. E. 925; but not to disapprove it; Baxter v. Knowles, 12 Allen (Mass.) 114. See Thornt. Gift § 222. Acceptance is also necessary; Peirce v. Burroughs, 58 N. H. 302; Nickerson v. Nickerson, 28 Md. 327; Thomas v. Thomas, 107 Mo. 459, 18 S. W. 27; and this is true under both the common and civil law; De Levillain v. Evans, 39 Cal. 120. It must be in the lifetime of the donor; Eskridge v. Farrar, 34 La. Ann. 709; but it is presumed if the gift is of value; Thouvenin v. Rodrigues, 24 Tex. 468; Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181, 29 N. W. 843, 6 Am. St. Rep. 290. Delivery must be according to the nature of the thing. It must be an actual delivery, so far as the subject is capable of delivery. If the thing be not capable of actual delivery, there must be some act equivalent to it; something sufficient to work an immediate change in the dominion of the property; Gartside v. Pahlman, 45 Mo. App. 160. The donor must part not only with the possession, but with the dominion. If the thing given be a chose in action, the law requires an assignment or some equivalent instrument, and the transfer must be executed; 1 Swanst. 436; Picot v. Sanderson, 12 N. C. 309. Delivery first and gift afterwards of a chattel capable of delivery, is as effectual as gift first and delivery afterwards; 64 Law T. 645. The presumption of a resulting trust in favor of the donor arises where a conveyance has been made, without consideration, to one of an estate or other property which has been purchased with the money of another; but this presumption is rebutted where the purchase may fairly be deemed to be made for another from motives of natural love and affection; Appeal of Roberts, 85 Pa. 84; Gardner v. Merritt, 32 Md. 78, 3 Am. Rep. 115. Knowledge by the donee that the gift has been made is not necessary; L. R. 2 Ch. Div. 104. The gift is complete when the legal title has actually vested in the donee; 108 E. C. L. R. 435; and in cases of gifts by husband to wife, or parent to child living at home, the necessity for an actual change of possession does not exist; Appeal of Crawford, 61 Pa. 52, 100 Am. Dec. 609.

A chose in action not negotiable and negotiable paper not endorsed may be the subject of a gift, and a delivery which vests in the donee the equitable title is sufficient without a complete transfer of the legal title; First Nat. Bank of Richmond v. Holland, 99 Va. 495, 39 S. E. 126, 55 L. R. A. 155, 86 Am. St. Rep. 898; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 2 Sup. Ct. 415, 27 L. Ed. 500; Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 261, 35 Am. Dec. 319. Where a father gives money deposited in bank to his infant son, the gift will not be defeated by the failure of the father to deliver to the son the pass book evidencing the gift, the father as natural guardian being the proper custodian of such book during the infancy of the son; Beaver v. Beaver, 62 Hun 194, 16 N. Y. Supp. 476, 746. The instances here given are merely illustrative of the cases on the subject of the necessity of delivery, the number of which is almost without limit.

The mere deposit by one in trust for another does not establish an irrevocable trust. It is a tentative trust, revocable at will, until the depositor dies or completes the gift during his lifetime; In re Totten, 179 N. Y. 112, 71 N. E. 748, 70 L. R. A. 711, 1 Ann. Cas. 900, reversing id., 89 App. Div. 368, 85 N. Y. Supp. 928. It is a question of the depositor's intent; In re Barefield, 177 N. Y.

387, 69 N. E. 732, 101 Am. St. Rep. 814; Cleveland v. Bank, 182 Mass. 110, 65 N. E. 27; Estate of Smith, 144 Pa. 428, 22 Atl. 916, 27 Am. St. Rep. 641; Rombo v. Pile, 220 Pa. 235, 69 Atl. 807. See 14 Yale L. J. 315; Brady, Bank Deposits.

The declaration of the depositor may make the trust valid; Merigan v. McGonigle, 205 Pa. 321, 54 Atl. 994. The retention of the pass book by the depositor does not rebut the idea of a trust; Bath Sav. Inst. v. Hathorn, 88 Me. 122, 33 Atl. 836, 32 L. R. A. 377, 51 Am. St. Rep. 382; Estate of Gaffney, 146 Pa. 49, 23 Atl. 163; Robertson v. McCarty, 54 App. Div. 103, 66 N. Y. Supp. 327. But the delivery of the pass book will render the trust irrevocable; In re Totten, 179 N. Y. 112, 71 N. E. 748, 70 L. R. A. 711, 1 Ann. Cas. 900. Notice to the beneficiary may create a trust; but absence of notice does not establish conclusively that there was no trust; Bath Sav. Inst. v. Hathorn, 88 Me. 122, 33 Atl. 836, 32 L. R. A. 377, 51 Am. St. Rep. 382; Gerrish v. Sav. Inst., 128 Mass. 159, 35 Am. Rep. 365.

It is held that where the intent was that the beneficiary should take only at the death of the depositor, the fund passed at his death to the depositor's estate; Coolidge v. Knight, 194 Mass. 546, 80 N. E. 620, 120 Am. St. Rep. 573. A deposit cannot be made which will be revocable, but will take effect as a trust after death; Appeal of Main, 73 Conn. 638, 48 Atl. 965; Whalen v. Milholland, 89 Md. 199, 43 Atl. 45, 44 L. R. A. 208, as a testamentary act can be done only under the statute of wills. But see 179 N. Y. 112, 71 N. E. 748, 70 L. R. A. 711, 1 Ann. Cas. 900, supra. One who makes a deposit in trust for a fictitious person does not lose control of his money; Garvey v. Clifford, 114 App. Div. 193, 99 N. Y. Supp. 555; Nicklas v. Parker, 69 N. J. Eq. 743, 61 Atl. 267.

During the lifetime of the depositor, the bank may allow him to draw out the fund; Pennsylvania Title & Trust Co. v. Meyer, 201 Pa. 299, 50 Atl. 998; Sayre v. Weil, 94 Ala. 466, 10 South. 421; the beneficiary cannot compel the bank to pay him during the depositor's lifetime; Hemmerich v. Union Inst., 144 App. Div. 413, 129 N. Y. Supp. 267.

A gift is effectual only after the intention to make it has been accompanied by delivery of possession or some equivalent act; Smith's Estate, 144 Pa. 428, 22 Atl. 916, 27 Am. St. Rep. 641.

Where one made large deposits in a bank as nominally trustee for another, but only for his own convenience and intending to retain his ownership, no title passed to the cestui que trust; it is a question of intention; Rambo v. Pile, 220 Pa. 235, 69 Atl. 807. What was intended as a gift, but is imperfect, cannot be made effectual by construing it as a declaration of trust; Smith's Estate, 144 Pa. 428, 22 Atl. 916, 27 Am. St. Rep. 641, following L. R. 18 Eq. 11. If a trust is intended, it will be equally effectual whether the donor transfers the title to a trustee, or declare himself such; Smith's Estate, 144 Pa. 428, 22 Atl. 916, 27 Am. St. Rep. 641.

Where a savings bank depositor has lost his book, gives an order upon the bank and delivers it to the donee with words indicating a gift, this is a valid gift, at least if the order has been accepted by the bank; Candee v. Savings Bank, 81 Conn. 372, 71 Atl. 551, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568. Where the deposit was in the donee's name, but subject to donor's order, and the donor told the donee he meant to give him the money: the pass book was given to the donee, but taken back by the donor for safe keeping, and the donor gave the donee a writing certifying that the money was for him, and the donor never exercised ownership over the fund, it was held a valid gift; Eastman v. Savings Bank, 136 Mass. 208.

A written assignment of certificates of shares of stock without delivery is not sufficient to constitute a valid gift, especially where the donor retained control of the shares and collected dividends thereon for four years; Allen-West Commission Co. v. Grumbles, 129 Fed. 287, 63 C. C. A. 401.

For a full discussion of the subject, see Thornt. Gifts & Adv. ch. ix., where the cases are collected; 15 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 701, n.; 15 Va. L. J. 737; 32 Cent. L. J. 11. As to what circumstances will dispense with actual physical delivery, see 9 id. 639; 26 Am. L. Reg. 587; Law Q. Rev. 446; see also DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA, with respect to delivery, the requisites of which in the two classes of gifts are the same; Thornt. Gifts § 130; Murdock v. McDowell, 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 237, 9 Am. Dec. 684; Brinckerhoff v. Lawrence, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 400. "Gifts inter vivos and gifts causa mortis differ in nothing, except that the latter are made in expectation of death, become effectual only upon the death of the donor, and may be revoked. Otherwise, the same principles apply to each." Dresser v. Dresser, 46 Me. 48; Robson v. Jones, 3 Del. Ch. 51; Shackleford v. Brown, 89 Mo. 546, 1 S. W. 390; Young v. Young, 80 N. Y. 422, 36 Am. Rep. 634; Meriwether v. Morrison, 78 Ky. 572; Conser v. Snowden, 54 Md. 175, 39 Am. Rep. 368. A parol gift of land is valid when possession is taken and valuable improvements are made thereunder; Wootters v. Hale, 83 Tex. 563, 19 S. W. 134.

The presumption is that a gift by a child to its parents is valid, and to set it aside the court must be satisfied that it was not a voluntary act of the child; Towson v. Moore, 173 U. S. 17, 19 Sup. Ct. 332, 43 L. Ed. 597.

When the gift is perfect it is then irrevocable, unless it is prejudicial to creditors or the donor was under a legal incapacity or was circumvented by fraud; except in case of donatio mortis causa (q. v.), as to which one of the distinguishing characteristics is that it is revocable during the donor's life.

If a man, intending to give a jewel to another, say to him, Here I give you my ring with the ruby in it, etc., and with his own hand delivers it to the party, this will be a good gift notwithstanding the ring bear any other jewel, being delivered by the party himself to the person to whom given; Bacon, Max. 87. See Van Slooten v. Wheeler, 66 Hun 632, 21 N. Y. Supp. 336.

Where a father bought a ticket in a lottery, which he declared he gave to his infant daughter E., and wrote her name upon it, and after the ticket had drawn a prize he declared that he had given the ticket to his child E, and that the prize money was hers, this was held sufficient for a jury to infer all the formality requisite to a valid gift, and that the title in the money was complete and vested in E. See Grangiac v. Arden, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 293. Where notes are endorsed by the owner, placed in a pocketbook, and the packet marked with the name of the donees, a delivery to one of the donees is sufficient, though he at once returns the packet to the donor to keep for the present; Brandon v. Dawson, 51 Mo. App. 237.

A certificate of deposit may be the subject of gift, and, when endorsed and delivered for such purpose, the gift is perfect and cannot be revoked by the donor before the money is collected; Wheeler v. Glasgow, 97 Ala. 700, 11 South. 758. A written assignment, under seal, of money in the hands of a third person, delivered to the assignee, constitutes a valid gift and acceptance of the money; Matson v. Abbey, 141 N. Y. 179, 36 N. E. 11.

See, generally, Thornton, Gifts; DONATIO INTER VIVOS; DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA; DONATIO.

GIFT ENTERPRISE. A scheme for the division or distribution of certain articles of property, to be determined by chance, amongst those who have taken shares in the scheme; the phrase has attained such a notoriety as to justify courts in taking judicial notice of what is meant and understood; Lohman v. State, 81 Ind. 17; Meserve v. Andrews, 106 Mass. 422. See LOTTERY.

GILD. See GUILD.

GILDA MERCATORIA (L. Lat.). A mercantile meeting.

If the king once grants to a set of men to have gilda mercatoria, mercantile meeting assembly, this is alone sufficient to incorporate and establish them forever. 1 Bla. Com. 473. A company of merchants incorporated. Stat. Will. Reg. Scot. c. 35; Leg. Burgorum Scot. c. 99; Spelman, Gloss.; 8 Co. 125 a; 2 Ld. Raym. 1134.

They were widely spread trade organizations which appeared in England soon after the Conquest. They supervised trade and labor, prices, hours of labor, etc., and punished dishonest workmanship and short weights and measures. They were closely identified with the town and its government, but it is not probable (though maintained by certain writers) that the grant of gilda mercatoria to a borough was a grant of corporateness. See Carr, 3 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 177.

See GUILD.

GILDO. In Saxon Law. Members of a gild or decennary. Oftener spelled congildo. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss. Geldum.

GILL. A measure of capacity, equal to one-fourth of a pint. See MEASURE.

GIRANTEM. An Italian word which signifies the drawer. It is derived from girare, to draw, in the same manner as the English verb to murder is transformed into murdrare in our old indictments. Hall, Mar. Loans 183, n.

GIRTH. A girth, or yard, is a measure of length. The word is of Saxon origin, taken from the circumference of the human body. Girth is contracted from girdeth, and signifies as much as girdle. See ELL.

GIRTH AND SANCTUARY. In Scotch Law. A refuge or place of safety given to those who had slain a man in heat of passion (chaude medley) and unpremeditatedly. Abolished at the Reformation. 1 Hume 235; 1 Ross, Lect. 331.

GIST (sometimes, also, spelled git).

In Pleading. The essential ground or object of the action in point of law, without which there would be no cause of action. Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 12; 19 Vt. 102. The cause for which an action will lie; the ground or foundation of a suit, without which it would not be maintainable; the essential ground or object of a suit, without which there is not a cause of action. First Nat. Bank of Flora v. Burkett, 101 Ill. 394, 40 Am. Rep. 209. In stating the gist of the action, everything must be averred which is necessary to be proved at the trial. The moving cause of the plaintiff's bringing the action, and the matter for which he recovers the principal satisfaction, is frequently entirely collateral to the gist of the action. Thus, where a father sues the defendant for a trespass for the seduction of his daughter, the gist of the action is the trespass and the loss of his daughter's services; but the collateral cause is the injury done to his feelings, for which the principal damages are given. See 1 Viner, Abr. 598; Tayl. Ev. 334; Bac., Abr. Pleas, B.; Doctr. Plac. 85; DAMAGES.

GIVE. A term used in deeds of conveyance. At common law, it implied a covenant for quiet enjoyment; 2 Hill. R. P. 366. So in Kentucky; 1 Pirtle, Dig. 211. In Maryland it is doubtful; Deakins v. Hollis, 7 G. & J. 311. In Ohio, in conveyance of freehold, it implies warranty for the grantor's life; 2 Hill. R. P. 366. In Maine it implies a covenant; Webber v. Webber, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 127. In New York it does not, by statute. See Kinney v. Watts, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 38. It does not imply a covenant in North Carolina; Rickets v. Dickens, 5 N. C. 343, 4 Am. Dec. 555; nor in England, by statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 4. See COVENANT; GIFT.

The word give, in a statute providing that no person shall give away any intoxicating liquors, etc., does not apply to giving such liquor at private dwellings, etc., unless given to a habitual drunkard, or unless such dwelling, etc., becomes a place of public resort. O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 323, 12 Sup. Ct. 693, 36 L. Ed. 450. See LIQUOR LAWS.

GIVER. He who makes a gift. By his gift, the giver always impliedly agrees with the donee that he will not revoke the gift.

GIVING IN PAYMENT. In Louisiana. A term which signifies that a debtor, instead of paying a debt he owes in money, satisfies his creditor by giving in payment a movable or immovable. See DATION EN PAIEMENT.

GIVING TIME. An agreement by which a creditor gives his debtor a delay or time in paying his debt beyond that contained in the original agreement. When other persons are responsible to him, either as drawer, indorser, or surety, if such time be given without the consent of the latter, it discharges them from responsibility to him; and the same effect follows if time is given to one of the joint makers of a note; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 299. See SURETYSHIP; GUARANTY.

GLADIUS (Lat. a sword). In old Latin authors, and in the Norman laws, this word was used to signify supreme jurisdiction: jus gladii.

GLEANING. The act of gathering such grain in a field where it grew, as may have been left by the reapers after the sheaves were gathered.

There is a custom in England, it is said, by which the poor are allowed to enter and glean upon another's land after harvest, without being guilty of a trespass; 3 Bla. Com. 212. But it has been decided that the community are not entitled to claim this privilege as a right; 1 H. Bla. 51. In the United States, it is believed, no such right exists. It seems to have existed in some parts of France. Merlin, Rép. Glanage. As to whether gleaning would or would not amount to larceny, see Wood. Landl. & T. 242; 2 Russ. Cr. 99. The Jewish law may be found in Leviticus xix, 9, 10. See Ruth ii, 2, 3; Isaiah xxii, 6.

GLEBE. The land which belongs to a church. The dowry of the church. Gleba est terra qua consistit dos ecclesiæ. Town of Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 329, 3 L. Ed. 735.

In Civil Law. The soil of an inheritance. There were serfs of the glebe, called glebæ addicti. Code 11. 47. 7, 21; Nov. 54, c. 1.

GLOSS (Lat. glossa). Interpretation; comment; explanation; remark intended to illustrate a subject,—especially the text of an author. See Webster, Dict.

In Civil Law. Glossæ, or glossemata, were words which needed explanation. Calvinus, Lex. The explanations of such words. Calvinus, Lex. Especially used of the short comments or explanations of the text of the Roman Law, made during the twelfth century by the teachers at the schools of Bologna, etc., who were hence called glossators, of which glosses Accursius made a compilation which possesses great authority, called glossa ordinaria. These glosses were at first written between the lines of the text (glossæ interlineares), afterwards, on the margin, close by and partly under the text (glossæ marginales). Cush. Intr. to Rom. Law 130.

GLOSSATOR. A commentator or annotator of the Roman law. One of the authors of the Gloss.

GLOUCESTER, STATUTE OF. An English statute, 6 Edw. I., c. 1, A. D. 1278; so called because it was passed at Gloucester. It was the first statute giving to a successful plaintiff "the costs of his writ purchased." There were other statutes made at Gloucester which do not bear this name. See stat. 2 Rich. II.; COSTS.

GO. To issue, as applied to the process of a court. 1 W. Bla. 50; 5 Mod. 421; 18 C. B. 35. Not frequent in modern use.

To be discharged from attendance at court. See GO WITHOUT DAY.

In a statute of descents, to go to is to vest in.

GO BAIL. To become surety in a bail bond.

GO TO PROTEST. Of negotiable paper, to be protested for non-payment or non-acceptance.

GO WITHOUT DAY. Words used to denote that a party is dismissed the court. He is said to go without day, because there is no day appointed for him to appear again, or because the suit is discontinued.

GOAT, GOTE (Law Lat. gota; Germ. gote). A canal or sluice for the passage of water. Charter of Roger, Duke de Basingham, anno 1220, in Tabularis S. Bertini; Du Cange.

A ditch, sluice, or gutter. Cowell, Gote; stat. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5. An engine for draining waters out of the land into the sea, erected and built with doors and perculesses of timber, stone, or brick,—invented first in Lower Germany. Callis, Sewers 66.

GOD AND MY COUNTRY. When a prisoner is arraigned, he is asked, How will you be tried? he answers, By God and my country. This practice arose when the prisoner had the right to choose the mode of trial, namely, by ordeal or by jury, and then he elected by God or by his country, that is, by ordeal or by jury. It is probable that originally it was By God or my country; for the question asked supposes an option in the prisoner, and the answer is meant to assert his innocence by declining neither sort of trial. 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 416; Barring. Stat. 73, note. See ORDEAL; WAGER OF BATTLE.

GOD BOTE. An ecclesiastical or church fine imposed upon an offender for crimes and offences committed against God.

GOD'S PENNY. In Old English Law. Money given to bind a bargain; earnest money. So called because such money was anciently given to God,—that is, to the church and the poor.

"All over western Europe the earnest becomes known as the God's penny or Holy Ghost's penny (denarius Dei). Sometimes we find that it is to be expended in the purchase of tapers for the patron saint of the town, or in works of mercy. Thus the contract is put under divine protection. In the law merchant as stated by Fleta we seem to see God's penny yet afraid, if we may so speak, to proclaim itself as what it really is, namely, a sufficient vestment for a contract of sale. A few years later Edward I. took the step that remained to be taken, and by his Carta Mercatoria, in words which seem to have come from the south of Europe, proclaimed that among merchants the God's penny binds the contract of sale so that neither party may resile from it. At a later day this new rule passed from the law merchant into the common law." 2 Poll. & Maitl. 207. See DENARIUS DEI; EARNEST; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 492.

GOING. A term applied to sheep. The "going" of 105 sheep with his master's flock in a contract with a shepherd meant that the sheep should be pasture fed; Rex v. Inhabitants of Macton, 3 B. & Ad. 543.

GOING CONCERN. Some enterprise which is being carried on as a whole, and with some particular object in view. Oliver v. Lansing, 59 Neb. 219, 80 N. W. 829.

The term, when applied to a corporation, means that it continues to transact its ordinary business. The mere fact that a corporation is insolvent does not dissolve it and make the directors mere trustees of its assets, if it is still a going concern; White, Potter & Paige Mfg. Co. v. Importing Co., 30 Fed. 864. It means, as applied to a corporation, one which "is still prosecuting its business with the prospect and expectation of continuing to do so, even though its assets are insufficient to pay its debts;" Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 11 South. 350, 23 L. R. A. 618, 42 Am. St. Rep. 29.

The "going value" is that which results from having an established business as a going concern; Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. City of Cedar Rapids, 118 Ia. 234, 91 N. W. 1081, where, in deciding whether water rates fixed by ordinance were confiscatory, the going value was not to be considered as a distinct element of the value of the plant.

GOING FREE. Used of a vessel when she has a fair wind and her yards braced in; The Queen Elizabeth, 100 Fed. 874.

GOING OFF LARGE. Having the wind free on either tack and properly termed a "vessel off large"; that is free to take a course to either side, proceed straight forward or return to the point from which she started; Ward v. The Fashion, Fed. Cas. No. 17,155. It differs technically from "going before the wind" which means that the wind is free, comes from the stern and the yards are braced square across, whereas going off large is when the wind blows from a point abaft the beam or from the quarter; Hall v. The Buffalo, Fed. Cas. No. 5,927.

GOING WITNESS. One who is going out of the jurisdiction of the court, although only into a state or country under the same general sovereignty: as, for example, if he is going from one to another of the United States, or, in Great Britain, from England to Scotland. 2 Dick. Ch. 454. See DEPOSITION; WITNESS.

GOLD. Contracts expressly stipulating for payment in gold and silver dollars can only be satisfied by the payment of coined dollars; Bronson v. Rodes, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 229, 19 L. Ed. 141; where it was said: "A contract to pay a certain number of dollars in gold or silver coins is nothing else than an agreement to deliver a certain weight of standard gold to be ascertained by a count of coins, each of which is certified to contain a definite proportion of that weight." This case was followed in Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619, 24 L. Ed. 740; Woodruff v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 291, 16 Sup. Ct. 820, 40 L. Ed. 973. In the last case it was said: "This court has held that parties may contract for the payment of an obligation in gold, or any other money or commodity, and it must then be paid in the medium contracted for." It has been pointed out in Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122, 41 N. E. 1097, 29 L. R. A. 593, note, that the rule in Bronson v. Rodes has not been affected in any way by the Legal Tender Cases in 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 20 L. Ed. 287. In Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 687, 20 L. Ed. 460, where a note in dollars was made payable in specie, it was held that the designated number of dollars must be paid in so many gold or silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, reversing the supreme court of Iowa, which had held that a tender of greenbacks or United States legal tender notes was sufficient.

In Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619, 24 L. Ed. 740, the party was entitled to recover a certain amount in gold coin; it was held that where the party, with the approbation of the court, takes judgment which might be discharged in currency, it should be entered for a sum in currency equivalent to the specified amount of that coin as bullion. A decision of a state court, which holds a tender of legal tender notes as valid in the payment of a contract payable only in specie, will be reviewed by the supreme court of the United States; Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 687, 20 L. Ed. 460. The doctrine of the latter court is therefore binding upon all the state courts.

A contract to pay a certain number of dollars in gold; Hittson v. Davenport, 4 Colo. 169; a draft for a certain number of gold dollars; Chrysler v. Renois, 43 N. Y. 209; a note payable "in gold or silver;" Phillips v. Dugan, 21 Ohio St. 466, 8 Am. Rep. 66; a ground rent payable in "gold or silver lawful money of the United States;" Rankin v. Demott, 61 Pa. 263; are all enforceable according to their terms. A ground rent payable in "gold or silver money of the United States" must be paid in coin or its equivalent; Rankin v. Demott, 61 Pa. 263. In this case Agnew, J., said that the distinction taken in the earlier Pennsylvania cases between contracts for a specific article and contracts for lawful money (coin or currency) had become unimportant since the decision in Bronson v. Rodes. In such cases it is held that payment in currency is to be computed upon the value of gold at the time of payment; Hittson v. Davenport, 4 Colo. 169. Where rent was payable "in current money of the State of New York equal in value to money of Great Britain," it was held that if payment was made in legal tender notes, the amount paid must equal the value of the stipulated amount of coin; Stranaghan v. Youmans, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 392.

Where an act authorized a city to issue negotiable bonds, it was held to authorize the issue of bonds payable in gold coin; Judson v. City of Bessemer, 87 Ala. 240, 6 South. 267, 4 L. R. A. 742; so of bonds "payable in gold coin of the present standard weight and fineness;" Moore v. Walla Walla, 60 Fed. 961. To the same effect, Pollard v. City of Pleasant Hill, 3 Dill. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 11,253; but, contra, of levee bonds which were issued payable "in gold coin," under an act which authorized the levee board to borrow money and issue its bonds therefor; Woodruff v. State, 66 Miss. 298, 6 South. 235. But this judgment was reversed by the supreme court of the United States (Woodruff v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 291, 16 Sup. Ct. 820, 40 L. Ed. 973), which held: That the inquiry as to the medium in which the bonds were payable raised a federal question and that the bonds were legally solvable in the money of the United States, whatever its description, and not in any particular kind of money, and that they were not void because of a want of power to issue them. Field, J., concurring, said that no transaction of commerce or business, etc., that is not immoral in its character, and which is not in its manifest purpose detrimental to society, can be declared invalid because made payable in gold coin or currency when that is established or recognized by the government.

An injunction will not lie to restrain the issue of municipal bonds payable "in gold or lawful money of the United States, at the option of the holder;" Heilbron v. City of Cuthbert, 96 Ga. 312, 23 S. E. 206. But where a statute authorized the issue of bonds payable "in gold coin or lawful money of the United States," an issue of bonds payable in gold coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness was held invalid; Skinner v. Santa Rosa, 107 Cal. 464, 40 Pac. 742, 29 L. R. A. 512.

In the absence of stipulation in the contract, a right to demand payment in coin will not be implied, although it appear that payment in coin was the only method of payment recognized by law when the contract was entered into and that the parties no doubt expected that payment would be made in coin; Maryland v. R. Co., 22 Wall. (U. S.) 105, 22 L. Ed. 713. So when the consideration in a note was a loan of gold and silver and there was no stipulation to pay in such money; Curiac v. Abadie, 25 Cal. 502.

An insurance company in an action against an agent who had collected premiums in gold; Independent Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 104 Mass. 192; and a hotel guest in an action against an innkeeper to recover for gold coin left at the inn for safe keeping; Kellogg v. Sweeney, 46 N. Y. 291, 7 Am. Rep. 333; are entitled to judgment in gold coin. In an action against an express company for failure to deliver gold coin which it received for transportation, judgment was entered in currency notes for the amount of the gold coin with the premium on gold added with interest from the date of demand; Cushing v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 98 Mass. 550. Where a person deposited both coin and treasury notes in a bank in 1861, it was held that the bank need not pay him in coin unless there was an express agreement to that effect; Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 663, 18 L. Ed. 704.

See LEGAL TENDER; MONEY.

GOLD CERTIFICATES. Issued by the secretary of the treasury, in denominations of not less than $10, against deposits of gold coin in sums of not less than $20. They are receivable for all public dues, may be reissued and when held by a national bank may be taken as part of its reserve. Act of March 2, 1911.

GOLDSMITH'S NOTES. In English Law. Banker's notes: so called because the trades of banker and goldsmith were originally joined. Chitty, Bills 423.

GOOD AND LAWFUL MEN. Those qualified to serve on juries; that is, those of full age, citizens, not infamous or non compos mentis; and they must be resident in the county where the venue is laid. Bacon, Abr. Juries (A); Cro. Eliz. 654; Co. 3d Inst. 30; 2 Rolle 82; Cam. & N. 38.

GOOD AND VALID. Legally firm: e. g. a good title. Adequate; responsible: e. g. his security is good for the amount of the debt. Webst. A note satisfies a warranty of it as a "good" note if the makers are able to pay it, and liable to do so on proper legal diligence being used against them; Hammond v. Chamberlin, 26 Vt. 406.

GOOD BEHAVIOR. Conduct authorized by law. Surety of good behavior may be demanded from any person who is justly suspected, upon sufficient grounds, of intending to commit a crime or misdemeanor. Surety for good behavior is somewhat similar to surety of the peace, but the recognizance is more easily forfeited, and it ought to be demanded with greater caution; Com. v. Davies, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 98; 14 Viner, Abr. 21; Dane, Abr. As to what is a breach of good behavior, see State v. Bell, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 683; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 61, s. 6; 1 Chitty, Pr. 676.

See SURETY OF THE PEACE.

A judge holding office for life also holds it during good behavior, dum se bene gesserit.

GOOD CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

GOOD FAITH. An honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscientious advantage of another, even through the forms or technicalities of law, together with an absence of all information or belief of facts which would render the transaction unconscientious. Wood v. Conrad, 2 S. D. 334, 50 N. W. 95. See Winters v. Haines, 84 Ill. 588; Rawson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200; Thornton v. Bledsoe, 46 Ala. 73; Bronner v. Loomis, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 442.

That honesty of intention and freedom from knowledge, of circumstances which ought to put him on inquiry, which protects a purchaser, holder, or creditor from being implicated in an effort by one with whom he is dealing to defraud some party in interest. Canal Bank v. Hudson, 111 U. S. 80, 4 Sup. Ct. 303, 28 L. Ed. 354.

Good faith, in a statute regulating chattel mortgages, and declaring unrecorded mortgages to be invalid as against purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, means such as parted with something of value, or otherwise altered their position irretrievably, on the strength of the apparent ownership, and without notice. Good faith in this connection means actual reliance upon the ownership of the vendor or mortgagor, because without notice of the incumbrance; National Bank of the Metropolis v. Sprague, 21 N. J. Eq. 536.

Good faith is presumed in favor of the holder of negotiable paper; Dresser v. Construction Co., 93 U. S. 94, 23 L. Ed. 815; Collins v. Gilbert, 94 U. S. 754, 24 L. Ed. 170; Marfield v. Douglass, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. 360; it is a presumption of law; Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 609, 6 Sup. Ct. 538, 29 L. Ed. 742; and outweighs a presumption of payment; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 107 Ind. 442, 8 N. E. 18, 9 N. E. 357, 57 Am. Rep. 120; and such holder takes the paper free from any infirmity in its origin except such as make it void for illegality of consideration or want of capacity in the maker; Bowditch v. Ins. Co., 141 Mass. 296, 4 N. E. 798, 55 Am. Rep. 474; Cromwell v. County of Sac, 96 U. S. 51, 24 L. Ed. 681. While the presumption of law is sufficient in the absence of evidence, if the good faith of a party is put in issue by his adversary, he has a right to give affirmative evidence of it; Macon County v. Shores, 97 U. S. 272, 24 L. Ed. 889; as, where his ownership of negotiable paper is put in issue, he may prove he became the owner in good faith; Ralls County v. Douglass, 105 U. S. 728, 26 L. Ed. 957. A person to whom the want of good faith is imputed in a statement shown to have been made by him may be asked if he believed this statement to be correct; Rawls v. Ins. Co., 27 N. Y. 282, 84 Am. Dec. 280. After proof of circumstances relied on as showing want of good faith by putting a person on inquiry, he may explain them by showing the reasons why he did not pursue the inquiry; Seybel v. Bank, 54 N. Y. 288, 13 Am. Rep. 583; and after stating the explanation received upon inquiry he may testify that he was satisfied with it; Jennings v. Conboy, 73 N. Y. 236. Where the knowledge of the third person is in issue proof of general reputation is sometimes competent as tending to show reasonable ground of belief or suspicion; Barrett v. Western, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 205. Good faith is not disproved by a forgotten conversation; Kenyon v. See, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 214.

One who has purchased for value and without notice, or his transferee, is termed a holder in good faith; McClure v. Oxford Tp., 94 U. S. 432, 24 L. Ed. 129.

A holder of a negotiable instrument in due course must have taken it in good faith. Neg. Instr. Act, § 52.

GOOD MORAL CHARACTER. The naturalization laws require that in order to be admitted to citizenship the applicant must, during his residence in the United States since his declaration of intention, have "behaved as a man of good moral character"; U. S. R. S. § 2165. What is a good moral character may vary in some respects in different times and places, but "it would seem that whatever is forbidden by the law of the land ought to be considered for the time being immoral within the purview of this statute;" In re Spenser, 5 Sawy. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 13,234. Accordingly, a person who commits perjury is not a man of good moral character, and is therefore not entitled to naturalization; id. But a distinction is drawn between acts which are mala in se and those which are mala prohibita; and it is said that a single act of the former grade is sufficient to establish immoral character, but only habitual acts of the latter character; id. It has been held that an alien who lives in a state of polygamy or believes that it may be rightfully practised in defiance of the laws to the contrary, is not a person of good moral character entitled to naturalization; Ex parte Douglass, cited in 2 Bright. Fed. Dig. 25, from 5 West. Jur. 171.

Under the English excise laws it was held that the mere fact that a man lived in a state of concubinage was not such an absence of good character as would justify his conviction under the excise law for making and using a certificate of good character knowing it to be false; 16 C. B. N. S. 584. "Good or bad character does not depend on what a man knows of himself; it means his general reputation in the estimation of his neighbors; . . . the fact of a man's living with a woman without marrying her may possibly admit of some palliating circumstances;" id.

As to what is good moral character under the Pennsylvania license law, it was held by Sulzberger, J., that the act "is not to be understood as setting up the highest ethical character. It means good moral character as it is used among men in the ordinary business of life, not that high type which ought to form the ideal of every virtuous person." Donoghue's License, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 1 (on appeal).

GOOD ORDER AND CONDITION. "The general statement in a bill of lading that goods have been shipped in 'good order and condition' amounts to an admission by the shipowner that, so far as he and his agents had the opportunity of judging, the goods were so shipped"; Carver, Carr. by Sea, sec. 73.

GOOD REPUTE. An expression synonymous with and meaning only "of good reputation." State v. Wheeler, 108 Mo. 658, 665, 18 S. W. 924.

GOOD TITLE. Such a title as a court of chancery would adopt as a sufficient ground for compelling specific performance, and such a title as would be a good answer to an action of ejectment by any claimant. 6 Exch. 873. See Gillespie v. Broas, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 370. One that would be accepted by a reasonably prudent man; Justice v. Button, 89 Neb. 367, 131 N. W. 736, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1; a marketable title; Fagan v. Hook, 134 Ia. 381, 105 N. W. 155, 111 N. W. 981; Moore v. Williams, 115 N. Y. 586, 22 N. E. 233, 5 L. R. A. 654, 12 Am. St. Rep. 844.

GOOD WILL. The benefit which arises from the establishment of a particular trade or occupation. The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stocks, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities, or prejudices. Story, Partn. § 99. See 16 Am. Jur. 87; 22 Beav. 84; Elliot's Appeal, 60 Pa. 161; 5 Russ. 29; Vonderbank v. Schmidt, 44 La. Ann. 264, 10 South. 616, 15 L. R. A. 462, 32 Am. St. Rep. 336.

The advantages which may inure to the purchaser from holding himself out to the public as succeeding to an enterprise which has been identified in the past with the name and repute of his predecessor. Knoedler v. Boussod, 47 Fed. 465.

"The term good will can hardly be said to have any precise signification. It is generally used to denote the benefit arising from connection and reputation; and its value is what can be got for the chance of being able to keep that connection and improve it. Upon the sale of an established business its good will has a marketable value, whether the business is that of a professional man or of any other person. But it is plain that good will has no meaning except in connection with a continuing business; it may have no value except in connection with a particular house, and it may be so inseparably connected with it as to pass with it, under a will, or deed, without being specially mentioned." Lindl. Partn., Wentworth's ed. 440.

"The good will . . . is nothing more than the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place." Per Eldon, C., in 17 Ves. 335; but this is said to be too narrow a definition by Wood, V. C., who said that the term meant every advantage . . . that has been acquired by the old firm in carrying on its business, whether connected with the premises in which the business was previously carried on, or with the name of the late firm, or with any other matter carrying with it the benefit of the late business. Johns. (Eng. Ch.) 174; and similar views were expressed in 2 Madd. 198. Many definitions are collected in People v. Roberts, 159 N. Y. 70, 80, 53 N. E. 685, 45 L. R. A. 126, by Vann, J., who concludes: "Good will embraces at least two elements, the advantage of continuing an established business in its old place, and of continuing it under the old style or name. While it is not necessarily local, it is usually to a great extent, and must, of necessity, be an incident to a place, an established business or a name known to the trade." In that case the good will of a foreign corporation engaged in business in New York was held to be taxable as capital employed in that state.

The point of the opinion of Lord Eldon in the case above cited, so much referred to, was that there is no implied covenant or promise on the part of the vendor or assignor of the good will of a business, not to set up the same trade, in opposition to the purchaser, in the neighborhood; accordingly an injunction to prevent him from doing so was refused; 17 Ves. 335. Since this case, the English decisions, after passing through a period of vacillation, seemed recently to have established the implied contract of one who simply sells the business and good will upon a much more substantial basis. It was held by Lord Romilly in Labouchere v. Dawson that an outgoing partner may not solicit the old customers privately by letter or by a travelling agent if he has sold the good will to his former partners. This went upon the principle that a grantor may not derogate from his grant. This was considered to have gone beyond any previous case and was overruled in Pearson v. Pearson, 27 Ch. D. 145, where Cotton, L. J., said: "It is admitted that a person who has sold the good will of his business may set up a similar business next door and say that he is the person that carried on the old business, yet such proceedings manifestly tend to prevent the old customers going to the old place." See 74 L. T. 343. Between the rendering of these judgments Jessel, M. R., had enjoined the solicitation of old customers but not the dealing with them; 14 Ch. D. 603; in that case good will is defined as "the formation of that connection which has made the value of the thing that the late firm sold," and is frequently the only thing saleable. This definition was quoted with approval by Lord Herschell in Trego v. Hunt, infra. Another decision of Jessel, M. R., restraining a former partner from dealing with old customers was reversed by the court of appeal, but the order in this case, restraining the solicitation, was not appealed from; the court said that "to enjoin a man against dealing with people whom he has not solicited is not only to enjoin him, but to enjoin them, for it prevents them from having the liberty which anybody in the country might have of dealing with whom they like;" 15 Ch. D. 306. But the court of appeal, affirming the same judge, held that on the compulsory sale of a good will in bankruptcy proceedings, the bankrupt would not be restrained from solicitation; 19 Ch. Div. 355; and this distinction has been characterized as inconsistent; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 480. All the decisions based upon Labouchere v. Dawson were overturned by the case in 27 Ch. D. 145, which was followed by 44 Ch. D. 616. But in Trego v. Hunt, [1896] App. Cas. 7, reversing [1895] 1 Ch. 462, the later decisions were overruled and the doctrine of Labouchere v. Dawson, was approved. There the good will remained with the old concern and the outgoing partner who had sold it to his former partner employed a clerk in the firm to keep the names and addresses of the firm's customers so that he might solicit their business on his own account. This the house of lords restrained him from doing. Lord MacNaghten designated the good will as "the very sap and life of the business, without which the business would yield little or no fruit," the result "of the reputation and connection of the firm which may have been built up by years of honest work or gained by lavish expenditure of money."

The vendor or retiring partner "may not sell the custom and steal away the customers. It is not an honest thing to pocket the price and then to recapture the subject of sale, to decoy it away or call it back before the purchaser has had time to attach it to himself and make it his very own." But "he may do everything that a stranger in the ordinary course of business would be in a position to do. He may set up where he will. He may push his wares as much as he pleases." In the same case it was said by Lord Davy, "that the idea of good will and what is comprised in the sale of business has silently been developed and grown since the days of Lord Eldon."

In Curl v. Webster, [1904] 1 Ch. 685, the rule of Trego v. Hunt was applied to all persons previously customers of the old business, even including those who without solicitation became customers of the vendor.

A brief but careful review of the fluctuations of the English cases concludes that without special covenants the measure of protection resulting from the sale of the good will is merely to prevent the vendor from soliciting his former customers, whether they have of their own accord become customers of the new competing firm or not, but he may deal with the old customers or set up a similar business next door, so long as he does not represent it to be the same business as the old one; 25 Can. L. T. & Rev. 484.

The question is frequently raised whether a covenant not to engage in the same business is violated by the covenantor's accepting employment from a rival in business of the covenantee. The test is found in the nature of the employment; Nelson v. Johnson, 38 Minn. 255, 36 N. W. 868; and in most cases such employment is held to be a breach, particularly when it is as manager, or in such capacity as will result in a substantial interference; Wilson v. Delaney, 137 Ia. 636, 113 N. W. 842; Boutelle v. Smith, 116 Mass. 111; Jefferson v. Market & Co., 112 Ga. 498, 37 S. E. 758; American Ice Co. v. Meckel, 109 App. Div. 93, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1060; Merica v. Burget, 36 Ind. App. 453, 75 N. E. 1083; 14 Ont. L. Rep. 685; and such an agreement was broken by engaging in business as trustee; Geiger v. Cawley, 146 Mich. 550, 109 N. W. 1064; and the court will see to it that the contract is complied with (as is said in varied terms in many cases) not only in letter but in spirit; Kramer v. Old, 119 N. C. 1, 25 S. E. 813, 34 L. R. A. 389, 56 Am. St. Rep. 650; Emery v. Bradley, 88 Me. 357, 34 Atl. 167; Finger v. Hahn, 42 N. J. Eq. 606, 8 Atl. 654; Siegel v. Marcus, 18 N. D. 214, 119 N. W. 358, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 769, and note. In the comparatively few cases where the employment has been held not to be a breach, it has been because the employment has been of such minor or unimportant character as not to occasion mischief; Grimm v. Warner, 45 Ia. 106; Battershell v. Bauer, 91 Ill. App. 181; or where the agreement was construed as only forbidding the engaging in a rival business as principal; Tabor v. Blake, 61 N. H. 83; or for profit as distinguished from salary; Haley Grocery Co. v. Haley, 8 Wash.

75, 35 Pac. 595; Eastern Express Co. v. Meserve, 60 N. H. 198.

In this country the expressions of the courts as to what is the precise effect of a sale of good will, without restrictive covenants, vary as much as might be expected from the indefinable nature of the subject. The opinion of Lord Eldon has been, in the main, very closely followed, though often criticised in both countries. Such a sale has been said to carry with it only the probability that the business will continue in the future as in the past; Bell v. Ellis, 33 Cal. 620; or the favor which the management has won from the public and the probability that the customers will continue their patronage; Chittenden v. Witbeck, 50 Mich. 401, 15 N. W. 526; and commend it to others; Myers v. Buggy Co., 54 Mich. 215, 19 N. W. 961, 20 N. W. 545, 52 Am. Rep. 811. It has been said that it amounts to nothing more than the right to succeed to the business and carry it on as a successor to the old concern; 33 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 217; and a federal court terms it "those advantages which may inure to the purchaser from holding himself out to the public as succeeding to an enterprise which has been identified in the past with the name and the repute of his predecessors;" Knoedler v. Boussod, 47 Fed. 467, affirmed Knoedler v. Glaenzer, 55 Fed. 895, 5 C. C. A. 305, 20 L. R. A. 733. The principle of Labouchere v. Dawson that the vendor would not be permitted to solicit trade from the customers of the old business may seem to be maintained in this country in cases prior to the English decisions; Palmer v. Graham, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 476; Angier v. Webber, 14 Allen (Mass.) 211, 92 Am. Dec. 748; Burckhardt v. Burckhardt, 36 Ohio St. 261; and in some later cases it was so held upon the ground that there was an implied contract not to solicit, or that by so doing the value of the thing sold was impaired; Foss v. Roby, 195 Mass. 292, 81 N. E. 199, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1200, 11 Ann. Cas. 571; Townsend v. Hurst, 37 Miss. 679; Ranft v. Reimers, 200 Ill. 386, 65 N. E. 720, 60 L. R. A. 291; Zanturjian v. Boornazian, 25 R. I. 151, 55 Atl. 199; but other courts have held that the vendor is not barred from soliciting his old customers; Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 50 N. W. 446, 14 L. R. A. 161; Cottrell v. Mfg. Co., 54 Conn. 122, 6 Atl. 791; Close v. Flesher, 8 Misc. 299, 28 N. Y. Supp. 737. The rule against canvassing old customers applies in cases of partners; Althen v. Vreeland (N. J.) 36 Atl. 479; contra; Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. Wagon Works, 82 Wis. 546, 52 N. W. 595, 16 L. R. A. 453, 33 Am. St. Rep. 72; Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 50 N. W. 446, 14 L. R. A. 161; but not in case of a sale for benefit of creditors; Iowa Seed Co. v. Dorr, 70 Ia. 481, 30 N. W. 866, 59 Am. Rep. 446; or where the firm is dissolved by death and at a sale forced by the administrator of the deceased partner the good will is sold as part of the assets; Hutchinson v. Nay, 187 Mass. 262, 72 N. E. 974, 68 L. R. A. 186, 105 Am. St. Rep. 390; nor has the vendor the right to hold himself out as the successor of the old firm or as continuing its business; Appeal of Hall, 60 Pa. 458, 100 Am. Dec. 584; Dwight v. Hamilton, 113 Mass. 175; Knoedler v. Boussod, 47 Fed. 465; affirmed, Knoedler v. Glaenzer, 55 Fed. 895, 5 C. C. A. 305, 20 L. R. A. 733; Smith v. Gibbs, 44 N. H. 335; 3 L. T. N. S. 447; 11 id. 299; but, in the absence of express contract to the contrary, he may set up a similar business; Bergamini v. Bastian, 35 La. Ann. 60, 48 Am. Rep. 216; Washburn v. Dosch, 68 Wis. 436, 32 N. W. 551, 60 Am. Rep. 873; Bassett v. Percival, 5 Allen (Mass.) 345; White v. Trowbridge, 216 Pa. 11, 64 Atl. 862; Jackson v. Byrnes, 103 Tenn. 698, 54 S. W. 984; Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 50 N. W. 446, 14 L. R. A. 161; Hoxie v. Chaney, 143 Mass. 592, 10 N. E. 713, 58 Am. Rep. 149; Rupp v. Over, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 133; Moreau v. Edwards, 2 Tenn. Ch. 347 (but in this case there was no conveyance of the good will in terms).

Competition may, however, be prohibited without express covenant, if from the nature of the business an agreement to refrain from it is naturally implied; Wentzel v. Barbin, 189 Pa. 502, 42 Atl. 44; as in the sale of his practice by a physician; Dwight v. Hamilton, 113 Mass. 175; or engaging in competition would necessarily derogate from the grant; Gordon v. Knott, 199 Mass. 173, 85 N. E. 184, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762; as to establish a newspaper of the same name; Lawrence v. Printing Co., 90 Fed. 24; or if there was an agreement not to do anything in conflict with the transfer; Hitchcock v. Anthony, 83 Fed. 779, 28 C. C. A. 80. The vendor may bind himself not to engage in the same business within a limited time or distance, by express covenant, which, if reasonable, is valid. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

The question has been much discussed whether good will is an incident of the business, of the premises, or of the person. It has been held in the case of a stand in a public market to be personal and not local; Succession of Journe, 21 La. Ann. 391; 25 L. J. N. S. 194; but it is said to be the general rule that the good will is an incident of the premises; Appeal of Elliot, 60 Pa. 161; Mitchell v. Read, 84 N. Y. 556; Bergamini v. Bastian, 35 La. Ann. 60, 48 Am. Rep. 216; and a devise of real estate, on which a business is located, and its stock and equipment passed the good will as an incident; Bradbury v. Wells, 138 Ia. 673, 115 N. W. 880, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240; or, at least, the good will of a newspaper is not to be treated as of value apart from the plant and ownership of the business itself; Seabrook v. Grimes, 107 Md. 410, 68 Atl. 883, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483, 126 Am. St. Rep. 400; but where a widow carried on the business of a licensed victualler on leased premises and assigned all her goods, stock in trade, etc., without mentioning the good will, in trust prior to her second marriage, the good will passed by the assignment as an incident to the stock and license, and not to the husband with the premises; 6 Beav. 269. It is said that good will is only an incident, as connected with a going concern, of business having locality or name, and is not susceptible of being disposed of independently; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Despatch Co., 149 U. S. 436, 13 Sup. Ct. 944, 37 L. Ed. 799. See Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Despatch Co., 36 Fed. 722. So in [1901] A. C. 217, holding that the statutory phrase "property locally outside of the United Kingdom" may include good will, after premising that the term is difficult to define, the court said that it is property that has no independent existence, "it must be attached to a business" and "the attribute of locality" is involved in it.

To this variety of expressions may be added the decision of a federal court that good will is property and may have an independent value without reference to tangible property or locality, and stock of a corporation may be issued for it; Washburn v. Wall Paper Co., 81 Fed. 17, 26 C. C. A. 312; and in New York it was held that the good will of a business may be sold where no material "plant" is involved in the transaction; Brett v. Ebel, 29 App. Div. 256, 51 N. Y. Supp. 573; or where the calling is one which is followed without a business plant; Wood v. Whitehead Bros. Co., 165 N. Y. 545, 59 N. E. 357.

As between partners, it has been held that the good will of a partnership trade survives; 5 Ves. 539; but this appears to be doubtful; 15 Ves. 227; and is not in accord with modern authorities; 27 Beav. 446. A distinction in this respect has been suggested between commercial and professional partnerships; 3 Madd. 79; 2 De G. & J. 626; but see 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 10, where the distinction is said to be untenable. It has been held that the firm name constitutes a part of the good will of a partnership; 6 Hare 325; contra, Howe v. Searing, 19 How Pr. (N. Y.) 14. Where a partner sells out his share in a going concern, he is presumed to include the good will; Johns. (Eng. Ch.) 174; certainly so where he acquiesces in the retention of the old place of business, and its future conduct by the other partners under the old name; Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 9 Sup. Ct. 143, 32 L. Ed. 526; and he cannot use the firm name in a business of like character carried on by him in the vicinity; Brass & Iron Works Co. v. Payne, 50 Ohio St. 115, 33 N. E. 88, 19 L. R. A. 82; or a name so similar to that of the first as to mislead and draw off business; Myers v. Buggy Co., 54 Mich. 215, 19 N. W. 961, 20 N. W. 545, 52 Am. Rep. 811. When a partnership is dissolved by death, bankruptcy, or otherwise, the good will is an asset of the firm, and should be sold and the proceeds distributed among the partners; 15 Ves. 218; Holden's Adm'rs v. McMakin, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 270. In such case the sale of the good will may include the right to use the old firm name which is inseparable from it and part of the assets; Slater v. Slater, 175 N. Y. 143, 67 N. E. 224, 61 L. R. A. 796, 96 Am. St. Rep. 605; Snyder Mfg. Co. v. Snyder, 54 Ohio St. 86, 43 N. E. 325, 31 L. R. A. 657; though in New York it had been earlier decided otherwise; Mason v. Dawson, 15 Misc. 595, 37 N. Y. Supp. 90; but in this case the question did not arise in a precisely similar manner. On the death of a partner the good will does not go to the survivor, unless by express agreement; 22 Beav. 84; 26 L. J. N. S. 391. It has been held, however, that on the dissolution of a partnership by the death of one of its members, the surviving partners may carry on the same line of business, at the same place, without liability to account to the legal representative of the deceased partner for the good will of the firm, in the absence of their own agreement to the contrary; Lobeck v. Hardware Co., 37 Neb. 158, 55 N. W. 650, 23 L. R. A. 795. And where on the death of a partner the business was sold to a corporation organized to carry it on, there remained nothing to be accounted for to the estate of the deceased partner, the good will passing with the property under the sale; Didlake v. Roden Grocery, 160 Ala. 484, 49 South. 384, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907, 18 Ann. Cas. 430. The dissolution of the firm during the life time of all the partners gives each of them the right to use the firm name; 34 Beav. 566; contra, Williams v. Wilson, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 379; 35 Am. Rep. 546 note.

The good will of a trade or business is a valuable right of property; Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450; 10 Exch. 147; Howard v. Taylor, 90 Ala. 244, 8 South. 36; 2 Ves. & B. 218; 16 Harv. L. R. 135; it is an asset of the business; Wallingford v. Burr, 17 Neb. 137, 22 N. W. 350; or of a partnership; 27 Beav. 456; or of a corporation; Washburn v. Paper Co., 81 Fed. 17, 26 C. C. A. 312; or of a decedent; Succession of Journe, 21 La. Ann. 391; but it does not include the use of the name of a deceased person, though the good will of the business is an asset to be accounted for; In re Randell's Estate, 2 Cow. Surr. 29, 8 N. Y. Supp. 652. It may be bequeathed by will; 27 Beav. 446. It may be sold like other personal property; see 3 Mer. 452; 1 J. & W. 589; 2 B. & Ad. 341; McFarland v. Stewart, 2 Watts (Pa.) 111, 26 Am. Dec. 109; 1 S. & S. 74; Carruthers & Murray v. McMurray, 75 Ia. 173, 39 N. W. 255; Appeal of Musselman, 62 Pa. 81, 1 Am. Rep. 382.

The good will of a liquor business is an asset to be sold with fixtures and the unexpired term of the lease; Aschenbach v.

Carey, 224 Pa. 303, 73 Atl. 435. The right to use a name on a medicine may be assigned to an outgoing partner or to a successor in business, as an incident to its good will; Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 139 U. S. 540, 11 Sup. Ct. 625, 35 L. Ed. 247. In the United States the subject of good will has in the original technical sense less relative prominence than in England, but the subject has developed very great importance in connection with the use of trademarks and trade names, which titles see.

A good will may be mortgaged, assigned, or taken in execution, in connection with the business; id.; 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 79; and passes under a general description in a mortgage of a newspaper plant; Vinall v. Hendricks, 33 Ind. App. 413, 71 N. E. 682, or a lease; Lane v. Smythe, 46 N. J. Eq. 443, 19 Atl. 199; or a conditional sale of one; Boon v. Moss, 70 N. Y. 465; but not if dependent on the ability and skill of the proprietor; 25 Ch. D. 472; Slack v. Suddoth, 102 Tenn. 375, 52 S. W. 180, 45 L. R. A. 589, 73 Am. St. Rep. 881; or not necessarily connected with the establishment itself; MacMartin v. Stevens, 37 Wash. 616, 79 Pac. 1099.

The good will passes under a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, though not specifically mentioned; Lothrop Pub. Co. v. Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., 191 Mass. 353, 77 N. E. 841, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1077; Iowa Seed Co. v. Dorr, 70 Ia. 481, 30 N. W. 866, 59 Am. Rep. 446; Wilmer v. Thomas, 74 Md. 485, 22 Atl. 403, 13 L. R. A. 380; Hegeman v. Hegeman, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 1; Bank of Tomah v. Warren, 94 Wis. 151, 68 N. W. 549; but although the good will passed, the members of the assigning firm could afterwards use trademarks consisting of words and pictures, to such limited extent as not to impair the good will of the business in the hands of the receiver; Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. Wagon Works, 82 Wis. 546, 52 N. W. 595, 16 L. R. A. 453, 33 Am. St. Rep. 72. The vendor of a business and good will who stipulates against carrying on the business in the same place, may be enjoined from doing so as the agent of another; Emery v. Bradley, 88 Me. 357, 34 Atl. 167; but individual stockholders are not bound by a contract for the sale of the good will of a corporation, although as agents of the latter they sold the business; Hall's Safe Co. v. Safe Co., 146 Fed. 37, 76 C. C. A. 495, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1182. The purchaser who finds there is no good will is without remedy unless he can show fraudulent representation or suppression of fact by the vendor; Johnson v. Friedhoff, 7 Misc. Rep. 484, 27 N. Y. Supp. 982.

The purchaser of a good will and firm name is entitled to receive letters and telegrams addressed to it and to the advantage of business propositions from customers of the old firm contained in them; J. G. Mattingly Co. v. Mattingly, 96 Ky. 430, 27 S. W. 985.

The measure of damages for the breach of a contract of sale of good will is the loss suffered by the vendee, not the profits made by the vendor; Gregory v. Spieker, 110 Cal. 150, 42 Pac. 576, 52 Am. St. Rep. 70.

English courts have adopted an arbitrary rule of limiting the value of good will to one year's purchase of the net annual profits, calculated on an average of three years; 28 Beav. 453; or that three years' net profits represents the value of good will; 75 L. T. Rep. 371; but it was said that American courts had not adopted it; Von Au v. Magenheimer, 115 App. Div. 84, 100 N. Y. Supp. 659, where an attempt was made to prescribe a rule for ascertaining the value of a good will by multiplying the average annual net profits for a suitable number of years with reference to the business. It would seem, however, difficult to deal with the question of value, where it arises, otherwise than to leave it to be determined as other matters of fact. See 20 Harv. L. Rev. 235. In estimating its value it is proper to consider the continued use of the firm name as an element; Moore v. Rawson, 199 Mass. 493, 85 N. E. 586.

See, generally, 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 1, 329, 649, 713; 33 id. 216; 30 Cent. L. J. 155; 34 Sol. J. 294; Lindl. Partn. Wentworth's ed. 440–9; Allan, Law of Goodwill.

GOODS. In Contracts. The term goods is not so wide as chattels, for it applies to inanimate objects, and does not include animals or chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, which chattels does include. Co. Litt. 118; 1 Russ. 376.

Goods will not include fixtures; 4 J. B. Moore 73; a subscription for stock; Webb v. R. Co., 77 Md. 92, 26 Atl. 113, 39 Am. St. Rep. 396; or teams and wagons, notes and accounts due; Van Patten v. Leonard, 55 Ia. 520, 8 N. W. 334. In a more limited sense, goods is used for articles of merchandise; 2 Bla. Com. 389. It has been held in Massachusetts that promissory notes were within the term goods in the Statute of Frauds; Baldwin v. Williams, 3 Metc. 365; but see Whittemore v. Gibbs, 24 N. H. 484; so stock or shares of an incorporated company; Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 9; Colvin v. Williams, 3 H. & J. (Md.) 38, 5 Am. Dec. 417; North v. Forest, 15 Conn. 400; so, in some cases, bank notes and coin; Citizens' Bank v. Steamboat Co., 2 Sto. 52, Fed. Cas. No. 2,730; U. S. v. Moulton, 5 Mas. 537, Fed. Cas. No. 15,827; Rogers v. Morton, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 486. The word "goods" is always used to designate wares, commodities, and personal chattels; the word effects is the equivalent of the word movables; Appeal of Vandergrift, 83 Pa. 126.

In Wills. In wills goods is nomen generalissimum, and, if there is nothing to limit it, will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as stocks, bonds, notes, money, plate, furniture, etc.; 1 Atk. 180; 1 P. Wms. 267; 1 Bro. C. C. 128; 4 Russ. 370; Wms. Ex. 1014; 1 Rop. Leg. 250; but in general it will be limited by the context of the will; see 2 Belt, Suppl. Ves. 287; 1 Ves. 63; Jackson v. Vanderspreigle's Ex'r, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 142, 1 L. Ed. 118; Sugd. Vend. 493. See 1 Jarm. Wills 751; and the titles BIENS; CHATTELS; FURNITURE.

GOODS AND CHATTELS. In Contracts. A term which includes not only personal property in possession, but choses in action and chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, or emblements. 12 Co. 1; 1 Atk. 182; Co. Litt. 118; 1 Russ. 376; see Kirkland v. Brune, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 131; it includes railroad ties; Russell v. Ry. Co., 39 Minn. 145, 39 N. W. 302.

A merchant's stock in trade is "goods and chattels permanently located," provided such goods and chattels are taxable in the city or county where they are so located; Hopkins v. Baker, 78 Md. 363, 28 Atl. 284, 22 L. R. A. 477.

In Criminal Law. Choses in action, as bank notes, mortgage deeds, and money, do not fall within the technical definition of "goods and chattels." And if described in an indictment as goods and chattels, these words may be rejected as surplusage; Eastman v. Com., 4 Gray (Mass.) 416; State v. Calvin, 22 N. J. Law 207; 3 Cox, Cr. Cas. 460; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 450; 1 Dearsl. & B. 426; 1 Leach 241, 4th ed. 468. See U. S. v. Moulton, 5 Mas. (U. S.) 537, Fed. Cas. No. 15,827.

In Wills. If unrestrained, these words will pass all personal property; Wms. Ex. 1014 Am. notes. See 1 Jarm. Wills 751; Add. Contr. 31, 201, 912; Beach, Wills 470.

GOODS SOLD AND DELIVERED. A phrase used to designate the action of assumpsit brought when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.

A sale, delivery, and the value of the goods must be proved. See ASSUMPSIT.

GOODS, WARES, AND MERCHANDISE. A phrase used in the Statute of Frauds. Fixtures do not come within it; 1 Cr. M. & R. 275. Growing crops of potatoes, corn, turnips, and other annual crops, are within it; 4 M. & W. 347; contra, 2 Taunt. 38. See Addison, Contr. 31; Blackb. Sales §§ 4, 5; Craddock v. Riddlesbarger, 2 Dana (Ky.) 206; Stambaugh v. Yeates, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 161; 10 Ad. & E. 753. As to when growing crops are part of the realty and when personal property, see 1 Washb. R. P. 3. A contract for the sale of apples, peaches, and blackberries which might be raised during certain years, are chattels personal and not within the statute; Smock v. Smock, 37 Mo. App. 56. Promissory notes and shares in an incorporated company, and, in some cases, money and bank-notes, have been held within it; see 2 Pars. Contr. 330; and so have a bond and mortgage; Greenwood v. Law, 55 N. J. L. 168, 26 Atl. 134, 19 L. R. A. 688; Bernhardt v. Walls, 29 Mo. App. 206. Within the meaning of the tariff laws "goods, wares and merchandise" do not include a quantity of waste material; Shaw v. Dix, 72 Fed. 166. Fruit, imported into this country, which decays on the voyage, was held not goods, wares and merchandise; Lawder v. Stone, 187 U. S. 281, 23 Sup. Ct. 79, 47 L. Ed. 178; the term "merchandise" as used in the revised statutes of the United States includes goods, wares, and chattels of every description capable of being imported; R. S. § 2766. See Pratt v. Miller, 109 Mo. 78, 18 S. W. 965, 32 Am. St. Rep. 656.

The cases which have considered that the rule for distinguishing goods, wares and merchandise from work and labor under the 17th section of statute of frauds have been grouped under three rules, under one of which usually any case may be classified. The English rule was that, if the transaction results in the sale of a chattel, the contract is within the statute. The New York rule is that, if the subject matter was in existence at the time of the contract, the transaction is within the statute, otherwise not; and the Massachusetts rule is that, if the article be such as the manufacturer makes in the ordinary course of his business, the contract is within the statute, otherwise not.

The English rule was applied in 1 B. & S. 272, in which a set of artificial teeth manufactured by a dentist was declared to be merchandise. The New York rule was laid down in Crookshank v. Burrell, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 58, 9 Am. Dec. 187, and Parsons v. Loucks, 48 N. Y. 17, 8 Am. Rep. 517. The Massachusetts rule was laid down in Mixer v. Howarth, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 205, 32 Am. Dec. 256.

A more recent test has been laid down in some cases to the effect that, if the article when manufactured is fit for the general market, it is merchandise; otherwise, if it is of such peculiar construction as to be of value only to the particular person ordering it; Puget Sound Mach. Depot v. Rigby, 13 Wash. 264, 43 Pac. 39; Orman v. Hagar, 3 N. Mex. 568, 9 Pac. 363; Pratt v. Miller, 109 Mo. 78, 18 S. W. 965, 32 Am. St. Rep. 656.

GORGE. A defile between hills or mountains, that is a narrow throat or outlet from a region of country. Gibbs v. Williams, 25 Kan. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 241.

GOUT. In Medical Jurisprudence. A nutritional disorder associated with an excessive formation of uric acid, and characterized by attacks of acute inflammation of the joints, by the gradual deposit of urate of sodium in and about the joints, and by the occurrence of irregular constitutional symptoms. Osler, Practice of Med.

In case of insurance on lives, when there is warranty of health, it seems that a man subject to the gout is capable of being insured, if he has no sickness at the time to make it an unequal contract; 2 Park, Ins. 650.

GOVERNMENT (Lat. gubernaculum, a rudder. The Romans compared the state to a vessel, and applied the term gubernator, helmsman, to the leader or actual ruler of a state. From the Latin, this word has passed into most of the modern European languages). That institution or aggregate of institutions by which a state makes and carries out those rules of action which are necessary to enable men to live in a social state, or which are imposed upon the people forming a state.

We understand, in modern political science, by state, in its widest sense, an independent society, acknowledging no superior, and by the term government, that institution or aggregate of institutions by which that society makes and carries out those rules of action which are necessary to enable men to live in a social state, or which are imposed upon the people forming that society by those who possess the power or authority of prescribing them. Government is the aggregate of authorities which rule a society. By administration, again, we understand in modern times, and especially in more or less free countries, the aggregate of those persons in whose hands the reins of government are for the time-being (the chief ministers or heads of departments). But the terms state, government, and administration are not always used in their strictness. The government of a state being its most prominent feature, which is most readily perceived, government has frequently been used for state; and the publicists of the last century almost always used the term government, or form of government, when they discussed the different political societies or states. On the other hand, government is often used, to this day, for administration, in the sense in which it has been explained. We shall give in this article a classification of all governments and political societies which have existed and exist to this day.

Governments, or the authorities of societies, are, like societies themselves, grown institutions. See INSTITUTION.

They are never actually created by agreement or compact. Even where portions of government are formed by agreement, as, for instance, when a certain family is called to rule over a country, the contracting parties must previously be conscious of having authority to do so. As society originates with the family, so does authority or government. Nowhere do men exist without authority among them, even though it were but in its mere incipiency. Men are forced into this state of things by the fundamental law that with them, and with them alone of all mammals, the period of dependence of the young upon its parents outlasts by many years the period of lactation; so that, during this period of post-lactational dependence, time and opportunity are given for the development of affection and the habit of obedience on the one hand, and of affection and authority on the other, as well as of mutual dependence. The family is a society, and expands into clusters of families, into tribes and larger societies, collecting into communities, always carrying the habit and necessity of authority and mutual support along with them. As men advance, the great and pervading law of mutual dependence shows itself more and more clearly, and acts more and more intensely. Man is eminently a social being, not only as to an instinctive love of aggregation, not only as to material necessity and security, but also as to mental and affectional development, and not only as to a given number of existing beings, or what we will call as to extent, but also as to descent of generation after generation, or, as we may call it, transmission. Society, and its government along with it, are continuous. Government exists and continues among men, and laws have authority for generations which neither made them nor had any direct representation in making them, because the necessity of government—necessary according to the nature of social man and to his wants—is a continuous necessity. But the family is not only the institution from which once, at a distant period, society, authority, government arose. The family increases in importance, distinctness, and intensity of action as man advances, and continues to develop authority, obedience, affection, and social adhesiveness, and thus acts with reference to the state as the feeder acts with reference to the canal; the state originates daily anew in the family.

Although man is an eminently social being, he is also individual, morally, intellectually, and physically; and though his individuality may endure even beyond this life, he is compelled, by his physical condition, to appropriate and to produce, and thus to imprint his individuality upon the material world around, to create property. But man is not only an appropriating and producing, he is also an exchanging being. He always exchanges and always intercommunicates. This constant intertwining of man's individualism and socialism creates mutual claims of protection, rights, the necessity of rules, of laws: in one word, as individuals and as natural members of society, men produce and require government. No society, no cluster of men, no individuals banded together even for a temporary purpose, can exist without some sort of government instantly springing up. Government is natural to men and characteristic. No animals have a government; no authority exists among them; instinct and physical submission alone exist among them. Man alone has laws which ought to be obeyed but may be disobeyed. Expansion, accumulation, development, progress, relapses, disintegration, violence, error, superstition, the necessity of intercommunication, wealth and poverty, peculiar disposition, temperament, configuration of the country, traditional types, pride and avarice, knowledge and ignorance, sagacity of individuals, taste, activity and sluggishness, noble or criminal bias, position, both geographical and chronological,—all that affects numbers of men affects their governments, and an endless variety of governments and political societies has been the consequence; but, whatever form of government may present itself to us, the fundamental idea, however rudely conceived, is always the protection of society and its members, security of property and person, the administration of justice therefor, and the united efforts of society to furnish the means to authority to carry out its objects,—contribution, which, viewed as imposed by authority, is taxation. Those bands of robbers which occasionally have risen in disintegrating societies, as in India, and who merely robbed and devastated, avowing that they did not mean to administer justice or protect the people, form no exception, although the extent of their soldiery and the periodicity of their raids caused them to be called governments. What little of government continued to exist was still the remnant of the communal government of the oppressed hamlets; while the robbers themselves could not exist without a government among themselves.

Aristotle classified governments according to the seat of supreme power, and he has been generally followed down to very recent times. Accordingly, we had Monarchy, that government in which the supreme power is vested in one man, to which was added, at a later period, the idea of hereditariness. Aristocracy, the government in which the supreme power is vested in the ἄριστοι, which does not mean, in this case, the best, but the excelling ones, the prominent, i. e. by property and influence. Privilege is its characteristic. Its corresponding degenerate government is the Oligarchy (from ὀλίγος, little, few), that government in which supreme power is exercised by a few privileged ones, who generally have arrogated the power. Democracy, that government in which supreme power is vested in the people at large. Equality is one of its characteristics. Its degenerate correspondent is the Ochlocracy (from ὄχλος, the rabble), for which at present the barbarous term mobocracy is frequently used.

But this classification was insufficient even at the time of Aristotle, when, for instance, theocracies existed; nor is the seat of supreme power the only characteristic, nor, in all respects, by any means the chief characteristic. A royal government, for instance, may be less absolute than a republican government. In order to group together the governments and political societies which have existed and are still existing, with philosophical discrimination, we must pay attention to the chief-power-holder (whether he be one or whether there are many), to the pervading spirit of the administration or wielding of the power, to the characteristics of the society or the influencing interests of the same, to the limitation or entirety of public power, to the peculiar relations of the citizen to the state. Indeed, every principle, relation, or condition characteristically influencing or shaping society or government in particular may furnish us with a proper division. We propose, then, the following

Grouping of Political Societies and Governments.

I. According to the supreme power-holder or the placing of supreme power, whether really or nominally so.

The power-holder may be one, a few, many, or all; and we have, accordingly:

A. Principalities, that is, states the rulers of which are set apart from the ruled, or inherently differ from the ruled, as in the case of the theocracy.
  1. Monarchy.
    a. Patriarchy.
    b. Chieftain government (as our Indians).
    c. Sacerdotal monarchy (as the States of the Church; former sovereign bishoprics).
    d. Kingdom, or Principality proper.
    e. Theocracy (Jehovah was the chief magistrate of the Israelitic state).
  2. Dyarchy. It exists in Siam, and existed occasionally in the Roman empire; not in Sparta, because Sparta was a republic, although her two hereditary generals were called kings.

B. Republic.
  1. Aristocracy.
    a. Aristocracy proper.
      aa. Aristocracies which are democracies within the body of aristocrats (as former Polish government).
      bb. Organic internal government (as Venice formerly).
    b. Oligarchy.
    c. Sacerdotal republic, or Hierarchy.
    d. Plutocracy; if, indeed, we adopt this term from antiquity for a government in which it is the principle that the possessors of great wealth constitute the body of aristocrats.
  2. Democracy.
    a. Democracy proper.
    b. Ochlocracy (Mob-rule), mob meaning unorganized multitude.

II. According to the unity of public power, or its division and limitation.

A. Unrestricted power, or absolutism.
  1. According to the form of government.
    a. Absolute monarchy, or despotism.
    b. Absolute aristocracy (Venice); absolute sacerdotal aristocracy, etc. etc. etc.
    c. Absolute democracy (the government of the Agora or market democracy).
  2. According to the organization of the administration.
    a. Centralized absolutism. Centralism, called bureaucracy when carried on by writing: at least, bureaucracy has very rarely existed, if ever, without centralism.
    b. Provincial (satraps, pashas, pro-consuls).

B. According to divisions of public power.
  1. Governments in which the three great functions of public power are separate, viz., the legislative, executive, judiciary. If a distinct term contradistinguished to centralism be wanted, we might call these co-operative governments.
  2. Governments in which these branches are not strictly separate, as, for instance, in our government, but which are nevertheless not centralized governments; as Republican Rome, Athens, and several modern kingdoms.

C. Institutional government.
  1. Institutional government comprehending the whole, or constitutional government.
    a. Deputative government.
    b. Representative government.
      aa. Bicameral.
      bb. Unicameral.
  2. Local self-government. See V. We do not believe that any substantial self-government can exist without an institutional character and subordinate self-governments. It can exist only under an institutional government (see Lieber's Civil Liberty and Self-Government, under "Institution").

D. Whether the state is the substantive or the means, or whether the principle of socialism or individualism preponderates.
  1. Socialism, that state of society in which the socialist principle prevails, or in which government considers itself the substantive; the ancient states absorbing the individual or making citizenship the highest phase of humanity; absolutism of Louis XIV. Indeed, all modern absolutism is socialistic.
  2. Individualism, that system in which the state remains acknowledged a means, and the individual the substantive; where primary claims, that is, rights, are felt to exist, for the obtaining and protection of which the government is established,—the government, or even society, which must not attempt to absorb the individual. The individual is immortal, and will be of another world; the state is neither.

III. According to the descent or transfer of supreme power.

A. Hereditary governments.
  Monarchies.
  Aristocracies.
  Hierarchies, etc.

B. Elective.
  Monarchies.
  Aristocracies.
  Hierarchies.

C. Hereditary—elective—governments, the rulers of which are chosen from a certain family or tribe.

D. Governments in which the chief magistrate or monarch has the right to appoint the successor; as occasionally the Roman emperors, the Chinese, the Russian, in theory, Bonaparte when consul for life.

IV. According to the origin of supreme power, real or theoretical.

A. According to the primordial character of power.
  1. Based on jus divinum.
    a. Monarchies.
    b. Communism, which rests its claims on a jus divinum or extra-political claim of society.
    c. Democracies, when proclaiming that the people, because the people, can do what they list, even against the law; as the Athenians once declared it, and Napoleon III. when he desired to be elected president a second time against the constitution.
  2. Based on the sovereignty of the people.
    a. Establishing an institutional government, as with us.

b. Establishing absolutism (the Bonaparte sovereignty).

B. Delegated power.

1. Chartered governments.
   a. Chartered city governments.
   b. Chartered companies, as the reform great East India Company.
   c. Proprietary governments.
2. Vice-Royalties; as Egypt, and, formerly, Algiers.
3. Colonial government with constitution and high amount of self-government,—a government of great importance in modern history.

V. Constitutions. (To avoid too many sub-divisions, this subject has been treated here separately. See II.)

Constitutions, the fundamental laws on which governments rest, and which determine the relation in which the citizen stands to the government, as well as each portion of the government to the whole, and which therefore give feature to the political society, may be:

A. As to their origin.

1. Accumulative: as the constitutions of England or Republican Rome.
2. Enacted constitutions (generally, but not philosophically, called written constitutions).
   a. Octroyed constitutions (as the French, by Louis XVIII.).
   b. Enacted by the people, as our constitutions. ["We the people charter governments; formerly governments chartered the liberties of the people."]
3. Pacts between two parties, contracts, as Magna Charta, and most charters in the Middle Ages. The medieval rule was that as much freedom was enjoyed as it was possible to conquer,—expugnare in the true sense.

B. As to extent or uniformity.

1. Broadcast over the land. We may call them national constitutions, popular constitutions, constitutions for the whole state.
2. Special charters. Chartered, accumulated and varying franchises, medieval character.

(See article Constitution in the Encyclopædia Americana.)

VI. As to the extent and comprehension of the chief government.

A. Military governments.

1. Commercial government; one of the first in Asia, and that into which Asiatic society relapses, as the only remaining element, when barbarous conquerors destroy all bonds which can be torn by them.
2. Tribal government.
   a. Stationary.
   b. Nomadic. We mention the nomadic government under the tribal government, because no other government has been nomadic, except the patriarchal government, which indeed is the incipiency of the tribal government.
3. City government (that is, city-states; as all free states of antiquity, and as the Hanseatic governments in modern times).
4. Government of the Medieval Orders extending over portions of societies far apart; as the Templars, Teutonic Knights, Knights of St. John, Political societies without necessary territory, although they had always landed property.
5. National states; that is, populous political societies spreading over an extensive and cohesive territory beyond the limits of a city.

B. Confederacies.

1. As to admission of members, or extension.
   a. Closed, as the Amphictyonic council, Germany.
   b. Open, as ours.
2. As to the federal character, or the character of the members, as states.
   a. Leagues.
      aa. Tribal confederacies; frequently observed in Asia; generally of a loose character.
      bb. City leagues; as the Hanseatic League, the Lombard League.
      cc. Congress of deputies, voting by states and according to instruction; as the Netherlands republic and our Articles of Confederation, Germanic Confederation.
      dd. Present "state system of Europe" (with constant congresses, if we may call this "system," a federative government in its incipiency.)
   b. Confederacies proper, with national congress.
      aa. With ecclesiæ or democratic congress (Achæan League).
      bb. With representative national congress, as ours.

C. Mere agglomerations of one ruler.

1. As the early Asiatic monarchies, or Turkey.
2. Several crowns on one head; as Austria, Sweden, Denmark.

VII. As to the construction of society, the title of property and allegiance.

A. As to the classes of society.

1. Castes, hereditarily dividing the whole population, according to occupations and privileges. India, ancient Egypt.
2. Special castes.
   a. Government with privileged classes or caste; nobility.
   b. Government with degraded or oppressed caste; slavery.
   c. Governments founded on equality of citizens (the uniform tendency of modern civilization).

B. As to property and production.

1. Communism.
2. Individualism.

C. As to allegiance.

1. Plain, direct; as in unitary governments.
2. Varied; as in national confederacies.
3. Graduated or encapsulated; as in the feudal system, or as in the case with the serf.

D. Governments are occasionally called according to the prevailing interest or classes; as Military states; for instance, Prussia under Frederick II.
Maritime state.
Commercial.
Agricultural.
Manufacturing.
Ecclesiastical, etc.

VIII. According to simplicity or complexity, as in all other spheres, we have—

A. Simple governments (formerly called pure; as pure democracy).

B. Complex governments, formerly called mixed. All organism is complex.

See STATE; FEDERAL GOVERNMENT; EXECUTIVE POWER; JUDICIAL POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER; UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

GOVERNOR. See EXECUTIVE POWER.

GRACE, DAYS OF. See DAYS OF GRACE.

GRADE. Used in reference to streets: (1) The line of the street's inclination from the horizontal; (2) a part of a street inclined from the horizontal. Cent. Dict. That is, it sometimes signifies the line established to guide future construction, and at other times, the street wrought to the line; Little Rock v. Ry. Co., 56 Ark. 28, 19 S. W. 17.

Grades of crime, in legal parlance, are always spoken of and understood as higher or lower in grade, or degree, according to the measure of punishment attached and meted out on conviction, and the consequences resulting to the party convicted; People v. Rawson, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 619.

As to military grade, see RANK.

GRADE CROSSING. A place where one highway crosses another: in particular, a place where a railroad is crossed at grade by a public or private road, or by another railroad. The term is most frequently used with reference to the crossing of a public highway by a railroad.

At such a crossing it is the duty of the railroad company to construct and maintain safe and proper crossings; and it is liable for all injuries resulting from a failure to perform this duty; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 91 Ind. 119; Farley v. R. Co., 42 Ia. 234; Paducah & E. R. Co. v. Com., 80 Ky. 147; State v. R. Co., 36 Ohio St. 436; Pittsburg, F. W. & C. Ry. Co. v. Dunn, 56 Pa. 280; but the most numerous class of cases relating to grade crossings, arises from accidents to persons who are using the crossing, caused by the operation of trains thereon.

The rule that the roadbed and track of a railroad company are its private property, and that one who gets thereon does so at his own peril, does not apply to a highway crossing; Florida Cent. & R. R. Co. v. Williams, 37 Fla. 406, 20 South. 558. At such a place the company hold its roadbed, subject to the right of the public to cross it; and that circumstance creates mutual rights and obligations. Both parties must use ordinary care in the exercise of their own rights. Theoretically, the rights of the company and a person who intends to cross are equal; practically, the more onerous duty of avoiding danger rests upon the latter, on account of the difficulty in stopping a train in rapid motion. But this fact, on the other hand, imposes upon the railroad company the duty of using every practicable agency consistent with the operation of its trains, to give due warning of their approach; Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hillmer, 72 Ill. 235; Western & A. R. Co. v. King, 70 Ga. 261; Indianapolis & V. R. R. Co. v. McLin, 82 Ind. 435; Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Goetz, 79 Ky. 442, 42 Am. Rep. 227; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Owings, 65 Md. 502, 5 Atl. 329; Weber v. R. Co., 58 N. Y. 451; Kay v. R. Co., 65 Pa. 269, 3 Am. Rep. 628. Thus, the whistle must be sounded on approaching a crossing; Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 36 L. Ed. 485; Hinkle v. R. Co., 109 N. C. 472, 13 S. E. 884, 26 Am. St. Rep. 581; Reeves v. R. Co., 30 Pa. 454, 72 Am. Dec. 713; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Owings, 65 Md. 502, 5 Atl. 329; and the better view is that watchmen should be stationed at every much-used crossing; Grank Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 36 L. Ed. 485. But this rule is not uniformly held; and some courts have decided that the railroad company, unless required by statute, is under no obligation to give warning; Brown v. R. Co., 22 Minn. 165; Favor v. R. Corp., 114 Mass. 350, 19 Am. Rep. 364. This duty is now, however, generally prescribed by statute; and a failure to discharge it is in such a case always evidence of negligence, though not conclusive; Barber v. R. Co., 34 S. C. 444, 13 S. E. 630; Railway Co. v. Howard, 90 Tenn. 144, 19 S. W. 116; Augusta & S. R. Co. v. McElmurry, 24 Ga. 75; Hanlon v. R. Co., 129 Mass. 310; Funston v. Ry. Co., 61 Ia. 452, 16 N. W. 518; Atlanta & W. P. R. v. Wyly, 65 Ga. 120; Lewis v. R. Co., 123 N. Y. 496, 26 N. E. 357; Nash v. R. Co., 125 N. Y. 715, 26 N. E. 266; Hinkle v. R. Co., 109 N. C. 472, 13 S. E. 884, 26 Am. St. Rep. 581; Clark v. R. Co., 64 N. H. 323, 10 Atl. 676.

The railroad company is not alone bound to the exercise of care in approaching a crossing. A traveller who intends to cross is also bound to use ordinary prudence, by which is to be understood such as is fairly commensurate with the risk. He must therefore, look for an approaching train, if he has a fair view of the track; and if his view is obstructed, he must also listen. If he does not do so, and is injured, he cannot recover; but if he does, and is nevertheless injured by the negligence of the company, the latter is liable to him; Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Wallace, 110 Ill. 114; Lang v. Holiday Creek R. & Coal Min. Co., 49 Ia. 469; Murray v. R. Co., 31 La. Ann. 490; Cincinnati, H. & I. Ry. Co. v. Duncan, 143 Ind. 524, 42 N. E. 37; Frech v. R. Co., 39 Md. 574; Wright v. R. Co., 129 Mass. 440; Carney v. Ry. Co., 46 Minn. 220, 48 N. W. 912; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Righter, 42 N. J. L. 180; Haas v. Ry. Co., 41 Wis. 44. It is not necessary to leave to the jury whether a prudent man would look and listen before attempting to cross a railroad track. It is the duty of the court to declare that a failure to do so is negligence; Pyle v. Clark, 75 Fed. 644; it is a conclusion of law; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Martin, 61 Ark. 549, 33 S. W. 1070; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Talmage, 15 Ind. App. 203, 43 N. E. 1019; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Peebles, 67 Fed. 591, 14 C. C. A. 555; Horn v. R. Co., 54 Fed. 301, 4 C. C. A. 346.

One approaching a grade crossing must look and listen; this rule is elementary; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Freeman, 174 U. S. 379, 19 Sup. Ct. 763, 43 L. Ed. 1014; he must exercise all his faculties of sight and hearing at such short distance as will be effectual; Chicago Great Western R. Co. v. Smith, 141 Fed. 930, 73 C. C. A. 164.

One, who, on approaching a double-track railroad, looked to the north, and seeing no train, concentrated his attention on a switch-engine on the nearer track for a minute and a half, and then, without looking again to the north, started across and was struck by a train coming from that direction on the further track, was held guilty of negligence; Pyle v. Clark, 75 Fed. 644. See Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Griffith, 159 U. S. 603, 16 Sup. Ct. 105, 40 L. Ed. 274; Baltimore & Potomac R. Co. v. Carrington, 3 App. D. C. 101; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Blessing, 67 Fed. 277, 14 C. C. A. 394. It is held negligence for a traveller, after waiting for a train to pass on the near track, to start across behind it without waiting until it had passed far enough to enable him to see a train approaching from the opposite direction on another track; Stowell v. Erie R. Co., 98 Fed. 520, 39 C. C. A. 145; Delaware & H. Co. v. Flannelly, 172 Fed. 328, 97 C. C. A. 112; Fletcher v. R. Co., 149 Mass. 127, 21 N. E. 302, 3 L. R. A. 743; Marty v. R. Co., 38 Minn. 108, 35 N. W. 670; Morrow v. R. Co., 146 N. C. 14, 59 S. E. 158; Hughes v. Canal Co., 176 Pa. 254, 35 Atl. 190; Wallenburg v. R. Co., 86 Neb. 642, 126 N. W. 289, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135 and note. It is held in Pennsylvania that a traveller is required to stop, look, and listen for an approaching train; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Beale, 73 Pa. 504, 13 Am. Rep. 753; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Fortney, 90 Pa. 323; Philadelphia & Reading R. Co. v. Boyer, 97 Pa. 91; Reading & Columbia R. Co. v. Ritchie, 102 Pa. 425. But this rule does not prevail in other courts, and it has been said that without relaxing the rule just stated, "yet when the facts are not clear and simple, and where the existence of contributory negligence depends upon inferences to be drawn from the evidence, the question must go to the jury for decision;" Davidson v. R. Co., 179 Pa. 227, 36 Atl. 291. In Pennsylvania, if the view of the track is obstructed, a traveler should get down from his vehicle and go forward to a point where he can see; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Beale, 73 Pa. 504, 13 Am. Rep. 753; Central R. Co. v. Feller, 84 Pa. 226; Kinter v. R. Co., 204 Pa. 497, 54 Atl. 276, 93 Am. St. Rep. 795; Mankewicz v. R. Co., 214 Pa. 386, 63 Atl. 604; Bistider v. R. Co., 224 Pa. 615, 73 Atl. 940. But in other jurisdictions no such duty is imposed upon the traveler; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bryant, 141 Ala. 292, 37 South. 370; Vance v. R. Co., 9 Cal. App. 20, 98 Pac. 41; Indianapolis & G. Rapid Transit Co. v. Haines, 33 Ind. App. 64, 69 N. E. 187; Kelly v. R. Co., 88 Mo. 534; Hinkle v. R. Co., 109 N. C. 472, 13 S. E. 884, 26 Am. St. Rep. 581.

There are three well-recognized exceptions to the rule which requires a traveller to look and listen for approaching trains. These are thus classified in Ormsbee v. R. Co., 14 R. I. 102, 51 Am. Rep. 354: (1) When the view of the track is obstructed, and hence the injured party, not being able to see, is obliged to act upon his judgment at the time; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Griffith, 159 U. S. 603, 16 Sup. Ct. 105, 40 L. Ed. 274; L. R. 3 C. P. 368; 3 App. Cas. 1155; Webb v. R. Co., 57 Me. 117; Craig v. R. Co., 118 Mass. 431; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Ogier, 35 Pa. 60, 78 Am. Dec. 322; (2) where the injured person is a passenger going to, or alighting from, a train, under the implied invitation and assurance of the company that he may cross the track in safety; Wheelock v. R. Co., 105 Mass. 203; Klein v. Jewett, 26 N. J. Eq. 474; Brassell v. R. Co., 84 N. Y. 241; and (3) when the direct act of some agent of the company has put the person off his guard and induced him to cross the track without precautions; e. g. when the flagman beckons to him to cross; Spencer v. R. Co., 29 Ia. 55; Sweeny v. R. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Newson v. R. Co., 29 N. Y. 383. To these may be added cases where the traveller (as might happen to a stranger on a dark night) is ignorant of the nearness of the railroad, and when the driver of a horse, which becomes suddenly frightened, is obliged to choose between the risk of an upset or a collision. See Patterson, Ry. Acc. L. §§ 173–183, where the cases on the subject of contributory negligence at grade-crossings are collected.

Where there are permanent obstructions to sight that would make danger invisible, and a transient noise that would make it inaudible, it is held negligence to go forward at once from a place of safety to a place of possible danger, without waiting for hearing to become effective; Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. Smalley, 61 N. J. L. 277, 39 Atl. 695. But the duty to stop before crossing has not been held to arise except where there are casual noises or temporary obstructions to the view; Merkle v. R. Co., 49 N. J. L. 473, 9 Atl. 680; Keyley v. R. Co., 64 N. J. L. 355, 45 Atl. 811; Dickinson v. R. Co., 81 N. J. L. 464, 81 Atl. 104, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 150. It is negligence per se to attempt to cross tracks hidden by the smoke of a passing train, without waiting for a clear view; Hovenden v. R. Co., 180 Pa. 244, 36 Atl. 731; Heaney v. R. Co., 112 N. Y. 122, 19 N. E. 422; West Jersey R. Co. v. Ewan, 55 N. J. L. 574, 27 Atl. 1064.

It is also the general rule outside of Pennsylvania, that if the company maintains safety-gates at a crossing, which are closed at the approach of a train, a traveller who sees them standing open has the right to act upon the implied invitation to cross; and may do so without looking and listening; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Whitton's Adm'r, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 270, 20 L. Ed. 571; Hinckley v. R. Co., 120 Mass. 257; Abbett v. Ry. Co., 30 Minn. 482, 16 N. W. 366; Bunting v. R. Co., 14 Nev. 351; Cohen v. R. Co., 14 Nev. 376; Kellogg v. R. Co., 79 N. Y. 72; Marietta & C. R. Co. v. Picksley, 24 Ohio St. 654; Eilert v. R. Co., 48 Wis. 606, 4 N.

W. 769. But it is held that failure to give the usual signals does not exempt traveller from looking and listening; Cooper v. R. Co., 140 N. C. 209, 52 S. E. 932, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391 and note, 6 Ann. Cas. 71; Schofield v. Ry. Co., 114 U. S. 615, 5 Sup. Ct. 1125, 29 L. Ed. 224; or a failure to give proper and statutory signals; Rodrian v. R. Co., 125 N. Y. 526, 26 N. E. 741; Johnson's Adm'r v. Ry. Co., 91 Va. 171, 21 S. E. 238; contra, Turner v. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 30 S. W. 253; Cahill v. Ry. Co., 92 Ky. 345, 18 S. W. 2. The signal of a flagman to cross will not relieve one from the duty to look and listen before driving upon a railroad crossing; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Rosewater, 157 Fed. 168, 84 C. C. A. 616, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 803, 13 Ann. Cas. 851; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Frantz, 127 Pa. 297, 18 Atl. 22, 4 L. R. A. 389; Berry v. R. Co., 48 N. J. L. 141, 4 Atl. 303; Ellis v. R. R., 169 Mass. 600, 48 N. E. 839. But other cases hold that one may rely wholly upon the invitation of the flagman or the open gate; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Webb, 90 Ala. 185, 8 South. 518, 11 L. R. A. 674; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Clough, 134 Ill. 586, 25 N. E. 664, 29 N. E. 184.

The fact that one's sight or hearing is defective does not exonerate him from the exercise of due care, but rather raises the standard to be observed by him. The employés of the company have a right to presume that his sight and hearing are normal; and he must observe all the added precautions necessary to make him as safe as if his faculties were normal. If he does not, he is guilty of contributory negligence; Laicher v. R. Co., 28 La. Ann. 320; Purl v. Ry. Co., 72 Mo. 168; Cogswell v. R. Co., 6 Or. 417. Nor will deafness; Smith's Adm'r v. Ry. Co., 146 Ky. 568, 142 S. W. 1047, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193; Williams v. Ry. Co., 139 Ia. 552, 117 N. W. 956; Birmingham Ry. & El. Co. v. Bowers, 110 Ala. 328, 20 South. 345; Mitchell v. Ry. Co., 153 N. C. 116, 68 S. E. 1059; Schmidt v. Ry. Co., 191 Mo. 215, 90 S. W. 136, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 196; Hall v. Ry. Co., 168 Mass. 461, 47 N. E. 124. See Smith's Adm'r v. Ry. Co., 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193 note; nor haste and mental preoccupation; Riedel v. Traction Co., 63 W. Va. 522, 61 S. E. 821, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123.

Generally the duty to look before crossing a railroad track is not discharged by looking only once. It is a continuing duty; Wallenburg v. Ry. Co., 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135 n., citing Kelsay v. Ry. Co., 129 Mo. 362, 30 S. W. 339; Gangawer v. R. Co., 168 Pa. 265, 32 Atl. 21; Walsh v. R. Co., 222 Pa. 162, 70 Atl. 1088; Southern Ry. Co. v. Jones, 106 Va. 412, 56 S. E. 155; which must be observed until danger is passed; Griffie v. Ry. Co., 80 Ark. 186, 96 S. W. 750; Doherty v. Ry. Co., 118 Mich. 209, 76 N. W. 377, 80 N. W. 36; unless there are exculpatory circumstances; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Hitt, 76 Ark. 224, 88 S. W. 911; Stevens v. Ry. Co., 67 Mo. App. 356.

That the team of the person crossing is beyond the control of the driver is held an excuse for his failure to look and listen and if necessary to stop; Sarles v. Ry. Co., 138 Wis. 498, 120 N. W. 232, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 415, 16 Ann. Cas. 952; Southern Ry. Co. v. Hobbs, 151 Ala. 335, 43 South. 844. He is not necessarily negligent because he did not look at the most advantageous point; Wallenburg v. Ry. Co., 86 Neb. 642, 126 N. W. 289, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135.

As to the power of the states to require railroad companies to change, alter, or abolish grade crossings, see 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5505; POLICE POWER. As to signals at crossings; Welsch v. R. Co., 72 Mo. 451, 37 Am. Rep. 443; as to care at crossings; Louisville, etc., R. R. Co. v. Com., 13 Bush. (Ky.) 388, 26 Am. Rep. 207.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, there is a presumption that one who was killed while crossing a railroad track at night stopped, looked and listened before crossing; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Landrigan, 191 U. S. 461, 24 Sup. Ct. 137, 48 L. Ed. 262.

See RAILROAD; NEGLIGENCE.

GRADUATE. One who has taken a degree in a college or university. It is said to be a word of elastic meaning, involving infinite variety in the methods and standards of graduation which may be adopted; State v. Ins. Co., 40 La. Ann. 463, 4 South. 504.

GRADUS (Lat. a step). A measure of space. Vicat, Voc. Jur. A degree of relationship (distantia cognatorum). Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 153; Bract. fol. 134, 374; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, § 1, lib. 4, c. 17, § 4.

A step or degree generally; e. g. gradus honorum, degrees of honor. Vicat, Voc. Jur. A pulpit; a year; a generation. Du Cange.

A port; any place where a vessel can be brought to land. Du Cange.

GRAFFER (Fr. greffier, a clerk, or prothonotary). A notary or scrivener. See stat. 5 Hen. VIII. c. 1.

GRAFFIO. A baron, inferior to a count. 1 Marten, Anced. Collect. 13. A fiscal judge. An advocate. Gregor. Turon, l. 1, de Mirac. c. 33; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell. For various derivations, see Du Cange.

GRAFFIUM. A register; a lieger-book or cartulary of deeds and evidences. 1 Annal. Eccles. Menevensio, apud Angl. Sax. 653.

GRAFT. In Equity. A term used to designate the right of a mortgagee in premises to which the mortgagor at the time of making the mortgage had an imperfect title, but afterwards obtained a good title. In this case the new title is considered a graft into the old stock, enuring to the benefit of the mortgagee, and arising in consideration of the former title; 1 Ball & B. 40, 46, 57; 1 Pow. Mort. 190. See Porter v. Hill, 9 Mass. 34. "It is well settled that when a mortgage of land is made, purporting to convey the land in fee, any title afterward acquired by the mortgagor will feed the mortgage and enure to the benefit of the mortgagee." 1 Pingree, Mort. § 304; Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 612, 76 Am. Dec. 449; Sherman v. McCarthy, 57 Cal. 507; Orr v. Stewart, 67 Cal. 275, 7 Pac. 693. And this is so where the title was in the government when the mortgage was made and a patent afterwards issued to the mortgagor; 1 Pingree, Mort. § 304; Spiess v. Neuberg, 71 Wis. 279, 37 N. W. 417, 5 Am. St. Rep. 211. See Hughes v. U. S., 4 Wall. (U. S.) 232, 18 L. Ed. 303; French v. Spencer, 21 How. (U. S.) 228, 16 L. Ed. 97. But it is the prevailing doctrine that in the absence of statutory enactment there must be a covenant of warranty or something tantamount to it, to give this effect to the mortgage; Gray v. Franks, 86 Mich. 382, 49 N. W. 130; Howze v. Dew, 90 Ala. 178, 7 South. 239, 24 Am. St. Rep. 783; Kline v. Ragland, 47 Ark. 111, 14 S. W. 474. See 1 Pingree, Mort. §§ 696–706. The purchase of a paramount title by a purchaser from the mortgagor does not inure to the benefit of the mortgagee; id. § 1012; and in some cases the mortgagee may be estopped to assert the after-acquired title of the mortgagor against an innocent purchaser; id.; Calder v. Chapman, 52 Pa. 359, 91 Am. Dec. 163. The same principle has obtained by legislative enactment in Louisiana. If a person contracting an obligation towards another, says the Civil Code, art. 3271, grants a mortgage on property of which he is not then the owner, this mortgage shall be valid if the debtor should ever require the ownership of the property, by whatever right. This principle is also adopted by statute in other states, as Arkansas; Mansf. Dig. § 642; and California; Civ. Code § 2930. See MORTGAGE.

GRAIN. The twenty-fourth part of a pennyweight.

For scientific purposes the grain only is used, and sets of weights are constructed in decimal progression, from ten thousand grains to one-hundreth of a grain.

Wheat, rye, barley, or Indian corn sown in the ground. It may include millet and oats; Holland v. State, 34 Ga. 455; Smith v. Clayton, 29 N. J. L. 357; flaxseed; Hewitt v. Ins. Co., 55 Ia. 323, 7 N. W. 596, 39 Am. Rep. 174; peas; State v. Williams, 2 Strobh. (S. C.) 474; sugar cane seed; Holland v. State, 34 Ga. 455. A statute requiring all persons who deal in grain on commission to secure a license and give a bond for the protection of the public is valid; State v. Edwards, 94 Minn. 225, 102 N. W. 697, 69 L. R. A. 667; State v. Brass, 2 N. D. 482, 52 N. W. 408; American Live Stock Com. Co. v. Live Stock Exchange, 143 Ill. 210, 32 N. E. 274, 18 L. R. A. 190, 36 Am. St. Rep. 385; State v. Board of Trade, 107 Minn. 506, 121 N. W. 395, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260.

See AWAY-GOING CROP; EMBLEMENTS; CONFUSION OF GOODS.

GRAINAGE. In English Law. The name of an ancient duty collected in London, consisting of one-twentieth part of the salt imported into that city.

GRAMME. The French unit of weight. The gramme is the weight of a cubic centimetre of distilled water at the temperature of 4° C. It is equal to 15.4341 grains troy, or 5.6481 drachms avoirdupois.

GRAND ASSIZE. A method of trial, instituted by Henry II., by way of alternative offered to the choice of the tenant or defendant in a writ of right, instead of trial by battel. For this purpose a writ de magna assiza eligenda issued to choose four knights from the county and twelve from the vicinage. If some or all of the sixteen differed or were ignorant of the facts, more were summoned until there were twelve who could agree on a verdict. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 150. Abolished in 1834. The latest case is in 1 Bingh. N. C. 597; 5 id. 161.

"It is abundantly clear that, whatever may have been the practice at a later time, the grand assize was a body of twelve, not of sixteen, knights; in other words, the four electors took no part in the verdict." 2 Poll. & Maitl. 618, n. 3.

Although the jury were theoretically to speak only about matter of fact, the principle was long latent and tacit. "The recognitors in a grand assize were called upon to say whether the demandant had greater right than the tenant, and in so doing they had an opportunity of giving effect of law. . . . We must not suppose that in such a case they followed the ruling of the justices;" id. 627.

The assize of novel disseisin, the requirement of a royal writ to compel a man to answer for his free tenement, and the grand assize, are said to have been fashioned at the same time to uphold three principles founded upon the idea of the sacredness of a freehold and intended to assure the royal protection of possession. "No one is to be disseised of his free tenement unjustly and without a judgment, . . . (nor) even by a judgment unless he has been summoned to answer by a royal writ; no one is to be forced to defend his seisin of a free tenement by battel. The ordinance that instituted the grand assize was a one-sided measure, a protection of possessors. The claimant had to offer battel; the possessor, if he pleased, might refuse battel and put himself upon the grand assize;" 1 id. 126. As to its place in the history of possessory action, see 2 id. 62.

Its date was probably during the first years of Henry II, but it is uncertain. Mrs. J. R. Green, in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 125.

GRAND BILL OF SALE. In English Law. The name of an instrument used for the transfer of a ship while she is at sea. Thuret v. Jenkins, 7 Mart. O. S. (La.) 318, 12 Am. Dec. 508; 3 Kent 133.

GRAND CAPE. In English Law. A writ judicial which lieth when a man has brought a præcipe quod reddat, of a thing that toucheth plea of lands, and the tenant makes default on the day given him in the writ original, then this writ shall go for the king, to take the land into the king's hands, and if he comes not at the day given him by the grand cape, he has lost his lands. Old N. B. fol. 161, 162; Regist. Judic. fol. 2 b; Brac. lib. 5, tr. 3, cap. 1, nu. 4, 5, 6. So called because its Latin form began with the word cape, "take thou," and because it had more words than the petit cape, or because petit cape summons to answer for default only. Petit cape issues after appearance to the original writ, grand magnum cape before. These writs have long been abolished. In Glanvill's day three successive summons preceded the cape. See 2 Poll. & Maitl. 590.

GRAND COUTUMIER. Two collections of laws bore this title. One, also called the Coutumier of France, is a collection of the customs, usages, and forms of practice which had been used from time immemorial in France; the other, called the Coutumier de Normandie (which indeed, with some alterations, made a part of the former), was composed, about 14 Henry III. (1229), and is a collection of the Norman laws, not as they stood at the conquest of England, but some time afterwards, and contains many provisions probably borrowed from the old English or Saxon laws. Hale, Hist. Com. Law c. 6. The work was reprinted in 1881 with notes by William L. De Gruchy. The Channel Islands are still for the most part governed by the ducal customs of Normandy; 1 Steph. Com. 61.

GRAND DAYS. In English Practice. Those days in the term which are solemnly kept in the inns of court and chancery, viz.: Candlemas-day in Hilary Term, Ascension-day in Easter Term, St. John the Baptist's day in Trinity Term, and All Saints' day in Michælmas Term, which are dies non juridici, or no days in court, and are set apart for festivity. Jacob, Law Dic.

All this is now altered: the grand days, which are different for each term of court, are those days in each term in which a more splendid dinner than ordinary is provided in the hall. Moz. & W.

GRAND DISTRESS (Lat. magna districtio). An ancient kind of distress, more extensive than the writs of grand and petit cape, extending to all the goods and chattels of the party distrained within the county. T. L.; Cowell. The writ lay in real actions, and was so called on account of its quality and great extent. It lay in two cases, either when the tenant or defendant was attached, and did not appear, but made default; or when the tenant or defendant had once appeared, and afterwards made default. Fleta lib. 2, c. 69; Cowell; Holthouse.

GRAND JURY. A body of men, consisting at common law of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-four, respectively returned by the sheriff of every county to every session of the peace, oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, to whom indictments are preferred. 4 Bla. Com. 302; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 310, 311; 1 Jur. Soc. Papers; English v. State, 31 Fla. 340, 356, 12 South. 689.

There is reason to believe that this institution existed among the Saxons; Crabb, Eng. Law 35. By the constitution of Clarendon, enacted 10 Hen. II. (A. D. 1164), it is provided that "if such men were suspected whom none wished or dared to accuse, the sheriff, being thereto required by the bishop, should swear twelve men of the neighborhood, or village, to declare the truth" respecting such supposed crime, the jurors being summoned as witnesses or accusers rather than judges. It seems to be pretty certain that this statute either established grand juries, if this institution did not exist before, or reorganized them if they already existed; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 63. But a later work (passing over the question of the relation of the old Frankish inquest to the initiation of criminal proceedings by presentment by indictment) says of the accusing jury of the time of Henry II: "The ancestors of our 'grand jurors' are from the first neither exactly accusers, nor exactly witnesses; they are to give voice to common repute." 2 Poll. & Maitl. 639; 1 id. 130; 2 id. 644; and the conclusion reached is, "a great deal yet remained to be done before that process of indictment by a 'grand jury' and trial by a 'petty jury' with which we are all familiar would have been established. The details of this process will never be known until large piles of records have been systematically perused. This task we must leave for the historian of the fourteenth century. Apparently the change was intimately connected with the discontinuance of those cumbrous old eyres which brought 'the whole county' and every hundred and vill in it before the eyes of the justices;" 2 id. 646.

Organization. Where the common law prevails, unmodified by statutory or constitutional provisions, the law requires that twenty-four citizens shall be summoned to attend as grand jurors; but in practice not more than twenty-three are sworn, because of the inconvenience which might arise of having twelve, who are sufficient to find a true bill, opposed to another twelve who might be against it; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 161; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. 854; 6 Ad. & El. 236; People v. King, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 98. There is no distinction between the qualification of grand and petit jurors; State v. Williams, 35 S. C. 344, 14 S. E. 819.

The number is a matter of local regulation, and while in the main the common-law system has been continued, there is in this country a growing disposition to reduce the number of jurors by statute where it was practicable, and by constitutional provision where that was held to be necessary. It is beyond the present purpose to state in detail all the changes, or to do more than to indicate the existence of a prevailing tendency to simplify the proceedings, which, however, is coupled with a great respect for the grand jury as one of the common-law institutions protected by constitutional guaranty.

The question has been much discussed whether in states having constitutional provisions for indictment by a grand jury, a legislative change in the number required to find an indictment at common law is permissible. In several states this question has been answered in the negative where the constitutional provision specified "indictment by grand jury;" at least so far as to forbid a change making less than twelve sufficient to find an indictment; State v. Barker, 107 N. C. 913, 12 S. E. 115, 10 L. R. A. 50; Donald v. State, 31 Fla. 255, 12 South. 695; English v. State, 31 Fla. 340, 12 South. 689; Brucker v. State, 16 Wis. 334. See Thurman v. State, 25 Ga. 220. But the provision of the federal constitution securing the "due process of law" does not prevent the states from varying the common-law rule as to a grand jury; Hausenfluck v. Com., 85 Va. 702, 8 S. E. 683; Parker v. People, 13 Colo. 155, 21 Pac. 1120, 4 L. R. A. 803; or even from dispensing with it; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232. Where the state constitution prescribes a number it is obligatory; Ex parte Reynolds, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 437, 34 S. W. 120, 60 Am. St. Rep. 54; but where the grand jury consisted of less than the required number but as many jurors concurred as were necessary to find an indictment it was sufficient; State v. Belvel, 89 Ia. 405, 56 N. W. 545, 27 L. R. A. 846; and where the requisite number do concur, the fact that the panel was not full, either by reason of the discharge, or improper excusing of one or more members, or any like cause, does not invalidate an indictment; Drake v. State, 25 Tex. App. 293, 7 S. W. 868; Jackson v. State, 25 Tex. App. 314, 7 S. W. 872; State v. Billings, 77 Ia. 417, 42 N. W. 456; U. S. v. Belvin, 46 Fed. 381; Williams v. State, 69 Ga. 11; State v. Ward, 60 Vt. 142, 14 Atl. 187; Beasley v. People, 89 Ill. 571; State v. Fee, 19 Wis. 563; Blevins v. State, 68 Ala. 92. A discharge of a juror is presumed to be proper; Wallis v. State, 54 Ark. 611, 16 S. W. 821; State v. Wingate, 4 Ind. 193; but if improper and void, it does not affect the legal organization; Smith v. State, 19 Tex. App. 95. It will be presumed that a grand jury was legally organized; State v. Dilworth, 34 La. Ann. 216; Wilson v. People, 3 Colo. 325; and where the court has power to fill up the panel it will be presumed to have been rightly done; Burrell v. State, 129 Ind. 290, 28 N. E. 699. It has been held that when, on calling the grand jury, some of them fail to appear, the court may orally direct the sheriff to fill the vacancy without issuing a precept; State v. Miller, 53 Ia. 84, 4 N. W. 838; id., 53 Ia. 154, 4 N. W. 900; in other states a new venire facias is necessary; Pouch v. State, 63 Ala. 163; State v. Chase, 20 N. J. L. 218. The power to excuse grand jurors confers upon the court, by implication, the power to fill the vacancy; Burrell v. State, 129 Ind. 290, 28 N. E. 699. If more are present than the statute permits the indictment is bad; Box v. State, 34 Miss. 614; U. S. v. Reynolds, 1 Utah, 226; Downs v. Com., 92 Ky. 605, 18 S. W. 526; Com. v. Salter, 2 Pears. (Pa.) 461; Com. v. Leisenring, 2 Pears. (Pa.) 466. A constitutional provision fixing the number of the panel and prescribing how many must concur is held to be self-executing; Sanders v. Com. (Ky.) 18 S. W. 528; State v. Ah Jim, 9 Mont. 167, 23 Pac. 76.

The number of grand jurors varies in different states, as also the number or proportion required for concurrence. In Utah fifteen grand jurors were held sufficient; Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244; and see People v. Green, 1 Utah 11. When twenty-three were provided for, the provision was held to be directory merely; Com. v. Wood, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 149.

Objections. An objection must be properly made as to time and manner; In re Wilson, 140 U. S. 575, 11 Sup. Ct. 870, 35 L. Ed. 513; Com. v. Windish, 176 Pa. 167, 34 Atl. 1019; State v. Scarborough, 55 Md. 345; Young v. State, 6 Ohio, 435; State v. Pate, 67 Mo. 488; 2 Ad. & El. 236; 1 Nev. & P. 187. A person summoned to testify before the grand jury de facto cannot question its organization; Ex parte Haymond, 91 Cal. 545, 27 Pac. 859. An objection to the competency of a grand juror must be raised before the general issue; State v. Easter, 30 Ohio St. 542, 27 Am. Rep. 478; Whart. Cr. Pl. 350. It has been held that an objection comes too late after the jury has been empanelled and sworn; Com. v. Smith, 9 Mass. 110; People v. Jewett, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 314; but on this point the authorities are conflicting; see contra, State v. Davis, 12 R. I. 492, 34 Am. Rep. 704, n. The proper method of taking objection to the organization of a grand jury is by plea in abatement; Falk v. Reese, 19 Ala. 240; Henning v. State, 106 Ind. 386, 6 N. E. 803, 7 N. E. 4, 55 Am. Rep. 756; Brown v. State, 13 Ark. 96; and not by demurrer; Collier v. State, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 388; Fisher v. U. S., 1 Okl. 252, 31 Pac. 195; or motion to quash; State v. Haywood, 73 N. C. 437; Johnson v. Ins. Co., 3 Wyo. 140, 6 Pac. 729; or motion in arrest of judgment; State v. Pile, 5 Ala. 72; or collaterally on habeas corpus; Ex parte Warris, 28 Fla. 371, 9 South. 718; State v. Noyes, 87 Wis. 340, 58 N. W. 386, 27 L. R. A. 776, 41 Am. St. Rep. 45. A plea in abatement must specify the objection with particularity; State v. Holcomb, 86 Mo. 371; Tilley v. Commonwealth, 89 Va. 136, 15 S. E. 526; Newman v. State, 14 Wis. 394; Brennan v. People, 15 Ill. 511; State v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 256, 8 Pac. 420; Baldwin v. State, 12 Neb. 61, 10 N. W. 463. If a method of objection is prescribed by a statute, it must be followed strictly; People v. Hooghkirk, 96 N. Y. 149; Boulo v. State, 51 Ala. 18; Johnson v. State, 33 Tex. 570; Williams v. State, 86 Ind. 400.

Federal courts may, on their own motion, enforce other objections to grand jurors than those prescribed by state statute; U. S. v. Jones, 69 Fed. 973.

See an elaborate note upon the organization of grand jury in which are collected the cases relating to defects of every kind in the summoning, organization, and proceedings of grand jury; 27 L. R. A. 776; and one on the qualification of grand jurors; 28 id. 195; as to the number of grand jurors necessary or proper to act and the constitutional and statutory provisions relating thereto in states which have changed the common-law rule, see 27 id. 846; and as to the number necessary to concur in finding an indictment; 28 id. 33.

Proccedings. Being called into the jury-box, they are usually permitted to select a foreman, whom the court appoints; but the court may exercise the right to nominate one for them.

The foreman then takes the following oath or affirmation, namely: "You, A. B., as foreman of this inquest for the body of the ——, of ——, do swear (or affirm) that you will diligently inquire, and true presentment make of all such articles matters, and things as shall be given you in charge, or otherwise come to your knowledge, touching the present service; the commonwealth's counsel, your fellows', and your own, you shall keep secret; you shall present no one for envy, hatred, or malice; nor shall you leave any one unpresented for fear, favor, affection, hope of reward or gain, but shall present all things truly, as they come to your knowledge, according to the best of your understanding. So help you God." It will be perceived that this oath contains the substance of the duties of the grand jury. The foreman having been sworn or affirmed, the other grand jurors are sworn or affirmed according to this formula: "You and each of you do swear (or affirm) that the same oath (or affirmation) which your foreman has taken on his part, you and every one of you shall well and truly observe on your part." In Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652, Brown, J., quoted from the grand juror's oath as given in 8 How. St. Tr. 759. He refers to the words "as of all other matters and things as shall come to your knowledge touching these present services," etc., as showing the competency of the grand jury to act solely on its own volition. It was there held that the grand jury might proceed either upon their own knowledge or upon the examination of witnesses without a previous presentment or formal indictment being submitted to them. It was also held that the examination of a witness before a grand jury is a "proceeding" within the meaning of the proviso of the general appropriation act of 1903, that no person shall be prosecuted on account of anything which he may testify in any proceeding under the anti-trust law. The authorities are collected at large in the opinion and arguments.

One may be compelled to answer questions before a grand jury though there be no specific charge pending; Wilson v. U. S., 221 U. S. 361, 31 Sup. Ct. 538, 55 L. Ed. 771, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 558.

In Massachusetts it is not necessary to show that those affirming had conscientious scruples about taking the oath; Com. v. Fisher, 7 Gray (Mass.) 492; Com. v. Smith, 9 Mass. 107; but in New Jersey it was originally held that it would be necessary to show this or the indictment would be invalid; State v. Rockafellow, 6 N. J. L. 332; but since then by the N. J. Crim. Code § 53, it is provided that objection to the indictment for form or substance shall be by demurrer or motion to quash before the jury are sworn in and not after, and an objection to affirmance not made as so provided will not avail.

On being sworn or affirmed, and having received the charge of the court, the grand jury are organized, and may proceed to transact the business which may be laid before them; 2 Burr. 1088; Bacon, Abr. Juries, A. See Pierce v. State, 12 Tex. 210. The grand jury constitute a regular body until discharged by the court, or by operation of law, as where they cannot continue, by virtue of an act of assembly, beyond a certain day. But although they have been formally discharged by the court, if they have not separated, they may be called back and fresh bills be submitted to them; 9 C. & P. 43. When properly organized, in some states, it meets and adjourns upon its own motion, and it may lawfully proceed in the performance of its duties whether the court is in session or not, until the final adjournment of the court; Nealon v. People, 39 Ill. App. 481. In other states it is always discharged from time to time by the court, to which it reports at each session. The grand juries in the federal courts usually meet and adjourn on their own motion.

A charge to the grand jury delivered by Mr. Justice Field in the district of California is reported in 2 Sawy. 667, Fed. Cas. No. 18,255. The duties and functions of the grand jury are admirably stated and particularly the difference between those of grand jurors of the state courts and of the national courts; those of the state courts having very great inquisitorial powers conferred upon them by statute; those of the United States courts having no general authority of an inquisitorial character.

The absence of such a power in the federal statutes is attributed to the fact that the examination of books and accounts of the officers of the federal government is provided for by law or by executive regulation, and when upon such examination, an unsatisfactory condition is found the matter is brought before the grand jury by the proper authority.

Justice Field considers that the phrase in the oath discriminating subjects of inquiry which shall "otherwise come to your knowledge touching the present service" authorizes them to act upon their own knowledge or observations or evidence before them but not upon mere rumor or reports.

The jurisdiction of the grand jury is coextensive with that of the court for which they inquire, both as to the offences triable there and the territory over which such court has jurisdiction.

The mode of doing business. The foreman acts as president, and the jury usually appoint one of their number to perform the duties of secretary. No records are to be kept of the acts of the grand jury, except for their own use, because their proceedings are to be secret. Bills of indictment against offenders are then supplied by the attorney-general, or other officer representing government. See Shattuck v. State, 11 Ind. 473; U. S. v. Reed, 2 Blatchf. 435, Fed. Cas. No. 16,134. On these bills are indorsed the names of the witnesses by whose testimony they are supported. The jury are also required to make true presentment of all such matters as have otherwise come to their knowledge. These presentments, which are technically so called, are, in practice, usually made at the close of the session of the grand jury, and include offences of which they had personal knowledge: they should name the authors of the offences, with a view to indictment. The witnesses in support of a bill are to be examined in all cases under oath, even when members of the jury itself testify,—as they may do.

When the number required by law concur in finding a true bill, the foreman must write on the back of the indictment, "A true bill," sign his name as foreman, and date the time of finding. On the contrary, where there is not sufficient evidence to authorize the finding of the bill, the jury return that they are ignorant whether the person accused committed the offence charged in the bill, which is expressed by the foreman indorsing on the bill, "Ignoramus," "Not a true bill," or similar words, signing his name as before, and dating the indorsement. The grand jury cannot find a bill, true for part, and false for part; 1 Russ. Cr., Sharsw. ed. 430.

A grand jury cannot indict without a previous prosecution before a magistrate; except in offences of public notoriety, such as are within their own knowledge, or are given them in charge by the court, or are sent to them by the prosecuting officer of the commonwealth; Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. § 338; McCullough v. Com., 67 Pa. 30.

As to the witnesses, and the power of the jury over them. The jury examine all the witnesses in support of the bill, or enough of them to satisfy themselves of the propriety of putting the accused on trial, but none in favor of the accused. The jury are the sole judges of the credit and confidence to which a witness before them is entitled. It is decided that when a witness, duly summoned, appears before the grand jury, but refuses to be sworn, and behaves in a disrespectful manner towards the jury, they may lawfully require the officer in attendance upon them to take the witness before the court, in order to obtain its aid and direction in the matter; Heard v. Pierce, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 338, 54 Am. Dec. 757; State v. Blocker, 14 Ala. 450. Such a refusal, it seems, is considered a contempt; State v. Blocker, 14 Ala. 450; the disobedience of this order of the court constituting the contempt; Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 252, 28 Pac. 961; but the governor of a state is exempt from the powers of subpœna, and this immunity extends to his official subordinates; Appeal of Hartranft, 85 Pa. 433, 27 Am. Rep. 667. A person having knowledge of a crime has the right to go before the grand jury, and disclose his knowledge, without being summoned; State v. Stewart, 45 La. Ann. 1104, 14 South. 143.

As to the competency of evidence before grand jury see 28 L. R. A. 318, note; and as to the sufficiency of evidence to sustain indictment; 28 L. R. A. 324, note; as to improper influence or interference with a grand jury; 28 L. R. A. 367, note.

Of the secrecy to be observed. This extends to the vote given in any case, to the evidence delivered by witnesses, and to the communications of the jurors to each other. The disclosure of these facts, unless under the sanction of law, would render the imprudent juror who should make them public liable to punishment. Giving intelligence to a defendant that a bill has been found against him, to enable him to escape, is so obviously wrong that no one can for a moment doubt its being criminal. The grand juror who should be guilty of this offence might, upon conviction, be fined and imprisoned. One who stealthily listens to a grand jury while in the performance of their duties commits the offence of eavesdropping; State v. Pennington, 3 Head (Tenn.) 299, 75 Am. Dec. 771. The duration of the secrecy depends upon the particular circumstances of each case; Tindle v. Nichols, 20 Mo. 326. In a case, for example, where a witness swears to a fact in open court, on the trial, directly in opposition to what he swore before the grand jury, there can be no doubt that the injunction of secrecy, as far as regards this evidence, would be at an end, and the grand jurors might be sworn to testify what this witness swore to in the grand jury's room, in order that the witness might be prosecuted for perjury; 3 Russ. Cr., Sharsw. ed. 520; Low's Case, 4 Me. 439, 16 Am. Dec. 271; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. 857; Com. v. Scowden, 92 Ky. 120, 17 S. W. 205; Izer v. State, 77 Md. 110, 26 Atl. 282; Com. v. Hill, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 137. A member of the grand jury may testify as to how the jury acquired knowledge of an alleged offence; Com. v. Green, 126 Pa. 531, 17 Atl. 878, 12 Am. St. Rep. 894; Com. v. McComb, 157 Pa. 611, 27 Atl. 794; but see contra, Imlay v. Rogers, 7 N. J. Law 347; 1 C. & K. 519. It has been held that the foreman of a grand jury may be called as a witness concerning an admission of gaming made by defendant when testifying before the grand jury concerning another offence, since the statute enjoining secrecy as to proceedings before the grand jury is intended only for the protection of the jurors and of the public; People v. Reggel, 8 Utah 21, 28 Pac. 955.

Grand jurors are held competent witnesses as to matters disclosed to them in the course of their duty as such; U. S. v. Charles, 2 Cra. C. C. 76, Fed. Cas. No. 14,786; Gordon v. Com., 92 Pa. 220, 37 Am. Rep. 672; to impeach a witness who testified differently before the grand jury; Com. v. Mead, 12 Gray (Mass.) 167, 71 Am. Dec. 741.

The minutes of what took place before the grand jury may be disclosed but not to show that the indictment was found upon insufficient evidence or no evidence, as that question is not open to review; Beavers v. Henkel, 194 U. S. 76, 24 Sup. Ct. 605, 48 L. Ed. 882.

A grand jury may without hearing witnesses return a second indictment against a person for the same offence charged in the first one for the purpose of correcting a formal description; Nordlinger v. U. S., 24 App. D. C. 406, 70 L. R. A. 227; Byers v. State, 63 Md. 207; Whiting v. State, 48 Ohio St. 220, 27 N. E. 96; Creek v. State, 24 Ind. 151.

Self-incriminating statements before a grand jury were admitted at the trial; Wisdom v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 579, 61 S. W. 926; but this decision was based on the ground that a grand juror might testify to them without violating his secrets, which is said to be apparently well settled but not conclusive of the issue in that case; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 308.

A grand juror may be punished for contempt for disclosing testimony produced before it; In re Atwell, 140 Fed. 368; In re Summerhayes, 70 Fed. 769.

A grand juror is not competent to testify in a civil case as to the statements of a witness before the grand jury; Loveland v. Cooley, 59 Minn. 259, 61 N. W. 138. It is not error to reject evidence of grand jurors disclosing testimony given before the grand jury; Kennedy v. Holladay, 105 Mo. 24, 16 S. W. 688. Statements of the prosecuting officer as to what occurred in the grand jury room are inadmissible; State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480, 22 S. W. 463. The fact that a stenographer, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, attended before the grand jury and took the testimony of the witnesses, is, upon the weight of authority, no ground for quashing the indictment; Courtney v. State, 5 Ind. App. 356, 32 N. E. 335; State v. Bates, 148 Ind. 610, 48 N. E. 2; State v. Brewster, 70 Vt. 341, 40 Atl. 1037, 42 L. R. A. 444; U. S. v. Simmons, 46 Fed. 65; contra, State v. Bowman, 90 Me. 363, 38 Atl. 331, 60 Am. St. Rep. 266; the presence of the state's attorney while inquiry is being made by the grand jury is not objectionable; Shoop v. People, 45 Ill. App. 110; but the presence of a private prosecutor is ground for reversal of a judgment of conviction; Wilson v. State, 70 Miss. 595, 13 South. 225, 35 Am. St. Rep. 664.

The grand jury can be discharged only by order of the court or the final adjournment of the term; Jones v. U. S., 162 Fed. 417, 89 C. C. A. 303. In the absence of an order of the court the grand jury may meet and adjourn while in existence whether the court is in session or not; id. Neither the improper discharge of a grand juror nor the absence of one or more will invalidate an indictment if the number required to find one are present; id. The provisions of the grand jurors' oath to make diligent inquiry and presentment, not to present for envy, hatred or malice, and to leave no one unpresented for fear, favor or affection are mandatory, but the requirement to keep the nation's counsel, his fellows' and his own secret is not so; Atwell v. U. S., 162 Fed. 97, 89 C. C. A. 97, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1049, 15 Ann. Cas. 253. If after the presentment an indictment has been found and made public and the accused has been apprehended and the grand jury finally discharged, the grand jurors are no longer bound to keep their proceedings secret; Atwell v. U. S., 162 Fed. 97, 89 C. C. A. 97, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1049, 15 Ann. Cas. 253; reversing In re Atwell, 140 Fed. 368.

The privilege given by the fifth amendment to the constitution, that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, extends to a proceeding before a grand jury; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110.

That provision has no application to criminal procedure in the Cherokee Nation whose powers of self-government antedated the constitution; Talton v. Mayes, 163 U. S. 376, 16 Sup. Ct. 986, 41 L. Ed. 196.

The fifth amendment is satisfied by one inquiry and adjudication, and an indictment found by the proper grand jury should be accepted anywhere within the United States as at least prima facie evidence of probable cause and sufficient basis for removal from the district where the person arrested is found to the district where the indictment was found; Beavers v. Henkel, 194 U. S. 73, 24 Sup. Ct. 605, 48 L. Ed. 882.

The place where such inquiry must be had, and the decision of the grand jury obtained, is the locality in which by the constitution and laws the final trial must be had; Beavers v. Henkel, 194 U. S. 73, 24 Sup. Ct. 605, 48 L. Ed. 882.

The disqualification of grand jurors does not destroy jurisdiction if it otherwise exists and an indictment though voidable is not void, and objections taken seasonably in the trial must be corrected by writ of error and not habeas corpus; Keizo v. Henry, 211 U. S. 146, 29 Sup. Ct. 41, 53 L. Ed. 125.

See INDICTMENT; PRESENTMENT; CHARGE; INFORMATION; INCRIMINATION.

GRAND LARCENY. By the English law simple larceny was divided into grand and petit: the former was committed by the stealing of property exceeding twelve pence in value; the latter, when the property was of the value of twelve pence or under; Stat. West. 1 (3 Edw. I.), c. 15. This distinction was abolished in England by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, and is recognized in only a few of the states. Grand larceny was a capital offence, but clergyable unless attended with certain aggravations. Petty larceny was punishable with whipping, "or some such corporal punishment less than death;" and, being a felony, it was subject to forfeiture, whether upon conviction or flight. See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 679; LARCENY.

GRAND REMONSTRANCE. A constitutional document passed by the British House of Commons in November, 1641. It was in the nature of an appeal to the country, setting forth political grievances. It consisted of a preamble of 20 clauses and the body of the remonstrance with 206 clauses, each of which was voted separately. Its first remedial measure was against papists; its second demanded that all illegal grievances and exactions should be presented and punished at the sessions and assizes and that judges and justices should be sworn to the due execution of the Petition of Rights and other laws. The third was a series of precautions to prevent the employment of evil councillors. See Taswell-Langmead, Engl. Const. Hist. 464; Forsher, Grand Remonstrance. The text will be found in History for Ready Reference, II, 833.

GRAND SERJEANTY. See SERJEANTY.

GRANDCHILDREN. The children of one's children. Sometimes these may take bequests in a will to children; in general they cannot claim; 6 Co. 16. The term grandchildren has been held to include great-grandchildren; 2 Eden 194; contra, Hone v. Van Schaick, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 488, 505; Hone v. Van Schaick, 3 N. Y. 538.

GRANDFATHER. The father of one's father or mother. The father's father is called the paternal grandfather; the mother's father is the maternal grandfather.

GRANDFATHER CLAUSE. A clause introduced into several of the constitutions of the southern states, limited the right to vote to those who can read and write any article of the constitution of the United States, and have worked or been regularly employed in some lawful employment for the greater part of the year next preceding the time they offer to register unless prevented from labor or ability to read or write by physical disability, or who own property assessed at three hundred dollars upon which the taxes have been paid; but those who have served in the army or navy of the United States or in the Confederate States in time of war, their lawful descendants in every degree, and persons of good character who understand the duties and obligations of citizenship under a republican form of government were relieved from the operation of this law. In 1902 nine-tenths of the negroes of Alabama were thereby disqualified. In Giles v. Harris, 189 U. S. 475, 23 Sup. Ct. 639, 47 L. Ed. 909, a negro filed a bill in equity praying that the defendant board of registry be required to enroll his name and those of other negroes on the voting list and that certain sections of the constitution of Alabama be declared void as contrary to the XIVth and XVth amendments to the federal constitution. The bill was dismissed on the ground that equity has no jurisdiction over political matters; Brewer, Brown, and Harlan, JJ., dissenting.

GRANDMOTHER. The mother of one's father or mother. The father's mother is called the paternal grandmother; the mother's mother is the maternal grandmother.

GRANGE. A farm furnished with barns, granaries, stables, and all conveniences for husbandry. Co. Litt. 5 a.

A combination, society, or association of farmers for the promotion of the interests of agriculture, by abolishing the restraints and burdens imposed on it by railway and other companies, and by getting rid of the system of middlemen or agents between the producer and the consumer. Encyc. Dic.

The members of such associations are called grangers, from which was derived the name, applied to certain leading cases, of Granger Cases, which see.

GRANGER CASES. A name applied to six cases decided by the supreme court of the United States in 1876, which are reported in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. Ed. 94; Peik v. Ry. Co., 94 U. S. 165, 24 L. Ed. 97; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ackley, 94 U. S. 179, 24 L. Ed. 99; Winona & St. Peter R. Co. v. Blake, 94 U. S. 180, 24 L. Ed. 99; those most frequently cited being Munn v. Illinois, and C., B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa. They are so called because they arose out of an agitation commenced by the grangers which resulted in the enactment of statutes for the regulation of the tolls and charges of common carriers, warehousemen, and the proprietors of elevators. The enforcement of these acts was resisted and their constitutionality questioned. The supreme court affirmed the common-law doctrine that private property appropriated by the owner to a public use is thereby subjected to public regulation. They also held that the right of regulation was not restrained by the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution against the taking by the states of private property without due process of law. A text writer, who was at that time a member of the court, says of these cases: "But these decisions left undecided the question how far this legislative power of regulation belonged to the States, and how far it was in the congress of the United States"; Miller, Const. U. S. 397.

As to what are public uses see EMINENT DOMAIN.

GRANT. A generic term applicable to all transfers of real property. 3 Washb. R. P. 181, 353.

A transfer by deed of that which cannot be passed by livery. Wms. R. P. 147, 149.

An act evidenced by letters patent under the great seal, granting something from the king to a subject. Cruise, Dig. tit. 33, 34.

A technical term made use of in deeds of conveyance of lands to import a transfer. 3 Washb. R. P. 378; Harlowe v. Hudgins, 84 Tex. 107, 19 S. W. 364, 31 Am. St. Rep. 21.

"This word is taken largely where anything is granted or passed from one (the grantor) to another (the grantee). And in this sense it doth comprehend feoffment, bargains and sales, gifts, leases, charges, and the like; for he that doth give or sell doth grant also. . . . And so some grants are of the land or soil itself; and some are of some profit to be taken out of, or from the soil, as rent, common, etc.; and some are of goods and chattels; and some are of other things, as authorities, elections, etc."; Shepp. Touchst. 228.

The term grant was anciently and in strictness of usage applied to denote the conveyance of incorporeal rights, and it is the appropriate word for that purpose. Such rights are said to lie in grant, and not in livery; for, existing only in idea, in contemplation of law, they cannot be transferred by livery of possession. Of course at common law, a conveyance in writing was necessary; hence they were said to lie in grant, and to pass by the delivery of the deed. By the act of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 2, and also by statute in some states, as New York, Maine, and Massachusetts, all corporeal hereditaments are said to lie in grant as well as in livery. See Sandford v. Travers, 40 N. Y. 140; Bates v. Foster, 59 Me. 160, 8 Am. Rep. 406. Grant is now therefore both sufficient, and technically proper, as a word of conveyance of a freehold estate, and in the largest sense the term comprehends everything that is granted or passed from one to another, and is now applied to every species of property. But although the proper technical word, its employment is not absolutely necessary, and it has been held that other words indicating an intention to grant will answer the purpose; Wms. R. P. 6th Am. ed. 201; 5 B. & C. 101. As to the effect of the word grant in conveyances and how far any covenant is implied therefrom, see COVENANT.

Grant was one of the usual words in a feoffment; and a grant differed but little from a feoffment except in the subject-matter; for the operative words used in grants are dedi et concessi, "have given and granted." But the simple deed of grant has superseded the ancient feoffment, leases, and releases which were used to convey freehold estates in possession. See, generally, 1 Dav. Conv. 73; 2 id. 76.

The word is also applied in the case of copyholds to indicate the acceptance by the lord of a person as tenant. It is termed an ordinary grant when the tenant is admitted in pursuance of a surrender by the preceding tenant; and voluntary grant when the land is in possession of the lord discharged from all rights of any tenant, or as it is termed "in hand;" in that case the lord regrants the land to the new tenant to be holden by copy of court roll.

A grant of personalty is a method of transferring personal property, distinguished from a gift, which is always gratuitous, by being founded upon some consideration or equivalent. Such grants are divided as to their subject-matter into grants of chattels real, which includes leases, assignments, and surrenders of leases, and grants of chattels personal, which consist of transfer of the right and possession of them whereby one renounces and the other acquires all title and interest therein. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 440, and see also id, notes 1, 2, and 3. Such a grant may be by parol; 3 M. & S. 7; but they are usually by assignment or bill of sale in writing. The proper legal designation of such a grant is an "assignment" or bargain or sale; 2 Steph. Com. 102.

Office grant applies to conveyances made by some officer of the law to effect certain purposes where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title.

Among the modes of conveyance included under office grant are levies and sales to satisfy execution creditors, sales by order or decree of a court of chancery, sales by order or license of court, sales for non-payment of taxes and the like. See Blackw. Tax Title, passim; 3 Washb. R. P. 208.

Private grant is a grant by the deed of a private person. See DEED.

Public grant is the mode and act of creating a title in an individual to lands which had previously belonged to the government.

The public lands of the United States and of the various states have been to a great extent conveyed by deeds or patents issued in virtue of general laws; but many specific grants have also been made, and were the usual method of transfer during the colonial period. See 3 Washb. R. P. 181; Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 543, 5 L. Ed. 681; Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 548, 8 L. Ed. 483. Nothing passes by implication; New York v. Tax Com'rs, 199 U. S. 37, 25 Sup. Ct. 705, 50 L. Ed. 65, 4 Ann. Cas. 381. See LAND GRANT.

Uninterrupted possession of land for a period of twenty years or upward, has been often held to raise a presumption of a grant from the state; Tubbs v. Lynch, 4 Harr. (Del.) 521; Doe v. Roe, 20 Ga. 467, 65 Am. Dec. 633; Barclay v. Howell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 498, 8 L. Ed. 477; Scales v. Cockrill, 3 Head (Tenn.) 432; Von Rosenberg v. Haynes, 85 Tex. 357, 20 S. W. 143; Brown v. Oldham, 123 Mo. 621, 27 S. W. 409.

By the word grant, in a treaty, is meant not only a formal grant, but any concession, warrant, order, or permission to survey, possess, or settle, whether written or parol, express, or presumed from possession. Such a grant may be made by law, as well as by patent pursuant to a law; Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 410, 9 L. Ed. 1137. See 9 Ad. & E. 532; Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 472; TREATY.

The term grant is also applied to the creation or transfer by the government of such rights as pensions, patents, charters, and franchises. See Chit. Prerog. 384; and also these several titles.

The word grant is also sometimes used with reference to the allowance of probate, and the issue of letters testamentary, and of administration, as to which see the several titles relating thereto.

GRANT AND DEMISE. In a lease for years these words create an implied warranty of title and a covenant for quiet enjoyment; Stott v. Rutherford, 92 U. S. 107, 23 L. Ed. 486. See COVENANT.

GRANT, BARGAIN AND SELL. Words used in instruments of conveyance of real estate. See CONSTRUCTION. From these words, in many states, is implied a covenant of seisin. See COVENANT.

GRANTEE. He to whom a grant is made.

GRANTOR. He by whom a grant is made.

GRANTZ. In Old English Law. Grandees or noblemen. Jac. L. Dict.

GRASS WEEK. Rogation week. A term anciently used in the inns of court and chancery.

GRASSHEARTH. In Old English Law. The name of an ancient customary service of tenants' doing one day's work for their landlord.

GRASSUM. See GRESSOME.

GRATIFICATION. A reward given voluntarily for some service or benefit rendered, without being requested so to do, either expressly or by implication.

GRATIS (Lat.). Without reward or consideration.

When a bailee undertakes to perform some act or work gratis, he is answerable for his gross negligence if any loss should be sustained in consequence of it; but a distinction exists between non-feasance and misfeasance,—between a total omission to do an act which one gratuitously promises to do, and a culpable negligence in the execution of it: in the latter case he is responsible, while in the former he would not, in general, be bound to perform his contract; Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; 5 Term 143; 2 Ld. Raym. 913.

An appearance gratis is one entered without service of process.

GRATIS DICTUM (Lat.). A saying not required; a statement voluntarily made without necessity.

Mere naked assertions, though known to be false, are not the ground of action, as between vendor and vendee. Thus it is not actionable for a vendor of real estate to affirm falsely to the vendee that his estate is worth so much, that he gave so much for it, etc. But fraudulent misrepresentations of particulars in relation to the estate, inducing the buyer to forbear inquiries he would otherwise have made, are not gratis dicta; Medbury v. Watson, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 246, 39 Am. Dec. 726.

GRATUITOUS. Without valuable or legal consideration. A term applied to deeds of conveyance.

In Old English Law. Voluntary; without force, fear, or favor. Bract. fols. 11, 17.

GRATUITOUS BAILMENT. See BAILMENT.

GRATUITOUS CONTRACT. In Civil Law. One the object of which is the benefit of the person with whom it is made, without any profit, received or promised, as a consideration for it: as, for example, a gift. It is sometimes called a contract of beneficence. It is the result of a classification of contracts, in relation to the motive for making them, under which they are termed either gratuitous or onerous. A contract is onerous when a party is required by its terms or nature to do or give something as a consideration. Howe, Studies in the Civil Law 107.

GRATUITOUS DEED. One made without consideration. 2 Steph. Com. 47.

GRATUITY. See BONUS; BOUNTY.

GRAVAMEN (Lat.). The grievance complained of; the substantial cause of the action. See Greenl. Ev. § 66. The part of a charge which weighs most heavily against the accused. In England, the word is specially applied to grievance complained of by the clergy to the archbishop and bishops in convocation. Phill. Eccl. 1944.

GRAVATIO. An accusation or impeachment. Leg. Ethel. c. 19.

GRAVE. A place where a dead body is interred.

The violation of the grave, by taking up the dead body, or stealing the coffin or grave clothes, is a misdemeanor at common law; 1 Russ. Cr. 414; In re Wong Yung Quy, 6 Sawy. 442, 2 Fed. 624; and has been made the subject of statutory enactment in some of the states. See 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 1188; Dearsl. & B. 169; Com. v. Slack, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 304; State v. McClure, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 328; DEAD BODY.

When a body has once been buried, no one has the right to remove it without the consent of the owner of the grave, or leave of the proper ecclesiastical, municipal, or judicial authority; Weld v. Walker, 130 Mass. 423, 39 Am. Rep. 465; Wynkoop v. Wynkoop, 42 Pa. 293, 82 Am. Dec. 506.

A singular case, illustrative of this subject, occurred in Louisiana. A son, who inherited a large estate from his mother, buried her with all her jewels, worth two thousand dollars: he then made a sale of all he inherited from his mother for thirty thousand dollars. After this, a thief broke the grave and stole the jewels, which, after his conviction, were left with the clerk of the court, to be delivered to the owner. The son claimed them, and so did the purchaser of the inheritance: it was held that the jewels, although buried with the mother, belonged to the son, and that they passed to the purchaser by a sale of the whole inheritance; Ternant v. Boudreau, 6 Rob. (La.) 488. See 23 Ir. L. T. 405; CEMETERY; DEAD BODY; EXHUMATION.

GRAVIS. Grievous; great. Ad grave damnum, to the grievous damage. 11 Coke 40.

GRAVIUS. A graf; a chief magistrate or officer. A term derived from the more ancient "grafio" and used in combination with various other words as an official title in Germany; as Margravius, Rheingravius, Landgravius, etc. Spel. Gloss.

GRAY'S INN. See INNS OF COURT.

GREAT ASSIZE. An edict of Henry II. of unknown date but probably issued during the first years of his reign. It related to the trial of causes. Green, 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 125. See GRAND ASSIZE.

GREAT BRITAIN. See UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

GREAT CHARTER. See MAGNA CARTA.

GREAT LAKES. A name commonly used to designate the five great lakes, viz., Superior, Michigan, Huron, Ontario, and Erie.

The open waters of the Great Lakes are "high seas" within the meaning of the Revised Statutes; U. S. v. Rodgers, 150 U. S. 249, 14 Sup. Ct. 109, 37 L. Ed. 1071. It had been held otherwise in Ex parte Byers, 32 Fed. 406. The common-law doctrine, as to the dominion, sovereignty, and ownership of lands under tide waters on the borders of the sea applies equally to the lands beneath the navigable waters of the Great Lakes; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 36 L. Ed. 1018.

See ADMIRALTY; LAKE.

GREAT LAW, THE, or "The Body of Laws of the Province of Pennsylvania and Territories thereunto belonging, Past at an Assembly held at Chester, alias Upland, the 7th day of the tenth month, called December, 1682."

This was the first code of laws established in Pennsylvania, and is justly celebrated for the provision in its first chapter for liberty of conscience. See Linn's Charter and Laws of Pennsylvania (Harrisburg, 1879), pp. 107, 478, etc.

GREAT ROLL. See PIPE ROLL.

GREAT SEAL. A seal by virtue of which a great part of the royal authority in England, is exercised. The appointment of the lord high chancellor, or lord keeper, is made by the delivery of the great seal into his custody. There is one great seal for all public acts of state which concern the United Kingdom. The seal of the United States, or of a state, used in the execution of commissions and other public documents is usually termed the great seal of the United States, or of the state, as the case may be.

GREAT TITHES. In Ecclesiastical Law. The more valuable tithes: as, corn, hay, and wood. 3 Burn, Eccl. Law 680, 681; 3 Steph. Com. 127. See TITHE.

GREE. Satisfaction for an offence committed or injury done. Cowell.

GREECE. A kingdom of Europe. A constitutional monarchy which exists under a constitution framed by a national assembly elected in December, 1863, and adopted October 29, 1864. It is hereditary in the male line, or failing that, in the female line. The king, whose title is King of the Hellenes (by decision of the Conference of London, 1863), was elected by National Assembly in March, 1863. He was the second son of the king of Denmark. The legislative power is vested in the Boulé, now consisting of members elected by manhood suffrage for a term of four years. There must be an attendance of at least one-half of the members to give legality to the proceedings, and no bill can become law without the consent of an absolute majority of members. The assembly has no power to alter the constitution itself. The executive power is vested in the king and a responsible ministry, who are ex officio members of the Boulé.

The supreme court of justice is called, as in ancient Athens, the Areopagus.

GREEN CLOTH. An English board or court of justice, composed of the lord steward and inferior officers, and held in the royal household; so named from the cloth upon the board at which it was held. Cowell.

GREEN SILVER. A feudal custom in the manor of Writtel, in Essex, where every tenant whose front door opens to Greenbury shall pay a half-penny yearly to the lord, by the name of "green silver" or "rent." Cowell.

GREEN WAX. In English Law. The name of the estreats of fines, issues, and amercements in the exchequer, delivered to the sheriff under the seal of that court, which is made with green wax. Cowell.

GREENBACK. This term is the ordinary name popularly applied to some United States treasury issues, and is not applied to any other species of money; Hickey v. State, 23 Ind. 21; but this term alone is not a proper denomination for these notes; Wesley v. State, 61 Ala. 282. See LEGAL TENDER.

GREENHEW. In Forest Law. The same as vert (q. v.). Termes de la Ley.

GREFFE. The register of the court of a fief. Jenks, 1 Sel. Essays Anglo-Amer. L. H. 43.

GREFFIERS. In French Law. Registrars, or clerks of the courts. They are officials attached to the courts to assist the judges in keeping the minutes, writing out judgments, orders, and other decisions given by the tribunals, and deliver copies thereof to the applicants.

GREGORIAN CODE. See CODE.

GREGORIAN EPOCH. The time from which the Gregorian calendar or computation dates; i. e. from the year 1582.

GREMIO. In Spanish Law. The union of merchants, artisans, laborers, or other persons who follow the same pursuits and are governed by the same regulations. The word guild, in English, has nearly the same signification.

GREMIUM (Lat.). Bosom. Ainsworth, Dict. De gremio mittere, to send from their bosom; used of one sent by an ecclesiastical corporation or body. A latere mittere, to send from his side, or one sent by an individual: as, a legate sent by the pope. Du Cange. In English law, an inheritance is said to be in gremio legis, in the bosom or under the protection of the law, when it is in abeyance. See IN NUBIBUS.

GRENVILLE ACT. The statute 10 Geo. III. c. 16, by which the jurisdiction over parliamentary election petitions was transferred from the whole house of commons to select committees. Repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 22.

GRESSOME (variously spelled Gressame, Grossome; Scotch, grassum). A fine due from a copyholder on the death of his lord. Plowd. fol. 271, 285; 1 Stra. 654. Cowell derives it from gersum.

In Scotland. Grassum is a fine paid for the making or renewing of a lease. Paterson.

GRETNA GREEN. A farmsteading near the village of Springfield, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, eight miles northwest of Carlisle. Cent. Dict. The name was afterward applied to the village which became notorious for the celebration of irregular marriages. By the law of Scotland nothing was required to constitute a marriage but the mutual declaration of the parties in the presence of witnesses—a ceremony which could be performed instantly, and it was immaterial whether or not the parties were minors. These conditions afforded an easy method of evading the Marriage Act, 26 Geo. II. c. 33, which required the publication of banns or a license. By act 19 & 20 Vict. c. 96, § 1, no irregular marriage in Scotland is now valid unless one of the parties had at the date thereof his or her usual place of residence there, or had lived in Scotland for twenty-one days next preceding such marriage.

GREVA. In old records. The seashore, sand, or beach. 2 Mon. Angl. 625; Cowell.

GREVE. A word of power or authority. Cowell.

GRIEVED. Aggrieved. 3 East 22.

GRITH. Peace; protection. Termes de la Ley.

GRITHBRECH (Sax. grith, peace, and brych, breaking). Breach of the king's peace, as opposed to frithbrech, a breach of the nation's peace with other nations. Leges Hen. I. c. 36; Chart. Willielm. Conq. Eccles. S. Pauli in Hist. ejusd. fol. 90.

GRITHSTOLE. A place of sanctuary. Cowell.

GROCER. In Old English Law. A merchant or trader who engrossed all vendible merchandise; an engrosser (q. v.). St. 37 Edw. III. c. 5.

GROCERIES. Articles of provision; the wares of a grocer; general supplies for table and household use.

Shovels, pails, and buckets have been held not to be groceries, although usually kept in a country grocery shop; Gay v. Southworth, 113 Mass. 335. It is a question of fact whether wines and liquors are groceries; Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 135. A grocery has been held to be an "offensive trade or calling" within a prohibition of use of a dwelling-house; Dorr v. Harrahan, 101 Mass. 531, 3 Am. Rep. 398. Groceries kept as part of the stock, by a merchant, are not "provisions found on hand for family use," within the meaning of an exemption law; State v. Conner, 73 Mo. 575. See PROVISIONS.

GROOM OF THE STOLE. In England an officer of the royal household who has charge of the king's wardrobe.

GROOM PORTER. An officer belonging to the royal household. Jacob.

GROSS. Absolute, entire. A thing in gross exists in its own right, and not as an appendage to another thing. See IN GROSS.

GROSS AVERAGE. That kind of average which falls on the ship, cargo, and freight, and is distinguished from particular average. See AVERAGE.

GROSS EARNINGS. Earnings of a railroad company while performing work incident to transportation, and reasonably within its corporate power, including the amount received from its equipment (steam shovels, work trains, etc.), but not from the sale of old equipment and surplus supplies and from the repair of cars, were so considered; State v. Ry. Co., 106 Minn. 176, 118 N. W. 679, 1007, 16 Ann. Cas. 426.

GROSS NEGLIGENCE. The omission of that care which even inattentive and thoughtless men never fail to take of their own property. Jones, Bailm.; Neal v. Gillett, 23 Conn. 437; 3 Hurlst. & C. 337.

Such as evidences wilfulness; such a gross want of care and regard for the right of others as to justify the presumption of wilfulness or wantonness. 2 Thomp. Neg. 1264, § 52; such as implies a disregard of consequences or a willingness to inflict injury. Deering, Neg. § 29; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Bodemer, 139 Ill. 596, 29 N. E. 692, 32 Am. St. Rep. 218.

Lata culpa, or, as the Roman lawyers most accurately called it, dolo proxima, is, in practice, considered as equivalent to dolus, or fraud itself. It must not be confounded, however, with fraud; for it may exist consistently with good faith and honesty of intention, according to common-law authorities; 32 Vt. 652; Shearm. & Red. Neg. § 3; Webb, Poll. Torts 538, n.

The distinction between degrees of negligence is not very sharply drawn in the later cases. See BAILMENT; NEGLIGENCE.

The intentional failure to perform a manifest duty, in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another; a thoughtless disregard of consequences without the exertion of any effort to avoid them. McDonald v. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 21 S. W. 775; Schindler v. Ry. Co., 87 Mich. 400, 49 N. W. 670. It has been held to have no legal significance which imports other than a want of due care; Stringer v. R. Co., 99 Ala. 397, 13 South. 80.

GROSS RECEIPTS. See TAX.

GROSS WEIGHT. The total weight of goods or merchandise, with the chests, bags, and the like, from which are to be deducted tare and tret.

GROSSE AVENTURE, CONTRAT À LA. (Fr.). In French Marine Law. The contract of bottomry. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 5.

GROSSEMENT (L. Fr.). Largely; greatly. Grossement enciente or ensient. Big with child; in the last stage of pregnancy. Plowd. 76.

GROSSOME. In Old English Law. A fine paid for a lease. Corrupted from gersum. Plowd. fol. 270, 285; Cowell.

GROUND. Land; soil; earth. See LAND. It may include an improved town lot; Ferree v. School Dist., 76 Pa. 378.

GROUND ANNUAL. In Scotch Law. An annual rent of two kinds; first, the feu-duties payable to the lords of erection and their successors; second, the rents reserved for building-lots in a city, where sub-feus are prohibited. This rent is in the nature of a perpetual annuity. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 11. 3. 52.

GROUND LANDLORD. The grantor of an estate on which a ground-rent is reserved.

GROUND OF ACTION. The foundation, basis, or data, upon which a cause of action rests. See CAUSE OF ACTION.

GROUND RENT. A rent reserved to himself and his heirs, by the grantor of land in fee-simple, out of the land conveyed. See Kenege v. Elliott, 9 Watts. (Pa.) 262; Bosler v. Kuhn, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 185.

In Pennsylvania it is real estate; Cobb v. Biddle, 14 Pa. 444. See Hirst's Estate, 147 Pa. 319, 23 Atl. 455. The interest of the owner of the rent is an estate altogether distinct and of a very different nature from that which the owner of the land has in the land itself. Each is the owner of a fee-simple estate. The one has an estate of inheritance in the rent, and the other has an estate of inheritance in the land out of which the rent issues. The one is an incorporeal inheritance in fee, and the other is a corporeal inheritance in fee; Irwin v. Bank, 1 Pa. 349; Taylor v. Taylor, 47 Md. 300. So, the owner of the rent is not liable for any part of the taxes assessed upon the owner of the land out of which the rent issues; Philadelphia Library Co. v. Ingham, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 72. Being real estate, it is bound by a judgment, and may be mortgaged like other real estate. It is a rent-service; Ingersoll v. Sergeant, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 337.

A ground-rent, being a rent-service, is, of course, subject to all the incidents of such a rent. Thus, it is distrainable of common right, that is, by the common law; Co. Litt. 142 a; Kenege v. Elliott, 9 Watts (Pa.) 262. So, also, it may be apportioned; Ingersoll v. Sergeant, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 337; Myers v. Silljacks, 58 Md. 323. And this sometimes takes place by operation of law, as when the owner of the rent purchases part of the land; in which case the rent is apportioned, and extinguished pro tanto; Littleton 222. And the reason of the extinguishment is that a rent-service is given as a return for the possession of the land. Thus, upon the enjoyment of the lands depends the obligation to pay the rent; and if the owner of the rent purchases part of the land, the tenant, no longer enjoying that portion, is not liable to pay rent for it, and so much of the rent as issued out of that portion is, consequently, extinguished. See 2 Bla. Com. 41; St. Mary's Church v. Miles, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 235; Ingersoll v. Sergeant, id. 352.

At law, the legal ownership of these two estates—that in the rent and that in the land out of which it issues—can coexist only while they are held by different persons or in different rights; for the moment they unite in one person in the same right, the rent is merged and extinguished; Phillips v. Bonsall, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 142; Penington v. Coats, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 283. But if the one estate or interest be legal and the other equitable, there is no merger; Penington v. Coats, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 283. In equity, however, this doctrine of merger is subject to very great qualification. A merger is not favored in equity; and the doctrine there is that although in some cases, where the legal estates unite in the same person in the same right, a merger will take place against the intention of the party whose interests are united (see Helmbold v. Man, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 421, and cases there cited), yet, as a general rule, the intention, actual or presumed, of such party will govern; and where no intention is expressed, if it appears most for his advantage that a merger should not take place, such will be presumed to have been his intention; and that it is only in cases where it is perfectly indifferent to the party thus interested that, in equity, a merger occurs; Dougherty v. Jack, 5 Watts (Pa.) 457, 30 Am. Dec. 335; Helmbold v. Man, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 421; Richards v. Ayres, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 487.

A ground-rent being a freehold estate, created by deed and perpetual by the terms of its creation, no mere lapse of time without demand of payment raises, at common law, a presumption that the estate has been released; Trustees of St. Mary's Church v. Miles, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 229. But this is otherwise in Pennsylvania now, by act of April 27, 1855, sec. 7, P. L. 369, whereby a presumption of a release or extinguishment is created where no payment, claim, or demand is made for the rent, nor any declaration or acknowledgment of its existence made by the owner of the premises subject to the rent, for twenty-one years. This applies to the estate in the rent, and comprehends the future payments. And this act makes no exception in behalf of persons under disability when the title accrues, nor of persons taking as heirs at law or distributees; where a life tenant in ground rent released the same absolutely, as against the remainderman the limitation commenced to run from the date on which the first payment thereafter became due and unpaid, rather than at the death of the life tenant; Wallace v. Church, 152 Pa. 258, 25 Atl. 520. It has been held that this act, affecting the remedy merely, is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of a contract; Biddle v. Hooven, 120 Pa. 221, 13 Atl. 927; Clay v. Iseminger, 190 Pa. 580, 42 Atl. 1039, affirmed in Wilson v. Iseminger, 185 U. S. 55, 22 Sup. Ct. 573, 46 L. Ed. 804. Independently of this act of assembly, arrearages of rent which had fallen due twenty years before commencement of suit might be presumed to have been paid; Trustees of St. Mary's Church v. Miles, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 229. These arrearages are a lien upon the land out of which the rent issues; but, as a general rule, the lien is discharged by a judicial sale of the land, and attaches to the fund raised by the sale. See Bantleon v. Smith, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 146, 4 Am. Dec. 430; Sands v. Smith, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 9; Buck v. Fisher, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 516; Catlin v. Robinson, 2 Watts (Pa.) 378; Irwin v. Bank, 1 Pa. 349.

Ground rents in Pennsylvania were formerly made irredeemable, usually after the lapse of a certain period after their creation. But now the creation of such is forbidden by act of 22 April, 1850. But this does not prohibit the reservation of ground-rents redeemable only on the death of a person in whom a life interest in the rents is vested; Skelley's Appeal, 11 W. N. Cas. (Pa.) 11. The act of April 15, 1869, providing for the extinguishment of irredeemable ground-rents, theretofore created, by legal proceedings instituted by the owner of the land, without the consent of the owner of the ground-rent, was declared unconstitutional; Palairet's Appeal, 67 Pa. 479, 5 Am. Rep. 450.

As ground-rent deeds are usually drawn, the owner of the rent has three remedies for the recovery of the arrearages, viz., by action (of debt or covenant; but debt is now seldom employed), distress, and (for want of sufficient distress) the right to re-enter and hold the land as of the grantor's former estate.

As used in a 99-year lease renewable forever, it includes not only the rents but includes the reversion; Camp v. Boyd, 229 U. S. 530, 33 Sup. Ct. 785, 57 L. Ed. 1317.

See 2 Am. L. Reg. 577; 3 id. 65; Cadw. Gr. Rents; Mitch. R. P.

GROUNDAGE. The consideration paid for standing a ship in a port. Jacob, L. Dict.

GROWING CROPS. Growing crops raised by the cultivation of man, are in certain cases personal chattels, and in others, part of the realty. A crop is to be considered as growing from the time the seed is put in the ground, at which time the seed is no longer a chattel, but becomes part of the realty, and passes with a sale of it; Wilkinson v. Ketler, 69 Ala. 435. If planted by the owner of the land, they are a part of the realty, but may by sale become personal chattels, if they are fit for harvest, and the sale contemplates their being cut and carried off, and not a right in the vendee to enter and cultivate. So even with trees; Claflin v. Carpenter, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 580, 38 Am. Dec. 381; 9 B. & C. 561; Olmstead v. Niles, 7 N. H. 522; 11 Co. 50. The distinction has been made that growing crops of grain and annual productions raised by cultivation and the industry of man are personal chattels; while trees, fruit, or grass and other natural products of the earth are parcel of the land; Green v. Armstrong, 1

Den. (N. Y.) 550. Matured apples are held personalty; Doty v. R. Co., 136 Mo. App. 254, 116 S. W. 1126. But if the owner in fee conveys land before the crop is severed, the crop passes with the land as appertaining to it; Powell v. Rich, 41 Ill. 466; Backinstoss v. Stahler's Adm'rs, 33 Pa. 254, 75 Am. Dec. 592; Bludworth v. Hunter, 9 Rob. (La.) 256; and the same rule applies to foreclosure sales; Lane v. King, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 584, 24 Am. Dec. 105; Bittinger v. Baker, 29 Pa. 68, 70 Am. Dec. 154; Sherman v. Willet, 42 N. Y. 150. But before the foreclosure sale is confirmed, the purchaser has no title, with right to possession in the crops growing on the land at the time of sale, that will entitle him to maintain replevin therefor after they have been severed by the person in possession; Woehler v. Endter, 46 Wis. 301, 1 N. W. 329, 50 N. W. 1099. Though growing crops, unless reserved, pass under a conveyance of the land; Carpenter v. Carpenter, 154 Mich. 100, 117 N. W. 598; In re Andersen's Estate, 83 Neb. 8, 118 N. W. 1108, 131 Am. St. Rep. 613, 17 Ann. Cas. 941; they are subject to levy and sale the same as other personal property; Erickson v. Paterson, 47 Minn. 525, 50 N. W. 699. If a tenant, who holds for a certain time, plant annual crops, or even trees in a nursery for the purposes of transplantation and sale, they are personal chattels when fit for harvest; Miller v. Baker, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 27; Whitmarsh v. Walker, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 313; 4 Taunt. 316. If planted by a tenant for an uncertain period, they are regarded, whether mature or not, in many respects as personal property, but liable to become part of the realty if the tenant voluntarily abandons or forfeits possession of the premises; 5 Co. 116 a; Debow v. Colfax, 10 N. J. L. 128; Co. Litt. 55; Whipple v. Foot, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 418, 421, note, 3 Am. Dec. 442. See Craddock v. Riddlesbarger, 2 Dana (Ky.) 206; Stambaugh v. Yeates, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 161; 1 Washb. R. P. 3.

See as to validity and effect of mortgages on crops planted and unplanted, MORTGAGE.

Between the lessor of lands and his lessee on shares, growing crops are personal property, and they may be sold by parol as against a subsequent grantee, especially where the latter has notice of such sale; Nuernberger v. Von Der Heidt, 39 Ill. App. 404. The grantor of farm lands may reserve the growing crops by oral agreement; Kluse v. Sparks, 10 Ind. App. 444, 36 N. E. 914, 37 N. E. 1047.

A successful plaintiff in ejectment is entitled to a standing crop; Hartshorne v. Ingels, 23 Okl. 535, 101 Pac. 1045, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531; Craig v. Watson, 68 Ga. 115; Cox v. Hamilton, 69 N. C. 30; Carlisle v. Killebrew, 89 Ala. 329, 6 South. 756, 6 L. R. A. 617; but not where he has recovered rent for the current year; Gardner v. Kersey, 39 Ga. 664, 99 Am. Dec. 484.

The measure of damages for the destruction of a crop planted, but not yet up, is the rental value of the land and the cost of the seed and labor; but when the crop is somewhat matured, so that the product can be fairly determined, the value thereof when destroyed is the measure of damages; Ohio & Mississippi Ry. Co. v. Nuetzel, 43 Ill. App. 108. Where a crop is lost through the wrongful act of another, the measure of damages is the market value of the crop less the cost of producing, harvesting, and marketing it; Shotwell v. Dodge, 8 Wash. 337, 36 Pac. 254; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Haskell, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 550, 23 S. W. 546.

See AWAY-GOING CROPS; EMBLEMENTS; WAY-GOING CROPS.

GROWTH HALFPENNY. A rate paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle. Clayt. 92.

GRUARII. The principal officers of a forest. Cowell.

GUADALUPE HIDALGO, TREATY OF. A treaty between the United States and Mexico, terminating the Mexican War, dated February 2, 1848. It was communicated by the president to the senate on February 23, 1848, and having been amended by the senate and ratified, it was afterwards ratified by the Mexican congress, both houses of which were required to concur. It was somewhat modified by the treaty with Mexico of 1853, by which a large territory was acquired from Mexico. See GADSDEN PURCHASE.

GUADIA. A pledge; a custom. Spel. Gloss; Calv. Lex.

GUAM. The largest and most populous of the Ladrone Islands. It was occupied by the Spaniards in 1688, was captured by the United States steamship Charleston in June, 1898, and was ceded to the United States by the treaty of Paris, December 10, 1898. It is governed by a "Naval Governor," an officer of the United States navy who is commandant of the naval station. It has a court of appeal and courts of first instance.

GUARANTEE. He to whom a guaranty is made. Also, to make oneself responsible for the obligation of another.

The guarantee is entitled to receive payment, in the first place, from the debtor, and, secondly, from the guarantor. He must be careful not to give time, beyond that stipulated in the original agreement, to the debtor, without the consent of the guarantor. The guarantee should, at the instance of the guarantor, bring an action against the principal for the recovery of the debt; King v. Baldwin, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 384, 8 Am. Dec. 415; Cope v. Smith, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 116, 11 Am. Dec. 582; 2 Bro. C. C. 579, 582. But the mere omission of the guarantee to sue the principal debtor will not, in general, discharge the guarantor; Cope v. Smith, 8 S. &

R. (Pa.) 112, 11 Am. Dec. 582. See GUARANTY.

GUARANTOR. He who makes a guaranty.

GUARANTY. An undertaking to answer for another's liability, and collateral thereto. A collateral undertaking to pay the debt of another in case he does not pay it. Shaw, C. J., Dole v. Young, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 252.

A provision to answer for the payment of some debt, or the performance of some duty in the case of the failure of some person who, in the first instance, is liable for such payment or performance; Gallagher v. Nichols, 60 N. Y. 438; Bayl. Sur. & Guar. 2.

A promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person. First Nat. Bank v. Babcock, 94 Cal. 96, 29 Pac. 415, 28 Am. St. Rep. 94. See Gridley v. Capen, 72 Ill. 13.

It is distinguished from suretyship in being a secondary, while suretyship is a primary, obligation; or, as sometimes defined, guaranty is an undertaking that the debtor shall pay; suretyship, that the debt shall be paid. Or again, a contract of suretyship creates a liability for the performance of the act in question at the proper time, while the contract of guaranty creates a liability for the ability of the debtor to perform the act; Bayl. Sur. & Guar. 3. Guaranty is an engagement to pay on a debtor's insolvency, if due diligence be used to obtain payment. Reigart v. White, 52 Pa. 440. But if the principal debtor is insolvent, the creditor need not pursue him before suing the guarantor; National Bank of Chester County v. Thomas, 220 Pa. 360, 69 Atl. 813.

The undertaking is essentially in the alternative. A guarantor cannot be sued as a promisor, as the surety may; his contract must be specially set forth. A guarantor warrants the solvency of the promisor, which an indorser does not; President, etc., of the Oxford Bank v. Haynes, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 423, 19 Am. Dec. 334.

The distinction between suretyship and guaranty has been thus expressed: A surety is usually bound with his principal by the same instrument, executed at the same time, and on the same consideration. He is an original promisor and debtor from the beginning, and is held, ordinarily, to know every default of his principal. Usually, he will not be discharged, either by the mere indulgence of the creditor to the principal, or by want of notice of the default of the principal, no matter how much he may be injured thereby. On the other hand, the contract of the guarantor is his own separate undertaking, in which the principal does not join. It is usually entered into before or after that of the principal, and is often supported on a separate consideration from that supporting the contract of the principal. The original contract of his principal is not his contract, and he is not bound to take notice of its non-performance. He is often discharged by the mere indulgence of the creditor to the principal, and is usually not liable unless notified of the default of the principal. Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 1. See also, Markland Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Kimmel, 87 Ind. 560; White's Adm'r v. Life Ass'n, 63 Ala. 419, 35 Am. Rep. 45; Chatham Nat. Bank v. Pratt, 135 N. Y. 423, 32 N. E. 236. A written guaranty which fails to show on its face the person to whom the guaranty is made is void; Marston v. French, 17 N. Y. Supp. 509; and where a contract contains no guaranty, parol evidence of one is inadmissible; Van Winkle v. Crowell, 146 U. S. 42, 13 Sup. Ct. 18, 36 L. Ed. 880.

At common law, a guaranty could be made by parol; but by the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, re-enacted almost in terms in the several states, it is provided that "No action shall be brought whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, . . . unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized." While, under this statute "no action shall be brought" on a contract not in writing, etc., yet such a contract may be enforced by a court against an attorney, by summary proceedings; 1 Cr. & J. 374.

"Any special promise" in the act does not apply to promises implied in law; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 53.

The following classes of promises have been held not within the statute, and valid though made by parol.

First, where there is a liability pre-existent to the new promise.

1. Where the principal debtor is discharged by the new promise being made; Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135; Walker v. Penniman, 8 Gray (Mass.) 233; 1 Q. B. 933; Skelton v. Brewster, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 376; Browne, Stat. Fr. §§ 166, 193; and an entry of such discharge in the creditor's books is sufficient proof; Corbett v. Cochran, 3 Hill (S. C.) 41, 30 Am. Dec. 348. This may be done by agreement to that effect; Wood v. Corcoran, 1 Allen (Mass.) 405; by novation, by substitution, or by discharge under final process; 1 B. & Ald. 297; Blankenship & Co. v. Tillman (Tex.) 18 S. W. 646; but mere forbearance, or an agreement to forbear pressing the claim, is not enough; 1 Sm. L. Cas. 387; Harrington v. Rich, 6 Vt. 666.

2. Where the principal obligation is void or not enforceable when the new promise is made, and this is contemplated by the parties. But if not so contemplated, then the new promise is void; Burge, Surety 10; 1 Burr. 373. But see, on this point, Nabb v. Koontz, 17 Md. 283; Nelson v. Dubois, 13

Johns. (N. Y.) 175; Connerat v. Goldsmith, 6 Ga. 14.

3. So where the promise does not refer to the particular debt, or where this is unascertained; 1 Wils. 305.

In these three classes the principal obligation ceases to exist after the new promise is made.

4. Where the promisor undertakes for his own debt. But the mere fact that he is indebted will not suffice, unless his promise refers to that debt; nor is it sufficient if he subsequently becomes indebted on his own account, if not indebted when he promises, or if it is then contingent; Suydam v. Westfall, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 211. See Morris v. Gaines, 82 Tex. 255, 17 S. W. 538. The provision of the statute does not apply whenever the main purpose of the promisor is not to answer for another, but to subserve some pecuniary or business purpose of his own, although it may be in form a promise to pay the debt of another; Davis v. Patrick, 141 U. S. 479, 12 Sup. Ct. 58, 35 L. Ed. 826. So, if the vendee of land promise to pay the purchase-money on a debt due by the vendor; Morris v. Gaines, 82 Tex. 255, 17 S. W. 538.

5. Where the new promise is in consideration of property placed by the debtor in the promisor's hands; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391; Maxwell v. Haynes, 41 Me. 559; Meyer v. Hartman, 72 Ill. 442. And where the new promise is made in a transaction which is in substance a sale to the promisor; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 65.

6. Where the promise does not relate to the promisor's property, but to that of the debtor in the hands of the promisor.

7. Where the promise is made to the debtor, not the creditor; because this is not the debt of "another" than the promisee; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391; 11 Ad. & E. 438.

8. Where the creditor surrenders a lien against the debtor or on his property, which the promisor acquires or is benefited by; Fell, Guar. c. 2; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. §§ 63, 64; 2 B. & Ald. 613; Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 412; but not so where the surrender of the lien does not benefit the promisor; Nelson v. Boynton, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 396, 37 Am. Dec. 148; Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 412.

In the five last classes, the principal debt may still subsist concurrently with the new promise, and the creditor will have a double remedy; but the fulfillment of the new promise will discharge the principal debt, because he can have but one satisfaction. The repeated dicta, that if the principal debt subsists, the promise is collateral and within the statute, are not sustainable; Cross v. Richardson, 30 Vt. 641. But the general doctrine now is that the transaction must amount to a purchase, the engagement for the debt being the consideration therefor, in whole or in part; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391.

Where one owes a debt to another, and promises to pay his debt to a creditor of such other party, the promise is not within the statute; Dearborn v. Parks, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 81, 17 Am. Dec. 206; 3 B. & C. 842.

Second, if the new promise is for a liability then first incurred, it is original, if exclusive credit is given to the promisor; Chambers v. Robbins, 28 Conn. 544; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 195. Whether exclusive credit is so given is a question of fact for the jury; Brooke v. Waring, 7 Gill (Md.) 7. Merely charging the debtor on a book-account is not conclusive.

Whether promises merely to indemnify come within the statute is not wholly settled; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 158; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. §§ 59, 61. In many cases they are held to be original promises, and not within the statute; Chapin v. Merrill, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 657. But few of the cases, however, have been decided solely on this ground, most of them falling within the classes of original promises before specified. On principle, such contracts seem within the statute if there is a liability on the part of any third person to the promisee. If not, these promises would be original under class seven, above. Where the indemnity is against the promisor's own default, he is already liable without his promise to indemnify; and to make the promise collateral would make the statute a covert fraud; 10 Ad. & E. 453; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391; Harrison v. Sawtel, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 242, 6 Am. Dec. 337; Jones v. Shorter, 1 Ga. 294, 44 Am. Dec. 649; Dunn v. West, 5 B. Monr. (Ky.) 382; Beaman's Adm'r v. Russell, 20 Vt. 205, 49 Am. Dec. 775; Holmes v. Knights, 10 N. H. 175; Stocking v. Sage, 1 Conn. 519; Linscott v. Fernald, 5 Me. 504. The weight of American authority is said to be in favor of applying the statute to cases of indemnity; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 59, n. When the promise to indemnify is in fact a promise to pay the debt of another it is within the statute. See Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 412. A promise to indemnify another against loss in becoming surety on a replevin bond is within the statute; Easter v. White, 12 Ohio St. 219. So on a bond for stay of execution; Nugent v. Wolfe, 111 Pa. 471, 4 Atl. 15, 56 Am. Rep. 291. But a promise to indemnify one if he will become bail in a criminal case has been held not within the statute; 4 B. & S. 414.

A verbal promise to save certain parties harmless from all loss by promisees as sureties on account of a bond signed at promisor's request is valid; Hawes v. Murphy, 191 Mass. 469, 78 N. E. 109; and so where a mortgagee agreed verbally to indemnify a purchaser of part of the mortgaged property against judgment liens; Peterson v. Creason, 47 Or. 69, 81 Pac. 574; a verbal promise by an attorney to sureties on an appellee's bond to protect them; Esch v. White, 76 Minn. 220, 78 N. W. 1114; but an oral promise to reimburse plaintiff as surety on the bond of another for any loss resulting therefrom, was held to be within the statute; Craft v. Lott, 87 Miss. 590, 40 South. 462, 6 Ann. Cas. 670. An oral promise to indemnify another for becoming surety on the bond of a third, is not within the statute; Hartley v. Sandford, 66 N. J. L. 40, 48 Atl. 1009. A parol promise by a surety on a sheriff's bond to indemnify a co-surety against any loss, is within the statute; Wolverton v. Davis, 85 Va. 64, 6 S. E. 619, 17 Am. St. Rep. 56; but a verbal agreement by the principal that he would save harmless the sureties from liability on his bond, is valid as an original undertaking; Barth v. Graf, 101 Wis. 27, 76 N. W. 1100.

A contract of insurance is not within the statute; Mattingly v. Ins. Co., 120 Ky. 768, 83 S. W. 577.

Third, guaranties may be given for liabilities thereafter to be incurred, and will attach when the liability actually accrues. In this class the promise will be original, and not within the statute, if credit is given to the promisor exclusively; 2 Term 80. See Pomeroy v. Patterson, 40 Ill. App. 275. But where the future obligation is contingent merely, the new promise is held not within the statute, on the ground that there is no principal liability when the collateral one is incurred; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 196. But this doctrine is questionable if the agreement distinctly contemplates the contingency; Carville v. Crane, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 483, 40 Am. Dec. 364. An offer to guarantee must be accepted within a reasonable time; but no notice of acceptance is required if property has been delivered under the guaranty; Paige v. Parker, 8 Gray (Mass.) 211; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 511; Doud v. Bank, 54 Fed. 846, 4 C. C. A. 607; Davis v. Wells, 104 U. S. 159, 26 L. Ed. 686.

"A contract of guaranty, like every other contract, can only be made by the mutual assent of the parties. If the guaranty is signed by the guarantor, at the request of the other party, or if the latter's agreement to accept is contemporaneous with the guaranty; or if the receipt from him of a valuable consideration, however small, is acknowledged in the guaranty, the mutual assent is proved, and the delivery of the guaranty to him or for his use completes the contract. But if the guaranty is signed by the guarantor, without any previous request of the other party, and in his absence, for no consideration moving between them, except future advances to be made to the principal debtor, the guaranty is in legal effect an offer or proposal on the part of the guarantor, needing an acceptance by the other party to complete the contract;" Davis Sewing Mach. Co. v. Richards, 115 U. S. 524, 6 Sup. Ct. 173, 29 L. Ed. 480. See 34 Am. L. Reg. & Rev. 257.

The agreement of a del credere agent to pay for goods sold by him is not within the statute; Sherwood v. Stone, 14 N. Y. 267.

The form of the writing is not material; it may consist of one or more writings (provided they refer to each other on their face: Wiley v. Robert, 27 Mo. 388; but see Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. 446, 14 L. Ed. 493); in such case it is enough if one be signed; 11 East 142. A minute of a vote of a corporation is sufficient; Tufts v. Mining Co., 14 Allen (Mass.) 407.

There is a conflict of authority as to whether the consideration need appear in the writing. It was finally settled in England that it must; 4 B. & Ald. 595; but this is now changed by statute 19 & 20 Vict. The cases are reviewed in Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 82. A seal imports a consideration; id. As to the signature of the party to be charged, a seal alone is generally held sufficient; Stra. 764; so is a mark; Barnard v. Heydrick, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 62; 2 M. & S. 286; and a signature by the initials only; 1 Den. 471; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen (Mass.) 474; and a signature on a telegram; Dunning & Smith v. Roberts, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 463. The signature need not be at the foot of the writing; 2 M. & W. 653.

Guaranty may be made for the tort, as well as the contract of another, and then comes under the term miscarriage in the statute; 2 B. & Ald. 613; Turner v. Hubbell, 2 Day (Conn.) 457, 2 Am. Dec. 115; 1 Wils. 305; Stone v. Hooker, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 154; Avery v. Halsey, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 174.

All guaranties need a consideration to support them. A guaranty of the payment of a negotiable promissory note, written by a third person upon a note before its delivery, need express no consideration, even where the law requires the consideration of the guaranty to be expressed in writing; but the consideration which the note upon its face implies to have passed between the original parties is sufficient; Moses v. Bank, 149 U. S. 298, 13 Sup. Ct. 900, 37 L. Ed. 743. Forbearance to sue is good consideration; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 190; Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 81; 27 L. J. Exch. 120; Sanders v. Barlow, 21 Fed. 836; Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279. Where the guaranty is contemporaneous with the principal obligation, it shares the consideration of the latter; Leonard v. Vredenburgh, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 29, 5 Am. Dec. 317; Rabaud v. De Wolf, 1 Paine 580, Fed. Cas. No. 11,519; Townsley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 170, 7 L. Ed. 386; Simons v. Steele, 36 N. H. 73.

A guaranty may be for a single act, or may be continuous. The cases are conflicting, as the question is purely one of the intention of the particular contract; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. 156. The tendency in this country is said to be against construing guaranties as continuing, unless the intention of the parties is so clear as not to admit of a reasonable doubt; Bayl. Sur. & Guar. 7, citing Birdsall v. Heacock, 32 Ohio St. 177, 30 Am. Rep. 572; Lent v. Padleford, 2 Am. Lead. Cas. 141; Whitney v. Groot, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 82; Taussig v. Reid, 145 Ill. 488, 32 N. E. 918, 36 Am. St. Rep. 504. If the object be to give a standing credit to be used from time to time, either indefinitely or for a fixed period, the liability is continuing; Sherburne v. Paper Co., 40 Ill. App. 383; Conduitt v. Ryan, 3 Ind. App. 1, 29 N. E. 160; but if no time is fixed and nothing indicates the continuance of the obligation, the presumption is in favor of a limited liability as to time; Crist v. Burlingame, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 351. A guaranty of any bills of account for goods sold another to a certain amount is a continuing guaranty; Sherburne v. Paper Co., 40 Ill. App. 383. A sealed continuing guaranty is revoked by the death of the guarantor; Slagle & Co. v. Forney's Ex'rs, 22 W. N. C. (Pa.) 457.

A continuing guaranty (so far as it is a mere offer) is revoked as to future action by the death of the guarantor; 5 Q. B. D. 42.

The authorities are not agreed as to the negotiability of a guaranty. It is held that a guaranty which is a separate and distinct instrument is not negotiable separately; Ekel v. Snevily, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 272, 38 Am. Dec. 758; Sandford v. Norton, 14 Vt. 233; Irish v. Cutter, 31 Me. 536; Gallagher v. White, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 92; True v. Fuller, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 140. The right of the acceptor of a bill, to the benefit of a guaranty given to him, is not transferable to a holder of the bill, unless it was given for the purpose of being exhibited to other parties; 3 Ch. App. 756. But if a guaranty is on a negotiable note, it is negotiable with the note; and if the note is to bearer, the guaranty has been held to be negotiable in itself; Ketchell v. Burns, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 456; Smith v. Dickinson, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 261, 44 Am. Dec. 306. But an equitable interest passes by transfer, and the assignee may sue in the name of the assignor; Reed v. Garvin, 12 S. & R. 100; Partridge v. Davis, 20 Vt. 506. It has been held that no suit can be maintained upon a guaranty except by the person with whom it was made; McDoal v. Yoemans, 8 Watts (Pa.) 361; but it has also been held that a guaranty of a note may be sued on by any person who advances money on it, but that it is not negotiable unless made upon the note the payment of which it guarantees; McLaren v. Watson's Ex'rs, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 425, 37 Am. Dec. 260.

It is held that a guaranty is not enforceable by others than those to whom it is directed; Bleeker v. Hyde, 3 McLean 279, Fed. Cas. No. 1,537; Mellen v. Whipple, 1 Gray (Mass.) 317; Blymire v. Boistle, 6 Watts (Pa.) 182, 31 Am. Dec. 458; although they advance goods thereon; Grant v. Naylor, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 224, 2 L. Ed. 603.

In one case it was held that the guarantor was not bound where the guaranty was addressed to two and acted on by one of them only; Smith v. Montgomery, 3 Tex. 199. It was held, also, that the guaranty was not enforceable by the survivor of two to whom it was addressed, for causes occurring since the decease of the other; 7 Term 254.

In the case of promissory notes, a distinction has sometimes been made between a guaranty of payment and a guaranty of collectibility; the latter requiring that the holder shall diligently prosecute the principal debtor without avail; Day v. Elmore, 4 Wis. 190; Clark v. Merriam, 25 Conn. 576; Van Derveer v. Wright, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 547; Blanchard v. Wood, 26 Me. 358; Crane v. Wheeler, 48 Minn. 207, 50 N. W. 1033.

It has in some cases been held that an indorsement in blank on a promissory note by a stranger to the note was prima facie a guaranty; Donovan v. Griswold, 37 Ill. App. 616. By Neg. Inst. Act §§ 63, 64, all such signers are liable as indorsers. A second acceptance on a bill of exchange may amount to a guaranty; 2 Camp. 447.

A corporation (unless by statutory authority) cannot guarantee a liability unless it is created in the ordinary course of its business; Ward v. Joslin, 105 Fed. 224, 44 C. C. A. 456, affirmed 186 U. S. 142, 22 Sup. Ct. 807, 46 L. Ed. 1093. Where a corporation by the unanimous consent of its stockholders guaranteed the debt of another corporation such guaranty was subject to the claims of its creditors; In re Prospect Worsted Mills, 126 Fed. 1011. A lumber corporation has no power to bind itself as a guarantor for the performance of a building contract; In re Smith Lumber Co., 132 Fed. 620; contra, Central Lumber Co. v. Kelter, 201 Ill. 503, 66 N. E. 543. A corporation may guarantee dividends on its stock; Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Tel. Co., 127 Ia. 350, 101 N. W. 742, 69 L. R. A. 968, 109 Am. St. Rep. 387. Guarantees of payment of bonds taken by a trust company in the ordinary course of business are not ultra vires; Broadway Nat. Bank v. Baker, 176 Mass. 294, 57 N. E. 603; but it is ultra vires for a manufacturing corporation to guarantee the payment of rent although it was given to induce the lessee to become a customer; Koehler & Co. v. Reinheimer, 26 App. Div. 1, 49 N. Y. Supp. 755. In Aaronson v. Brewing Co., 26 Misc. 655, 56 N. Y. Supp. 387, it was held that a brewing company can guarantee the performance of a lease of one of its customers; to the same effect, Winterfield v. Brewing Co., 96 Wis. 239, 71 N. W. 101. A corporation, unless organized for the express purpose of becoming surety for others, has no power to do so unless the contract is to its manifest advantage; Monarch Co. v. Bank, 105 Ky. 430, 49 S. W.

317, 88 Am. St. Rep. 310. A brewing company may become liable as surety on a license bond which it executed to induce the licensee to buy liquor from it; Horst v. Lewis, 71 Neb. 365, 98 N. W. 1046, 103 N. W. 460.

A guarantor is discharged by a material alteration in the contract without his consent; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 378; Page v. Krekey, 137 N. Y. 307, 33 N. E. 311, 21 L. R. A. 409, 33 Am. St. Rep. 731; Manning, C. & Co. v. Alger, 85 Ia. 617, 52 N. W. 542. Modification of a contract made by the contractor and the owner will not release the guarantor, if they are such as are permitted by the terms of the contract; Miller v. Eccles, 155 Pa. 36, 25 Atl. 776. See SURETYSHIP.

The guarantor may also be discharged by the neglect of the creditor in pursuing the principal debtor. The same strictness as to demand and notice is not necessary to charge a guarantor as is required to charge an indorser; but in the case of a guarantied note the demand on the maker must be made in a reasonable time, and if he is solvent at the time of the maturity of the note, and remains so for such reasonable time afterwards, the guarantor does not become liable for his subsequent insolvency; 2 H. Bla. 612; Talbot v. Gay, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 534. Notice of nonpayment must also be given to the guarantor; Greene v. Dodge, 2 Ohio 430; but where the name of the guarantor of a promissory note does not appear on the note, such notice is not necessary unless damage is sustained thereby, and in such case the guarantor is discharged only to the extent of such damage; Reynolds v. Douglass, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 497, 9 L. Ed. 1171. One who guarantees that another will pay promptly for goods to be purchased is not liable where the purchaser becomes insolvent after the guaranty is given, and the seller gives the guarantor no notice of the purchaser's failure to pay; Taussig v. Reid, 145 Ill. 488, 32 N. E. 918, 36 Am. St. Rep. 504. A presentment for payment is not necessary in order to charge one who guarantees the due payment of a bill or note; 5 M. & G. 559. It is not necessary that an action should be brought against the principal debtor; Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. 113, 8 L. Ed. 626. See, also, Isett v. Hoge, 2 Watts (Pa.) 128; Backus v. Shipherd, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 629.

From the close connection of guaranty with suretyship, it is convenient to consider many of the principles common to both under the head of suretyship, which article see.

Where an innocent person acts upon a guaranty, the execution of which was procured by misrepresentation, the burden devolves upon the guarantor to show that he was free from negligence; the rule in such cases being the same with respect to the execution of guaranties as to that of negotiable instruments; Page v. Krekey, 63 Hun 629, 17 N. Y. Supp. 764.

Whether a guaranty is absolute or special is a question of fact; Donovan v. Griswold, 37 Ill. App. 616.

Where the guaranty of a written contract is executed on the same paper, notice of acceptance by the person for whose benefit it is made, is unnecessary; Bechtold v. Lyon, 130 Ind. 194, 29 N. E. 912. See SURETYSHIP.

It is not within the general scope of a partner's authority to give guaranties in the name of the firm; Wood's Byles, Bills 48; Osborne v. Thompson, 35 Minn. 229, 28 N. W. 260. And an officer of a company cannot bind it as surety or guarantor; Culver v. Real Estate Co., 91 Pa. 367.

See SURETYSHIP.

GUARANTY FUND. Acts subjecting banks to assessments for a depositors' guaranty fund to be applied to the payment of depositors of an insolvent bank. The Oklahoma acts provide an assessment of five per cent upon each bank's average daily deposits, to be levied by the state banking board, and applied to the payment of depositors of any failed bank if its cash is not immediately available to pay its depositors in full. If the fund be not sufficient, an additional assessment must be levied. A lien is reserved upon the assets of the failing bank to make good the sum thus taken from the fund. These acts were held valid as within the police power and as not depriving banks of their property without due process of law, or denying them the equal protection of the laws, or impairing the obligation of their charter contracts; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 31 Sup. Ct. 186, 55 L. Ed. 112, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487, affirming id., 22 Okl. 48, 97 Pac. 590; id., 219 U. S. 575, 31 Sup. Ct. 299, 55 L. Ed. 341, refusing a rehearing.

In Shallenberger v. Bank, 219 U. S. 114, 31 Sup. Ct. 189, 55 L. Ed. 117, a Nebraska act, creating a like fund and prohibiting banking except by corporations formed under the act, was held valid. A Kansas act was sustained in Assaria State Bank v. Dolley, 219 U. S. 121, 31 Sup. Ct. 189, 55 L. Ed. 123, and was held valid as against national banks in Abilene Nat. Bank v. Dolley, 228 U. S. 1, 33 Sup. Ct. 409, 57 L. Ed. 707.

GUARDAGE. The condition of one who is under a guardian. A state of wardship.

GUARDIAN AD LITEM. A guardian appointed to represent the ward in legal proceedings to which he is a party defendant.

The appointment of such is incident to the power of every court to try a case; Bullard v. Spoor, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 430; and the power is then confined to the particular case at bar; Co. Litt. 89, n. 16. His duty is to manage the interest of the infant when sued. In criminal cases no guardian is appointed: the court acts as guardian; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 318; Field, Inf. 163. A guardian ad litem cannot be appointed till the infant has been brought before the court in some of the modes prescribed by law; Hodges v. Wise, 16 Ala. 509; Shaefer v. Gates, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 453, 38 Am. Dec. 164. See Allsmiller v. Freutchenicht, 86 Ky. 198, 5 S. W. 746. Such guardian cannot waive service of process; Robbins v. Robbins, 2 Ind. 74; and his powers are not limited to defence, objection, and opposition merely, but he may file a cross bill to protect the infant's interest involved in the litigation, and appeal from a decree dismissing the same; Sprague v. Beamer, 45 Ill. App. 17. The writ and declaration in actions at law against infants are to be made out as in ordinary cases. In English practice where the defendant neglects to appear, or appears otherwise than by guardian, the plaintiff may apply for and obtain a summons calling on him to appear by guardian within a given time; otherwise the plaintiff may be at liberty to proceed as in other cases, having had a nominal guardian assigned to the infant; Macphers. Inf. 359. A like rule prevails in New York and other states; Van Deusen v. Brower, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 50; Clarke v. Gilmanton, 12 N. H. 515. Schoul. Dom. Rel. 596.

The omission to appoint a guardian ad litem does not render the judgment void, but only voidable; Austin v. Trustees, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 196, 41 Am. Dec. 497. See Delashmutt v. Parrent, 39 Kan. 548, 18 Pac. 712. It will be presumed, where the chancellor received the answer of a person as guardian ad litem, that he was regularly appointed, although it does not appear of record; Stevenson v. Kurtz, 98 Mich. 493, 57 N. W. 580. See Robertson v. Robertson, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 197. It is held to be error to decree the sale of a decedent's property on the petition of the representatives, without the previous appointment of a guardian ad litem for the infant heirs; Craig v. McGehee, 16 Ala. 41. Where the general guardian petitions for a sale of his ward's lands, the court must appoint a guardian ad litem; Wyatt v. Mansfield's Heirs, 18 B. Monr. (Ky.) 779; King v. Collins, 21 Ala. 363; McAllister v. Moye, 30 Miss. 258; Sturges v. Longworth, 1 Ohio St. 544; but this is not necessary where the application is for leave to invest money of the ward in land; Callaway v. Bridges, 79 Ga. 753, 4 S. E. 687.

It seems that a guardian ad litem can elect whether to come into hotch-pot; Andrews v. Hall, 15 Ala. 85. An appearance of the minor in court is not necessary for the appointment of a guardian to manage his interest in the suit; 11 E. L. & Eq. 156. If an infant comes of age pending the suit, he can assert his rights at once for himself, and if he does not he cannot generally complain of the acts of his guardian ad litem; Mitchell v. Berry, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 602; Marshall v. Wing, 50 Me. 62.

The appointment of a guardian ad litem is valid, although the infant has not been regularly served with process, but has only accepted service thereof; Cates v. Pickett, 97 N. C. 21, 1 S. E. 763. The rule that a next friend or guardian ad litem cannot by admissions or stipulation, surrender the rights of the infant, does not prevent a guardian ad litem or prochein ami from assenting to such arrangements as will facilitate the determination of the case in which the rights of the infant are involved; Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 650, 10 Sup. Ct. 638, 33 L. Ed. 1047. A married woman cannot be a guardian ad litem or next friend; 34 Ch. D. 435.

GUARDIAN AND WARD. One who legally has the care and management of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during his minority. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 311.

Guardian has been held to be synonymous with "next friend"; U. S. Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Weller, 30 Fla. 210, 11 South. 786.

A person having the control of the property of a minor without that of his person is known in the civil law, as well as in some of the states, by the name of curator. 1 Leç. él. du Droit Civ. Rom. 241. The guardian of the person is called "tutor." Tiff. Pers. & Dom. Rel. 295.

Guardian by chancery. This guardianship, although unknown at the common law, is well established in practice now. It grew up in the time of William III., and had its foundation in the royal prerogative of the king as parens patriæ. 2 Fonbl. Eq. 246. This power the sovereign is presumed to have delegated to the chancellor; 10 Ves. 63; 2 P. Wms. 118; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 317. By virtue of it, the chancellor appoints a guardian where there is none, and exercises a superintending control over all guardians, however appointed, removing them for misconduct and appointing others in their stead; Co. Litt. 89; 1 P. Wms. 703; 2 Kent 227. But only, it is said, where the minor has property; Tiffany, Dom. Rel. 300; 2 Russ. 1, 20.

The English Judicature Act of 1873 assigns the wardship of infants and the care of infants' estates to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. Whart. Lex.

An infant with property becomes a ward of court (1) if an action is commenced in his name; (2) if an order is made on petition or summons for the appointment of a guardian; (3) if an order is made in like manner for maintenance; (4) if a fund belonging to an infant is paid into court under the acts for the relief of trustees; Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 95. See 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 462 note 8.

This power resides in courts of equity; In re Andrews, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 99; Ex parte Crumb, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 439; Board of Children's Guardians v. Shutter, 139 Ind. 268, 34 N. E. 665, 31 L. R. A. 740; but more commonly by statute in probate or surrogate courts; 2 Kent 226; Sessions v. Kell, 30 Miss. 458; Ex parte Dawson, 3 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 133.

Guardian by nature is the father, and, on his death, the mother; 2 Kent 220; Fields v. Law, 2 Root (Conn.) 320; Combs v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 153, 19 Am. Dec. 568; Freto v. Brown, 4 Mass. 675.

This guardianship, by the common law, extends only to the person, and the subject of it is the heir apparent, and not the other children,—not even the daughter when there are no sons; for they are but presumptive heirs only, since their right may be defeated by the birth of a son after their father's decease. But as all the children male and female equally inherit with us, this guardianship extends to all the children, as an inherent right in their parents during their minority; 2 Kent 220. In default of both parents, the natural guardian is the grandfather or grandmother, or next of kin; Lamar v. Micou, 114 U. S. 218, 5 Sup. Ct. 857, 29 L. Ed. 94; In re Benton, 92 Ia. 202, 60 N. W. 614, 54 Am. St. Rep. 546.

The mother of a bastard child is its natural guardian; Dalton v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 357; Wright v. Wright, 2 Mass. 109; but not by the common law; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 314, note. The power of a natural guardian over the person of his ward is perhaps better explained by reference to the relation of parent and child. See DOMICIL. It is well settled that the court of chancery may, for just cause, interpose and control the authority and discretion of the parent in the education and care of his child; People v. Mercein, 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 47; 10 Ves. 52.

A guardian by nature is not entitled to the control of his ward's personal property; Alston v. Alston, 34 Ala. 15; Nelson v. Goree's Adm'r, 34 Ala. 565; 1 P. Wms. 285; Kline v. Beebe, 6 Conn. 494; Hyde v. Stone, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 354, 22 Am. Dec. 582; Miles v. Boyden, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 213; Perry v. Carmichael, 95 Ill. 519; unless by statute. See McCarty v. Rountree, 19 Mo. 345; Taylor v. Bemiss, 110 U. S. 42, 3 Sup. Ct. 441, 28 L. Ed. 64. The father must support his ward; Harring v. Coles, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 349. But where his means are limited, the court will grant an allowance out of his child's estate; id., 1 Bro. C. C. 387. But the mother, if guardian, is not obliged to support her child if it has sufficient estate of its own; nor is she entitled, like the father, when guardian, to its services, unless she is compelled to maintain it. But where the mother, who is guardian of her son, engages board for him, she incurs liability personally and not as guardian; McNabb v. Clipp, 5 Ind. App. 204, 31 N. E. 858.

A father as guardian by nature has no right to the real or personal estate of his child; that right, whenever he has it, must be as a guardian in socage, or by some statutory provision; Fonda v. Van Horne, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631, 30 Am. Dec. 77.

Guardian by nurture. This guardianship belonged to the father, then to the mother. The subject of it extended to the younger children, not the heirs apparent. In this country it does not exist, or, rather, it is merged in the higher and more durable guardianship by nature, because all the children are heirs, and, therefore, the subject of that guardianship; 2 Kent 221; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 315; Perkins v. Dyer, 6 Ga. 401. It extended to the person only; Kline v. Beebe, 6 Conn. 494; 40 E. L. & Eq. 109; and terminated at the age of fourteen; 1 Bla. Com. 461.

Guardian in socage. This guardianship arose when socage lands descended to an infant under fourteen years of age; at which period it ceased if another guardian was appointed, otherwise it continued; Byrne v. Van Hoesen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 66. The person entitled to it by common law was the next of kin, who could not by any possibility inherit the estate; 1 Bla. Com. 461. If the lands descended from a paternal relative, the mother or next of kin on her part was the guardian; if from a maternal relative the father, or next of kin on his part was; Combs v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 153, 19 Am. Dec. 568. Although recognized in New York, it was never common in the United States; Byrne v. Van Hoesen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 66; because, by the statutes of descents generally in force in this country, those who are next of kin may eventually inherit. Wherever it has been recognized, it has been in a form differing materially from its character at common law; Fonda v. Van Horne, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631, 30 Am. Dec. 77. Such guardian was also guardian of the person of his ward as well as his real estate; Co. Litt. 87, 89. Although it did not arise unless the infant was seized of lands held in socage, yet when it did arise it extended to hereditaments which do not lie in tenure and to the ward's personal estate. See Hargrave's note 67 to Co. Litt. This guardian could lease his ward's estate and maintain ejectment against a disseisor in his own name; 2 Bacon, Abr. 683. A guardian in socage cannot be removed from office, but the ward may supersede him at the age of fourteen, by a guardian of his own choice; Co. Litt. 89. In New York guardians in socage have neither common law nor statutory right to control the personal estate of the wards; Foley v. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 333, 34 N. E. 211, 20 L. R. A. 620, 34 Am. St. Rep. 456.

There was anciently a guardianship by chivalry at the common law, where lands came to an infant by descent which were holden by knight-service; Co. Litt. 88, 11, note. That tenure being abolished by statute Car. II., the guardianship has ceased to exist in England; it has never had any existence in the United States.

Guardians by statute are of two kinds: first, those appointed by deed or will; second, those appointed by court in pursuance of some statute.

Testamentary guardians are appointed by the deed or last will of the father; Huson v. Green, 88 Ga. 722, 16 S. E. 255; and they supersede the claims of all other guardians, and have control of the person and the real and personal estate of the child till he arrives at full age.

This power of appointment was given to the father by the stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24, which has been pretty extensively adopted in this country, though in some states the appointment is limited to will. Under it, the father might thus dispose of his children, born and unborn; 7 Ves. 315; but not of his grandchildren; Jackson v. Woods, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 278. Nor does it matter whether the father is a minor or not; 2 Kent 225. It continues during the minority of a male ward, both as to his estate and person, notwithstanding his marriage; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 328; 2 Kent 224; In re Whitaker, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 380. There seems to be some doubt as to whether marriage would determine it over a female ward; 2 Kent 224. It is more reasonable that it should, inasmuch as the husband acquires in law a right to the control of his wife's person. But it would seem that a person marrying a testamentary guardian is not entitled to the money of the ward; Holmes v. Field, 12 Ill. 431. In England and most of the United States a mother cannot appoint a testamentary guardian, nor can a putative father, nor a person in loco parentis; 1 Bla. Com. 462, n.; but by statute in Illinois she may make an appointment, if the father has not done so, provided she be not remarried after his death; 2 Kent 225. In New York, the consent of the mother is required to a testamentary appointment by the father; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 400. A man cannot by law appoint his son testamentary guardian for the children of the latter; Grimsley v. Grimsley, 79 Ga. 397, 5 S. E. 760.

Guardians appointed by court. The greater number of guardians among us, by far, are those appointed by court, in conformity with statutes which regulate their powers and duties. In the absence of special provisions, their rights and duties are governed by the general law on the subject of guardian and ward.

Appointment of guardians. All guardians of infants specially appointed must be appointed by the infant's parent; or by the infant himself; or by a court of competent jurisdiction.

After the age of fourteen, the ward is entitled to choose a guardian, at common law, and generally by statute; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 320; Kelly v. Smith, 15 Ala. 687; Sessions v. Kell, 30 Miss. 458; 11 Jur. 114. His choice is subject, however, to the rejection of the court for good reason, when he is entitled to choose again; Inferior Court v. Cherry, 14 Ga. 594. So guardianship by the sole appointment of the infant cannot now be said to exist. If the court appoint one before the age of choice, the infant may appear and choose one at that age, without any notice to the guardian appointed; Sessions v. Kell, 30 Miss. 458; Kelly v. Smith, 15 Ala. 687; Bryce v. Wynn, 50 Ga. 332; Appeal of Adams, 38 Conn. 304. But if none be chosen, then the old one acts. It seems that in Indiana the old one can be removed only for cause shown; in which case, of course, he is entitled to notice; Dibble v. Dibble, 8 Ind. 307. As to the method of appointment by the minor see 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 462.

A probate, surrogate, or county court has no power to appoint, unless the minor resides in the same county; Brown v. Lynch, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 214; Grier v. McLendon, 7 Ga. 362; Munson v. Newson, 9 Tex. 109; Dorman v. Ogbourne, 16 Ala. 759; De Jarnett v. Harper, 45 Mo. App. 415; but where the ward is a nonresident, guardianship is frequently recognized for the collection and preservation of his estate in the jurisdiction, and in such cases, the court where the property is situated will appoint a guardian, the existence of the property determining the jurisdiction; Clarke v. Cordis, 4 Allen (Mass.) 466; 27 E. L. & Eq. 249. Persons residing out of the jurisdiction will not usually be appointed guardians; but this rule is not invariable, except by statute; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 419.

It has been a subject of doubt whether a married woman may be a guardian; while there are cases which sustain their acts while acting as guardians, clear precedents for their actual appointment are wanting. See 2 Dougl. 433. It has been held, however, that a married woman may be co-guardian with a man, though her sole appointment is improper; L. R. 1 Ch. 387. See Farrer v. Clark, 29 Miss. 195; Kettletas v. Gardner, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 488; Ex parte Maxwell, 19 Ind. 88. A single woman by her marriage loses her guardianship, it would seem; but she may be reappointed; 2 Kent 225; 2 Dougl. 433. It seems probable that recent statutes relating to the rights of married women will modify these cases. Where there is a valid guardianship unrevoked, the appointment of another is void; Thomas v. Burrus, 23 Miss. 550, 57 Am. Dec. 154.

The court has jurisdiction to interfere with and remove the guardian of a child who has no property, on proof that it is for the welfare of the child that the guardian should be removed; [1893] 1 Ch. 143.

Powers and liabilities of guardians. The relation of a guardian to his ward is that of a trustee in equity, and bailee at law; Swan v. Dent, 2 Md. Ch. 111. It is a trust which he cannot assign; 1 Pars. Contr. 116. He will not be allowed to reap any benefit from his ward's estate; 2 Com. 230; except for his legal compensation or commission; but must account for all profits, which the ward may elect to take or charge interest on the capital used by him; Kyle v. Barnett, 17 Ala. 306; he cannot purchase lands belonging to him; Hindman v. O'Connor, 54 Ark. 627, 16 S. W. 1052, 13 L. R. A. 490. He can invest the money of his ward in real estate only by order of court; Sherry v. Sansberry, 3 Ind. 320; Davis v. Harris, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 9; Williams v. Morton, 38 Me. 47, 61 Am. Dec. 229; Washabaugh v. Hall, 4 S. D. 168, 56 N. W. 82; Belding v. Willard, 56 Fed. 699. And he cannot convert real estate into personalty without a similar order; Field, Inf. 109; Taylor v. Galloway, 1 Ohio 232, 13 Am. Dec. 605; Jackson v. Todd, 25 N. J. L. 121; 2 Kent 230. The law does not favor the conversion of the real estate of minors; Appeal of Davis, 14 Pa. 372; but if it be clearly to the interest of a minor that his real estate be sold, the court will award an order of sale, notwithstanding that in the event of his death during minority, the proceeds would go to other parties than those to whom the land would have descended had it not been converted; Drayton's Estate, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 157. The rule is different in England; there land converted into money, or money into land, retains its character of land or money, as the case may be, during the nonage of the minor; 6 Ves. 6.

He may lease the land of his ward; Richardson v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 56, 3 Am. Dec. 24; but if the lease extends beyond the minority of the ward, the latter may avoid it on coming of age; Genet v. Tallmadge, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 561; Jones v. Ward, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 160; Snook v. Sutton, 10 N. J. L. 133. He may sell his ward's personalty without order of court; Woodward v. Donally, 27 Ala. 198; Maclay v. Society, 152 U. S. 499, 14 Sup. Ct. 678, 38 L. Ed. 528; and dispose of and manage it as he pleases; Ellis v. Proprietors, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 243. He is required to put the money out at interest, or show that he was unable to do this; Davis v. Harris, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 9; Fay v. Howe, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 527; Appeal of Lukens, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 48; 13 E. L. & Eq. 140; Jacobia v. Terry, 92 Mich. 275, 52 N. W. 629; Steyer v. Morris, 39 Ill. App. 382. And in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that a guardian might have kept funds of his ward at interest; Steyer v. Morris, 39 Ill. App. 382. If he spends more than the net income of the estate in the maintenance and education of the ward without permission of the court, he may be held liable for the principal thus consumed; Frelick v. Turner, 26 Miss. 393; Tharington v. Tharington, 99 N. C. 118, 5 S. E. 414.

If he erects buildings on his ward's estate out of his own money, without order of court, he will not be allowed any compensation; Hassard v. Rowe, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 22; Gearhart v. Jordan, 11 Pa. 326; Austin v. Lamar, 23 Miss. 189; Gerber v. Bauerline, 17 Or. 115, 19 Pac. 849. He is not chargeable with the services of his wards if for their own benefit he requires them to work for him; Armstrong's Heirs v. Walkup, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 608. A married woman guardian can convey the real estate of her ward without her husband joining; 2 Dougl. 433. On marriage of a female minor in Mississippi, her husband, although a minor, is entitled to receive her estate from her guardian; Wood v. Henderson, 2 How. (Miss.) 893; A guardian who deposited the moneys of his ward, as guardian, in a bank that was solvent, with his sureties, was held not liable for loss upon the failure of the bank; In re Law's Estate, 144 Pa. 499, 22 Atl. 831, 14 L. R. A. 103.

Joint guardians may sue together on account of any joint transaction founded on their relation to the ward, even after the relation ceases; Sherman v. Akins, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 283; see Blake v. Pegram, 101 Mass. 592; and where one guardian consents to his co-guardian's misapplication of funds, he is liable; Appeal of Clark, 18 Pa. 175. Guardians like other trustees—executors and administrators excepted—may portion out the management of the property to suit their respective taste and qualifications, while neither parts irrevocably with the control of the whole; and in such case each is chargeable with no more than what he received, unless unwarrantable negligence in superintending the others' acts can be shown; Appeal of Jones, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 143, 42 Am. Dec. 282; and the discharge of one who has received no part of the estate relieves him from liability; Hocker v. Wood's Ex'r, 33 Pa. 466.

Contracts between guardian and ward immediately after the latter has attained his majority are unfavorably regarded by the courts, and will be set aside where they redound to the profit of the guardian; Bisp. Eq. 234; Say's Ex'rs v. Barnes, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 114, 8 Am. Dec. 679; McClellan v. Kennedy, 8 Md. 230; Sullivan v. Blackwell, 28 Miss. 737; Wright v. Arnold, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 638, 61 Am. Dec. 172; Gale v. Wells, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 84. Neither is he allowed to purchase at the sale of his ward's property; Patton v. Thompson, 55 N. C. 285; Lefevre v. Laraway, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 167; Hindman v. O'Connor, 54 Ark. 627, 16 S. W. 1052, 13 L. R. A. 490. But the better opinion is that such sale is not void, but voidable only; Wyman v. Hooper, 2 Gray (Mass.) 141; Mann v. McDonald, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 275. He is not allowed, without permission of court under some statute authority, to remove his ward's property out of the state; Cook v. Wimberly, 24 Ala. 486; Welch v. Baxter, 45 La. Ann. 1062, 13 South. 629. He cannot release a debt due his ward; Forbes's Heirs v. Mitchell, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 441; Horine v. Horine, 11 Mo. 649; although he may submit a claim to arbitration; Goleman v. Turner, 14 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 118; Weston v. Stuart, 11 Me. 326; Bean v. Farnam, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 269; but he cannot do so when he is interested adversely to them in the subject-matter of the arbitration; Fortune v. Killebrew, 86 Tex. 172, 23 S. W. 976. He may collect or compromise and release debts due to the ward, subject to the liability to be called to account for his acts; MacLay v. Society, 152 U. S. 499, 14 Sup. Ct. 678, 38 L. Ed. 528. He cannot by his own contract bind the person or estate of his ward; Jones v. Brewer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 314; nor avoid a beneficial contract made by his ward; Oliver v. Houdlet, 13 Mass. 237, 7 Am. Dec. 134; Co. Litt. 17 b, 89 a. He becomes liable for negligence for failure to sue on a note due his ward's estate until the parties thereto are insolvent; Coggins v. Flythe, 113 N. C. 102, 18 S. E. 96. During the existence of the relation of guardian and ward, the latter is under the subjection of the former who stands in loco parentis.

He is entitled to the care and custody of the person of his ward; Ward v. Roper, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 111; Ex parte Bartlett, 4 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 221; even against parents; L. R. 8 Q. B. 153; but latterly it is held that the wishes and best interests of the child will be consulted; Garner v. Gordon, 41 Ind. 92; In re Heather Children, 50 Mich. 261, 15 N. W. 487. If a female ward marry, the guardianship terminates both as to her person and property. It has been thought to continue over her property if she marries a minor. If a male ward marries, the guardianship continues as to his estate, though it has been said to be otherwise as to his person. If he marries a female minor, it is said that his guardian will also be entitled to her property; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 328; 2 Kent 226.

A guardian may change the residence of his ward from one county to another in the same state. But it seems that the new county may appoint another guardian; Ex parte Bartlett, 4 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 221. Whether he has the right to remove his ward into a foreign jurisdiction has been a disputed question; Field, Inf. 114. In England, a guardian, being a parent, can change the child's domicil; 10 Cl. & F. 42; otherwise probably if the guardian be not a parent; Tiffany, Dom. Rel. 317. A natural guardian may change the domicil of his ward; In re Benton, 92 Ia. 202, 60 N. W. 614, 54 Am. St. Rep. 546. So held of a paternal grandfather, as guardian; id. Guardians who are not natural guardians can change the municipal domicil of a ward, in the same state; Tiff. Dom. Rel. 317; but not to another state; Wilkins' Guardian, 146 Pa. 585, 23 Atl. 325; Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 472, 5 Sup. Ct. 221, 28 L. Ed. 751; but see White v. Howard, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 294; In re Afflick's Estate, 3 MacArth. (D. C.) 95. By the common law, his authority both over the person and property of his ward was strictly local; Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 156; Bell v. Suddeth, 2 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 532. And this is the view maintained in most of the states. See Story, Confl. Laws § 540. But see, on this question, Wood v. Wood, 5 Paige Ch. 596, 28 Am. Dec. 451; Dupree v. Perry, 18 Ala. 34; Cooke v. Beale, 33 N. C. 36; 3 Mer. 67; Holyoke v. Haskins, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 20, 16 Am. Dec. 372; DOMICIL.

The court of chancery may interfere to prevent a guardian from attempting an important change in the religious impressions of a ward if upon examination such change seems dangerous and improper; 8 D. M. & G. 760. See Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 90.

A guardian in one state cannot maintain an action in another for any claim in which his ward is interested; Cox v. Williamson, 11 Ala. 343; see Rogers v. McLean, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 304; Grist v. Forehand, 36 Miss. 69; Potter v. Hiscox, 30 Conn. 508; Story, Confl. Laws § 499; a guardian appointed in one state has no authority in another, except by comity, but the modern tendency is to support the authority of the guardian appointed in the domicil; Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 613, 26 L. Ed. 585; L. R. 2 Eq. 704. He cannot waive the rights of his ward,—not even by neglect or omission; 2 Vern. 368; Cartwright v. Wise, 14 Ill. 417. No guardian, except a father, is bound to maintain his ward at his own expense. But it is his duty to maintain and educate the ward, in a suitable manner from the income of the ward's estate; Preble v. Longfellow, 48 Me. 279, 77 Am. Dec. 227; Roscoe v. McDonald, 101 Mich. 313, 59 N. W. 603. It is discretionary with a court whether to allow a father anything out of his child's estate for his education and maintenance; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 324; Haase v. Rochrscheid, 6 Ind. 66. When the relation of guardian and ward ceases, the latter is entitled to have an account of the administration of his estate of the former.

Rights and liabilities of wards. A ward owes obedience to his guardian, which a court will aid the guardian in enforcing; 3 Atk. 721. While under the care of a guardian, a ward can make no contract whatever, binding upon him, except for necessaries. The general rule is that the ward's contracts are voidable; Oliver v. Houdlet, 13 Mass. 237, 7 Am. Dec. 134; yet there are some contracts so clearly prejudicial that they have been held absolutely void: such as contracts of suretyship; Maples v. Wightman, 4 Conn. 376, 10 Am. Dec. 149.

A ward cannot marry without the consent of his or her guardian; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 327. And any one marrying or aiding in the marriage of a ward without such consent is guilty of contempt of court; 2 P. Wms. 562; 3 id. 116; but this whole doctrine is peculiar to the laws of England and has no application in the United States; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 517.

Infants are liable for their torts in the same manner as persons of full age; Bullock v. Babcock, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 391; Fitts v.

Hall, 9 N. H. 441. A ward is entitled to his own earnings; 1 Bouvier, Inst. 349. He attains his majority the day before the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday. See AGE. He can sue in court only by his guardian or prochein ami; 4 Bla. Com. 464. He could not bring an action at law against his guardian, but might file a bill in equity calling him to account; 3 P. Wms. 119; Minter v. Clark, 92 Tenn. 459, 22 S. W. 73. Minors who are kept occupied by their tutor, to teach them habits of industry, cannot exact compensation of him; Hollingsworth's Heirs, 45 La. Ann. 134, 12 South. 12. By the practice in chancery, he was allowed one year to examine the accounts of his guardian after coming of age; In re Van Horne, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 46. See Taylor v. Hill, 86 Wis. 99, 56 N. W. 738. The statute of limitations will not run against him during the guardianship; Alston v. Alston, 34 Ala. 15. But see LIMITATIONS.

Sale of infant's lands. It is probable that the English court of chancery did not have the inherent original power to order the sale of minors' lands; 2 Ves. 23; 1 Moll. 525. But, with the acquiescence of parliament, it claims and exercises that right for the purpose of maintaining and educating the ward. This power is not conceded as belonging to our courts of chancery in this country by virtue of their equity jurisdiction, nor to our probate courts as custodians of minors; Rogers v. Dill, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 415; 2 Kent 229 a. It must be derived from some statute authority; Woodward v. Donally, 27 Ala. 198; Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 154, 11 Am. Dec. 441; Ellis v. Merrimack Bridge, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 243. There being no inherent authority in a guardian by virtue of his office to convey lands of his wards, a deed by him will not, in the absence of evidence of showing his authority, convey any title; House v. Brent, 69 Tex. 27, 7 S. W. 65.

It has been a much-disputed question whether an infant's lands can be sold by special act of the legislature. On the ground that the state is the supreme guardian of infants, this power of the legislature has been sustained where the object was the education and support of the infant; McComb v. Gilkey, 29 Miss. 146; Mason v. Wait, 5 Ill. 127; Cochran v. Van Surlay, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 365, 32 Am. Dec. 570; Doe v. Douglass, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 10, 44 Am. Dec. 732; Rice v. Parkman, 16 Mass. 326. See Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 613, 26 L. Ed. 585; Thomas v. Pullis, 56 Mo. 211. So it has been sustained where the sale was merely advantageous to his interest; Dorsey v. Gilbert, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 87; Estep v. Hutchman, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 435. There has been some opposition on the ground that it is an encroachment on the judiciary; 4 N. H. 565, 574; Jones' Heirs v. Perry, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59, 30 Am. Dec. 430. Such sales have been sustained where the object was to liquidate the ancestor's debts; Kibby v. Chitwood's Adm'r, 4 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 95, 16 Am. Dec. 143. This has been considered questionable in the extreme; Jones' Heirs v. Perry, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59, 30 Am. Dec. 430; contra, Davenport v. Young, 16 Ill. 548, 63 Am. Dec. 320. It has also been exercised in the case of idiots and lunatics, and sustained on the same reasons as in the case of infants; Davison v. Johonnot, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 388, 41 Am. Dec. 448.

A ward's title to land passes by his guardian's deed therefor, and not by the confirmation of the sale by the court; Scarf v. Aldrich, 97 Cal. 360, 32 Pac. 324, 33 Am. St. Rep. 190.

By statute, there are also guardians for the insane and for spendthrifts; Sternbergh v. Schoolcraft, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 153; Alexander v. Alexander, 8 Ala. 796; Raymond v. Wyman, 18 Me. 385; McCrillis v. Bartlett, 8 N. H. 569; Mason v. Mason, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 506. This guardian is sometimes designated as the committee; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 389. A guardian to a lunatic cannot be appointed till after a writ de lunatico inquirendo; Eslava v. Lepretre, 21 Ala. 504, 56 Am. Dec. 266. An order removing a guardian is equivalent to an order to pay over the money in his hands to his successor; Finney v. State, 9 Mo. 227. In some states the court is authorized to revoke for non-residence of the guardian; id. See HABITUAL DRUNKARD.

GUARDIAN OF THE SPIRITUALITIES. The person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed during the vacancy of the see.

GUARDIAN OF THE TEMPORALITIES. The person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the crown.

GUARDIAN, or WARDEN, OF THE CINQUE PORTS. See CINQUE PORTS.

GUARDIANSHIP. The power or protective authority given by law, and imposed on an individual who is free and in the enjoyment of his rights, over one whose weakness on account of his age renders him unable to protect himself.

GUARENTIGIO. In Spanish Law. A term applicable to the contract or writing by which courts of justice are empowered to execute and carry into effect a contract in the same manner as if it were decreed by the court after the usual legal formalities. This clause, though formerly inserted in contracts of sale, etc., stipulating the payment of a sum of money, is at present usually omitted, as courts of justice ordinarily compel the parties to execute all contracts made, by authentic acts, that is, acts passed before a notary, in the presence of two witnesses.

GUARNIMENTUM. In Old European Law. A provision of necessary things. Spel. Gloss.

GUASTALD. One who had the custody of the royal mansions. (Also Gastaldus.)

GUERRA, GUERRE. War. Spel. Gloss.

GUERRILLA TROOPS (Span. guerra, war; guerrilla, a little war). Self-constituted bodies of armed men in times of war, who form no integral part of the organized army, do not stand on the regular pay-roll of the army, or are not paid at all, take up arms and lay them down at intervals, and carry on petty war, chiefly by raids, extortion, destruction, and massacre. Lieber, Guerr. Part. 18. See Halleck, Int. Law 386; Wools. Int. Law 299.

Partisan, free-corps, and guerrilla are terms resembling each other considerably in signification; and, indeed, partisan and guerrilla are frequently used in the same sense. See Halleck, Int. Law 386.

Partisan corps and free-corps both denote bodies detached from the main army; but the former term refers to the action of the troop, the latter to the composition. The partisan leader commands a corps whose object is to injure the enemy by action separate from that of his own main army; the partisan acts chiefly upon the enemy's lines of connection and communication, and outside of or beyond the lines of operation of his own army, in the rear and on the flanks of the enemy. But he is part and parcel of the army, and, as such, considered entitled to the privileges of the law of war so long as he does not transgress it. Free-corps, on the other hand, are troops not belonging to the regular army, consisting of volunteers generally raised by individuals authorized to do so by the government, used for petty war, and not incorporated with the ordre de bataille. The men composing these corps are entitled to the benefit of the laws of war, under the same limitations as the partisan corps.

Guerrilla-men, when captured in fair fight and open warfare, should be treated as the regular partisan is, until special crimes, such as murder, or the killing of prisoners, or the sacking of places, are proved against them.

In drawing up the Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, adopted at The Hague in 1899, much difficulty was experienced in securing an agreement upon the status to be attributed to militia and corps of volunteers. It was agreed that such guerrilla troops should come under the laws applying to the regular army, provided they be commanded by a person responsible for his subordinates, wear a distinctive emblem recognizable at a distance, carry arms openly, and conduct their operations in accordance with the laws and customs of war. Even the population of an invaded territory, which as a body takes up arms on the approach of the enemy, must be regarded as belligerents, provided they carry arms openly and observe the laws and customs of war. II Opp. 70–72.

GUESSING CONTEST. See LOTTERY.

GUEST. A traveller who stays at an inn or tavern with the consent of the keeper. Bacon, Abr. Inns, C 5; 8 Co. 32; Story, Bailm. § 477.

A traveller or transient comer who puts up at an inn for a lawful purpose to receive its customary lodging and entertainment. De Lapp v. Van Closter, 136 Mo. App. 475, 118 S. W. 120. It is not now deemed essential that a person should have come from a distance to constitute him a guest; Curtis v. Murphy, 63 Wis. 6, 22 N. W. 825, 53 Am. Rep. 242; Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 183.

And if, after taking lodgings at an inn, he leaves his horse there and goes elsewhere to lodge, he is still to be considered a guest; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316, 62 Am. Dec. 574; but not if he merely leaves goods for keeping which the landlord receives no compensation; 1 Salk. 388; 3 Ld. Raym. 866; Cro. Jac. 188. And where one leaves his horse with an innkeeper with no intention of stopping at the inn himself, he is not a guest of the inn, and the liability of the landlord is simply that of an ordinary bailee for hire; Ingallsbee v. Wood, 33 N. Y. 577, 88 Am. Dec. 409. The length of time a man is at an inn makes no difference, whether he stays a day, a week, or a month, or longer, or only for temporary refreshments, so always that, though not strictly transiens, he retains his character as a traveller; 5 Term 273; McDonald v. Edgerton, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 560. But if a person comes upon a special contract to board at an inn, he is not, in the sense of the law, a guest, but a boarder; Bacon, Abr. Inns, C 5; Story, Bailm. § 477: Wand. Inns 64; but this is a question of fact to be determined by a jury; Magee v. Improvement Co., 98 Cal. 678, 33 Pac. 772, 35 Am. St. Rep. 199. The payment of a stipulated sum per week does not of itself change the relation of a party from that of a guest to that of a lodger; Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 417; Magee v. Improvement Co., 98 Cal. 678, 33 Pac. 772, 35 Am. St. Rep. 199. The relation exists where one who keeps a house for the entertainment of all who choose to visit it, extends a general invitation to the public to become guests, although the house is situated on enclosed grounds; Fay v. Improvement Co., 93 Cal. 253, 26 Pac. 1099, 28 Pac. 943, 16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198. See BAILEE; INNKEEPER; BOARDER.

GUEST-TAKER. See AGISTER.

GUESTLING. See BROTHERHOOD AND GUESTLING, COURT OF.

GUET. In French Law. Watch. Ord. Mar. liv. 4, tit. 6.

GUIDAGE. In English Law. A reward for safe conduct, through a strange land or unknown country. Cowell. The office of guiding of travellers through dangerous or unknown ways. 2 Inst. 526.

GUIDON DE LA MER. The name of a treatise on maritime law, written in Rouen in Normandy in 1671, as is supposed. It was received on the continent of Europe almost as equal in authority to one of the ancient codes of maritime law. The author of this work is unknown. This tract or treatise is contained in the "Collection de Lois maritimes," by J. M. Pardessus, vol. 2, p. 371 et seq.

GUILD, GILD. A brotherhood or company governed by certain rules and orders made among themselves by king's license; a corporation, especially for purposes of commerce; so called because on entering the guild the members pay an assessment or tax (gild) towards defraying its charges. T. L.; Du Cange. A guild held generally more or less property in common,—often a hall, called a guild-hall, for the purposes of the association. The name of guild was not, however confined to mercantile companies, but was applied also to religious, municipal, and other corporations. A mercantile meeting of a guild was called a guild merchant.

A fridborg (q. v.), that is, among the Saxons, mutual pledges of ten families for each other to the king. Spelman. See 3 Steph. Com. 31; Turner's Hist. Ang. Sax. v. iii. p. 98.

The earliest corporations in Scotland were not for trading but to perpetuate some public service; and they took their rise from Papal bulls, royal charters, etc., or frequently such charter was presumed; Ersk. Pr. 311. "Gilds came into unconscious existence through a process of evolution, and were then acknowledged by the law." It is incorrect to say that there could be no gild without the king's license. They were incorporated and after incorporation supervised by the mayor, bailiffs, and common council of municipalities. Eaton, Report of Amer. B. A. (1902) 340.

See Toulmin Smith, English Gilds.

GUILD HALL (Law Lat. gildhalla, variously spelled ghildhalla, guihalla, guihaula; from Sax. gild, payment, company, and halla, hall). A place in which are exposed goods for sale. Charter of Count of Flanders; Hist. Guinensi, 202, 203; Du Cange. The hall of a guild or corporation. Du Cange; Spelman: e. g., Gildhalla Teutonicorum. The chief hall of the city of London, where the mayor and commonalty hold their meetings. The hall of the merchants of the Hanseatic League in London, otherwise called the "Stilyard." Cowell.

GUILD MERCHANT. An association of traders within a town in England, and in some cases living outside its precincts, for the better management of trade. It sometimes arbitrated upon mercantile disputes. Only its members could trade freely within the town; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 310. See Gross, Gild Merchant; Lambert, Gild Life; English Gilds (Early English Text Society). See GILDA MERCATORIA; article in Encycl. Br. by Charles Gross.

GUILD RENTS. Rents payable to the crown by any guild, or such as formerly belonged to religious guilds, and came to the crown on the dissolution of the monasteries. Toml.

GUILDHALL SITTINGS. The sittings held in the Guildhall of the city of London for city of London cases.

GUILLOTINE. An apparatus for beheading criminals with a single blow, used in some countries, as France and Greece, for capital punishment. A form of it was in use in the middle ages, but, being improved by Dr. Guillotin at the time of the French Revolution, it received its present name. Cent. Dict.

GUILT. That which renders criminal and liable to punishment.

That disposition to violate the law, which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of innocence. See Rutherf. Inst. b. 1, c. 18, s. 10.

In general, every one is presumed innocent until guilt has been proved; but in some cases the presumption of guilt overthrows that of innocence; as, for example, where a party destroys evidence to which the opposite party is entitled. The spoliation of papers material to show the neutral character of a vessel furnishes strong presumption against the neutrality of the ship; The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 227, 4 L. Ed. 226.

GUILTY. The state or condition of a person who has committed a crime, misdemeanor, or offence.

This word implies a malicious intent, and can only be applied to something universally allowed to be a crime. Cowp. 275.

In Pleading. A plea by which a defendant who is charged with a crime, misdemeanor, or tort admits or confesses it. In criminal proceedings, when the accused is arraigned, the clerk asks him, "How say you, A. B., are you guilty or not guilty?" His answer, which is given ore tenus, is called his plea; and when he admits the charge in the indictment, he answers or pleads guilty; otherwise, not guilty. See CULPRIT; ARRAIGNMENT.

A plea of guilty in a capital case should not be received unless the court is satisfied that "it is made by a person of complete intelligence, freely and voluntarily, and with a full understanding of the nature and effect of the plea and of the facts upon which it is founded"; Green v. Com., 12 Allen (Mass.) 155; in Henning v. People, 40 Mich. 733, a judgment was affirmed when it appeared that the trial judge had had repeated interviews with the prisoner's counsel and friends and made full inquiry and considered that the plea was made with every circumstance of fairness and deliberation. The subject is regulated by statute in Michigan and in Texas. In Coleman v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 404, 33 S. W. 1083, where the record stated that the defendant had pleaded guilty after being by the court fully warned of the consequences of such plea, the appellate court held that it did not sufficiently appear that the prisoner was considered sane by the court, or that he was uninfluenced by any fear, or by any persuasion or any hope of pardon, and that these matters should have been presented to the court and the findings made a part of the record. So also where the judgment recited that the defendant "had been duly and legally warned by the court, in open court, of the legal consequences" of such plea; Sanders v. State, 18 Tex. App. 372. See 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465. In State v. Johnson, 21 Okl. 40, 96 Pac. 26, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463, it was held that accepting such a plea without cautioning the prisoner as to the gravity of his admission, or taking evidence as to the gravity of the crime, is not according to the forms of law.

GUINEA. A coin issued by the English mint during the time of Wm. IV. These coins were called in. The word now means only the sum of £1, 1s.

GULA-THING. A collection of Scandinavian customs in force in the southern part of Norway. The Frosta-thing was in force in the more northerly division of Dronheim. They are said to help to an understanding of the law prevailing in the northern part of England, where the Danish influence was strongest. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 23.

GULE OF AUGUST. The first of August, being the day of St. Peter ad Vincula. T. L.

GULES. The heraldic name of the color usually called "red." The word is derived from the Arabic word "gule," a rose, and was probably introduced by the Crusaders. Gules is denoted in engravings by numerous perpendicular lines. Heralds who blazoned by planets and jewels called it "Mars" and "ruby;" Wharton.

GWABR MERCHED. Maid's fee. An old English phrase signifying a customary fine payable to lords of some manors on marriage of tenant's daughter, or otherwise on her incontinence. Cowell, Marchet.

GWALSTOW. A place of execution. Cowell.

GYLTWITE, or GUILTWIT (Sax.). Compensation for fraud or trespass. Grant of King Edgar, anno 964; Cowell.

H

H. The eighth letter of the alphabet.

HABE, or HAVE (Lat.). Sometimes used in the titles of the codes of Theodosius and Justinian for Ave (hail). Calv. Lex.; Spel. Gloss.

HABEAS CORPORA JURATORUM (Lat. that you have the bodies). In English Practice. A writ issued out of the common pleas, commanding the sheriff to compel the appearance of a jury in a cause between the parties. It answered the same purpose as a distringas juratores in the king's bench. See 3 Bla. Com. 354. It is abolished by the Common-law Procedure Act.

HABEAS CORPUS (Lat. that you have the body). A writ directed to the person detaining another and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner at a certain time and place, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the court or judge awarding the writ shall consider in that behalf.

This is the most famous writ in the law; and, having for many centuries been employed to remove illegal restraint upon personal liberty, no matter by what power imposed, it is often called the great writ of liberty. It takes its name from the characteristic words it contained when the process and records of the English courts were written in Latin:

Præcipimus tibi quod CORPUS A B in custodia vestra detentum, ut dicitur, una cum causa captionis et detentionis suæ, quocunque nomine idem A B censeatur in eadem, HABEAS coram nobis apud Westm. &c. ad subjiciendum et recipiendum ea quæ curia nostra de eo ad tunc et ibidem ordinari contigerit in hac parte, etc.

There were several other writs which contained the words habeas corpus; but they were distinguished from this and from one another by the specific terms declaring the object of the writ, which terms are still retained in the nomenclature of writs: as, habeas corpus ad respondendum, ad testificandum, ad satisfaciendum, ad prosequendum, and ad faciendum et recipiendum, ad deliberandum et recipiendum.

This writ was in like manner designated as habeas corpus ad subjiciendum et recipiendum; but, having acquired in public esteem a marked importance by reason of the nobler uses to which it has been devoted, it has so far appropriated the generic term to itself that it is now, by way of eminence, commonly called The Writ of Habeas Corpus.

The date of its origin cannot now be ascertained. Traces of its existence are found in the Year Book 48 Ed. III. 22; and it appears to have been familiar to, and well understood by, the judges in the reign of Henry VI. The ancient writ of de odio et atia and de homine replegiando furnished a remedy in particular cases. In its early history it appears to have been used as a means of relief from private restraint. The earliest precedents where it was used against the crown are in the reign of Henry VII. Afterwards the use of it became more frequent, and in the time of Charles I. it was held an admitted constitutional remedy; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 145; Church, Hab. Corp. 3. In writing of procedure in the thirteenth century the work which throws so much new light upon the early history of English law, says: "Those famous words habeas corpus are making their way into divers writs, but for any habitual use of them for the purpose of investigating the cause of imprisonment we must wait until a later time." There is also a reference to what is termed the use of habeas corpus as "at one time a part of the ordinary mesne process in a personal action," also referred to as "the Bractonian process which inserts a habeas corpus between attachment and distress," which (habeas corpus) a little later seems to disappear. No other allusion is made to the subject; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 584, 591.

W. W. Howe (Studies in the Civil Law 54) who is as earnest in tracing the fountains of English law to a Roman source, as the writers last quoted are indisposed to do so, says on the subject: "The presence in the Pandects of every important doctrine of habeas corpus is an interesting fact, and suggests that the proceeding probably came to England, as it did to Spain, from the Roman law. There is no evidence, so far as I have been able to discover, that the process was of British or Teutonic origin. It is fully described in the forty-third book of the Pandects. The first text is the line from the 'Perpetual Edicts,' 'ait prætor: quem liberum dolo malo retines, exhibeas.' 'The prætor declares: produce the freeman whom you unlawfully detain.' The writ was called the interdict or order 'de homine libero exhibendo.' After quoting this article of the Edict, the compilers of the Pandects introduced the commentary of Ulpian to the extent of perhaps two pages of a modern law book, and the leading rules which he derives from the text are law, I believe, to-day in England and America. Thus he says: 'This writ is devised for the preservation of liberty to the end that no one shall detain a free person. The word freeman includes every freeman, infant or adult, male or female, one or many, whether sui juris, or under the power of another. For we only consider this: Is the person free? He who does not know that a freeman is detained in his house is not in bad faith; but as soon as he is advised of the fact he becomes in bad faith. The prætor says exhibeas (produce, exhibit). To exhibit a person is to produce him publicly, so that he can be seen and handled. This writ may be applied for by any person; for no one is forbidden to act in favor of liberty.' And to this commentary of Ulpian the compilers also add some extracts from Venuleius, who, among other things says: 'A person ought not to be detained in bad faith for any time; and so no delay should be granted to the person who thus detains him.' In other words, a writ of habeas corpus should be returnable and heard instanter. It seems certain that this writ might have been applied for in Britain during the four centuries of Roman occupation, at least when not suspended by a condition of martial law; and after the restoration of the Christian Church in the seventh century, and the occupation of judicial positions by bishops and other learned clerics, familiar with such procedure, it is not unreasonable to assume that it was revived and took its place in English law."

After the use of the writ became more common, abuses crept into the practice, which in some measure impaired the usefulness of the writ. The party imprisoning was at liberty to delay his obedience to the first writ, and might wait till a second and third were issued before he produced the party; and many other vexatious shifts were practised to detain state prisoners in custody; 3 Bla. Com. 135.

Greater promptitude in its execution was required to render the writ efficacious. The subject was accordingly brought forward in parliament in 1668, and renewed from time to time until 1679, when the celebrated Habeas Corpus Act of 31 Car. II. was passed. This act has been made the theme of the highest praise and congratulation by British authors, and is even said to have "extinguished all the resources of oppression." Hurd, Hab. Corp. 93; Church, Hab. Corp. 37.

As the act is limited to cases of commitments for "criminal or supposed criminal matters," every other species of restraint of personal liberty was left to the ordinary remedy at common law; but, doubts being entertained as to the extent of the jurisdiction of the judge to inquire into the truth of the return to the writ in such cases an attempt was made, in 1757, in the house of lords, to render the jurisdiction more remedial. It was opposed by Lord Mansfield as unnecessary, and failed, for the time, of success. It was subsequently renewed, however; and the act of 56 Geo. III. c. 100 supplies, in England, all the needed legislation in cases not embraced by the act of 31 Car. II.; Hurd, Hab. Corp.

The English colonists in America regarded the privilege of the writ as one of the "dearest birthrights of Britons;" and sufficient indications exist that it was frequently resorted to. The denial of it in Massachusetts by Judge Dudley in 1689 to Rev. John Wise, imprisoned for resisting the collection of an oppressive and illegal tax, was made the subject of a civil action against the judge, and was, moreover, denounced, as one of the grievances of the people, in a pamphlet published in 1689 on the authority of "the gentlemen, merchants, and inhabitants of Boston and the county adjacent." In New York in 1707 it served to effect the release of the Presbyterian ministers Makemie and Hampton from an illegal warrant of arrest issued by the governor, Cornbury, for preaching the gospel without license. In New Jersey in 1710 the assembly denounced one of the judges for refusing the writ to Thomas Gordon, which, they said, was the "undoubted right and great privilege of the subject." In South Carolina in 1692 the assembly adopted the act of 31 Car. II. This act was extended to Virginia by Queen Anne early in her reign, while in the assembly of Maryland in 1725 the benefit of its provisions was claimed, independent of royal favor, as the "birthright of the inhabitants." The refusal of parliament in 1774 to extend the law of habeas corpus to Canada was denounced by the continental congress in September of that year as oppressive, and was subsequently recounted in the Declaration of Independence as one of the manifestations on the part of the British government of tyranny over the colonies; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 109.

It is provided in art. i. sec. 9, § 2 of the constitution of the United States that "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it." Similar provisions are found in the constitutions of most of the states.

In 1861, Taney, C. J., decided in the United States circuit court of Maryland, that congress alone possessed the power under the constitution to suspend the writ; Ex parte Merryman, Taney 246, 9 Am. L. Reg. 524, Fed. Cas. No. 9,487; this view was also taken by other courts; In re Kemp, 16 Wis. 360; People v. Gaul, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 98; Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind. 370; contra, Ex parte Field, 5 Blatchf. 63, Fed. Cas. No. 4,761. In the beginning of the Civil War President Lincoln suspended the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus on his own authority, and without the sanction of an act of congress. He was supported in his opinion of his right to suspend by some of the legal writers of the time, notably by Horace Binney of Philadelphia, and by Reverdy Johnson of Maryland (2 Moore's Rebellion Record, Docs., p. 185). For the opinions of Senators Browning, Trumbull, Sherman, Howe and Fessenden, see Congressional Globe, pp. 188, 337, 393, 453. For the history of this controversy see 3 Political Science Quarterly 454; 5 Am. Lawyer 169; see 3 Rhodes, Hist. U. S. 438. The privilege of the writ is, however, necessarily suspended whenever martial law is declared in force; for martial law suspends all civil process. A prisoner of war, therefore, or one held by military arrest under the law martial, is not a subject for the habeas corpus writ; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 63. See MARTIAL LAW. Nor is a prisoner in the military or naval service whose offence is properly cognizable before a court martial; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S. 109, 15 Sup. Ct. 773, 39 L. Ed. 914. Congress, by act of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat. L. 755, authorized the president to suspend the privilege of the writ throughout the whole or any part of the United States, whenever in his judgment the public safety might require it, during the rebellion. Under the provisions of this act, a partial suspension took place, but it was held that the suspension of the privilege of the writ does not suspend the writ itself. The writ issues as a matter of course; and on the return made to it the court decides whether the party applying is denied the right of proceeding any further with it; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 2, 18 L. Ed. 281. Nor does the suspension of the writ legalize a wrongful arrest and imprisonment; it deprives the person thus arrested of the means of procuring his liberty, but does not exempt the person making the illegal arrest from liability for damages, nor from criminal prosecution; Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind. 372; contra, McCall v. McDowell, Deady 233, Fed. Cas. No. 8,673; 1 Bishop, New Cr. L. § 64.

The power has never been exercised by the legislature of any of the states, except that of Massachusetts, which, on the occasion of "Shay's Rebellion," suspended the privilege of the writ from November, 1786, to July, 1787. And in the Confederate States, the privilege was suspended during the war; In re Cain, 60 N. C. 525; State v. Sparks, 27 Tex. 705. See note on Suspension of the Writ, 45 L. R. A. 832.

Congress has prescribed the jurisdiction of the federal courts under the writ; but, never having particularly prescribed the mode of procedure, they have substantially followed in that respect the rules of the common law.

In most of the states statutes have been passed, not only providing what courts or officers may issue the writ, but, to a considerable extent, regulating the practice under it; yet in all of them the proceeding retains its old distinctive feature and merit,—that of a summary appeal for immediate deliverance from illegal imprisonment.

There is a discretion to be exercised in issuing the writ, even when there is power, as it involves a conflict of laws which it is desirable to avoid; Ex parte Rearick, 118 Fed. 928; and no court may properly release a prisoner under conviction and sentence of another court, unless for want of jurisdiction of cause or person, or some matter rendering the proceeding void; Keizo v. Henry, 211 U. S. 146, 29 Sup. Ct. 41, 53 L. Ed. 125; but it can and should be issued and made effective when another court has acted without jurisdiction; In re Turner, 119 Fed. 231.

A proceeding in habeas corpus is a civil and not a criminal proceeding, and as final orders of the circuit or district courts in such proceedings can only be reviewed by appeal, the final order of the supreme court of the Phillippine Islands in habeas corpus is governed by the same rule and can be reviewed only by appeal and not by writ of error; Fisher v. Baker, 203 U. S. 174, 27 Sup. Ct. 135, 51 L. Ed. 142, 7 Ann. Cas. 1018; so in People v. Dewey, 23 Misc. 207, 50 N. Y. Supp. 1013, it was said to be a civil proceeding; and in State v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 189, 85 N. W. 1046, 62 L. R. A. 700, it is termed a suit in the nature of a civil action. It has, however, been said that it is, strictly speaking, neither a civil nor criminal action, but a summary remedy having for its sole object to restore liberty to one illegally held in custody; Simmons v. Coal Co., 117 Ga. 305, 43 S. E. 780, 61 L. R. A. 739. Though it is a writ of right, it does not issue as a matter of course, but only upon such allegations as, if true, would authorize the discharge of the person in custody; id. The issue of the writ may be regulated by statute, provided the constitutional right to it is not infringed; Miskimmins v. Shaver, 8 Wyo. 392, 58 Pac. 411, 49 L. R. A. 831; if there is another appropriate remedy the writ will not be issued until application has been made for the proper relief; In re Dykes, 13 Okl. 339, 74 Pac. 506.

The purpose of the writ is to determine whether the person seeking the benefit of it is illegally restrained of his liberty; In re Moyer, 35 Colo. 159, 85 Pac. 190, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 979, 117 Am. St. Rep. 189. It is a common-law and not an equitable remedy; Sumner v. Sumner, 117 Ga. 229, 43 S. E. 485. Its only office, except when used in ancillary proceedings, is to test the right to personal liberty; State v. Whitcher, 117 Wis. 668, 94 N. W. 787, 98 Am. St. Rep. 968.

It is an appropriate proceeding for determining whether one held under an extradition warrant is a fugitive from justice, and he should be discharged if he shows by competent evidence, overcoming the presumption of a properly issued warrant, that he is not a fugitive from the demanding state; Illinois v. Pease, 207 U. S. 100, 28 Sup. Ct. 58, 52 L. Ed. 121.

Jurisdiction of state courts. The states, being in all respects, except as to the powers delegated in the federal constitution, sovereign political communities, are limited, as to their judicial power, only by that instrument; and they, accordingly, at will, create, apportion, and limit the jurisdiction of their respective courts over the writ of habeas corpus, as well as other legal process, subject only to such constitutional restriction; Church, Hab. Corp. 67.

The restrictions in the federal constitution on this subject are necessarily implied from the express grants of judicial power therein to the federal courts in certain cases specified in art. iii. sec. 2, and in which the decision of the supreme court of the United States is paramount over all other courts and conclusive upon the parties.

Jurisdiction of the federal courts. This is prescribed by several acts of congress. By section 14 of the Judiciary Act of September 24, 1789, the general power to issue the writ is granted to the federal courts and also to a justice or judge, to inquire into the cause of commitment; but not where a prisoner in gaol otherwise than under authority of the United States or required to testify.

By section 7 of the Act of March 2, 1833, the jurisdiction of the justices and judges is extended to "all cases of a prisoner or prisoners in jail or confinement, where he or they shall be committed or confined on or by any authority or law for any act done or omitted to be done, in pursuance of a law of the United States, or any order, process, or decree of any judge or court thereof." The federal courts may grant the writ to inquire into the cause of restraint of any person in jail under the authority of a state in violation of the constitution or of a law or treaty of the United States, and may discharge a prisoner under indictment in a state court when he is found to be so restrained; Ex parte Glenn, 111 Fed. 257; or a prisoner held in contempt without a hearing for an offence not committed in the presence of the court; Ex parte Stricker, 109 Fed. 145; or where a sentence is imposed which neither the statute nor the verdict authorizes; In re Burns, 113 Fed. 987; but except in cases of peculiar urgency they will not discharge the prisoner in advance of a final hearing of his cause in the courts of the state, and even after such final determination in those courts will generally leave the petitioner to his remedy by writ of error from this court; Whitten v. Tomlinson, 160 U. S. 231, 16 Sup. Ct. 297, 40 L. Ed. 406. See also New York v. Eno, 155 U. S. 89, 15 Sup. Ct. 30, 39 L. Ed. 80. This decision was rendered necessary by the practice of using the writ as a means to take an appeal from state tribunals to the supreme court of the United States to delay the trial or execution of criminals; the evil of it is set forth by Seymour D. Thompson in 30 Am. L. Rev. 289, 290.

An act of August 29, 1842, extends the privilege of the writ to cases of aliens committed or confined under federal law for acts done under color of the law, authority, etc., of any foreign power.

Section 3 of an Act of July 20, 1790, provided that refractory seamen in certain cases shall not be discharged on habeas corpus or otherwise.

By an act of February 6, 1867, the defendant in actual custody under state process, whose case has been removed to the federal court, may have a writ of habeas corpus cum causa to remove him to its custody; R. S. § 642.

By act of May 3, 1885, an appeal may be taken from the judgment of the United States circuit courts in habeas corpus cases to the supreme court. Since the passage of this act it has been generally held that the supreme court will not issue the writ where it may be done as well in the proper Circuit Court, unless there are special circumstances making action by the supreme court expedient or necessary; Ex parte Mirzan, 119 U. S. 584, 7 Sup. Ct. 341, 30 L. Ed. 513; In re Huntington, 137 U. S. 63, 11 Sup. Ct. 4, 34 L. Ed. 567. The writ will not be issued when it appears by the petition that the question has already been decided against the petitioner by another judge in the same court; In re Simmons, 45 Fed. 241. In cases where the right of appeal seems inadequate by reason of its delay, the court may hold the person entitled to the writ as a means of speedy determination of the question; Ex parte Kieffer, 40 Fed. 399. In Clark v. Pennsylvania, 128 U. S. 395, 9 Sup. Ct. 113, 32 L. Ed. 487, a judge of the supreme court refused to grant the writ in chambers to the captain of a steamer committed under the laws of Pennsylvania for selling liquor on the steamer without license on the ground that the federal question if any could be raised by writ of error.

Federal courts cannot grant the writ upon a petition that the person is held under the capias of a state court issued upon a judgment that has been vacated; In re Shaner, 39 Fed. 869. A district court cannot, by issuing a writ, declare a judgment of a state criminal court a nullity where such court had full jurisdiction over the crime; Ex parte Ulrich, 43 Fed. 661. But the writ can be issued to test the question as to the arrest and imprisonment of a supposed fugitive from justice on the charge of a different offence from that for which he was extradited; In re Fitton, 45 Fed. 471. See also In re Cross, 43 Fed. 517. In general the writ may be issued by federal courts in every case where a party is restrained of his liberty without due process of law in the territorial jurisdiction of such courts; Ex parte Farley, 40 Fed. 66; In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55. The granting of the writ is within the discretion of the court and will not be reversed unless an abuse thereof be shown; U. S. v. Ronan, 33 Fed. 117. But where the petitioner had been convicted on the indictment of a grand jury impanelled by a court without authority, it was held that the writ became a writ of right and the court having power to issue it could not exercise discretion against issuing it; Ex parte Farley, 40 Fed. 66. A medical director in the navy notified by the secretary of the navy that he was under arrest and should confine himself to the city of Washington is not under such restraint as to sustain the writ; Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S. 564, 5 Sup. Ct. 1050, 29 L. Ed. 277.

The writ does not issue as a matter of course from the federal courts and the petition must show a prima facie right thereto; In re Haskell, 52 Fed. 795; In re King, 51 Fed. 434; In re Jordan, 49 Fed. 238. And only in rare cases will federal courts discharge prisoners held under process of state courts; In re Huse, 79 Fed. 305, 25 C. C. A. 1; In re Krug, 79 Fed. 308.

The federal court may discharge a prisoner who is held for an act made criminal by the state in violation of the rights secured by the United States constitution; In re Davenport, 102 Fed. 540; but they will not discharge a prisoner convicted in a state court except in cases of emergency, but will leave him his writ of error; In re Stone, 120 Fed. 101; and except under extraordinary circumstances, a federal court will not issue the writ for the release of a prisoner held under process issued by a state court in a civil case, on the ground that such court was without jurisdiction in the particular suit where it has jurisdiction over such suits in general; Mackenzie v. Barrett, 144 Fed. 954, 76 C. C. A. 8.

The writ will not issue unless the court under whose warrant the accused is held is without jurisdiction, and mere objections that the indictment is too vague in general and does not sufficiently inform him of the offence charged, will not be considered; In re Lewis, 114 Fed. 963.

But if a party is imprisoned by the sentence of a court, judge or magistrate, which is void for want of authority, as for being under an unconstitutional and void law; In re Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, 9 Sup. Ct. 703, 33 L. Ed. 154; In re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 8 Sup. Ct. 164, 31 L. Ed. 216; In re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 8 Sup. Ct. 482, 31 L. Ed. 402; or when there was no authority in the person causing the arrest to make it; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 163, 21 L. Ed. 872; Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. Ed. 717; Ex parte Randolph, 2 Brock. 447, Fed. Cas. No. 11,558; In re Farez, 7 Blatchf. 345, Fed. Cas. No. 4,645; In re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 13 Sup. Ct. 785, 37 L. Ed. 689; In re Swan, 150 U. S. 637, 14 Sup. Ct. 225, 37 L. Ed. 1207; then there is ground for discharge under habeas corpus.

In contempt cases, habeas corpus is not issued for one adjudged in contempt, as he may have a writ of error; Perry v. Pernet, 165 Ind. 67, 74 N. E. 609, 6 Ann. Cas. 533; In re Stidger, 37 Colo. 407, 86 Pac. 219; to obtain release the judgment and the sentence must be a mere nullity; Michaelson v. Beemer, 72 Neb. 761, 101 N. W. 1007, 9 Ann. Cas. 1181; where there is entire want of jurisdiction to issue the process for imprisonment, habeas corpus is the proper remedy and the person need not resort to an appeal; In re Gribben, 5 Okl. 379, 47 Pac. 1074; but it cannot be used to review the proceeding in contempt, though it is proper in order to secure the discharge of one not a party and therefore not subject to the jurisdiction of the court; In re Reese, 107 Fed. 942, 47 C. C. A. 87.

The supreme court issues the writ by virtue of its appellate jurisdiction; Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 75, 2 L. Ed. 554; Ex parte Hung Hang, 108 U. S. 552, 2 Sup. Ct. 863, 27 L. Ed. 811; and it will not grant it at the instance of the subject of a foreign government to obtain the custody of a minor child detained by a citizen of one of the states; for that would be the exercise of original jurisdiction; Ex parte Barry, 2 How. (U. S.) 65, 11 L. Ed. 181. An appeal lies to the supreme court from a final order of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico ordering a writ of habeas corpus to be discharged; Gonzales v. Cunningham, 164 U. S. 612, 17 Sup. Ct. 182, 41 L. Ed. 572.

It will grant it on the application of one committed for trial in the circuit court on a criminal charge; Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 75, 2 L. Ed. 554; U. S. v. Hamilton, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 17, 1 L. Ed. 490; and where the petitioner is committed on an insufficient warrant; Ex parte Burford, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 448, 2 L. Ed. 495; and where he is detained by the marshal on a capias ad satisfaciendum after the return day of the writ; Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 568, 8 L. Ed. 786; also for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of the restraint of the liberty of prisoners in jail under or by color of the authority of the United States, and all persons who are in custody in violation of the constitution or laws of the United States; Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 289, 9 Sup. Ct. 77, 33 L. Ed. 405. An alien immigrant may have a writ to test the lawfulness of his restraint from landing by a federal office; Nishimura Ekin v. U. S., 142 U. S. 651, 12 Sup. Ct. 336, 35 L. Ed. 1146.

None of the courts of the United States have authority to grant the writ for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of commitment, where the prisoner is imprisoned under process issued from the state courts, excepting where he is denied, or cannot enforce, in the judicial tribunals of the state, any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States; R. S. § 641; Texas v. Gaines, 2 Woods 342, Fed. Cas. No. 13,847. It was refused by the supreme court where the party for whose benefit the application was made had been convicted in a state court of levying war against the state; Ex parte Dorr, 3 How. (U. S.) 103, 11 L. Ed. 514. Federal courts will proceed with great caution upon applications for writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a person imprisoned under process of the state courts, and, when practicable, will investigate the questions raised before issuing the writ; In re Jordan, 49 Fed. 238. See also paper by Seymour D. Thompson on the abuse and too rigorous use of the writ of habeas corpus by the federal judges; 6 Rep. Am. Bar. Assoc. 243.

It was refused by the circuit court where the petitioner, a secretary attached to the Spanish legation, was confined under criminal process issued under the authority of the state of Pennsylvania; Ex parte Cabrera, 1 Wash. C. C. 232, Fed. Cas. No. 2,278; also where the petitioner, a British seaman, was arrested under the authority of an act of the legislature of the state of South Carolina, which was held to conflict with the constitution of the United States; Ex parte Elkison, 2 Wheel. Cr. Cas. 56, Fed. Cas. No. 4,366; and where the only question involved was the identity of a state prisoner, and no diversity of citizenship was involved; Ex parte Moebus, 148 Fed. 39; or the prisoner is regularly under indictment in the state court; Ex parte Glenn, 103 Fed. 947.

It will be granted, however, where the imprisonment, although by a state officer, is under or by color of the authority of the United States, as where the prisoner was arrested under a governor's warrant as a fugitive from justice of another state, requisition having been regularly made; Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean 121, Fed. Cas. No. 12,968; or where extradited under a treaty with a foreign country upon the charge of a certain offence for which he was afterwards tried and acquitted, and immediately thereafter he was arrested under a charge entirely separate and distinct from the former one; In re Reinitz, 39 Fed. 204, 4 L. R. A. 236. It will also be granted where United States marshals or their deputies are arrested by state authority for using force or threats in executing process of the federal courts; U. S. v. Fullhart, 47 Fed. 802; but see In re Marsh, 51 Fed. 277. Federal judges should grant writs to persons imprisoned for any act done in pursuance of a law of the United States; In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55.

The power of the federal courts to issue the writ is confined to cases in which the prisoner is in custody under or by order of the authority of the United States, or is committed for trial before some court thereof, or is in custody for an act done or omitted in pursuance of a law of the United States, or of an order, process, or decree of a court or judge thereof; or is in custody in violation of the constitution, or of a law or treaty of the United States, or being a subject or citizen of a foreign state, and domiciled therein, is in custody for an act done or omitted under any alleged right, title, authority, privilege, protection, or exemption claimed under the commission, or order, or sanction of any foreign state, or under color thereof, the validity and effect whereof depend upon the law of nations; or where it is necessary to bring the prisoner into court to testify; R. S. § 753.

The circumstances under which the writ will be issued are stated and the authorities collected in Ex parte Collins, 149 Fed. 573.

Proper use of the writ. The true use of the writ is to cause a legal inquiry into the cause of imprisonment, and to procure the release of the prisoner where that is found to be illegal.

The writ cannot be made use of to perform the function of a writ of error or an appeal; In re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 13 Sup. Ct. 785, 37 L. Ed. 689; Felts v. Murphy, 201 U. S. 123, 26 Sup. Ct. 366, 50 L. Ed. 689; Welty v. Ward, 164 Ind. 457, 73 N. E. 889, 3 Ann. Cas. 556; Ex parte Powers, 129 Fed. 985; In re Dowd, 133 Fed. 747; Ex parte Mitchell, 104 Mo. 121, 16 S. W. 118, 24 Am. St. Rep. 324; Ex parte McMinn, 110 Fed. 954; In re Langston, 55 Neb. 310, 75 N. W. 828; In re Ammon, 132 Fed. 714; In re Wyman, 132 Fed. 708; Ex parte Collins, 149 Fed. 573; Storti v. Massachusetts, 183 U. S. 138, 22 Sup. Ct. 72, 46 L. Ed. 120; In re McKenzie, 180 U. S. 536, 21 Sup. Ct. 468, 45 L. Ed. 657; not even to test the constitutionality of the law under which the imprisonment was imposed under a mittimus issued on final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction; People v. Jonas, 173 Ill. 316, 50 N. E. 1051; and a federal court will not interfere by issuing the writ so long as the remedy by writ of error from the supreme court to the highest state court is not exhausted; Ex parte Chadwick, 159 Fed. 576; Minnesota v. Brundage, 180 U. S. 499, 21 Sup. Ct. 455, 45 L. Ed. 639; Riggins v. U. S., 199 U. S. 547, 26 Sup. Ct. 147, 50 L. Ed. 303; but where the case is one of which the public interest demands a speedy determination and the ends of justice will be promoted thereby, the supreme court may proceed to final judgment on appeal from the order of the circuit court denying the relief; Appleyard v. Massachusetts, 203 U. S. 222, 27 Sup. Ct. 122, 51 L. Ed. 161; and while the federal court to which the application is made will usually leave the petitioner to the ordinary course of proceedings, there are exceptional cases in which the federal court or judge may sometimes interfere, such for instance as cases "involving the authority and power of the general government or the obligations of this country to or its relations with foreign nations"; Urguhart v. Brown, 205 U. S. 179, 27 Sup. Ct. 459, 51 L. Ed. 760. The writ only challenges the jurisdiction or power to commit, and may not be invoked merely to review; In re Nevitt, 117 Fed. 448, 54 C. C. A. 622. Where the state court has jurisdiction of the crime under a statute not repugnant to the Constitution or a treaty or law thereunder, habeas corpus cannot be made a means of review; Harkrader v. Wadley, 172 U. S. 148, 19 Sup. Ct. 119, 43 L. Ed. 399.

The rule that the writ cannot be used as a writ of error applies to extradition proceedings and if the committing magistrate had jurisdiction and there was competent evidence, his decision may not be reviewed; Charlton v. Kelly, 229 U. S. 447, 33 Sup. Ct. 945, 57 L. Ed. 1274.

If the imprisonment be claimed by virtue of legal process, the validity and present force of such process are the only subjects of investigation; Bennac v. People, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 31; State v. Buzine, 4 Harr. (Del.) 575.

But such process cannot, in this proceeding, be invalidated by errors which only render it irregular. The defects, to entitle the prisoner to be discharged, must be such as to render the process void; for the writ of habeas corpus is not, and cannot perform the office of, a writ of error; Walbridge v. Hall, 3 Vt. 114; Cox v. White, 2 La. 422; People v. Cavanagh, 2 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 650; People v. Nevins, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 154; 4 C. & P. 415; Ex parte Shaw, 7 Ohio St. 81, 70 Am. Dec. 55; In re Pikulik, 81 Wis. 158, 51 N. W. 261; Ex parte Bowen, 25 Fla. 214, 6 South. 65; Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 Sup. Ct. 299, 33 L. Ed. 637; In re Schneider, 118 U. S. 162, 13 Sup. Ct. 572, 37 L. Ed. 406; In re Swan, 150 U. S. 637; 14 Sup. Ct. 225, 37 L. Ed. 1207; In re King, 51 Fed. 434; In re Copenhaver, 118 Mo. 377, 24 S. W. 161, 40 Am. St. Rep. 382; but will only be issued if applied for to relieve from imprisonment under the order or sentence of some inferior federal court, when such court has acted without jurisdiction, or has exceeded its jurisdiction, and its order is for that reason void; In re Boyd, 49 Fed. 48, 1 C. C. A. 156, 4 U. S. App. 73. It may be issued when the petitioner is under arrest but at large on bail; Mackenzie v. Barrett, 141 Fed. 964, 73 C. C. A. 280, 5 Ann. Cas. 551.

Although the writ of habeas corpus does not lie for the determination of mere errors where a conviction has been had and the commitment thereunder is in due form, yet if the court had no jurisdiction of the offence charged, or if it affirmatively appears by the record that the prisoner was tried and sentenced for the commission of an act which under the law constitutes no crime, the judgment is void and the prisoner should be discharged; In re Kowalsky, 73 Cal. 120, 14 Pac. 399; Ex parte Mirande, 73 Cal. 365, 14 Pac. 888; In re Coy, 127 U. S. 731, 8 Sup. Ct. 1263, 32 L. Ed. 274; In re Nielson, 131 U. S. 176, 9 Sup. Ct. 672, 33 L. Ed. 118; Ex parte Kitchen, 19 Nev. 178, 18 Pac. 886; Daniels v. Towers, 79 Ga. 785, 7 S. E. 120.

It cannot be used to oust another competent and acting jurisdiction, or to divert or defeat the course of justice therein; Peltier v. Pennington, 14 N. J. L. 312; Ex parte Gilchrist, 4 McCord (S. C.) 233; Com. v. Lecky, 1 Watts (Pa.) 66, 26 Am. Dec. 37; In re Sims, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 285; Ex parte Bushnell, 8 Ohio St. 599; In re Duncan, 139 U. S. 449, 11 Sup. Ct. 573, 35 L. Ed. 219. It was not intended by congress that the federal courts should, by writs of habeas corpus, obstruct the ordinary administration of the criminal laws of the states through their own tribunals; In re Wood, 140 U. S. 278, 11 Sup. Ct. 738, 35 L. Ed. 505; McElvaine v. Brush, 142 U. S. 155, 12 Sup. Ct. 156, 35 L. Ed. 971.

The only ground on which a court, without some special statute authorizing it, will give relief on habeas corpus to a prisoner under conviction and sentence of another court, is the want of jurisdiction in such court over the person or the cause, or some other matter rendering its proceedings void; In re Frederich, 149 U. S. 70, 13 Sup. Ct. 793, 37 L. Ed. 653; Wight v. Nicholson, 134 U. S. 136, 10 Sup. Ct. 487, 33 L. Ed. 865; Ex parte Nielsen, 131 U. S. 176, 9 Sup. Ct. 672, 33 L. Ed. 118.

The writ is also employed to recover the custody of a person where the applicant has a legal right thereto: as, the husband for his wife, the parent for his child, the guardian for his ward, and the master for his apprentice; Green v. Campbell, 35 W. Va. 698, 14 S. E. 212, 29 Am. St. Rep. 843; Ex parte Chin King, 35 Fed. 354; [1892] App. Cas. 326. But in such cases, as the just object of the proceeding is rather to remove illegal restraint than to enforce specifically the claims of private custody, the alleged prisoner, if an adult of sound mind, is generally permitted to go at large; if an infant of sufficient age and discretion, it is usually permitted to elect in whose custody it will remain, provided that it does not elect an injurious or improper custody; and if of tender years, without such discretion, the court determines its custody according to what the true interests and welfare of the child may at the time require; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 450.

Application for the writ. This may be made by the prisoner, or by any one on his behalf, where for any reason he is unable to make it. It is usually made by petition in writing, verified by affidavit, stating that the petitioner is unlawfully detained, etc., and, where the imprisonment is under legal process, a copy thereof, if attainable, should be presented with the petition; for where the prisoner is under sentence on conviction for crime, or in execution on civil process, or committed for treason or felony plainly expressed in the warrant, he is not, in most of the states, entitled to the writ; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 209; Church, Hab. Corp. 91. The application must set forth the facts concerning the detention of the party restrained, in whose custody he is detained, and by virtue of what authority, if known; In re Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, 9 Sup. Ct. 703, 33 L. Ed. 154. If it appears from the petition itself that the applicant for the writ is not entitled thereto, the writ need not be awarded; Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 289, 9 Sup. Ct. 77, 32 L. Ed. 405; In re Haskell, 52 Fed. 795.

Where, with ample opportunity to do so, an accused did not apply for the writ of habeas corpus until after the jury had been sworn and his trial begun in a state court, the federal court will not interpose at that stage of the cause; Cook v. Hart, 146 U. S. 183, 13 Sup. Ct. 40, 36 L. Ed. 934.

The writ may be issued to determine the right to the custody of an infant as between parents who are living apart; In re Barry, 42 Fed. 113. A mere stranger or volunteer, in no way entitled to the custody of or responsible for the welfare of an infant, nor invited by the infant or its parents or guardian to do so, has no right to a writ; In re Pool, 2 MacArth. (D. C.) 583, 29 Am. Rep. 628; Brown v. Robertson, 76 S. C. 151, 56 S. E. 786, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173 and note; King's Case, 161 Mass. 46, 36 N. E. 685, collecting cases. An appeal generally lies from a judgment on the application for the writ where the custody of an infant is involved; People v. Court of Appeals, 27 Colo. 405, 61 Pac. 592, 51 L. R. A. 105; Bleakley v. Smart, 74 Kan. 476, 87 Pac. 76, 11 Ann. Cas. 125 (where mandamus was granted to compel hearing for a new trial); contra, Matthews v. Hobbs, 51 Ala. 210. It has been held that if there be no statute, a judgment in habeas corpus is neither reviewable or res judicata; Skinner v. Sedgbeer, 8 Kan. App. 624, 56 Pac. 136; contra, State v. Smith, 65 Wis. 93, 26 N. W. 258; see 20 Harv. L. Rev. 237.

The return. The person to whom the writ is directed is required to produce the body of the prisoner forthwith before the court or officer therein named, and to show the cause of the caption and detention; 5 Term 89; In re Nicholls, 5 N. J. L. 545. The return must specify the true cause of the detention; and the party imprisoned may deny any of the facts set forth in the return, or may allege other facts that may be material in the case, so that the facts may be ascertained and the matter disposed of as law and justice require; In re Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, 9 Sup. Ct. 703, 33 L. Ed. 154. No evidence is necessary to support the return, as it imports verity until impeached; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620.

If the writ be returned without the body, the return must show that the prisoner is not in the possession, custody, or power of the party making the return, or that the prisoner cannot, without serious danger to his life, be produced; and any evasion on this point will be dealt with summarily by attachment; 5 Term 89; In re Stacy, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 328; State v. Philpot, 1 Dudl. (Ga.) 46; U. S. v. Davis, 5 Cra. C. C. 622, Fed. Cas. No. 14,926.

Where the detention is claimed under legal process, a copy of it is attached to the return. Where the detention is under a claim of private custody, all the facts relied on to justify the restraint are set forth in the return.

The hearing. The questions arising upon the return or otherwise in the proceeding, whether of fact or of law, are determined by the court or judge, and not by a jury; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 299.

The evidence on the hearing is such as is allowed in other summary proceedings in which the strictness exacted on the trial in civil actions or criminal prosecutions is somewhat relaxed, the practice sometimes permitting affidavits to be read where there has been no opportunity for cross-examination; but the introduction of such evidence rests in the sound discretion of the court; Archb. Cr. Pl. & Pr. 204; State v. Lyon, 1 N. J. L. 403; In re Heyward, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 701; 20 How. S. Tr. 1376; 1 Burr's Trial 97. The court is not concluded by the finding of a committing magistrate, but may go behind his order of commitment, and by certiorari look into the evidence before him; In re Martin, 5 Blatchf. 303, Fed. Cas. No. 9,151; Gosline v. Place, 32 Pa. 520; See U. S. v. Don On, 49 Fed. 569.

Pending the hearing the court may commit the prisoner for safe-keeping from day to day, until the decision of the case; In re Kaine, 14 How. (U. S.) 134, 14 L. Ed. 345; Bac. Abr. Habeas Corpus (B 13); 5 Mod. 22.

If the imprisonment be illegal, it is the duty of the court to discharge the prisoner from that imprisonment; but if the court or officer hearing the habeas corpus be invested with the powers of an examining and committing magistrate in the particular case, and the evidence taken before the court, or regularly certified to it in the habeas corpus proceeding, so far implicate the prisoner in the commission of crime as to justify his being held for trial, it is usual for the court, in default of bail, to commit him as upon an original examination; 3 East 157; Ex parte Bennett, 2 Cra. (C. C.) 612, Fed. Cas. No. 1,311. Where a prisoner is held under a valid sentence and commitment, the illegality of a second sentence will not be inquired into on habeas corpus till the term under the first sentence has expired; Ex parte Ryan, 17 Nev. 139, 28 Pac. 1040.

If the prisoner is not discharged or committed de novo, he must be remanded, or, in a proper case, let to bail; and all offences are bailable prior to the conviction of the offender, except "capital offences when the proof is evident or presumption great;" Hurd, Hab. Corp. 430.

Recommitment after discharge. The act of 31 Car. II. prohibited, under the penalty of five hundred pounds, the reimprisoning for the same offence of any person set at large on habeas corpus, except by the legal order and process of such court wherein such prisoner was bound by recognizance to appear, or other court having jurisdiction of the cause. Somewhat similar provisions are found in the statutes of many of the states. But these provisions are not held to prevent the subsequent arrest of the prisoner on other and more perfect process, although relating to the same criminal act; Ex parte Milburn, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 704, 9 L. Ed. 280; Byrd v. State, 2 Miss. 163.

See "The Story of the Habeas Corpus" by Edward Jenks in 18 L. Q. Rev. 64 (2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 531).

HABEAS CORPUS ACTS. See HABEAS CORPUS.

HABEAS CORPUS AD DELIBERANDUM ET RECIPIENDUM (Lat.). A writ which is issued to remove, for trial, a person confined in one county to the county or place where the offence of which he is accused was committed. Bac. Abr. Habeas Corpus, A; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 132. Thus, it has been granted to remove a person in custody for contempt to take his trial for perjury in another county; 1 Tyrwh. 185.

HABEAS CORPUS AD FACIENDUM ET RECIPIENDUM (Lat.). A writ usually issued in civil cases to remove an action from an inferior court, where the defendant is sued and imprisoned, to some superior court which has jurisdiction over the matter, in order that the cause may be determined there. This writ is commonly called habeas corpus cum causa, because it commands the judges of the inferior court to return the day and cause of the caption and detainer of the prisoner; Bac. Abr. Habeas Corpus, A; 3 Bla. Com. 130; Tidd, Pr. 296.

This writ may also be issued at the instance of the bail of the defendant, to bring him up to be surrendered in their discharge, whether he is in custody on a civil suit or on a criminal accusation; Tidd, Pr. 298; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 132.

HABEAS CORPUS AD PROSEQUENDUM (Lat.). A writ which issues when it is necessary to remove a prisoner in order to prosecute in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. 3 Bla. Com. 130.

HABEAS CORPUS AD RESPONDENDUM (Lat.). A writ which is usually employed in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter. 2 Mod. 198; 3 Bla. Com. 129; Tidd. Pr. 300.

This writ lies also to bring up a person in confinement to answer a criminal charge: thus, the court issued it to the warden of the fleet, to take the body of the prisoner confined there before a magistrate to be examined respecting a charge of felony or misdemeanor; 5 B. & Ald. 730.

But it was refused to bring up the body of a prisoner under sentence for a felony, for the purpose of having him tried for a previous felony.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SATISFACIENDUM (Lat.). A writ which is issued to bring a prisoner from the prison of one court into that of another, in order to charge him in execution upon a judgment of the last court. 3 Bla. Com. 130; Tidd, Pr. 301.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SUBJICIENDUM. See HABEAS CORPUS.

HABEAS CORPUS AD TESTIFICANDUM (Lat.). A writ which lies to bring up a prisoner detained in any jail or prison, to give evidence before any court of competent jurisdiction. Tidd, Pr. 739; 3 Bla. Com. 130; State v. Kennedy, 20 Ia. 372; Ex parte Marmaduke, 91 Mo. 250, 4 S. W. 91, 60 Am. Rep. 250.

The allowance of this writ resting in the discretion of the court, it will be refused if the application appear to be in bad faith or a mere contrivance; 3 Burr. 1440.

It was refused to bring up a prisoner of war; 2 Dougl. 419; or a prisoner in custody for high treason; Peake, Add. Cas. 21.

It would of course be refused where it appear from the application that the prisoner was under sentence for crime which rendered him incompetent as a witness.

The application for the writ is made upon affidavit, stating the nature of the suit and the materiality of the testimony, together with the general circumstances of restraint which render the writ necessary; Cowp. 672; 2 Cow. & H. Notes to Phill. Ev. 658.

HABEAS CORPUS CUM CAUSA. See HABEAS CORPUS AD FACIENDUM ET RECIPIENDUM.

HABENDUM (Lat.). The clause usually following the granting part of the premises of a deed, which defines the extent of the ownership in the thing granted to be held and enjoyed by grantee. 3 Washb. R. P. 436.

It commences with the words "to have and to hold," habendum et tenendum. It is not an essential part of a deed, but serves to qualify, define, or control it; Co. Litt. 6 a, 299; 4 Kent 468; Sumner v. Williams, 8 Mass. 162, 174, 5 Am. Dec. 83; and may be rejected if clearly repugnant to the rest of the deed; Shepp. Touchst. 102. See 3 Washb. R. P. 436; 4 Kent 468; 4 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 273; Elph. Deeds 217.

HABENTES HOMINES (Lat.). Rich men. Du Cange.

HABENTIA. Wealth; Riches. Mon. Ang. t. 1. 100.

HABERE (Lat.). To have. It is said to designate the right, while tenere (to hold) signifies the possession, and possidere (to possess) includes both. Calv. Lex.

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM (Lat.). A writ of execution in the action of ejectment; originally to recover possession of a chattel interest in real estate.

The sheriff is commanded by this writ that, without delay, he cause the plaintiff to have possession of the land in dispute which is therein described. A fi. fa. or ca. sa. for costs may be included in the writ. The duty of the sheriff in the execution and return of that part of the writ is the same as on a common fi. fa. or ca. sa. The sheriff is to execute this writ by delivering a full and actual possession of the premises to the plaintiff. For this purpose, he may break an outer or inner door of the house; and, should he be violently opposed, he may raise the posse comitatus; 5 Co. 91 b; 1 Leon. 145.

The name of this writ is abbreviated hab. fac. poss. See 10 Viner, Abr. 14; Tidd, Pr. 1081; 2 Arch. Pr. 58; 3 Bla. Com. 412.

HABERE FACIAS SEISINAM (Lat.). The name of a writ of execution, used in most real actions, by which the sheriff is directed that he cause the demandant to have seisin of the lands which he has recovered. It lay to recover possession of the freehold, while to recover a chattel interest in real estate the habere facias possessionem was the appropriate writ. It was practically abolished in England by the Common Law Procedure Acts of 1852 and 1860, but is still known in some of the states in connection with the action of dower.

This writ may be taken out at any time within a year and a day after judgment. It is to be executed nearly in the same manner as the writ of habere facias possessionem, and for this purpose the officer may break open the outer door of a house to deliver seisin to the demandant; 5 Co. 91 b; Com. Dig. Execution, E. The name of this writ is abbreviated hab. fac. seis.

HABERE FACIAS VISUM (Lat.). In Practice. The name of a writ which lay when a view is to be taken of lands and tenements. Fitzh. N. B. Index, View.

HABERE LICERE. See SALE.

HABETO TIBI RES TUAS. In Civil Law. Have or take thy property to thyself. A phrase used in connection with the Roman law of divorce. Calv. Lex. Where a marriage in one of their modes, by which the wife passed in manum viri, was dissolved by divorce, the husband had to restore the dos, as in case of the wife's death, unless her misconduct was the cause; Sand. Just. 152.

HABILIS (Lat.). Fit; suitable. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 436. Active; useful (of a servant). Du Cange. Proved; authentic (of Book of Saints). Du Cange. Fixed; stable (of authority of the king). Du Cange.

HABIT. A disposition or condition of the body or mind acquired by custom or a frequent repetition of the same act. See Sikes v. Allen, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 622; Ludwick v. Com., 18 Pa. 172; Com. v. Whitney, 5 Gray (Mass.) 85. The customary conduct, to pursue which one has acquired a tendency, from frequent repetition of the same acts. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U. S. 350, 26 L. Ed. 1055.

The habit of dealing has always an important bearing upon the construction of commercial contracts. A ratification will be inferred from the mere habit of dealing between the parties: as if a broker has been accustomed to settle losses on policies in a particular manner, without any objection being made, or with the silent approbation of his principal, and he should afterwards settle other policies in the same manner, to which no objection should be made within a reasonable time, a just presumption would arise of an implied ratification: for, if the principal did not agree to such settlement, he should have declared his dissent. See USAGE.

The habit of an animal is, in its nature, a continuous fact, to be shown by proof of successive acts of a similar kind; Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 9 Sup. Ct. 696, 33 L. Ed. 110.

HABIT AND REPUTE. Applied in Scotch law to a general understanding and belief of something's having happened: e. g. marriage may be constituted by habit and repute; Bell. Dict.

HABITABLE REPAIR. Such a state of repair that leased premises may be occupied, not only with safety, but with reasonable comfort. 2 Mood. & R. 186.

HABITANCY. See INHABITANT.

HABITANT. A resident; an inhabitant (q. v.). A native of Canada of French descent, particularly of the peasant or farming class; a tenant who kept hearth and home on the seigniory.

HABITATION. In Civil Law. The right of a person to live in the house of another without prejudice to the property.

It differed from a usufruct in this, that the usufructuary might apply the house to any purpose,—as of a store or manufactory; whereas the party having the right of habitation could only use it for the residence of himself and family; 1 Bro. Civ. Law 184; Domat, l. 1, t. 11, s. 2, n. 7.

In Estate. A dwelling-house; a home stall. 2 Bla. Com. 4; 4 id. 220.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT. The stat. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 99. Its object was to give the police greater control over convicted criminals at large, and to provide for the registration of criminals. Now repealed and other provisions substituted for it, by the Prevention of Crime Act, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112. Moz. & W.

Statutes providing for increased penalties for crimes committed by habitual criminals or prior offenders are not contrary to the United States constitution prohibiting ex post facto laws; Sturtevant v. Com., 158 Mass. 598, 33 N. E. 648; State v. Dowden, 137 Ia. 573, 115 N. W. 211; State of Iowa v. Jones, 128 Fed. 626. They do not deny equal protection of the law; People v. Coleman, 145 Cal. 609, 79 Pac. 283; nor impose cruel and unusual punishment; McDonald v. Massachusetts, 180 U. S. 311, 21 Sup. Ct. 389, 45 L. Ed. 542; nor place the accused in jeopardy a second time; Herndon v. Com., 105 Ky. 197, 48 S. W. 989, 88 Am. St. Rep. 303; State v. Le Pitre, 54 Wash. 166, 103 Pac. 27, 18 Ann. Cas. 922.

As to the effect of a pardon for the first offense, see PARDON.

HABITUAL DRUNKARD. A person given to inebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. Ludwick v. Com., 18 Pa. 172; Com. v. Whitney, 5 Gray (Mass.) 85. One who has the habit of indulging in intoxicating drinks so firmly fixed that he becomes drunk whenever the temptation is presented by his being near where liquor is sold. Magahay v. Magahay, 35 Mich. 210. Within the meaning of the divorce laws, one who has a fixed habit of frequently getting drunk; Page v. Page, 43 Wash. 293, 86 Pac. 582, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1054. The custom or habit of getting drunk; the constant indulgence in such stimulants as wine, brandy, and whisky, whereby intoxication is produced; not the ordinary use, but the habitual use of them; the habit should be actual and confirmed, but need not be continuous, or even of daily occurrence; Williams v. Goss, 43 La. Ann. 868, 9 South. 750. If there is a fixed habit of drinking to excess, so as to disqualify a person from attending to his business during the principal portion of the time usually devoted to business, it is habitual intemperance; Mahone v. Mahone, 19 Cal. 626, 81 Am. Dec. 91; but see Wheeler v. Wheeler, 53 Ia. 511, 5 N. W. 689, 36 Am. Rep. 240.

Habitual drunkenness of a husband has been held not to entitle the wife to a divorce; L. R. 1 P. & M. 46; contra, 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 1781. And in many of the states statutory provisions make such conduct ground for divorce. The fact that a man has had delirium tremens once does not prove, as a matter of law, that he is habitually intemperate, so as to contradict his representation to the contrary; Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bank, 122 U. S. 501, 7 Sup. Ct. 1221, 30 L. Ed. 1100.

By the laws of some states, such persons are classed with idiots, lunatics, etc., in regard to the care of property; and in some, they are liable to punishment. See Wadsworth v. Sharpsteen, 8 N. Y. 388, 59 Am. Dec. 499; U. S. v. Forbes, Crabbe 558, Fed. Cas. No. 15,129; In re Guardianship of Wetmore, 6 Wash. 271, 33 Pac. 615.

While a woman is under guardianship as an habitual drunkard, she is conclusively presumed to be incapable of conducting her affairs; she cannot transact any business, make a valid deed or bond, waive the notice of protest on a bill, or waive the provisions of her husband's will and elect to take dower, or do anything which involves the exercise of judgment or discrimination; Philadelphia Trust, Safe and Deposit Ins. Co. v. Allison, 108 Me. 326, 80 Atl. 833, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 39; see Cockrill v. Cockrill, 79 Fed. 143; L'Amoureaux v. Crosby, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 422; Penhallow v. Kimball, 61 N. H. 596.

See Rogers, Drinks, etc.; DRUNKENNESS; DELIRIUM TREMENS; INTOXICATION.

HABITUALLY. Customarily; by frequent practice or use. It does not mean entirely or exclusively; Stanton v. French, 91 Cal. 274, 27 Pac. 657, 25 Am. St. Rep. 174.

HABLE. A seaport; a harbor; a naval station. Stat. 27 Hen. VI. c. 3.

HACIENDA. In Spanish Law. A generic term, applicable to the mass of the property belonging to a state, and the administration of the same. Also a private estate or plantation.

As a science, it is defined by Dr. Jose Canga Argüells, in his "Diccionario de Hacienda," to be that part of civil economy which teaches how to aggrandize a nation by the useful employment of its wealth.

A royal estate. Newman & B. Dict.

HACKNEY CARRIAGES. Carriages plying for hire in the street. The driver is liable for negligently losing baggage; 2 C. 13, 877; Masterson v. Short, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481. They are usually regulated in large cities by statute or ordinance; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86; Com. v. Matthews, 122 Mass. 60. See HIGHWAYS; RAILROADS.

HADBOTE. In English Law. A recompense or amends made for violence offered to a person in holy orders. Jacob.

HADD. A boundary or limit. A statutory punishment defined by law, and not arbitrary. In Hindu law. Moz. & W.

HADERUNGA. Respect or distinction of persons. Jacob.

HADGQNEL. A tax or mulct. Jacob.

HAEC EST CONVENTIO (Lat.). This is an agreement. Words with which agreements anciently commenced. Yearb. H. 6 Edw. II. 191.

HAEC EST FINALIS CONCORDIA (L. Lat.). This is the final agreement. The words with which the foot of a fine commenced. 2 Bl. Com. 351.

HÆREDA. The name, under the Gothic constitutions, of the hundred court (q. v.). 3 Bla. Com. 35; 3 Steph. Com. 281, 282, n. (q.).

HÆREDE ABDUCTO. An ancient writ that lay for the lord, who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not obtain access to his person, by reason of the ward having been carried away by another person. Old. Nat. Brev. 93; Cowell.

HÆREDE DELIBERANDO ALTERI QUI HABET CUSTODIAM TERRÆ. An ancient writ, directed to the sheriff, requiring him to command one who had taken away an heir under age, being his ward, to deliver him to the person whose ward he was by reason of his land. Reg. Orig. 161.

HÆREDE RAPTO. An ancient writ that lay for the ravishment of the lord's ward. Reg. Orig. 163.

HÆREDES. Heirs. Plural of Hæres, which see, together with titles immediately following it.

HÆREDIPETA (Law Lat.). The next heir to lands. Du Cange. And who seeks to be made heir (qui cupit hæreditatem). Du Cange.

HÆREDITAS (Lat. from hæres). In Civil Law. "Nihil aliud est hæreditas, quam successio in universum jus quod defunctus habuit." Inheritance is nothing else than succession to every right which the deceased possessed. Dig. 50. 17; 50. 16; 5. 2; Mack. C. L. § 605; Bracton 62 b. The theory was that, though the physical person of the deceased had perished, his legal personality survived and descended unimpaired on his heirs in whom his legal identity was continued.

See HÆRES.

In Old English Law. An estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance. Marten, Anecd. Collect. t. 3, p. 269; Co. Litt. 9.

HÆREDITAS DAMNOSA. A burdensome inheritance. See DAMNOSA HÆREDITAS.

HÆREDITAS JACENS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A prostrate inheritance. The inheritance left to a voluntary heir was so called so long as he had not manifested, either expressly or by silence, his acceptance or refusal of the inheritance, which, by a fiction of law, was said to sustain the person (sustinere personam) of the deceased, and not of the heir. Mack. C. L. § 685 a. An estate with no heir or legatee to take. Code, 10. 10., 1; Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 68.

In English Law. An estate in abeyance; that is, after the ancestor's death and before assumption of the heir. Co. Litt. 342 b. An inheritance without legal owner, and therefore open to the first occupant. 2 Bla. Com. 259.

The Roman conception of the term is unknown to the common law. John C. Gray, Nature, etc., of Law 59, 298, where the subject is treated.

HÆREDITAS LUCTUOSA. The succession of parents to the estate of deceased children. 4 Kent 397. It was called a mournful inheritance because out of the ordinary and natural course of mortality. It was sometimes termed tristis successio.

HÆRES. In Roman Law. One who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of a deceased person, being appointed by the will of the decedent. It is to be observed that the Roman hæres had not the slightest resemblance to the English heir. He corresponded in character and duties almost exactly with the executor under the English law.

The institution of the hæres was the essential characteristic of a testament: if this was not done, the instrument was called a codicillus. Mack. C. L. §§ 632, 650.

Who might not be instituted. Certain persons were not permitted to be instituted in this capacity; such as, persons not Roman citizens, slaves of such persons, persons not in being at the death of the testator, and corporations, unless especially privileged. Also, the emperor could not be made hæres with the condition that he should prosecute a suit of the testator against a subject. Nor could a second husband or wife be instituted hæres to a greater portion of the estate than was left to that child of the first marriage which received least by the will. So, a widow who married before the expiration of her year of mourning could not institute her second husband as hæres to more than a third of her estate. And a man who had legitimate children could not institute as hæredes a concubine and her children to more than a twelfth of his estate, nor the mother alone to more than one-twenty-fourth; Mack. C. L. § 651.

The institution of the hæres might be absolute or conditional. But the condition, to be valid, must be suspensive (condition precedent, see CONDITION), possible, and lawful. If, however, this rule was infringed, certain conditions, as the resolutive (condition subsequent, see CONDITION), the impossible, and the immoral or indecent, were held nugatory, while others invalidated the appointment of the hæres,—as the preposterous and captatory, i. e. the appointment of a hæres on condition that the appointee should, in turn, institute the testator or some other person hæres in his testament. In regard to limitations of time, they must, to be valid, commence ex die incerto. A condition that A should become hæres after a certain day, or that he should be hæres up to a day whether certain or uncertain, was nugatory. The testator might assign his reasons for the institution of a particular hæres, but a mistake in the facts upon which those reasons were based did not, in general, affect the validity of the appointment. The institution might be accompanied with a direction that the hæres should apply the inheritance either wholly or in part to a specified purpose, which he was bound to comply with in case he accepted the inheritance, unless it was physically impossible to do so, or unless the hæres himself was the only person affected by such directions. The hæres might be instituted either simply, without any interest in the estate, or with a fixed share therein, or with regard to some particular thing; Mack. C. L. § 653. It was customary, in order to provide against a failure to accept on the part of the direct hæres, to substitute one or more hæredes to him. This substitution might be made in various forms; but the result was the same in all,—that if the first of the direct hæredes failed to accept the inheritance, whether from indisposition, permanent incapacity, or from dying before the testator, the substitute stood in his stead. There might be several degrees of substitutes, each ready to act in case of the failure of all the preceding; and the rule was substitutus substituto est substitutus instituto: which meant that on a failure of all the intermediate substitutes, the lowest in rank succeeded to the position of the instituted hæres. This was called substitutio vulgaris. There was another, the substitutio pupillaris, which was nothing more than the appointment, by the testator, of a hæres to a minor child under his authority,—which appointment was good in case the child died after the testator, and still a minor. It was, in fact, making a testament for such minor—an act which he could not perform for himself. Mack. C. L. § 668.

Persons entitled to the inheritance. Though, generally speaking, the testator might institute as hæres any person whatever not within the exceptions above mentioned, yet his relatives, within certain limits, were considered as peculiarly entitled to the office, and if he instituted any one else they could not be entirely excluded, but were admitted to a share of the inheritance, which share, called portio legitima, or pars legitima, was fixed by law. The rules in regard to the persons entitled to this share of the estate, and its amount, are very intricate, and too voluminous to be introduced here. They may be found in Mackeldey, §§ 654-657. Among those entitled to the pars legitima, the immediate ascendants and descendants of the testator were peculiarly distinguished in this, that they must be mentioned in the testament, either by being formally instituted as hæredes, or by being formally excluded, while the other relatives so entitled might receive their shares as a legacy, or in any other way, without being formally instituted. From this necessity of mentioning this class of relatives, they were called successores necessarii.

Acquisition of the inheritance. Except in the case of a slave of the testator (hæres necessarius), or a person under his authority (potestas) at his death (hæres suus et necessarius), the institution of a person as hæres did not oblige him to accept the office. A formal acceptance was requisite in the case of all other persons than the two classes just mentioned, whence such persons were called hæredes voluntarii, and in opposition to the sui hæredes, extranei hæredes. This acceptance might be express (aditio hæreditatis), or tacit, i. e. by performing some act in relation to the inheritance which admitted of no other construction than that the person named as hæres intended to accept the office. The refusal of the office, if express, was called repudiatio; if tacit, through the neglect of the hæres to make use of his rights within a suitable period, it was called omissio hæreditatis. The acceptance could not be coupled with a condition; and a refusal was final and irrevocable; Mack. C. L. §§ 681-683.

Rights and liabilities of the hæres. The fundamental idea of the office is that as regards the estate the hæres and the testator form but a single person. Hence it follows that the private estate of the hæres and the estate of the testator are united (confusio bonorum defuncti et hæredis); the hæres acquires all rights of property, and becomes liable to all demands, except those purely personal, to which the testator was entitled and subject, and is, consequently, responsible for all the debts of the deceased, even if the estate left by the latter is not sufficient to pay them. He must, moreover, recognize as binding upon him all acts of the testator relating to the estate. He is bound to obey the directions of the will, especially to perform the trusts and pay the legacies imposed upon him, yet this only so far as the residue of the estate, after liquidating the debts, enables him to do so.

These were the strict rules of the law; but two modes, the spatium deliberandi and the beneficium inventarii, were in course of time contrived for relieving the hæres from the risk of loss by an acceptance of the office.

The spatium deliberandi was a period of delay granted to the hæres, upon application to the magistrate, in order that he might investigate the condition of the estate before deciding whether to accept or reject the office. If the hæres was pressed by the other hæredes, or by the creditors of the estate, to decide whether to accept or reject the office he must decide immediately, or apply for the spatium deliberandi, which when allowed by the emperor continued for a year, and when by a judge, for nine months, from the day of its allowance. If the hæres had not decided at the expiration of this period, he was held to have accepted. If he was not pressed to a decision by the other hæredes or by the creditors, he was allowed a year from the day he was notified of the inheritance having been conferred upon him, to deliberate whether to accept or not. If, after deliberating for the allotted period, he should accept the inheritance, he became responsible for the debts of the testator, without regard to whether the estate was sufficient or not to pay them.

The beneficium inventarii was an extension to all hæredes of the privilege belonging to soldiers not to be responsible for the debts beyond the assets. This privilege to the hæres was conditional upon his commencing an inventory within thirty days and completing it within sixty from the time he became notified of his appointment. The inventory must be prepared in the presence of a notary, and must be signed by the hæres, with a declaration that it included the whole estate, etc., to which fact he might be obliged to make oath. He then became liable only to the extent of the assets. He was allowed, before paying the debts, to deduct the expenses of the funeral, of establishing the testament, and of making the inventory. He could not be forced to pay debts or legacies during the preparation of the inventory, and afterwards he paid the claimants in full in the order in which they presented themselves, and when the assets were exhausted could not be required to pay any more. His own claims against the estate might be paid first, and his debts to the estate were part of the assets. If he neglected to prepare the inventory within the legal period, he forfeited the privileges of it; which also was the case if he applied for the spatium deliberandi; so that he must choose between the two.

The creditors and legatees of the testator were allowed the beneficium separationis, by which, when the hæres was deeply in debt, and, by reason of the confusio bonorum defuncti et hæredis, they were in danger of losing their claims, they were permitted to have a separation of the assets from the private estate of the hæres. Application for this privilege must have been made within five years from the acceptance of the inheritance; but it would not be granted if the creditors of the testator had in any way recognized the hæres as their debtor. If it was granted, they were in general restricted to the assets for payment of their claims, and the private estate of the hæres was discharged. If the assets were not exhausted in satisfying the creditors and legatees of the testator, the creditors of hæres might come in upon the balance; but these latter were not entitled to the beneficium separationis.

The hæres might transmit the inheritance by will; but, in general, he could not do so till after acceptance. To this, however, there were numerous exceptions.

The remedies of the hæres are too intimatly connected with the general system of Roman jurisprudence to be capable of a brief explanation. See Mack. C. L. §§ 692, 693; Dig. 5. 3; Cod. 3. 31; Gaius, iv. § 144, etc.; Maine, Anc. Law.

Cohæredes. When several hæredes have accepted a joint inheritance, each ipso jure becomes entitled to a proportional share in the assets, and liable to a proportional share of the debts, though the testator may, if he choose, direct otherwise, and they may also agree otherwise among themselves; but in both these cases the creditors are not affected, and may pursue each hæres to the extent of his legal share of liability, and no further.

One of the cohæredes has a right to compel a partition of the assets and liabilities, subject, however, to an agreement among themselves, or a direction by the testator, that the inheritance shall remain undivided for a time; Mack. C. L. §§ 694, 695.

HÆRES ASTRARIUS. In Old English Law. An heir in actual possession of the house of his ancestor. Bract. 85, 267 b.

HÆRES DE FACTO. An heir, made so by reason of the disseisin or other wrongful act of his ancestor. An heir in fact in contradistinction to an heir de jure.

HÆRES EX ASSE. In Civil Law. Sole heir. In inheritances and other money matters where a division was made, the as (a unit) with its parts, was used to designate the portions, thus: Hæres ex asse, heir to the whole; hæres ex semisse, heir to one-half; hæres ex dodrante, heir to three-fourths; and so, hæres ex besse, triente, quadrante, sextante, etc. Calvinus, s. v. As.

HÆRES EXTRANEUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. An extraneous or foreign heir, that is one who is not a child or slave of the testator. Those only could be extraneous heirs who had a capacity of accepting the inheritance both at the time of making the will and at the death of the testator. Halifax, Anal. b. 11, c. 6, § 38.

HÆRES FACTUS (Lat.). An heir appointed by will. This expression is applicable in the Roman law and systems founded on it, but not in the English common law; Moz. & W.

HÆRES FIDEI-COMMISSARIUS (Lat.). See FIDEI COMMISSUM.

HÆRES FIDUCIARIUS (Lat.). See FIDEI COMMISSUM.

HÆRES LEGITIMUS (Lat.). A lawful heir, being a legitimate child of parents who were married.

HÆRES NATUS (Lat.). An heir who is such by birth or descent. This is the only form of heirship recognized in the English law; Wms. R. P., 6th Am. ed. 96.

HÆRES NECESSARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A necessary heir, i. e. a slave instituted heir. He was so-called because whether he wished it or not, on the death of the testator he became instantly free and necessarily heir. A person suspecting that he was insolvent usually made a slave his heir so that his goods would be sold, if that were necessary, in the name of this heir and not as those of the testator. Inst. 2, 19. 1; id. 1. 6. 1; Sand. Introd. § 76.

HÆRES PROXIMUS (Lat.). The child or descendant of the deceased. Dalr. Feud. 110.

HÆRES RECTUS (Lat.). In Old English Law. A right heir. Fleta, l. 6, c. 1, § 11.

HÆRES REMOTIOR (Lat.). A more remote heir. A kinsman, not a child or descendant.

HÆRES SUUS. In Civil Law. One's own heir; the natural heir of the decedent; his lineal descendants. Persons who were in the power of the testator but became sui juris at his death. Inst. 2. 13; id. 3. 1. 4. 5.

HÆRES SUUS ET NECESSARIUS. In Civil Law. An heir by relationship and necessity. The descendants of an ancestor in direct line were so-called, sui, denoting the relationship, and necessarii, the necessity of law which made them heirs without their election, and whether the ancestor died testate or intestate. Halifax, Anal. b. 11, c. 6, § 38; Mack. Civ. L. § 681; Inst. 2. 19. 2.

HÆRETARE. To give a right of inheritance or make a donation hereditary to the grantee and his heirs. Cowell.

HÆRETICO COMBURENDO. See DE HÆRETICO COMBURENDO.

HAFNE. A haven or port. Cowell.

HAFNE COURTS (hafne, Dan. a haven, or port). Haven courts; courts anciently held in certain ports in England. Spelman, Gloss.

HAG. A division of a coppice or wood on which timber was cut annually by the proprietor. Ersk. Pr. 222.

HAGA. A house in a city or borough. Jacob.

HAGIA. A hedge. Mon. Angl. tome 2, 273.

HAGNE. A little hand-gun. Stat. 33 Hen. VIII. c. 6.

HAGNEBUT. A hand-gun larger than the hagne. Stat. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 14; 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

HAGUE TRIBUNAL. The Court of Arbitration established by the Hague Peace Conference of 1899. The object of the establishment was to facilitate the immediate recourse to arbitration for the settlement of international differences by providing a permanent court, "accessible at all times, and acting, in default of agreement to the contrary between the parties, in accordance with the rules of procedure inserted in the present convention." The court is given jurisdiction over all arbitration cases, provided the parties do not agree to institute a special tribunal. Each power signing the Convention selects four persons of known competency in questions of international law and of the highest moral reputation. These persons form the members of the court, and their names are inscribed upon a list which is notified to the contracting powers. When a case to be arbitrated arises between two of the signatory powers, the arbitrators must be chosen from the above mentioned list, each party appointing two arbitrators who together choose an umpire. An international Bureau was likewise established to serve as a registry for the court and to be the channel of communications relative to the meetings of the court. The court, although called "permanent," is really so only in the fact that there is a permanent list of members from among whom the arbitrators in a given case are selected. At the Second Hague Conference of 1907, apart from minor changes made in the court, it was provided that, of the two arbitrators appointed by each of the parties, only one should be a national of the appointing state. This was done with the object of securing a more impartial tribunal. 1 Scott, 274–318, 423–464.

HAIA. A hedge. An enclosed park. Cowell.

HAIEBOTE. A permission to take thorns, etc., to repair hedges. Blount.

HAILL. Whole. All and haill are common words in Scotch conveyances. 1 Bell, App. Cas. 499.

HAIMSUCKEN. See HAMESUCKEN.

HAIR. A capillary outgrowth from the skin. It has been held not to include the bristles of animals; Von Stade v. Arthur, 13 Blatchf. 251, Fed. Cas. No. 16,998.

HAKH. Truth; the true God; a just or legal prescriptive right or claim; a perquisite claimable under established usage by village officers. Wilson, Gloss. Ind.

HAKHDAR. The holder of a right. Moz. & W. See HAKH.

HALAKAR. The realization of the revenue. Wilson, Gloss. Ind.; Moz. & W.

HALF-BLOOD. A term denoting the degree of relationship which exists between those who have one parent only in common.

By the English common law, one related to an intestate of the half-blood only could never inherit, upon the presumption that he is not of the blood of the original purchaser; but this rule has been greatly modified by the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106.

In this country, the common-law principle on this subject may be considered as not ordinarily in force, though in many states some distinction is still preserved between the whole and the half-blood; 4 Kent 403, n.; Butler v. King, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 115; Lawson v. Perdriaux, 1 M'Cord (S. C.) 456; Danner v. Shissler, 31 Pa. 289; Dane, Abr. Index; Reeves, Descents, passim; 2 Washb. R. P. 411.

HALF-BROTHER, HALF-SISTER. Persons who have the same father, but different mothers; or the same mother, but different fathers.

HALF-CENT. A copper coin of the United States, of the value of one two-hundredth part of a dollar, or five mills, and of the weight of ninety-four grains. The first half-cents were issued in 1793, the last in 1857.

HALF-DEFENCE. See DEFENCE.

HALF-DIME. A silver coin of the United States, of the value of five cents, or the one-twentieth part of a dollar.

It weighed nineteen grains and two-tenths of a grain,—equal to four-hundredths of an ounce troy,—and was of the fineness of nine hundred thousandths; nine hundred parts being pure silver, and one hundred parts copper. The fineness of the coin was prescribed by the 8th section of the general mint law, passed Jan. 18, 1837. The weight of the coin was fixed by the 1st section of the act of Feb. 21, 1853. The second section of this last-cited act directed that silver coins issued in conformity to that act shall be a legal tender in payment of debts for all sums not exceeding five dollars. This provision applies to the half-dollar and all silver coins below that denomination. The first coinage of half-dimes was in 1793. A few half "dismes," with a likeness of Mrs. Washington, the wife of the president, upon the obverse of the coin, were issued in 1792; but they were not of the regular coinage.

By act of 9 June, 1879, silver coin of smaller denominations than one dollar shall be a legal tender in all sums not exceeding ten dollars. The coining of the half-dime was abolished by act of 12 Feb. 1873. Its place was supplied by a five-cent piece composed of three-fourths copper and one-fourth nickel, of the weight of seventy-seven and sixteen-hundredths grains troy. The "minor coins," viz., the five, three, two, and one cent pieces, are a legal tender for any amount not exceeding twenty-five cents in any one payment.

HALF-DOLLAR. A silver coin of the United States, of half the value of the dollar or unit, and containing one hundred and eighty-five grains and ten-sixteenth parts of a grain of pure, or two hundred and eight grains of standard, silver. Act of April 2, 1792. Under the provisions of this law, the fineness of the silver coins of the United States was 892.4 thousandths of pure silver.

The weight and fineness of the silver coins were somewhat changed by the act of Jan. 18, 1837; the weight of the half-dollar being by this act fixed at two hundred and six and one-quarter grains, and the fineness at nine hundred thousandths; conforming, in respect to fineness with the coinage of France and most other nations.

The weight of the half-dollar was reduced by the provisions of the act of February 21, 1853, to one hundred and ninety-two grains.

The half-dollars coined under the acts of 1792 and 1837 (as above) were a legal tender at their nominal value in payment of debts to any amount. Those coined since the act of February 21, 1853, were, under it a legal tender in payment of debts for all sums not exceeding five dollars. Sec. 2. The silver coins struck in the year 1853, under this last-cited act, may be distinguished from the others of that year by the arrow-heads on the right and left of the date of the piece. In 1854, and subsequent years, the arrow-heads are omitted.

By the act of 12 Feb. 1873, the weight of the half-dollar shall be twelve and one-half grams (192.9 grains), and by act of June 9, 1879, it is a legal tender for sums not exceeding ten dollars. The same act enables the holder of any silver coins of a smaller denomination than one dollar, to exchange them in sums of twenty dollars, or any multiple thereof, at the U. S. Treasury, for lawful money of the United States.

HALF-EAGLE. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of five dollars.

The weight of the piece is 129 grains (act June 28, 1834; Act Feb. 12, 1873) of standard fineness, namely, nine hundred thousandths of pure gold, and one hundred of alloy of silver and copper: "provided that the silver do not exceed one-half of the whole alloy." Act of Jan. 18, 1837. For the proportion of alloy in gold coins of the United States since 1853, see EAGLE.

For all sums whatever the half-eagle was a legal tender of payment of five dollars. It is now a legal tender to any amount, when not below the standard weight, and then in proportion to its actual weight. Act of February 12, 1873.

HALF ENDEAL or HALFEN DEAL. A moiety or half of a thing.

HALF-KINEG. In Saxon Law. Half-King. A title accorded to aldermen of all England. Crabb. Eng. L. 28; Spel. Glos.

HALF-MARK. A noble; six shillings, eight pence.

HALF-PROOF. In Civil Law. That which is insufficient as the foundation of a sentence or decree, although in itself entitled to some credit. Vicat, Probatio.

HALF-SEAL. A seal used in the English chancery for the sealing of commissions to delegates appointed upon any appeal, either in ecclesiastical or marine causes. 8 Eliz. c. 3.

HALF-TONGUE. A jury half of one tongue or nationality and half of another. Vide Jacob, Law Dict. De medietate linguæ.

HALF-YEAR. In the computation of time a half year consists of one hundred and eighty-two days. Cro. Jac. 166; Co. Litt. 135 b.

HALI. A man employed in ploughing. Wilson, Gloss. Ind.; Moz. & W.

HALIMAS. In English Law. The feast of all-Saints, on November 1. One of the cross-quarters of the year was computed from Halimas to Candlemas. Whart.

HALIMOTE. A court baron (q. v.). It was sometimes used to designate a convention of citizens in their public hall and was also called folkmote and hallmote. The word halimote rather signifies the lord's court or a court baron held in a manor in which the differences between the tenants were determined. Cunn. L. Dict.; Cowell.

"Furthermore," it is said, "it seems to have been a common practice for a wealthy abbey to keep a court, known as a halimote, on each of its manors, while in addition to these manorial courts it kept a central court, a libera curia for all its greater freehold tenants. And we may now and again meet with courts which are distinctly called courts of honors. The rule then was not merely this, that the lord of a manor may hold a court for the manor; but rather this, that a lord may hold a court for his tenants." 1 Poll. & Maitl. 573.

HALIWORKFOLK. Holy work folk. Persons who held lands of which the tenure was the service of defending or repairing some church or monument. Cowell.

HALL. A public building used either for the meetings of corporations, courts, or employed to some public uses: as, the city hall, the town hall. Formerly this word denoted the chief mansion or habitation.

HALL-MARK. An official stamp affixed by the goldsmiths upon articles made of gold or silver as an evidence of genuineness, and hence used to signify any mark of genuineness. "The power of free alienation is the 'hall-mark' of a fee-simple absolute." Rand. Em. Dom. § 206.

HALLAGE. A toll or license fee on goods vended in a hall. Jac. L. Dict.; 6 Co. 62.

A toll due to the lord of a market or fair, on commodities vended in the common hall. Cowell.

HALLAZCO. In Spanish Law. The finding and taking possession of something which previously had no owner, and which thus becomes the property of the first occupant. Las Partidas, 3. 5. 28, 5. 48. 49, 5. 20. 50.

HALLMOOT. See HALIMOTE.

HALLUCINATION. In Medical Jurisprudence. The perception by any of the senses of an object which has no existence. The conscious recognition of a sensation of sight, hearing, feeling, taste, or smell which is not due to any impulse received by the perceptive apparatus from without, but arises within the perceptive apparatus itself. A false perception in contradistinction to a delusion or false belief. Wood, Am. Text-Book of Med.

An error, a blunder, a mistake, a fallacy; and when used in describing the condition of a person, does not necessarily carry an imputation of insanity. Foster's Ex'rs v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233, 24 Atl. 253.

An instance is given of a temporary hallucination in the celebrated Ben Jonson, the poet. He told a friend of his that he had spent many a night in looking at his great toe, about which he had seen Turks and Tartars, Romans and Carthaginians, fight in his imagination. 1 Collin. Lun. 34. If, instead of being temporary, this affection of his mind had been permanent, he would doubtless have been considered insane. See, on the subject of spectral illusions, Hibber, Alderson, and Farrar's Essays; Scott on Demonology, etc.; 3 Bostock, Physiology 61, 161; 1 Esquirol, Maladies Mentales 159. See INSANITY.

HALYWERCFOLK. Those who held by the service of guarding and repairing a church or sepulchre, and were excused from feudal services. Hist. Dunelm. apud Whartoni Ang. Sax. pt. 1, p. 749. Especially in the county of Durham, those who held by service of defending the corpse of St. Cuthbert. Jacob, Law Dict.

HAM. A place of dwelling; a homeclose; a little narrow meadow. Blount. A house or little village. Cowell.

HAMA. A hook; an engine with which a house on fire is pulled down. Yel. 60. A piece of land.

HAMBLING, or HAMELING. Expeditation (q. v.).

HAMEL, HAMELETA, or HAMLETA. A hamlet.

HAMESUCKEN. This term was formerly used in England instead of the modern term burglary; 4 Bla. Com. 223. See HAMSOCKEN.

But in Hale's Pleas of the Crown it is said, "The common genus of offences that comes under the name of hamesucken is that which is usually called house-breaking; which sometimes comes under the common appellation of burglary, whether committed in the day or night to the intent to commit felony; so that house-breaking of this kind is of two natures." 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 547; Com. v. Hope, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 4.

HAMFARE. This word by some is said to signify the freedom of a man's house; but Cowell seems to think that it signifies the breach of peace in a house. Holthouse.

HAMLET. A small village; a part or member of a vill. It is the diminutive of ham, a village. Cowell.

HAMMA. A close joining to a house; a croft; a little meadow. Cowell.

HAMMER. Used in connection with auction sales; as to bring or come to the hammer, to sell or be sold at auction. Cent. Dict.

HAMSOCN (Saxon from ham, house, sockne, liberty, immunity). The word is variously spelled hamsoca, hamsocna, haimsuken, hamesaken. Vinogradoff (Engl. Soc. 111) gives it as hamsocn. The right of security and privacy in a man's house. Du Cange. The breach of this privilege by a forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace; Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Gloss.; Du Cange; Bracton, lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 2, § 3. The right to entertain jurisdiction of the offence. Spelman; Du Cange. Immunity from punishment for such offence, id.; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 18. An insult offered in one's own house (insultus factus in domo). Brompton, p. 957; Du Cange.

Among the Anglo-Saxons it was breaking into a house; perhaps the time of the day was not an element. See 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 293; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 492.

HANAPER. A hamper or basket in which were kept the writs of the court of chancery relating to the business of a subject, and their returns; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 113; 10 Ric. II. c. 1; equivalent to the Roman fiscus. According to Spelman, the fees accruing on writs, etc., were there kept; Du Cange; 3 Bla. Com. 49. The office where it was kept was called the Hanaper office. It survives in Ireland.

HAND. A measure of length, four inches long: used in ascertaining the height of horses.

In legal parlance, handwriting or written signature, as "witness my hand," etc. Salazar v. Taylor, 18 Colo. 538, 33 Pac. 369; 10 Mod. 103.

HAND-BILL. A written or printed notice displayed to inform those concerned of something to be done.

HAND-BOROW (from hand, and Saxon borow, a pledge). Nine of a decennary or friborg (q. v.) were so called, being inferior to the tenth or head borow,—a decenna or friborga being ten freemen or frankpledges, who were mutually sureties for each other to the king for any damage. Du Cange, Friborg, Head-borow.

HANDCUFFS. See FETTERS.

HAND DOWN. To announce or file an opinion in a cause. Used originally and properly of the opinions of appellate courts transmitted to the court below; but in later usage the term is employed more generally, but inaccurately, with reference to any decision by a court upon a case or point reserved for consideration.

HAND-FASTING. Betrothment.

HAND-GRITH. Peace or protection given by the king with his own hand; used in the laws of Henry I. Tomlin; Cowell; Moz. & W.; Stat. Hen. I. c. 13.

HAND-HABENDE. In Saxon Law. One having a thing in his hand; that is, a thief found having the stolen goods in his possession,—latro manifestus of the civil law. See Laws of Hen. I. c. 59; Laws of Athelstane § 6; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 1; Britton p. 72; Du Cange, Handhabenda.

Jurisdiction to try such thief. Id.

See BACK-BERENDE.

HAND MONEY. Earnest (q. v.) when it is in cash.

HANDSALE. Anciently, among all the northern nations, shaking of hands was held necessary to bind a bargain,—a custom still retained in verbal contracts: a sale thus made was called handsale, venditio per mutuam manuum complexionem. In process of time the same word was used to signify the price or earnest which was given immediately after the shaking of hands, or instead thereof. In some parts of the country it is usual to speak of hand-money as the part of the consideration paid or to be paid at the execution of a contract of sale. See 2 Bla. Com. 448; Heineccius, de Antiquo Jure Germanico, lib. 2, § 335; Toullier, liv. 3, t. 3, c. 2, n. 33; EARNEST.

HANDSEL. Earnest; handsale (q. v.).

HANDWRITING. Anything written by a person. The manner in which a person writes, including the formation of the characters, the separation of the words, and other features distinguishing the written matter, as a mechanical result, from the writing of other persons.

That branch of the law of evidence which treats of handwriting is largely concerned with the determination of the genuineness or falsity of signatures. As to what constitutes a writing, generally, see that title, and, as to writing as required by the statutes of wills, see WILL.

With respect to proof of handwriting, a signature by a person unable to write, or, as it has been held, by one who can write, may be by mark, which is proved as the handwriting would be in case of a written signature. See MARK. The law of evidence as to handwriting applies also where it is in a disguised hand; 4 Esp. 117; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Lyon v. Lyman, 9 Conn. 55; or when a cipher is used; Com. v. Nefus, 135 Mass. 533.

One's own testimony is not the best evidence on this subject, and the writer need not be called; 2 Camp. 508; Ainsworth v. Greenlee, 8 N. C. 190; Lefferts v. State, 49 N. J. L. 26, 6 Atl. 521. See Cheritree v. Roggen, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 124. Whether it is evidence at all is a question confused by the general disqualification of parties who were naturally in most cases those to whom the question would arise, and it has been of late assumed by many writers that since the statutes allowing parties to be witnesses they may be such, for this as well as any other purpose. See Hess v. State, 5 Ohio 5, 22 Am. Dec. 767; with note citing cases.

The handwriting of attesting witnesses to an instrument more than thirty years old need not be proved; Stark, Ev. Sharsw. ed. 521; so also of unattested documents taken from proper depositaries; 7 East 279; Goodwin v. Jack, 62 Me. 414. The extrajudicial admissions of a party as to his handwriting are evidence to prove the same, though not of a very satisfactory nature; Whart. Ev. 705.

The rule in Steph. Dig. Evid. art. 31, was adopted in Redding v. Redding's Estate, 69 Vt. 500, 38 Atl. 230, as follows: One is deemed to be acquainted with the handwriting of another person when (1) he has seen him write, though but once and then only his name; or (2) when he has received letters or other documents purporting to be written by that person in answer to letters or other documents written by the witness or under his authority and addressed to him; or (3) when he has seen letters or other documents purporting to be that person's handwriting, and has afterward personally communicated with him concerning their contents, or has acted upon them as his, he knowing thereof and acquiescing therein; or (4) when the witness has so adopted them into business transactions as to induce a reasonable presumption and belief of their genuineness; or (5) when, in the ordinary course of business, documents purporting to be written or signed by that person have been habitually submitted to the witness.

That it is enough if the witness has seen the party write only once, see Pepper v. Barnett, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 405; Rideout v. Newton, 17 N. H. 71; Com. v. Nefus, 135 Mass. 533; McNair v. Com., 26 Pa. 388; Massey v. Bank, 104 Ill. 327; Riggs v. Powell, 142 Ill. 453, 32 N. E. 482; Worth v. McConnell, 42 Mich. 473, 4 N. W. 198; 8 C. & P. 380. But it is held that "it is not enough that he (the witness) had seen the person write but once, and then under circumstances showing that the attention of the witness was not specially directed to the peculiarities of the penmanship"; U. S. v. Crow, 1 Bond 51, Fed. Cas. No. 14,895; People v. Corey, 148 N. Y. 476, 42 N. E. 1066.

Any person who has seen one write and has acquired a standard in his own mind of the general character of the writing is competent to testify as to his belief of the genuineness of a writing; Succession of Morvant, 45 La. Ann. 207, 12 South. 349. Merely seeing the party write his surname once was held insufficient to warrant testifying to the full signature; 2 Stark. 164; but seeing the surname written several times was sufficient; Mood. & M. 39. See Brachmann v. Hall, 1 Disney (Ohio) 539; Smith v. Walton, 8 Gill (Md.) 77. It is sufficient although the witness never saw the person write before the date of the paper in question; Keith v. Lothrop, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 453; or although he had not seen him write for many years before the trial; Edelen v. Gough, 8 Gill (Md.) 87 (three years); Maslin v. Thomas, 8 Gill (Md.) 18 (six years); 8 Scott 384 (ten years); 25 How. St. Tr. 71 (nineteen years); Willson v. Betts, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 201 (sixty-three years); but not that he has seen writing that is done with reference to his testifying at the trial either at or before it; Reese v. Reese, 90 Pa. 89, 35 Am. Rep. 634; Whitmore v. Corey, 16 N. J. L. 267; with this exception the circumstances under which the witness has seen the party write affect his credit, not his competency; Jones, Ev. § 559; Hammond v. Varian, 54 N. Y. 398; McNair v. Com., 26 Pa. 388; Com. v. Nefus, 135 Mass. 533. Where the witness had seen an alleged testator write twice thirty-two years before, when the witness was then ten years old, and once twenty-three years before trial, he was undoubtedly within the rule. It is not possible to fix any arbitrary limit of time within which the witness must have seen the writing done; much must always depend on his intelligence, his habit of observation of such matters, the apparent strength and confidence of his memory, etc., which must be passed upon in the first instance by the trial judge; Wilson v. Van Leer, 127 Pa. 371, 17 Atl. 1097, 14 Am. St. Rep. 854.

As to the second method it is not necessary that the witness has seen the party write, as such personal acquaintance may be acquired by having seen papers purporting to be genuine and which have been acknowledged to be such by the writer; Berg v. Peterson, 49 Minn. 420, 52 N. W. 37; Stoddard v. Hill, 38 S. C. 385, 17 S. E. 138; Williams v. Deen, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 575, 24 S. W. 536; Hammond v. Varian, 54 N. Y. 398; Cabarga v. Seeger, 17 Pa. 514; Pierce v. De Long, 45 Ill. App. 462; but this is not always sufficient; McKeone v. Barnes, 108 Mass. 344. The witness is qualified, as such, by knowledge derived from correspondence, including letters received from a person in answer to those written and addressed to him; Chaffee v. Taylor, 3 Allen (Mass.) 598; Pearson v. McDaniel, 62 Ga. 100; McKonkey v. Gaylord, 46 N. C. 94; Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 419, 2 N. E. 808; Southern Exp. Co. v. Thornton, 41 Miss. 216; Violet v. Rose, 39 Neb. 660, 58 N. W. 216; Campbell v. Iron Co., 83 Ala. 351, 3 South. 369; Clark v. Freeman, 25 Pa. 133; Empire Mfg. Co. of Grand Rapids v. Stuart, 46 Mich. 482, 9 N. W. 527; Cunningham v. Bank, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 557; 5 A. & E. 740; but the mere receipt of letters is insufficient to prove that they were written by the person purporting to sign them; White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Gordon, 124 Ind. 495, 24 N. E. 1053, 19 Am. St. Rep. 109; there must be a ratification or recognition; Cunningham v. Bank, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 557; Nunes v. Perry, 113 Mass. 274; Guyette v. Town of Bolton, 46 Vt. 228; Putnam v. Wadley, 40 Ill. 346; Sartor v. Bolinger, 59 Tex. 411; contra, 2 C. & K. 744; 2 C. & P. 21; but such knowledge may be gained in the ordinary course of business, as by seeing documents written by the person; Cody v. Conly, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 313; Armstrong v. Fargo, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 175; Ennor v. Hodson, 28 Ill. App. 445; and only seeing letters addressed to strangers purporting to be those of the person in question; Nunes v. Perry, 113 Mass. 275; Philadelphia & W. C. R. Co. v. Hickman, 28 Pa. 318. Such knowledge may be that of a clerk who sees correspondence or documents; Rogers v. Ritter, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 317, 20 L. Ed. 417; President, etc., of Amherst Bank v. Root, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 522; 5 C. & P. 213; Reyburn v. Belotti, 10 Mo. 597; a clerk in a bank; Snell v. Bray, 56 Wis. 156, 14 N. W. 14; Johnson v. State, 35 Ala. 370; a servant who has taken his master's letters to the post; 5 A. & E. 740; or a public officer who has seen many official documents filed in his office, signed by a justice, may prove his signature; Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 294; President, etc., of Amherst Bank v. Root, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 522; Rogers v. Ritter, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 317, 20 L. Ed. 417. The weight of the testimony will depend on the means of knowledge; U. S. v. Gleason, 37 Fed. 331. The witness must have an opinion; Fash v. Blake, 38 Ill. 363; and may give it if the handwriting is disguised; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 301, 51 Am. Dec. 711; Burnham v. Ayer, 36 N. H. 182; but positive knowledge or certainty is not necessary; 8 Ves. 474; Egan v. Murray, 80 Ia. 180, 45 N. W. 563; Magee v. Osborn, 32 N. Y. 669; State v. Minton, 116 Mo. 605, 22 S. W. 808; he need not swear to belief, an opinion is sufficient; Clark v. Freeman, 25 Pa. 133: Fash v. Blake, 38 Ill. 363. A witness has been permitted to testify that the signature was like the writing of the party whose signature it is alleged to be; 4 Esp. 37. An opinion of a witness cannot be based in part upon knowledge of and familiarity with the legal attainments, the style and composition of the alleged writer of the instrument in question; Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U. S. 552, 21 Sup. Ct. 474, 45 L. Ed. 663.

The witness in such cases need not be an expert; Moons' Adm'r v. Crowder, 72 Ala. 79; Williams v. Deen, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 575, 24 S. W. 536; or familiar with the person's handwriting generally if he is so with the signature; Com. v. Williams, 105 Mass. 62; as, e. g. he may prove the signature of a firm, when unacquainted with the handwriting of any partner; where he testifies that in his opinion, the handwriting was the same as that of many notes he had presented to the firm, and which had been paid by them; Gordon v. Price, 32 N. C. 385.

A signature upon an ancient writing may be proved by a witness who has become familiar with it by the inspection of other authentic ancient documents on which the same signature appeared; McCreary v. Coggeshall, 74 S. C. 42, 53 S. E. 978, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433, 7 Ann. Cas. 693; Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 294; U. S. v. Ortiz, 176 U. S. 422, 20 Sup. Ct. 466, 44 L. Ed. 529; Sweigart v. Richards, 8 Pa. 436. If a witness says that he knows a party's handwriting, he is prima facie competent to testify with respect to it and, if not cross-examined, his knowledge is taken to be admitted; Whittier v. Gould, 8 Watts (Pa.) 485; Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 490, 28 Am. Dec. 317; Goodhue v. Bartlett, 5 McLean 186, Fed. Cas. No. 5,538; contra, Pate v. People, 3 Gilman (Ill.) 644; McCracken v. West, 17 Ohio 16; he may be cross-examined as to the extent of his knowledge; Herrick v. Swomley, 56 Md. 439; which goes to the weight of his testimony; Moons' Adm'r v. Crowder, 72 Ala. 79. But if want of knowledge appear; Guyette v. Town of Bolton, 46 Vt. 228; Arthur v. Arthur, 38 Kan. 691, 17 Pac. 187; Allen v. State, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 367; or his testimony is insufficient; Mapes v. Leal's Heirs, 27 Tex. 345; Cook v. Smith, 30 N. J. L. 387; 3 V. & B. 172; it may be rejected. But see Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. 253. A witness may testify as to handwriting who cannot read or write himself; Foye v. Patch, 132 Mass. 105.

A witness may be asked if he would act upon the signature which he testifies to as genuine; Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 13 Sup. Ct. 288, 37 L. Ed. 118; contra, Bank of Com. v. Mudgett, 44 N. Y. 514; his knowledge cannot be tested by irrelevant papers; Bacon v. Williams, 13 Gray (Mass.) 525; 11 A. & E. 322; Rose v. Nat. Bank, 91 Mo. 399, 3 S. W. 876, 60 Am. Rep. 258; Massey v. Bank, 104 Ill. 327; Bank of Com. v. Mudgett, 44 N. Y. 514. But see 2 M. & R. 536; Page v. Homans, 14 Me. 478; Kirksey v. Kirksey, 41 Ala. 626; 1 Whart. Ev. § 10. But he may refresh his memory by reference to papers from which his knowledge is derived; Nat. Bank of Chester County v. Armstrong, 66 Md. 113, 6 Atl. 584, 59 Am. Rep. 156; McNair v. Com., 26 Pa. 388; Redfords v. Peggy, 6 Rand. (Va.) 316.

The third method of proving handwriting is what is termed comparison. It is defined to be a mode of deducing evidence of the authenticity of a written instrument, by showing the likeness of the handwriting to that of another instrument proved to be that of the party whom it is sought to establish as the author of the instrument in question. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 578.

Another much cited definition is "when other witnesses have proved the paper to be the handwriting of a party, and then the witness on the stand is desired to take the two papers in hand, compare them, and say whether or not they rae the same handwriting; the witness collects all his knowledge from comparison only; he knows nothing of himself; he has not seen the party write nor held any correspondence with him;" Com. v. Smith, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 571.

But more briefly, though with great precision, Starkie says: "By comparison is meant a comparison by the juxtaposition of two writings in order, by such comparison, to ascertain whether both were written by the same person." Stark. Ev. Metc. ed. pt. 4, 654.

Scarcely any title of the law, certainly none in the law of evidence, has given rise to more discussion in England and in this country and the "confusion, obscurity, and contradiction" which is to be observed in the cases quite justifies the criticism of Woodward, J., in Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. 9, 82 Am. Dec. 540, that much of the difficulty of the subject has arisen from the failure of judges to observe the essential rule "that terms be first correctly defined and then always used in the defined sense." A very pregnant cause of the confusion was the failure to preserve the distinction between comparison properly defined and the use of admittedly genuine signatures merely to enable a witness to refresh the memory as to his ideal standard formed by previous knowledge of the handwriting of the person whose signature was in issue. The latter process is in no sense a proper application of the term comparison as understood in the law of evidence, though often so used by judges. It is true, as said by Patteson, J., in Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 703 (and repeated in almost the same words by Judge Woodward in the case just cited), that all evidence of handwriting, except in the single instance where the witness saw the document written, is in its nature, comparison of hands. It is the belief which the witness entertains, upon comparing the writing in question with the exemplar in his mind derived from some previous knowledge. This language aptly expresses the idea which was in the mind of its author, but it has been quoted time and again by judges who apparently did not have clearly in mind the distinction which it was intended to emphasize and has contributed, perhaps, not a little to the continued misuse of the word comparison in this connection. Where a witness testifies from the comparison (used in what might be termed the colloquial sense referred to by Justice Patteson) of the writing in question with a mental standard derived from previous knowledge of the handwriting, he is simply stating his opinion, not in the sense of opinion evidence, but based upon his own knowledge. When a witness examines the writing in question and, placing it in juxtaposition with other writings proved to be genuine, having no previous knowledge, and testifies to his belief from the similitude, or want of it, it is properly and technically, evidence by comparison of hands. This distinction is stated in some very early cases; Peake, N. P. 20; 21 How. St. Tr. 810; Rex v. Tanyd, cited McNally, Ev. 409. It is in this latter technical sense that the phrase comparison of hands is here used and the cases properly relating to the subject apply to the two questions: (1) whether such comparison may be made by the jury, genuine writings, otherwise irrelevant, being admitted for that purpose; (2) whether it may be made by expert witnesses and their conclusions proved for the information of the jury.

Such evidence was admissible in the Roman law; 1 Whart. Ev. § 711, citing De Prob. de Lit. Comp. L. 20, c. iv. 21; Nov. 49, cap. 2; and also under the Code Napoleon, by three sworn experts appointed by the court, or agreed upon, and the writings must be executed before a notary or admitted; Gen. Code Proc. pt. 1, l. 2, tit. 10, s. 200.

At common law the genuineness of a contested writing could not be proved by comparison, by a witness, of such writing with other writings acknowledged to be genuine; 7 C. & P. 548, 595; 5 A. & E. 703. It was otherwise in the ecclesiastical courts; id.; 1 Phil. 78. See 2 Addams 53, 79, 91; 1 id. 162, 214, 216. If, however, a paper admitted to contain the handwriting of the party is in evidence for some other purpose, the signature or paper in question may be compared with it by the jury with or without the aid of experts; Tucker v. Kellogg, 8 Utah 11, 28 Pac. 870; State v. McBride, 30 Utah 422, 85 Pac. 440, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 557, 8 Ann. Cas. 1030; Second Nat. Bank of Reading v. Wentzel, 151 Pa. 142, 24 Atl. 1087; Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 425, 42 S. E. 887, 63 L. R. A. 963.

Ancient writings could be proved by comparison; 14 East 327, n. a; 10 Cl. & F. 193; 2 H. L. Cas. 534, 557. The right of the jury to make comparisons, though denied by Lord Kenyon when the jurors were illiterate; Peake, N. P. C. 20; was allowed by him when the jury were considered competent; id. 27; and it was afterwards fully established; 1 Cr. & J. 47; 4 C. & P. 267. Comparison by experts, after some fluctuation, it was settled could not be made; 5 C. & P. 196; 5 A. & E. 703.

It had required infinite discussion to settle the rule of these cases. Something called comparison was known in very early cases; 10 How. St. Tr. 312; 12 id. 183, 306; 12 Mod. 72; but at this period the terms comparison of hand and similitude of hands were used to describe every method of the proof of writing except by one who had seen the document written. It is therefore necessary that the cases should be critically reviewed with reference to the varied meaning with which these terms were employed at different periods. This work has been very well done by Professor John H. Wigmore in 30 Am. L. Rev. 481. The conclusion reached is thus stated: "(1) That the classes of witnesses who may testify to handwriting have increased in number by successive enlargements; (2) that the whole meaning of 'comparison of hands' has changed; (3) that the mere process of juxtaposition coram judicio, whether for witness or for the jury, was historically orthodox and unquestionable; and (4) that the opposite fates, at common law, of juxtaposition by experts and juxtaposition by jury—exclusion for the former but sanction (limited) for the latter—were due simply to the fact that the former had never been attempted till the 1800s and was merely prevented from coming into existence, while the latter had always existed and was thus able to survive the attempts on its life." The entire article should be referred to in any examination of this subject, as, on the whole, throwing new light upon it from a point of view not elsewhere so well treated. It may be added that the historical development of the English rule has not lost its importance by reason of its being superseded in England by statute. It is of primary importance in considering the decisions in those American jurisdictions which adhere to the old rule, and scarcely less so in properly estimating those in the jurisdictions which have abandoned it. See infra.

The question was set at rest in England by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 27, authorizing comparison with a writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine to be made by witnesses, and such writings to be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness, or otherwise, of the writing in dispute. Under this act the jury may make comparison with papers relevant or not; 1 F. & F. 270; 2 id. 24; 4 id. 490. The court must determine the genuineness of the document offered for comparison and its decision is appealable; 30 L. T. 223.

The rule of the English courts (prior to this statute) forbidding the admission of documents irrelevant to the matter in issue for the sole purpose of comparison is known as the English rule, and is so referred to by American courts, including those which have and those which have not adopted it.

The objections to permitting comparison of the disputed paper with others conceded to be genuine but admitted for the sole purpose of comparison, which led to the adoption of the English rule, have been thus summarized: "First, that the writings offered for the purpose of comparison with the documents in question might be spurious, and consequently that, before any comparison between them and it could be instituted, a collateral issue must be tried to determine their genuineness. Nor is this all,—if it were competent to prove the genuineness of the main document by comparison with others, it must be equally so to prove that of the latter by comparison with fresh ones; and so the inquiry might go on ad infinitum, to the great distraction of the attention of the jury and delay in the administration of justice. Secondly, that the specimens might not be fairly selected. Thirdly, that the persons composing the jury might be unable to read, and consequently be unable to institute such comparison." Best, Ev. § 238.

The rule was followed, generally, by the federal courts. It was specifically adopted by the supreme court; Moore v. U. S., 91 U. S. 270, 23 L. Ed. 346; Williams v. Conger, 125 U. S. 397, 8 Sup. Ct. 933, 31 L. Ed. 778; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170; Strother v. Lucas, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 763, 8 L. Ed. 573. In the circuit and district court while the rule of the supreme court was generally followed; Green v. Terwilliger, 56 Fed. 384; there is opportunity for some variation, growing out of the frequent necessity in those courts for the administration of local law. Comparison was allowed by both jury and experts in U. S. v. Chamberlain, 12 Blatchf. 390, Fed. Cas. No. 14,778; U. S. v. Molloy, 31 Fed. 19; U. S. v. Pendergast, 32 Fed. 198; contra, U. S. v. Jones, 10 Fed. 469. No comparison was permitted by experts in Murati v. Luciani, 1 Baldw. 49, Fed. Cas. No. 9,936; U. S. v. Craig, 4 Wash. C. C. 729, Fed. Cas. No. 14,883; but it was allowed by the jury with papers otherwise in evidence; Turner v. Hand, 3 Wall. Jr. 88, 115, Fed. Cas. No. 14,257; and with papers offered for comparison, merely; Smith v. Fenner, 1 Gall. 170, Fed. Cas. No. 13,046. In the fourth circuit the supreme court rule was directly followed; U. S. v. McMillan, 29 Fed. 247.

The Act of Congress of Feb. 26, 1913, provides that "where the genuineness of the handwriting of any person may be involved, any admitted or proved handwriting of such person shall be competent evidence as a basis for comparison by witnesses, or by the jury, court or officer conducting such proceeding, to prove or disprove such genuineness."

Many of the state courts have also followed the old English rule, and while permitting comparison by the jury, with papers in evidence in the case, they exclude irrelevant papers; Gibson v. Furniture Co., 96 Ala. 357, 11 South. 365; Miller v. Jones, 32 Ark. 337; Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 340; Bevan v. Bank, 142 Ill. 302, 31 N. E. 679 (contra, Northfield Farmers' Tp. Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Sweet, 46 Ill. App. 598; see Frank v. Taubman, 31 Ill. App. 592; Rogers v. Tyley, 144 Ill. 652, 32 N. E. 393); Stitzel v. Miller, 250 Ill. 72, 95 N. E. 53, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1004, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 412 (with or without expert testimony); Wilson v. Barnard, 10 Ga. App. 98, 72 S. E. 943; Brin v. Gale (Tex.) 135 S. W. 1133; Hawkins v. Grimes, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 257 (see also Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky. 259); Herrick v. Swomley, 56 Md. 439 (a genuine and disputed signature on the same page are not subject to comparison by the jury; Williams v. Drexel, 14 Md. 566); Worth v. McConnell, 42 Mich. 473, 4 N. W. 198; People v. Parker, 67 Mich. 222, 34 N. W. 720, 11 Am. St. Rep. 578 (but in a later case irrelevant papers were admitted which had been shown to the party, denying the signature in dispute, on cross-examination; the court expressly stating that the case was different; Dietz v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 69 Mich. 287, 37 N. W. 220); Davis v. Fredericks, 3 Mont. 262; Staab v. Jaramillo, 3 N. M. 33, 1 Pac. 170; Territory v. O'Hara, 1 N. D. 30, 44 N. W. 1003; Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319; Clay v. Alderson's Adm'r, 10 W. Va. 49; Collins v. Ball, Hutchings & Co., 82 Tex. 259, 17 S. W. 614, 27 Am. St. Rep. 877; but papers otherwise in the case must be admitted or proved to be genuine; State v. Henderson, 29 W. Va. 147, 1 S. E. 225.

It is held that irrelevant papers are not admissible for comparison except when conceded by the opposite party to be genuine, or when he is estopped to deny the genuineness, or when for any reason, not collateral, issue can be raised; Cochrane v. Elevator Co., 20 N. D. 169, 127 N. W. 725.

In some if not all of the states in which the subject is now regulated by statute the prior decisions were in support of this rule; McCafferty v. Heritage, 5 Houst. (Del.) 220: First Nat. Bank of Omaha v. Lierman, 5 Neb. 247 (see Grand Island Banking Co. v. Shoemaker, 31 Neb. 124, 47 N. W. 696); Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 288, 31 Am. Rep. 470; Peck v. Callaghan, 95 N. Y. 73; Clark v. Rhodes, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 206; Wright v. Hessey, 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 42 (but where no objection was interposed signatures admitted to be genuine were given to the jury for comparison; Powers v. McKenzie, 90 Tenn. 167, 16 S. W. 559); Hazleton v. Bank, 32 Wis. 34.

In some states the decisions indicate a tendency to allow comparison by the jury and experts where the genuineness is not denied or is conceded or the party is estopped to deny it. In Missouri earlier decisions excluded irrelevant papers but permitted comparison both by jury and experts with papers otherwise in the case; Dow's Ex'r v. Spenny's Ex'r, 29 Mo. 386; Springer v. Hall, 83 Mo. 693, 53 Am. Rep. 598; and later ones permitted it with other papers as to which no collateral issue could be raised, as if the genuineness was proved or the party was estopped to deny it or if they belonged to the witness who was acquainted with the handwriting in dispute; Lachance v. Loeblein, 15 Mo. App. 460; State v. Clinton, 67 Mo. 380, 29 Am. Rep. 506 (and see Rose v. Bank, 91 Mo. 399, 3 S. W. 876, 60 Am. Rep. 258); and in North Carolina comparison by the jury was not permitted even with papers in the case; Pope v. Askew, 23 N. C. 16, 35 Am. Dec. 729; Otey v. Hoyt, 48 N. C. 407; Fulier v. Fox, 101 N. C. 119, 7 S. E. 589, 9 Am. St. Rep. 27; but it has been allowed by experts with papers admitted to be genuine and otherwise in evidence; Yates v. Yates, 76 N. C. 142; and see State v. De Graff, 113 N. C. 688, 18 S. E. 507.

In Indiana the decisions are conflicting but comparisons are allowed, in most cases both by jury and experts, if the paper is genuine, otherwise by experts alone; Chance v. Road Co., 32 Ind. 472. The later cases allowed comparison by experts as well as by the jury; Swales v. Grubbs, 126 Ind. 106, 25 N. E. 877.

In many states comparison is permitted with genuine documents, without respect to relevancy; and usually when it is allowed at all it may be made by experts as well as by the jury.

There has, however, been some indisposition to permit experts to make the comparison. It has been permitted by the jury and experts; Lyon v. Lyman, 9 Conn. 55; State v. Zimmerman, 47 Kan. 242, 27 Pac. 999; Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 490, 28 Am. Dec. 317; Morrison v. Porter, 35 Minn. 425, 29 N. W. 54, 59 Am. Rep. 331; Koons v. State, 36 Ohio St. 195; Tucker v. Kellogg, 8 Utah 11, 28 Pac. 870; in some cases it has been allowed by the jury; Page v. Homans, 14 Me. 482; Com. v. Andrews, 143 Mass. 23, 8 N. E. 643; Gifford v. Ford, 5 Vt. 532; Carter v. Jackson, 58 N. H. 156; and in others by experts; Woodman v. Dana, 52 Me. 9; Demerritt v. Randall, 116 Mass. 331; Wilson v. Beauchamp, 50 Miss. 24; State v. Hastings, 53 N. H. 452; State v. Clark, 54 N. H. 456 (after much fluctuation); Hanriot v. Sherwood, 82 Va. 1; Marshall v. Hancock, 80 Cal. 82, 22 Pac. 61; but it was not permitted with a press copy of a disputed writing, though semble that the original might have been used; Spottiswood v. Weir, 66 Cal. 525, 6 Pac. 381. The signatures used for comparison must be genuine; Tyler v. Todd, 36 Conn. 218.

In Pennsylvania and South Carolina until the act passed in the former state, infra, the decisions were substantially in accord. When there was conflicting direct evidence, only the jury might make comparison with papers duly proved; Farmers' Bank of Lancaster v. Whitehill, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 110; Rockey's Estate, 155 Pa. 453, 26 Atl. 656; Robertson v. Millar, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 120; Richardson v. Johnson, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 51. The evidence of genuineness of a paper offered for comparison must be conclusive; Cohen v. Teller, 93 Pa. 123; and comparison could only be made by witnesses acquainted with the party's writing; Philadelphia & W. C. R. Co. v. Hickman, 28 Pa. 318. In criminal cases expert testimony is allowed; Pennsylvania act of 1860, March 31, § 55, P. L. 284.

A statute of Pennsylvania (1895, May 15, P. L. 69), codifying the law on this subject, enacts, (1) That the opinion of those acquainted with the handwriting of the supposed writer, and of experts, shall be deemed relevant; (2) That experts may compare the disputed writing with others admitted or proved to the judge's satisfaction to be genuine; (3) That experts may be required by counsel to state in full the ground of their opinions; (4) That the question shall still be one entirely for the jury; and (5) That the act shall apply to all courts and all persons having authority to receive evidence.

In several states, including some in which the courts had adhered to the English rule, the question has been settled by statute permitting the comparison of handwriting. Among the states which have legislated upon the subject are California, Delaware, Georgia, Iowa, Louisiana, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Tennessee, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania as above stated. The most common form of such statutes is to authorize comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the court to be genuine, to be made by a witness and to permit the submission of such writings and evidence of witnesses respecting the same, to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute. The tendency in the United States is in the direction of the rule established under these statutes. It is not within the present purpose to state all the decisions or to indicate the exact condition of the law in the several states.

Under a statute providing that "evidence respecting the handwriting may also be given by comparison, made by a witness skilled in such matters, or the jury, with writings admitted or treated as genuine, by the party against whom the evidence is offered" papers not otherwise competent are admissible for the purpose of enabling the jury to make a comparison; Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 13 Sup. Ct. 288, 37 L. Ed. 118; Green v. Terwilliger, 56 Fed. 384.

Prior to the statute of 17 and 18 Vict. already cited, the English rule as to comparison was subject to certain exceptions which have been said to be as well settled as the rule itself; Bradley, J., in Moore v. U. S., 91 U. S. 270, 23 L. Ed. 346; one of these was the admission of ancient writings; see supra; the other is that if a paper admitted to be in the handwriting of the person in question is in evidence for some other purpose in the cause, the signature in question may be compared with it by the jury. This is a settled rule of the American courts, including those which adhere to the English rule against comparison as well as those which, either under statute or decision, admit it; id; Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 288, 31 Am. Rep. 470; State v. De Graff, 113 N. C. 688, 18 S. E. 507; Swales v. Grubbs, 126 Ind. 106, 25 N. E. 877; Rogers v. Tyley, 144 Ill. 652, 32 N. E. 393; Johnston Harvester Co. v. Miller, 72 Mich. 265, 40 N. W. 429, 16 Am. St. Rep. 536; State v. Farrington, 90 Ia. 673, 57 N. W. 606; Green v. Terwilliger, 56 Fed. 384; Williams v. Conger, 125 U. S. 397, 414, 8 Sup. Ct. 933, 31 L. Ed. 778; Hickory v. U. S. 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170.

A writing specially prepared for the purpose of comparison is inadmissible on a question of genuineness; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170. A party cannot himself write specimens for the instruction of witnesses; Whart. Ev. § 715; nor can he make test writings to be used for a comparison of hands; King v. Donahue, 110 Mass. 155, 14 Am. Rep. 589; Gulzoni v. Tyler, 64 Cal. 334, 30 Pac. 981; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170.

In England, by statute, a person whose handwriting is in dispute, may be called upon by the judge to write in his presence, and such writing may be compared with the writing in question; Whart. Ev. § 706. See 4 F. & F. 490; Chandler v. Le Barron, 45 Me. 534, contra, Smith v. King, 62 Conn. 515, 26 Atl. 1059.

On cross-examination, other writings not in the case may be shown to the witness, and he may be asked whether they are in the handwriting of the party in question; if so declared by the witness, they may be shown not to be genuine and given to the jury for comparison; Whart. Ev. § 710; see 11 Ad. & E. 322.

Experts may be permitted to testify as to whether handwriting is natural or feigned; Burkholder's Ex'r v. Plank, 69 Pa. 225; Demerritt v. Randall, 116 Mass. 331; Jones v. Finch, 37 Miss. 461, 75 Am. Dec. 73; as to the nature of the ink used; Fulton v. Hood, 34 Pa. 365, 75 Am. Dec. 664; whether the whole of an instrument was written by the same person, at the same time, and with the same pen and ink; Fulton v. Hood, 34 Pa. 365, 75 Am. Dec. 664; President, etc., of Quinsigamond Bank v. Hobbs, 11 Gray (Mass.) 250; Mallory v. Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 112, 51 N. W. 188; whether the figures in a check have been altered; Nelson v. Johnson, 18 Ind. 329; see Hunt v. Lawless, 7 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 113; Pearson & Co. v. McDaniel, 62 Ga. 100; Williams v. State, 61 Ala. 33; State v. Miller, 47 Wis. 530, 3 N. W. 31; Tome v. R. Co., 39 Md. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 540.

An expert witness need not be a professional; Benedict v. Flanigan, 18 S. C. 506, 44 Am. Rep. 583; a merchant and dealer in commercial paper is by his vocation qualified to some extent to testify as to the genuineness of a signature to a note; Edmonston v. Henry, 45 Mo. App. 346. But the value of expert testimony as to handwriting, is to be determined by his opportunity and circumstances. If an illiterate man seldom brought by his business into familiarity with handwriting, his opinion is entitled to much less weight than if educated and accustomed to correspondence, and seeing people write; U. S. v. Gleason, 37 Fed. 331.

The jury are not bound by expert evidence further than it accords with their own opinions or than they think it is to be credited; U. S. v. Molloy, 31 Fed. 19; proof of a genuine signature to a document whose authenticity is denied casts upon the opposite party the burden of showing that the writing above the signature was forged; Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 37 L. Ed. 1093.

On a question of the genuineness of the signatures of makers of an accommodation note, testimony of an expert that the ordinary handwriting of the nominal payee, as shown in letters, was such as to convince him that the payee could not successfully imitate the handwriting of one of the witnesses as easily as that of one of the makers of the note, though possibly irrelevant, is unimportant and its admission is not ground for reversal; Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 13 Sup. Ct. 288, 37 L. Ed. 118.

Where two signatures are exactly alike, it is evidence that one was produced from the other, or both from a third; Stitzel v. Miller, 250 Ill. 72, 95 N. E. 53, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1004, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 412.

In In re Corcoran's Will, 145 App. Div. 129, 129 N. Y. Supp. 165, it was held that expert evidence of an ordinary mark signature is inadmissible.

Forgeries of handwriting, and paper and ink to imitate various degrees of age, are so skilfully made, that examination and comparison, even by so-called experts, in the way heretofore usual in courts of justice, are often inadequate and misleading. A scientific use of the microscope, photography, and chemical agents, will generally prove a much surer means of discovering truth. See Dr. Frazer's Manual of the Study of Documents. HANGING. Death by the halter, or the suspending of a criminal, condemned to suffer death, by the neck, until life is extinct. A mode of capital punishment.

In Old English Law. Pending; as hanging the process. Co. Litt. 13a, 266a. Remaining undetermined. 1 Show. 77.

HANGED, DRAWN AND QUARTERED. A method of executing traitors in England, said to have been introduced in 1241. The traitor was carried on a sled, or hurdle to the gallows (formerly dragged there tied to the tail of a horse); hanged till half dead and then cut down; his entrails cut out and burnt; his head cut off and his body to be divided into quarters, which, with his head, were hung in some public place. In practice the executioner usually cut out the heart and held it up to view. See Andrews, Old Time Punishments. See CRIMES; CAPITAL PUNISHMENT; EXECUTION; 1 Eng. Rep. 87.

HANGING IN CHAINS. An ancient English practice of hanging a murderer, after execution, upon a gibbet, in chains, near the place where the murder was committed. Its legality was declared by acts in 1751 and 1828. Abolished in 1834.

HANGMAN. An executioner. The name usually given to a man employed by the sheriff to put a man to death, according to law, in pursuance of a judgment of a competent court and lawful warrant.

HANGWITE (from Saxon hangian, to hang, and wite, fine). A fine, in Saxon law, for illegal hanging of a thief, or for allowing him to escape. Immunity from such fine. Du Cange.

HANIG. Some customary labor to be performed. Holthouse.

HANSE. A commercial confederacy for the good ordering and protection of the commerce of its members. An imposition upon merchandise. Du Cange, Hansa. Hansa is a German term, meaning society (societas), Jacob; and Hanse is an old Gothic word, id.

HANSEATIC LEAGUE. A number of towns in Europe which joined in a league for mutual protection of commerce as early as the twelfth century.

Associated action and partial union between certain North German towns can be traced to the 13th century. In 1241 Lübeck and Hamburg agreed to safeguard the passage between the Baltic and North Sea. During the following century, the Saxon towns were joining to protect their common interests; and town confederacies both in North and South Germany became considerable. The formation was more economic than political. The expansion of trade extended from lower Rhine to Flanders and to England. In the 13th century Lübeck was the center of this movement. The merchants of Cologne at one period possessed a gild-hall in London and formed a "Hansa" with the right of admitting other German merchants.

The years 1356 to 1377 mark the zenith of the league's power. In 1380 Lübeck declared that "whatever touches one town touches all." But the facts are said hardly to have warranted the declaration, and in the next century it became less and less true. Lübeck's headship was accepted in 1418. The governing body (Hansetage) met there. The league gradually declined till, in 1669, the last general assembly was held and Lübeck, Hamburg and Bremen were left alone to preserve the name and small inheritance of the "Hansa" which, in Germany's political disunion, had upheld the honor of her commerce. Their buildings were sold—at London in 1852 and Antwerp in 1863. See Encycl. Br.

Hamburg and Bremen were incorporated into the German Zoll-Verein in 1888, and Lübeck some years previously, and are now, in substance, free cities or states constituting part of the German Empire. See Zimmern, The Hansa Towns. See CODE.

HANSGRAVE. The head officer of a company or corporation.

HANTELODE (German hant, a bond, and load, laid.). An arrest. Du Cange; Toml.; Holthouse.

HAP. To catch. Thus "hap the rent," "hap the deep-poll," were formerly used. Tech. Dict.

HAPPINESS. The "pursuit of happiness," as used in the Declaration of Independence is said to be the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase one's prosperity, or develop one's faculties, so as to give to one his highest enjoyment. Butchers' Union, S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U. S. 757, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585.

HARBINGER. An officer of the king's household. Toml.

HARBOR (Sax. here-berga, station for an army). A place where ships may ride with safety; any navigable water protected by the surrounding country; a haven. It is public property.

Harbor is to be distinguished from "port," which has a reference to the delivery of cargo. See 7 M. & G. 870; Martin v. Hilton, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 371; 2 B. & Ald. 460. Thus, we have the "said harbor, basin, and docks of the port of Hull." 2 B. & Ald. 60. But they are generally used as synonymous. Webster, Dict.

In the United States the control of harbors and regulation of dock lines and the like is exercised by the states, although under the power to regulate commerce the federal government annually expends large sums of money in the improvement of navigation in harbors and other navigable waters.

A state may enact police regulations for the conduct of shipping in any of its harbors; Vanderbilt v. Adams, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 351; Cooley, Const. Lim. 730; and congress has full power to make regulations on the same subject; Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 12 How. (U. S.) 299, 13 L. Ed. 996; Barnaby v. State, 21 Ind. 450; Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 450, 17 L. Ed. 805; Cisco v. Roberts, 36 N. Y. 292. A statute passed for the protection of a harbor, which forbids the removal of stone, gravel, and sand from the beach, is constitutional; Com. v. Tewksbury, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 55; and the United States has the authority to make a contract for the removal of rock from a harbor; Benner v. Dredging Co., 134 N. Y. 156, 31 N. E. 328, 17 L. R. A. 220, 30 Am. St. Rep. 649.

New harbor lines may be established without further legislative authority, and such establishment is a practical discontinuance of the old lines; Farist Steel Co. v. City of Bridgeport, 60 Conn. 278, 22 Atl. 561, 13 L. R. A. 590. The state board of harbor commissioners has power to establish harbor lines in front of towns; State v. Board of Com'rs, 4 Wash. 6, 29 Pac. 938; and an act which provides for the disestablishment of such lines is contrary to the state constitution and void; Wilson v. Board of Com'rs, 13 Wash. 65, 42 Pac. 524; such an act on the part of such commissioners does not deprive a riparian owner of the right of access to his land, but merely determines the line to which he may fill without encroaching on public rights; Sherman v. Sherman, 18 R. I. 504, 30 Atl. 459. The mere establishment of general harbor lines by such commissioners is not of itself an injury or a taking of the property and cannot be enjoined; Prosser v. R. Co., 152 U. S. 59, 14 Sup. Ct. 528, 38 L. Ed. 352. The authority to make improvements in harbors implies the power to employ all necessary means thereto; Bateman v. Colgan, 111 Cal. 580, 44 Pac. 238.

In England, as well as Scotland, the right to erect and hold ports and havens is vested in the crown; though a subject may have such right by charter, grant, or prescription, but in all cases charged with the right of the public to use it. In England such grantee is bound to repair, but in Scotland only to the extent of the dues received.

The insufficiency of the common-law power led to an extended course of legislation for the control of ports and harbors, through what is known in Great Britain as the harbor authority, which is vested in commissioners or bodies corporate or otherwise. Such bodies are charged with the duty of general supervision of the construction, extension, improvement, and lighting of the harbor and collection of dues therefrom. The general consolidation act of 10 Vict. c. 271, defined these duties and powers in detail as did the general act of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 47, supplemented by various local acts.

In Torts. To receive clandestinely or without lawful authority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that another having a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same. Van Metre v. Mitchell, 2 Wall. Jr. 317, Fed. Cas. No. 16,865. For example, the harboring of a wife or an apprentice in order to deprive the husband or the master of them; or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly; Poll. Torts 275; Wood v. Gale, 10 N. H. 247, 34 Am. Dec. 150; Eells v. People, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 498.

It may be aptly used to describe the furnishing of shelter, lodging, or food clandestinely or with concealment, and under certain circumstances, may be equally applicable to those acts divested of any accompanying secrecy; U. S. v. Grant, 55 Fed. 415.

The harboring of such persons will subject the harborer to an action for the injury; but, in order to put him completely in the wrong, a demand should be made for their restoration, for in cases where the harborer has not committed any other wrong than merely receiving the plaintiff's wife, child, or apprentice, he may be under no obligation to return them without a demand; 1 Chit. Pr. 564; Dark v. Marsh, 4 N. C. 228; Jones v. Van Zandt, 5 How. (U. S.) 215, 227, 12 L. Ed. 122. See ENTICE.

HARD CASES. A phrase used to indicate decisions which, to meet a case of hardship to a party, are not entirely consonant with the true principle of the law. It is said of such: Hard cases make bad law. Hard cases must not make bad equity any more than bad law; Moore v. Pierson, 6 Ia. 279, 71 Am. Dec. 409.

HARD LABOR. In those states where the penitentiary system has been adopted, convicts who are to be imprisoned, as part of their punishment, are sentenced to perform hard labor. This labor is not greater than many freemen perform voluntarily, and the quantity required to be performed is not at all unreasonable. In the penitentiaries of Pennsylvania it consists in being employed in weaving, shoemaking, and such like employment.

Hard labor is not of itself a cruel or unusual punishment; Durham v. State, 89 Tenn. 723, 18 S. W. 74; Pervear v. Massachusetts, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 476, 18 L. Ed. 608; O'Neil v. Com., 165 Mass. 446, 43 N. E. 183. It was held unauthorized where imposed to enforce the payment of a fine; Ex parte Arras, 78 Cal. 304, 20 Pac. 683; and unconstitutional where imposed for carrying a deadly weapon; State v. Williams, 40 S. C. 373, 19 S. E. 5.

Hard labor was first introduced in English prisons in 1706. By the Prison Act of 1865, it is divided into two classes, one for males above sixteen years old the other for males below that age and females; Moz. & W.

See PUNISHMENT.

HARDSHIP. See HARD CASES.

HARIOT. The same as heriot (q. v.). Cowell; Termes de la Ley. Sometimes spelled Harriott; Wms. Seis. 203.

HARMONIZE. Though not strictly synonymous with the word "reconcile," it is not improperly used by a court in instructing the jury that it is their duty to "harmonize" conflicting evidence if possible. Holdridge v. Lee, 3 S. D. 134, 52 N. W. 265.

HARNESS. The defensive armor of a soldier or knight. All warlike instruments. Hovend. 725. In modern poetical sense a suit of armor. The term is sometimes used to denote the trappings of a war-horse.

Harness was the early name for body armor of all kinds. Modern writers have tried to discriminate between harness as the armor of the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, and armor as confined to the plate suits of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries; but armor is the modern English word for defensive garments of all sorts, and harness in this sense, is a poetical archaism. Cent. Dict.

The tackle or furniture of a ship.

HARO, HARRON. An outcry, or hue and cry, after felons and malefactors. Cowell. The original of the clamour de haro comes from the Normans. Moz. & W.

HART. A stag or male deer of the forest five years old complete.

HARTER ACT. A name commonly applied to the act of congress of February 13, 1893. It provides (§ 1) that agreements in a bill of lading relieving the owner, etc., of a vessel sailing between the United States and foreign ports, from liability for negligence or fault in proper loading, storage, custody, care, or delivery of merchandise, are void; (§ 2) that no bill of lading shall contain any agreement whereby the obligations of the owner to exercise due diligence, properly equip, man, provision and outfit a vessel and make it seaworthy, and whereby the obligations of the master, etc., carefully to handle, store, care for and deliver the cargo, are in any way lessened, weakened or avoided; (§ 3) that if the owner shall exercise due diligence to make such vessel in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped and supplied, neither the vessel nor her owners, etc., shall be liable for loss resulting from faults or errors in navigation or management, nor for losses arising from dangers of the sea, acts of God, or public enemies, or the inherent defect of the thing carried, or insufficiency of package, or seizure under legal process, or any act or omission of the shipper of the goods, or from saving or attempting to save life at sea, or deviation in rendering such service.

The act was the outgrowth of attempts made in recent years to limit as far as possible the liability of the vessel and her owners, by inserting in bills of lading stipulations against losses arising from unseaworthiness, bad stowage and negligence in navigation, and other forms of liability which have been held by the courts of England if not of this country to be valid as contracts even when they exempted the ship from the consequences of her own negligence. As decisions were made by the courts from time to time holding the vessel for non-excepted liabilities, new clauses were inserted in the bills of lading to meet these decisions until the common law responsibilities of carriers by sea had been frittered away to such an extent that several of the leading commercial associations both in this country and in England had suggested amendments to the maritime law in line with those embodied in the Harter Act; The Delaware, 161 U. S. 459, 16 Sup. Ct. 516, 40 L. Ed. 771.

Before the passage of the Harter Act, it was the settled law that in the absence of special contract there was a warranty upon the part of the ship-owner that the ship was seaworthy at the beginning of the voyage. The warranty was absolute and did not depend upon the knowledge of the owner or the diligence of his efforts to provide a seaworthy vessel; The Caledonia, 157 U. S. 124, 15 Sup. Ct. 537, 39 L. Ed. 644; The Irrawaddy, 171 U. S. 187, 18 Sup. Ct. 831, 43 L. Ed. 130; after its passage the act became the rule for cases within its terms; The Southwark, 191 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 1, 48 L. Ed. 65. The act applies only to questions arising between the vessel and shippers of cargo on board of her, and does not apply to cases of damage to cargo on another vessel; The Delaware, 161 U. S. 459, 16 Sup. Ct. 516, 40 L. Ed. 771; The Viola, 59 Fed. 632; id., 60 Fed. 296; The Berkshire, 59 Fed. 1007. It does not apply to stowage; The Palmas, 108 Fed. 87, 47 C. C. A. 220, nor to passengers' claims for loss of baggage; The Rosedale, 88 Fed. 324; The Kensington, 88 Fed. 331; nor to claims for personal injuries; Moses v. Packet Co., 88 Fed. 329; but it is intended to relieve the shipowner who has done all that he can do to start off a well-fitted expedition, from liability for damages caused by faults or errors of his shipment after his ship has gone below the horizon and away from his personal observation; Bened. Adm. (4th ed.) 174. See SHIP; VESSEL.

HASP AND STAPLE. A mode of entry in Scotland by which a bailee declared a person heir on evidence brought before himself, at the same time delivering the property over to him by the hasp and staple of the door, which was the symbol of possession. Bell; Ersk. Pr. 433.

HASPA. In Old English Law. A name anciently given to the hasp of a door, which was often used in giving livery of seisin of premises which included a house. Spelman.

HASTA (Lat.). A spear which in Roman law was the sign of an auction sale. Hasta subjicere, to put under the spear, like the modern phrase put under the hammer signified put up at auction. Calv. Lex.

In feudal law it was the symbol of the investiture of a fee. Lib. Feud. 2, 2.

HAT MONEY. Primage: a small duty paid to the captain and mariners of a ship.

HAUBER. A great baron or lord. Spel. Gloss.

HAUGH, or HOUGH. Low-lying rich lands, lands which are occasionally overflowed. Encyc. Dict.

HAUL. In an indictment for larceny this word is a sufficient substitute for carry, in the statutory phrase steal, take and carry away, being in the sense used equivalent to it. Spittorff v. State, 108 Ind. 171, 8 N. E. 911.

HAUR. In the laws of William the Conqueror, hatred. Toml.

HAUSTUS (Lat. from haurire, to draw). In Civil Law. The right of drawing water, and the right of way to the place of drawing. L. 1, D. de Servit. Præd. Rustic.; Fleta, l. 4, c. 27, § 9.

HAUT CHEMIN (L. Fr.). Highway. Yearb. M. 4 Hen. VI. 4.

HAUT ESTRET (L. Fr.). High street; highway. Yearb. P. 11 Hen. VI. 2.

HAUTHONER. A man armed with a coat of mail. Jac. L. Dict.

HAVE. See HABENDUM; HABE.

HAVEN. A place calculated for the reception of ships, and so situated, in regard to the surrounding land, that the vessel may ride at anchor in it in safety. Hale, de Port. Mar. c. 2; Chitty, Com. Law 2; 15 East 304, 305. See CREEK; PORT; HARBOR; ARM OF THE SEA.

HAW. A small parcel of land so called in Kent; houses. Cowell.

HAWAII. A territory of the United States. It consists of a group of islands in the Pacific Ocean about one thousand five hundred miles from the western coast of California. A republic was proclaimed and a new constitution promulgated July 4, 1894, succeeding a provisional government formed in January, 1893. By this constitution the president of the republic was empowered to "make a treaty of political or commercial union with the United States." A treaty of annexation was concluded at Washington, June 16, 1897. Congress, by joint resolution approved July 7, 1898, accepted the cession of Hawaii and incorporated it with the Union. "An act to provide a government for the territory of Hawaii" was passed April 30, 1900, and went into effect June 14, 1900. It provided that the laws of Hawaii, not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States, or the provisions of the act, should remain in force, subject to repeal or amendment.

The territory forms a part of the ninth federal circuit. It is a federal district with two district judges. The territorial courts are a supreme court with three judges, circuit courts in five judicial districts, and district courts.

As to the laws governing Hawaii, it is enough to refer to the organic act of April 30, 1900, to ascertain the body of private rights governing that territory; Kawananakoa v. Polyblank, 205 U. S. 354, 27 Sup. Ct. 526, 51 L. Ed. 834.

HAWBERK or HAWBERT. A shirt of mail. Moz. & W. See FIEF D'HAUBERK.

HAWKER. An itinerant or travelling trader, who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale and sells them in a fixed place of business. Superadded to this, though perhaps not essential, is generally understood one who not only carries goods for sale, but seeks for purchasers, either by outcry, which some lexicographers conceive as intimated by the derivation of the word, or by attracting notice and attention to them, as goods for sale, by an actual exhibition or exposure of them by placards or labels, or by a conventional signal, like the sound of a horn for the sale of fish; Com. v. Ober, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 495. To prevent imposition, hawkers are generally required to take out licenses, under regulations established by the local laws of the states. See City of Duluth v. Krupp, 46 Minn. 435, 49 N. W. 235; and these laws have generally been held to be constitutional; Borough of Warren v. Geer, 117 Pa. 207, 11 Atl. 415; Seymour v. State, 51 Ala. 52; City of Huntington v. Cheesbro, 57 Ind. 74; PEDDLER. One who goes about a village carrying samples and taking orders for a non-resident firm is not a hawker or peddler; Village of Cerro Gordo v. Rawlings, 135 Ill. 36, 25 N. E. 1006. It is termed Hawking. See Graffty v. City of Rushville, 107 Ind. 505, 8 N. E. 609, 57 Am. Rep. 128.

HAYBOTE (from haye, hedge, and bote, compensation). Hedgebote: one of the estovers allowed a tenant for life or for years; namely, material to repair hedges or fences, or to make necessary farming utensils. 2 Bla. Com. 35; 1 Washb. R. P. 99.

HAYWARD (from haye, hedge, and ward, keeping). In Old English Law. An officer appointed in the lord's court to keep a common herd of cattle of a town: so called because he was to see that they did not break or injure the hedges of inclosed grounds. His duty was also to impound trespassing cattle, and to guard against pound-breaches. Kitch. 46; Cowell.

HAZAR-ZAMIN. A bail or surety for the personal attendance of another. Moz. & W.

HAZARD. An unlawful game of dice. Hazardor. One who plays at it. Jac. L. Dict.

HAZARDOUS. Risky; perilous; involving hazard or special danger. See next title.

HAZARDOUS CONTRACT. A contract in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event. La. Civ. Code, art. 1769. See MARITIME LOAN.

In a fire insurance policy, the terms "hazardous," "extra hazardous," "specially hazardous," and "not hazardous," are well understood technical terms, having distinct meanings. A policy covering only goods "hazardous" and "not hazardous" cannot be made to cover goods or merchandise "extra hazardous" or "specially hazardous;" Pindar v. Ins. Co., 38 N. Y. 364.

On the other hand, it has been held that "hazardous" and "extra hazardous" are terms having no technical meaning, but are to be taken in their popular sense of dangerous and extra dangerous; Russell v. Ins. Co., 50 Minn. 409, 52 N. W. 906. See RISKS AND PERILS.

HE. Properly a pronoun of the masculine gender, but usually construed in statutes to include both sexes and corporations. Where in a written instrument, a person, whose name was designated by an initial is referred to as "he," it is not conclusive that such person is a man, but the contrary may be shown by parol; Berniaud v. Beecher, 71 Cal. 38, 11 Pac. 802. See HIS.

HEAD. The principal source of a stream. Webst. Dict. The head of a creek will be taken to mean the head of its longest branch, unless there be forcible evidence of common reputation to the contrary; Davis v. Bryant, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 112.

The principal person or chief of any organization, corporation, or firm.

HEAD OF A FAMILY. Householder, one who provides for a family. Bowne v. Witt, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 476. There must be the relation of father and child, or husband and wife; Bachman v. Crawford, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 216, 39 Am. Dec. 163; Sallee v. Waters, 17 Ala. 486; contra, Wade v. Jones, 20 Mo. 75, 61 Am. Dec. 584; Marsh v. Lazenby, 41 Ga. 153. Where a husband and wife reside together, he is the "head of the family"; Yarborough v. State, 86 Ga. 397, 12 S. E. 650. The father being dead, the mother is the head of the family; Burrell Tp. v. Pittsburg Guardians of Poor, 62 Pa. 475, 1 Am. Rep. 441. See Inhabitants of Dedham v. Inhabitants of Natick, 16 Mass. 135; Lathrop v. Bldg. Ass'n, 45 Ga. 483. See FAMILY; HOMESTEAD.

HEAD-LAND. In Old English Law. A narrow piece of unploughed land left at the end of a ploughed field for the turning of the plough. Called, also, butt. Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. 587; 2 Leon. 70, case 93; 1 Litt. 13.

HEAD MONEY. A name popularly applied to a tax on aliens landing in the United States under U. S. Rev. Stat. 1 Supp. 370. Such tax by a state is unconstitutional; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. Ed. 543; but as a federal regulation of commerce it is valid; Edye v. Robertson, 112 U. S. 580, 5 Sup. Ct. 247, 28 L. Ed. 798. The act of March 3, 1903, fixed the tax at two dollars for each immigrant. See IMMIGRATION.

HEAD-NOTE. The syllabus of a reported case.

HEAD-PENCE. An exaction of 40*d.* or more, collected by the sheriff of Northumberland from the people of that county twice in every seven years, without account to the king. Abolished by 23 Hen. VI. c. 6, in 1444. Cowell.

HEAD-SILVER. A name sometimes given to a Common Fine (q. v.). By a payment of a certain sum of money to the lord, litigants might try their suits nearer home. Blount.

HEADBOROUGH. In English Law. An officer who was formerly the chief officer in a borough, who is now subordinate to the constable. Originally the chief of the tithing, or frank pledge. St. Armand, Leg. Power of Eng. 88. See DECENNARY.

HEAFODWEARD. A service rendered by a thane or a geneath or villein, the precise nature of which is unknown. Anc. Eng. Inst.

HEALGEMOTE. Halimote (q. v.).

HEALSFANG (from Germ. hals, neck, fangen, to catch). A sort of pillory, by which the head of the culprit was caught between two boards, as feet are caught in a pair of stocks.

"The fine which every man would have to pay in commutation of this punishment, had it been in use,"—for it was very early disused, no mention of it occurring in the laws of the Saxon kings. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Gloss; Spelman, Gloss.

HEALTH. Freedom from pain or sickness; the most perfect state of animal life. It may be defined as the natural agreement and concordant disposition of the parts of the living body.

By the act of March 3, 1879, R. S. Suppl. 480, enforced by subsequent acts, a National Board of Health was established, to consist of seven members appointed by the president, and of four members detailed from the departments, whose duties shall be to obtain information upon all matters affecting the public health, to advise the heads of departments and state executives, to make necessary investigations at any places in the United States, or at foreign ports, and to make rules guarding against the introduction of contagious diseases into the country, and their spread from state to state. See Dunwoody v. U. S., 143 U. S. 578, 12 Sup. Ct. 465, 36 L. Ed. 269.

By act of May 29, 1884, the bureau of animal industry was established, having for its object the protection of cattle from contagious diseases, etc. By act of Feb. 2, 1903, the suppression of contagious diseases of cattle and other live stock was transferred from the treasury department to the department of agriculture (bureau of animal industry).

A state board of health is a tribunal constituted by law, having the authority conferred on it by law and no other authority. The legislature may provide for the punishment of acts in resistance to or in violation of the authority conferred upon such subordinate tribunal or board. When such boards duly adopt rules or by-laws by virtue of legislative authority such rules and by-laws, within the respective jurisdiction have the force and effect of a law of the legislature, and like an ordinance or by-law of a municipal corporation they may be said to be in force by the authority of the state; Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 121, 56 N. E. 89, 50 L. R. A. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195; Com. v. Sisson, 189 Mass. 247, 75 N. E. 619, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 752, 109 Am. St. Rep. 630; Com. v. Pear, 183 Mass. 242, 66 N. E. 719, 67 L. R. A. 935; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765. To invest such a body with authority over public health is not an unusual nor unreasonable or arbitrary requirement; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765 (compulsory vaccination).

A statute prescribing punishment for violation of a regulation of a state board of health is not unconstitutional on the theory that legislative power to create crimes is thereby delegated to such board; Pierce v. Doolittle, 130 Ia. 333, 106 N. W. 751, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 143. See a note in 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 143.

County boards of health are held to be corporate bodies invested by statute with functions of a public nature to be exercised for the public benefit. They are not liable in an action for tort for damages in the performance of an official duty; Forbes v. Board of Health, 28 Fla. 26, 9 South. 862, 13 L. R. A. 549. They are not liable for mere errors of judgment; Raymond v. Fish, 51 Conn. 80, 50 Am. Rep. 3; Seavey v. Preble, 64 Me. 120; Whidden v. Cheever, 69 N. H. 142, 44 Atl. 908, 76 Am. St. Rep. 154; Campagnie Francaise De Navigation v. Board of Health, 51 La. Ann. 645, 25 South. 591, 56 L. R. A. 795, 72 Am. St. Rep. 458; Rohn v. Osmun, 143 Mich. 68, 106 N. W. 697, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 635. But for the acts done in excess of their authority they can be held liable; People v. Board of Health, 140 N. Y. 1, 35 N. E. 320, 23 L. R. A. 181, 37 Am. St. Rep. 522; Lowe v. Conroy, 120 Wis. 151, 97 N. W. 942, 66 L. R. A. 907, 102 Am. St. Rep. 983, 1 Ann. Cas. 341; Pearson v. Zehr, 138 Ill. 48, 29 N. E. 854, 32 Am. St. Rep. 113; Hersey v. Chapin, 162 Mass. 176, 38 N. E. 442.

Public policy requires that health officers be undisturbed in the exercise of their powers, unless clearly transcending their authority; Hart v. Mayor, etc., 3 Paige (N. Y.) 218; 1 Dill. § 369; but in so acting such officers must not interfere with the natural right of individuals; State v. Speyer, 67 Vt. 502; the people "shall be secure in their persons and homes from unreasonable searches and seizures"; Eddy v. Board of Health, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 94; Butterfoss v. State, 40 N. J. Eq. 325. See In re Smith, 146 N. Y. 68, 40 N. E. 497, 28 L. R. A. 820, 48 Am. St. Rep. 769, which case, overruling id., 84 Hun 465, 32 N. Y. Supp. 317, held that health officers may not quarantine persons refusing to be vaccinated when small-pox is imminent. A court of chancery can only interfere with the trustees of a sanitary district where such trustees have acted in violation of the law or in a fraudulent manner; Johnson v. Sanitary Dist., 58 Ill. App. 306.

Where the action of a board of health is fraudulent, clearly oppressive or grossly abusive, equity may intervene and exercise its inherent power to prevent such abuse.

An injunction was granted to restrain the board of health of San Francisco from inoculating the Chinese residents with bubonic plague serum; Wong Wai v. Williamson, 103 Fed. 1; from removing tenants and closing up houses, where it was not justified by the actual existence of a contagious disease; Eddy v. Board of Health, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 94; from using property as a hospital for the care of a person afflicted with leprosy; Baltimore City v. Improvement Co., 87 Md. 352, 39 Atl. 1087, 40 L. R. A. 494, 67 Am. St. Rep. 344; from sending to an unsanitary pest house one who suffered from a form of leprosy which is very slightly contagious, where quarantine in her own home could be made a complete protection for the public; Kirk

v. Board of Health, 83 S. C. 372, 65 S. E. 387, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1188.

It is the duty of a landowner so to keep his property that no menace to the public health shall come therefrom. A city may fill up low-lying lands and recover the cost thereof; Charleston v. Werner, 38 S. C. 488, 17 S. E. 33, 37 Am. St. Rep. 776; City of Rochester v. Simpson, 134 N. Y. 414, 31 N. E. 871; Nickerson v. Boston, 131 Mass. 306; Bowles v. Aberdeen, 58 Wash. 535, 109 Pac. 369, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 709. The health department may prohibit the owner of tenement buildings unfit for habitation and dangerous to health from renting them; Health Dept. v. Dassori, 21 App. Div. 348, 47 N. Y. Supp. 641. A statute requiring the installation of water-closets in tenement houses in place of sinks was sustained; Tenement House Dept. v. Moeschen, 179 N. Y. 325, 72 N. E. 231, 70 L. R. A. 704, 103 Am. St. Rep. 910, 1 Ann. Cas. 439, affirmed without opinion in 203 U. S. 583, 27 Sup. Ct. 781, 51 L. Ed. 328. Health authorities may order persons to abate nuisances created by filthy hog pens; Board of Health of Raritan Tp. v. Henzler (N. J.) 41 Atl. 228; and may order owners of property on streets having sewers to connect therewith; Harrington v. Board of Aldermen, 20 R. I. 233, 38 Atl. 1, 38 L. R. A. 305.

A state board of health may forbid a municipality to discharge sewage into a stream which is a source of water supply; Miles City v. State Board of Health, 39 Mont. 405, 102 Pac. 696, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 589; the city can have no prescriptive right to pollute such a stream; Platt v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 45 Atl. 154, 48 L. R. A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335; Owens v. City of Lancaster, 182 Pa. 257, 37 Atl. 858; Miles City v. Board of Health, 39 Mont. 405, 102 Pac. 696, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 589.

A city is not bound to make a chemical analysis of the water of free public wells for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is wholesome; Danaher v. City of Brooklyn, 119 N. Y. 241, 23 N. E. 745, 7 L. R. A. 592.

The regulation and maintenance of tenement lodging and boarding houses is a proper subject of legislative regulation for the benefit of the public health, but the degree of regulation permissible varies greatly according to circumstances; Bonnett v. Vallier, 136 Wis. 193, 116 N. W. 885, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1061. While health authorities have the power to abate nuisances, the owner has usually the right to do so in his own way; Eckhardt v. City of Buffalo, 19 App. Div. 1, 46 N. Y. Supp. 204, affirmed in id., 156 N. Y. 658, 50 N. E. 1116; Philadelphia v. Trust Co., 132 Pa. 224, 18 Atl. 1114; Durgin v. Minot, 203 Mass. 26, 89 N. E. 144, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 241, 133 Am. St. Rep. 276. And property not in itself a nuisance may not be destroyed unless such destruction is necessary to protect the public; Shepard v. People, 40 Mich. 487; Health Dep't of City of New York v. Dassori, 21 App. Div. 348, 47 N. Y. Supp. 641.

Offences against the provisions of the health laws are generally punished by fine and imprisonment. They are offences against public health, punishable by the common law by fine and imprisonment; such, for example, as selling unwholesome provisions. 4 Bla. Com. 162; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 822; 6 id. 133; 3 Maule & S. 10.

Mandamus will issue to compel a board of health to award compensation to one whose property it has occupied or destroyed to prevent the spread of contagious disease, when such board of health has refused so to do; Safford v. Board of Health, 110 Mich. 81, 67 N. W. 1094, 33 L. R. A. 300, 64 Am. St. Rep. 332.

Injuries to the health of particular individuals are, in general, remedied by an action on the case, or perhaps, in some instances, for breach of contract, and may be also by abatement, in some cases of nuisance. See NUISANCE; ABATEMENT; QUARANTINE; CONTAGIOUS DISEASES; VACCINATION.

As to the exercise of discretionary powers by boards of health, see LEGISLATIVE POWER; POLICE POWER; FOOD AND DRUG ACTS.

HEALTH OFFICER. The name of an officer invested with power to enforce the health laws. The powers and duties of health officers are regulated by local laws.

HEALTHY. Free from disease or bodily ailment or from a state of the system susceptible or liable to disease or bodily ailment. Bell v. Jeffreys, 35 N. C. 357.

HEARING. The trial of a chancery suit. Akerly v. Vilas, 24 Wis. 165, 1 Am. Rep. 166; Galpin v. Critchlow, 112 Mass. 339, 17 Am. Rep. 176.

The hearing in the English Chancery was conducted as follows. When the cause is called on in court, the pleadings on each side are opened in a brief manner to the court by the junior counsel for the plaintiff; after which the plaintiff's leading counsel states the plaintiff's case and the points in issue, and submits to the court his arguments upon them. Then the depositions (if any) of the plaintiff's witnesses, and such parts of the defendant's answer as support the plaintiff's case, are read by the plaintiff's counsel; after which the rest of the plaintiff's counsel address the court. Then the same course of proceedings is observed on the other side, excepting that no part of the defendant's answer can be read in his favor if it be replied to. The leading counsel for the plaintiff is then heard in reply; after which the court pronounces the decree. 14 Viner, Abr. 233; Com. Dig. Chancery, (T 1, 2, 3); Daniell, Chanc. Pract.

In Criminal Law. The examination of a prisoner charged with a crime or misdemeanor, and of the witnesses for the accused. See EXAMINATION.

HEARSAY EVIDENCE. That kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit to be given to the witness himself, but rests also, in part on the veracity and competency of some other person. 1 Phill. Ev. 185.

Hearsay evidence is incompetent to establish any specific fact, which fact is in its nature susceptible of being proved by witnesses who speak from their own knowledge; this species of testimony supposes some better which might be adduced in a particular case and its intrinsic weakness, its incompetency to satisfy the mind of the existence of the fact, and the frauds which might be practiced under its cover combine to support the rule that it is inadmissible; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 581, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 28 L. Ed. 262; Queen v. Hepburn, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 295, 3 L. Ed. 348.

The term applies to written as well as oral matter; but the writing or words are not necessarily hearsay, because those of a person not under oath. Thus, information on which one has acted; 2 B. & Ad. 845; Coleman v. Southwick, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 45, 6 Am. Dec. 253; the conversation of a person suspected of insanity; 2 Ad. & E. 3; see Myers v. Knobe, 51 Kan. 720, 33 Pac. 602; Ellis v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 86, 24 S. W. 894; replies to inquiries; 8 Bing. 320; Phelps v. Foot, 1 Conn. 387; Johns v. Johns, 29 Ga. 718; general reputation; Stallings v. State, 33 Ala. 425; Sanscrainte v. Torongo, 87 Mich. 69, 49 N. W. 497; expressions of feeling; 8 Bing. 376; Gilchrist v. Dec. 277; Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 197; Waldron v. Tuttle, 4 N. H. 371; Jewell v. Jewell, 1 How. (U. S.) 231, 11 L. Ed. 108; Butrick v. Tilton, 155 Mass. 461, 29 N. E. 1088; Town of Londonderry v. Town of Andover, 28 Vt. 416; (see 1 De G. & Sm. 51, for a discussion as to pedigree by Knight-Bruce, V. C.); see DECLARATION; EVIDENCE; entries made by third persons in the discharge of official duties; 4 Q. B. 132; and see Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 5 L. Ed. 628; Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380; Wilbur v. Selden, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 162; Farmers' Bank of Lancaster v. Whitehill, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 89; Herring v. Levy, 4 Mart. N. S. (La.) 383; New Haven County Bank v. Mitchell, 15 Conn. 206; entries in the party's shop-book; Ingraham v. Bockius, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 285, 11 Am. Dec. 730; Prince v. Smith, 4 Mass. 455; Pelzer v. Cranston, 2 McCord (S. C.) 328; Wilson v. Wilson, 6 N. J. L. 95; Farner v. Turner, 1 Ia. 53; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 119; or other books kept in the regular course of business; 10 Ad. & E. 598; Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 5 L. Ed. 628; Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380; Halliday v. Martinet, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 168, 11 Am. Dec. 262; indorsements of partial payments; Whitney v. Bigelow, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 110; Roseboom v. Billington, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 182; Gibson v. Peebles, 2 McCord (S. C.) 418; declarations as to boundaries; Clement v. Packer, 125 U. S. 321, 8 Sup. Ct. 907, 31 L. Ed. 721; have been held admissible as original evidence under the circumstances, and for particular purposes. As to a person's testifying to his own age, see AGE.

As a general rule, hearsay reports of a transaction, whether oral or written, are not admissible as evidence; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 124; Gatling v. Newell, 9 Ind. 572; Ibbitson v. Brown, 5 Ia. 532; State v. Maitremme, 14 La. Ann. 830; Persons' Adm'rs v. Burdick, 6 Wis. 63; Gross v. Moore, 68 Hun 412, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1019; Brown v. Prude, 97 Ala. 639, 11 South. 838; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Parker, 55 Fed. 595, 5 C. C. A. 220; Forman v. Com., 86 Ky. 605, 6 S. W. 579. The rule applies to evidence given under oath in a cause between other litigating parties; 3 Term 77; Queen v. Hepburn, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 296, 3 L. Ed. 348.

At one time in England it was held on the authority of Luttarell v. Reynell, 1 Mod. 282, that hearsay evidence of a witness' previous declarations might be admitted to confirm his testimony by showing that he "was constant to himself"; but this theory of confirming a sworn statement by declarations not under oath was abandoned in England; Buller, J., in 3 Doug. 242; and (except in a few cases which followed the earlier English case) repudiated in the United States; Stark. Ev. Sharsw. ed. 253, n. 2; 12 Am. L. Reg. 1, where the cases are collected.

Matters relating to public interest, as, for example, a claim to a ferry or highway, may be proved by hearsay testimony; 6 M. & W. 234; 1 M. & S. 679; Noyes v. Ward, 19 Conn. 250; but the matter in controversy must be of public interest; 2 B. & Ad. 245; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Canal Co., 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 593; the declarations must be those of persons supposed to be dead; 11 Price 162; 1 C. & K. 58; Davis v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 178, 36 Am. Dec. 334; and must have been made before controversy arose; 13 Ves. 514. See Fry v. Currie, 103 N. C. 203, 9 S. E. 393. The rule extends to deeds, leases, and other private documents; 10 B. & C. 17; maps; 2 Moore & P. 525; Noyes v. Ward, 19 Conn. 250; and verdicts; 10 Ad. & E. 151; 7 C. & P. 181. Testimony based on daily market reports from a commercial center comes from a public authentic source and is not hearsay; International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Pasture Co., 5 Tex. Civ. App. 186.

Ancient documents purporting to be a part of the res gestæ are also admissible, although the parties to the suit are not bound; 5 Price 312; Tolman v. Emerson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 160. See 2 C. & P. 440; Jackson v. Welden, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 283; Carroll v. Norwood, 1 H. & J. (Md.) 174; Willson

v. Betts, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 201. So also declarations which form part of the res gestæ, which explain and give character to what was done at the time are not liable to the objection that they are hearsay; Stark. Ev. Sharwood's ed. 53, note 1, 89, note 1, where the cases illustrating this branch of the subject are collected and classified by the American editor.

When two persons not speaking a common language voluntarily agree on a third to interpret between them, the latter is to be regarded as the agent of each to translate and communicate what he says to the other, and such communication to the interpreter is not hearsay, and the party to whom it is made may testify to it; Miller v. Lathrop, 50 Minn. 91, 52 N. W. 274; Johnson v. R. Co., 51 Ia. 25, 50 N. W. 543; the weight only of such being affected thereby and not its competency; Com. v. Vose, 157 Mass. 393, 32 N. E. 355, 17 L. R. A. 813.

Declarations, incompetent as hearsay, are not rendered admissible because they may tend to corroborate other testimony; Holt v. Johnson, 129 N. C. 138, 39 S. E. 796.

A statement by a physician to plaintiff that it would be necessary to amputate his hand was hearsay and inadmissible; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 84 S. W. 755, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 257. In an action against a railway company for wrongful death of a son, a statement made by him to his mother that he would support his parents as long as he lived was held not hearsay; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Van Belle, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 511, 64 S. W. 397. In condemnation proceedings, evidence offered by the owner as to offers made to him to purchase the property was rightly excluded; Sharp v. U. S., 191 U. S. 341, 24 Sup. Ct. 114, 48 L. Ed. 211.

See DECLARATION; DYING DECLARATIONS; EVIDENCE; PEDIGREE; RES GESTÆ.

HEARTH-MONEY. A tax, granted by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 10, abolished 1 Will. & Mary, St. 1, c. 10, of two shillings on every hearth or stove in England and Wales. Jacob, Law Dict. Commonly called chimney-money. Id.

HEARTH-SILVER. A sort of modus for tithes, viz.: a prescription for cutting down and using for fuel the tithe of wood. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 304.

HEAT OF PASSION. This does not mean passion or anger which comes from an old grudge, or no immediate cause or provocation; but passion or anger suddenly aroused at the time by some immediate and reasonable provocation, by words or acts of one at the time. State v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198, 17 S. W. 169.

It is not inconsistent with intelligent action, with consciousness of what one is doing and of the responsibilities therefor; Duthey v. State, 131 Wis. 178, 111 N. W. 222, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032. One who in possession of a sound mind commits a criminal act under the impulse of passion or revenge, though it may temporarily control his will or dethrone his reason, cannot be shielded from the consequences of his act; Williams v. State, 50 Ark. 517, 9 S. W. 5; Com. v. Renzo, 216 Pa. 147, 65 Atl. 30. Such a state of mind does not constitute insanity; Sanders v. State, 94 Ind. 147. See INSANITY; MURDER; COOLING TIME.

HEBBERMAN. An unlawful fisher in the Thames below London bridge; so called because they generally fished at ebbing tide or water. 4 Hen. VII. c. 15; Jacob, Law Dict.

HEBBERTHEF. The privilege of having goods of a thief and trial of him within such a liberty. Cartular, S. Edmundi MS. 163; Cowell.

HEBBING-WEARS. A device for catching fish in ebbing water. Stat. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5.

HEBDOMAD. A week; a space of seven days.

HEBDOMADIUS. A week's man; a canon, or prebendary in a cathedral church, who has the care of the choir and the officers belonging to it, for his own week. Cowell.

HEBOTE. The king's edict commanding his subjects into the field.

HECCAGIUM. Rent paid to the lord for liberty to use engines called hecks. Toml.

HEDA. A small haven, wharf, or landing-place.

HEDAGIUM (Sax. heda, hitha, port). A toll or custom paid at the hith or wharf, for landing goods, etc., from which an exemption was granted by the king to some particular persons and societies. Cartular. Abbatiæ de Redinges; Cowell.

HEDGE-BOTE. Wood used for repairing hedges or fences. 2 Bla. Com. 35; Livingston v. Ten Broeck, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 15, 8 Am. Dec. 287; HAYBOTE.

HEDGE-PRIEST. A hedge-parson; specifically, in Ireland, formerly, a priest who has been admitted to orders directly from a hedge-school, without preparation in theological studies at a regular college. Cent. Dict.

HEDGING. A means by which collectors and exporters of grain or other products, and manufacturers, who make contracts in advance for the sale of their goods, secure themselves against the fluctuations of the market by counter contracts for the purchase or sale of an equal quantity of the product or of the material of manufacture. Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. Grain & Stock Co., 198 U. S. 236, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031.

HEGEMONY. The leadership of one among several independent confederate states.

HEGIRA. The epoch or account of time used by the Arabians and the Turks, who begin the Mohammedan era and computation from the day that Mahomet was compelled to escape from Mecca to Medina which happened on the night of Thursday, July 15th, A. D. 622, under the reign of the Emperor Heraclius. Townsend, Dict. Dates; Wilson, Gloss. The era begins July 16th. The word is sometimes spelled Hejira but the former is the ordinary usage. It is derived from hijrah, in one form or another, an oriental term denoting flight, departure.

HEIFER. A young cow which has not had a calf. A beast of this kind two years and a half old was held to be improperly described in the indictment as a cow; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 616; 1 Leach 105.

HEIR. He who is born or begotten in lawful wedlock, and upon whom the law casts the estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments immediately upon the death of his ancestor. Thus, the word does not strictly apply to personal estate. Wms. Per. Pr.

Ordinarily used to designate those persons who answer this description at the death of the testator. In its strict and technical import applies to the person or persons appointed by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. 2 Bla. Com. 201; Rawson v. Rawson, 52 Ill. 62; Kellett v. Shepard, 139 Ill. 433, 28 N. E. 751, 34 N. E. 254; Dukes v. Faulk, 37 S. C. 255, 16 S. E. 122, 34 Am. St. Rep. 745.

The term heir has a very different signification at common law from what it has in those states and countries which have adopted the civil law. In the latter, the term applies to all persons who are called to the succession, whether by the act of the party or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the testamentary heir; and the next of kin by blood is, in cases of intestacy, called the heir-at-law, or heir by intestacy. The executor of the common law is in many respects not unlike the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by intestacy. By the common law, executors—unless expressly authorized by the will—and administrators have no right except to the personal estate of the deceased; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. 1 Brown, Civ. Law 344. See HÆRES.

No person is heir of a living person. A person occupying a relation which may be that of heirship is, however, called heir apparent or heir presumptive; 2 Bla. Com. 208; and the word heir may be used in a contract to designate the representative of a living person; Lockwood v. Jesup, 9 Conn. 272. A monster cannot be heir; Co. Litt. 7 b; nor at common law could a bastard; 2 Kent 208. See BASTARD; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

In the word heirs is comprehended heirs of heirs in infinitum; Co. Litt. 7 b, 9 a; Wood, Inst. 69. The words "heir" and "heirs" are interchangeable, and embrace all legally entitled to partake of the inheritance; Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 724, 3 S. E. 387.

According to many authorities, heir may be nomen collectivum, as well in a deed as in a will, and operate in both in the same manner as the word heirs; 1 Rolle, Abr. 253; Ambl. 453; Cro. Eliz. 313; 1 Burr. 38. But see 2 Prest. Est. 9, 10. In wills, in order to effectuate the intention of the testator, the word heirs is sometimes construed to mean the next of kin; 1 Jac. & W. 388; Reen v. Wagner, 51 N. J. Eq. 1, 26 Atl. 467; and statutory next of kin; 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 209; Tyson v. Tyson, 9 N. C. 472; the word "heir" can be construed as "distributees" or "representatives"; Eby's Appeal, 84 Pa. 245; and children; Ambl. 273; Lott v. Thompson, 36 S. C. 38, 15 S. E. 278; Baxter v. Winn, 87 Ga. 239, 13 S. E. 634; Franklin v. Franklin, 91 Tenn. 119, 18 S. W. 61; Barton v. Tuttle, 62 N. H. 558; Underwood v. Robbins, 117 Ind. 308, 20 N. E. 230; it can be construed to mean "heirs of his body"; Benson v. Linthicum, 75 Md. 144, 23 Atl. 133; and grandchildren; Woodruff v. Pleasants, 81 Va. 40.

When heir is used in a policy of life insurance or a benefit certificate, or in the constitution or by-laws of a benefit society, it is usually construed to mean all persons designated as distributees under intestate statutes; Estate of Comly, 136 Pa. 153, 20 Atl. 397; Kendall v. Gleason, 152 Mass. 457, 25 N. E. 838, 9 L. R. A. 509; Tompkins v. Levy & Bro., 87 Ala. 263, 6 South. 346, 13 Am. St. Rep. 31; Lee v. Baird, 132 N. C. 755, 44 S. E. 605; Thomas v. Covert, 126 Wis. 593, 105 N. W. 922, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 904, 5 Ann. Cas. 456. The widow is usually held to be included; Thomas v. Covert, 126 Wis. 593, 105 N. W. 922, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 904, 5 Ann. Cas. 456; Knights Templars & Masonic Mut. Aid Ass'n v. Greene, 79 Fed. 461; Hanson v. Relief Ass'n, 59 Minn. 123, 60 N. W. 1091; Northwestern Masonic Aid Ass'n of Chicago v. Jones, 154 Pa. 99, 26 Atl. 253, 35 Am. St. Rep. 810; Lyons v. Yerex, 100 Mich. 214, 58 N. W. 1112, 43 Am. St. Rep. 452; Alexander v. Aid Ass'n, 126 Ill. 558, 18 N. E. 556, 2 L. R. A. 161; Mullen v. Reed, 64 Conn. 240, 29 Atl. 478, 24 L. R. A. 664, 42 Am. St. Rep. 174.

She is an heir of her deceased husband only in a special and limited sense and not in the general sense in which that term is usually understood; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 270, 11 Sup. Ct. 773, 35 L. Ed. 464. Her right to share in a policy payable to "legal heirs" was denied where the insured left a child; Phillips v. Carpenter, 79 Ia. 600, 44 N. W. 898; and where a statute gave her half of her husband's personal estate as statutory dower; Johnson v. Knights of Honor, 53 Ark. 255, 13 S. W. 794, 8 L. R. A. 732.

On the death of a wife during the life of her husband, where insurance was to be paid to her, her heirs and assigns, he was held one of her heirs; U. B. Mut. Aid Society v. Miller, 107 Pa. 162. A divorced wife was held not one of the heirs of a member of a beneficiary society; Schonfield v. Turner, 75 Tex. 324, 12 S. W. 626, 7 L. R. A. 189.

See EXPECTANCY; SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN.

In Civil Law. He who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of a deceased person. See the following titles, and HÆRES.

HEIR APPARENT. One who has an indefeasible right to the inheritance, provided he outlive the ancestor. 2 Bla. Com. 208.

HEIR AT LAW. He who, after his ancestor dies intestate, has a right to all lands, tenements, and herditaments which belonged to him or of which he was seised. The same as heir general.

In its general definition heir at law is not limited to children; it may be and is often used, in cases where there are no children; it includes parents, brothers, sisters, etc.; Boman v. Boman, 49 Fed. 329, 1 C. C. A. 274, 7 U. S. App. 63.

HEIRS, BENEFICIARY. In Civil Law. Those who have accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. La. Civ. Code, art. 879. If the heir apprehend that the succession will be burdened with debts beyond its value, he accepts with benefit of inventory, and in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession.

HEIR, COLLATERAL. One who is not of the direct line of the deceased, but comes from a collateral line: as, a brother, sister, an uncle and aunt, a nephew, niece, or cousin, of the deceased.

HEIR, CONVENTIONAL. In Civil Law. One who takes a succession by virtue of a contract—for example, a marriage contract—which entitles the heir to the succession.

HEIR, FORCED. One who cannot be disinherited. See FORCED HEIRS.

HEIR, GENERAL. Heir at common law.

HEIR, IRREGULAR. In Louisiana. One who is neither testamentary nor legal heir, and who has been established by law to take the succession. See La. Civ. Code, art. 874. When the deceased has left neither lawful descendants, nor ascendants, nor collateral relations, the law calls to his inheritance either the surviving husband or wife, or his or her natural children, or the state; id. art. 911. This is called an irregular succession.

HEIR, LEGAL. In Civil Law. A legal heir is one who is of the same blood as the deceased and who takes the succession by force of law. This is different from a testamentary or conventional heir, who takes the succession in virtue of the disposition of man. See La. Civ. Code, art. 873, 875; Dict. de Jurisp. Héritier Légitime. There are three classes of legal heirs, to wit: the children and other lawful descendants, the fathers and mothers and other lawful ascendants, and the collateral kindred. La. Civ. Code, art. 883. See Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 229.

HEIRLOOM. Chattels which, contrary to the nature of chattels, descend to the heir along with the inheritance, and do not pass to the executor.

This word seems to be compounded of heir, and loom, that is, a frame, viz. to weave in. Some derive the word loom from the Saxon loma, or geloma, which signifies utensils or vessels generally. However, this may be, the word loom, by time, is drawn to a more general signification than it bore at the first, comprehending all implements of household, as tables, presses, cupboards, bedsteads, wainscots, and which, by the custom of some countries, having belonged to a house, are never inventoried after the decease of the owner as chattels, but accrue to the heir with the house itself. Minshew; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 361.

Charters, deeds, and other evidences of the title of the land, together with the box or chest in which they are contained, the keys of a house, and fish in a fish-pond, are heirlooms. Co. Litt. 3 a, 185 b; 7 Co. 17 b, Cro. Eliz. 372; Brooke, Abr. Charters, pl. 13; 2 Bla. Com. 427; 14 Viner, Abr. 291.

Diamonds bequeathed to one "as head of the family" and directed "to be deemed heirlooms in the family" are held in trust for the legatee and his successors; 23 W. R. 592; chattels bequeathed upon trust to permit the same to go and be enjoyed by the person possessed of the title, in the nature of heirlooms, vest absolutely in the first taker; 23 Ch. D. 158; and to the testator's nephew to go to and be held as heirlooms by him and his eldest son on his decease, is held to create an executory trust with a life interest in the first taker; L. R. 6 Eq. 540. An election, by one who takes heirlooms under a deed of trust, to take under a will did not operate as a forfeiture of the heirlooms as the interest in them was unassignable; 31 Ch. D. 466.

There appear to be no cases of strict heirlooms in this country; but see Haven v. Haven, 181 Mass. 573, 64 N. E. 410.

HEIR PRESUMPTIVE. One, who, in the present circumstances, would be entitled to the inheritance, but whose rights may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born. 2 Bla. Com. 208. In Louisiana, the presumptive heir is he who is the nearest relation of the deceased capable of inheriting. This quality is given to him before the decease of the person from whom he is to inherit, as well as after the opening of the succession, until he has accepted or renounced it; La. Civ. Code, art. 876.

HEIR, TESTAMENTARY. In Civil Law. One who is constituted heir by testament executed in the form prescribed by law. He is so called to distinguish him from the legal heirs, who are called to the succession by the law; and from conventional heirs, who are so constituted by a contract inter vivos. See HÆRES FACTUS; DEVISEE.

HEIR, UNCONDITIONAL. In Louisiana. One who inherits without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether the acceptance be express or tacit. La. Civ. Code, art. 878.

HEIRESS. A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called co-heiresses, or co-heirs.

HEIRSHIP MOVABLES. In Scotch Law. The movables which go to the heir, and not to the executor, that the land may not go to the heir completely dismantled, such as the best of furniture, horses, cows, etc., but not fungibles. Hope, Minor Pr. 538; Erskine, Inst. 3. 8. 13–17; Bell, Dict.

HELD. Used, in reference to the decision of a court, in the same sense as decided.

HELL. The name given to a place under the exchequer chamber, where the king's debtors were confined. Rich. Dict.

HELM. A tiller; the handle or wheel of a ship; a defensive covering for the head; a helmet; thatch or straw.

HELOWE-WALL. The end-wall covering and defending the rest of the building. Paroch. Antiq. 573.

HELSING. A Saxon brass coin, of the value of an English half-penny.

HEMOLDBORH, or HELMELBORCH. A title to possession. The admission of this old Norse term into the laws of the Conqueror is difficult to be accounted for; it is not found in any Anglo-Saxon law extant. Whart.

HENCHMAN. A footman; one who holds himself at the bidding of another. It has come to mean here a political follower; used in a rather bad sense.

HENEDPENNY. A customary payment of money instead of hens at Christmas. Cowell.

HENFARE. A fine for flight on account of murder. Domesday.

HENGEN. A prison for persons condemned to hard labor. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HENGHEN (ergastulum). In Saxon Law. A prison, or house of correction. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Engl. Gloss.

HENGWYTE. In Old English Law. An acquittance from a fine for hanging a thief. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 817. See HANGWITE.

HEORDFESTE. The master of a family; from the Saxon hearth faest, fixed to the house or hearth. Moz. & W.

HEORDPENNY. Peter-pence. Cowell.

HEORDWERCK. In Saxon Law. The service of herdsmen, done at the will of their lord.

HEPBURN ACT. The name commonly given to an act of Congress, June 29, 1906, amending §§ 1, 6, 14, 15, 16 and 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, Feb. 4, 1887, and adding §§ 16a and 24 thereto. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

HEPTARCHY. The name of the kingdom or government established by the Saxons in Britain: so called because it was composed of seven kingdoms, namely, Kent, Essex, Sussex, Wessex, East Anglia, Mercia, and Northumberland.

HER. In an indictment for rape the use of this word is sufficient to show that the person alluded to is a female; Warner v. State, 54 Ark. 660, 17 S. W. 6; but it has been held that in a written instrument the use of the pronoun "his" to designate a person therein named is not conclusive that such person is a male, and parol evidence will be admitted to show that such person is a female; Berniaud v. Beecher, 71 Cal. 38, 11 Pac. 802.

HERALD (from French héraut). An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals and coronations, and, anciently, to carry messages between princes and proclaim war and peace.

In England, there are three chief heralds, called Kings of Arms, of whom Garter is the principal, instituted by Henry V., whose office is to attend the knights of the Garter at their solemnities, and to marshal the funerals of the nobility. The next is Clarencieux, instituted by Edward IV, so called from the duke of Clarence, and whose proper office is to arrange the funerals of all the lesser nobility, knights, and squires on the south side of Trent. The third Norroy (north roy), who has the like office on the north side of Trent. There are, also, six inferior heralds, who were created to attend dukes or great lords in their military expeditions. The office, however, has grown much into disuse,—so much falsity and confusion having crept into their records that they are no longer received in evidence in any court of justice. This difficulty was attempted to be remedied by a standing order of the house of lords, which requires Garter to deliver to that house an exact pedigree of each peer and his family on the day of his first admission; 3 Bla. Com. 105; Encyc. Brit.

See HERALDS' COLLEGE.

HERALDRY. (1) The science of heralds; (2) an old and obsolete abuse of buying and selling precedence in the paper of causes for hearing. 2 North's Life of Lord-Keeper Guilford, 2d ed. 86.

HERALDS' COLLEGE. In 1483 the heralds in England were collected into a College of Arms by Richard III. The Earl Marshal of England was chief of the college, and under him were three Kings of Arms (styled Garter, Clarencieux, Norroy), six heralds at arms (styled of York, Lancaster, Chester, Windsor, Richmond, and Somerset), and four pursuivants (styled Bluemantle, Rouge Croix, Rouge Dragon, and Portcullis). This organization still continues. Encyc. Brit. Their first residence was in Pulteney's Inn and until the present site was granted by Queen Mary (1554); the house being rebuilt, as it now stands, after the Great Fire. See HERALD.

HERBAGE. In English Law. An easement which consists in the right to pasture cattle on another's ground. A right to herbage does not include a right to cut grass, or dig potatoes, or pick apples; Simpson v. Coe, 4 N. H. 303.

HERBAGIUM ANTERIUS. The first cutting of hay or grass, as distinguished from the aftermath. Paroch. Antiq. 459.

HERBERGAGIUM. Lodgings to receive guests in the way of hospitality. Cowell.

HERBERGARE. To harbor; to entertain.

HERBERGATUS. Spent in an inn. Cowell.

HERBERY, or HERBURY. An inn. Cowell.

HERCE, or HERCIA. A harrow. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 77.

HERCIARE. To harrow. 4 Inst. 270.

HERCIATURE. In Old English Law. Harrowing; work with a harrow. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 2.

HERCISCUNDA. In Civil Law. To be divided. Familia herciscunda, an inheritance to be divided. Actio familiæ herciscundæ, an action for dividing an inheritance. Erciscunda is more commonly used in the civil law. Dig. 10, 2; Inst. 3 28, 4.

HERD-WERCH. Customary uncertain services as herdsmen, shepherds, etc. Anno 1166, Regist. Ecclesiæ Christi Cant. MS.; Cowell.

HEREAFTER. Used as an adverb, it does not necessarily refer to unlimited time; it is not a synonym for "forever." It rather indicates the direction in time merely to which the context refers, and is limited by it. Dobbins v. Cragin, 50 N. J. Eq. 640, 23 Atl. 172.

HEREBANNUM. Calling out the army by proclamation. A fine paid by freemen for not attending the army. A tax for the support of the army. Du Cange.

HEREBOTE. The king's edict commanding his subjects into the field. Cowell.

HEREDAD. In Spanish Law. A portion of land that is cultivated. Formerly it meant a farm, haciendo de campo, real estate.

HEREDAD YACENTE (From Lat. "hæreditas jacens," q. v.). In Spanish Law. An inheritance not yet entered upon or appropriated. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 19, c. 2, § 8.

HEREDERO. In Spanish Law. Heir; he who, by legal or testamentary disposition, succeeds to the property of a deceased person. "Hæres censeatur cum defuncto una eademque persona." Las Partidas, 7. 9. 13.

HEREDITAGIUM. In Sicilian and Neapolitan Law. That which is held by hereditary right; the same hereditamentum (hereditament) in English Law. Spel. Gloss.

HEREDITAMENTS. Things capable of being inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed, and including not only lands and everything thereon, but also heir-looms, and certain furniture which, by custom, may descend to the heir together with the land. Co. Litt. 5 b; 2 Bla. Com. 17; Chal. R. P. 43; Oskaloosa Water Co. v. City of Oskaloosa, 84 Ia. 407, 51 N. W. 18, 15 L. R. A. 296. By this term such things are denoted as may be the subject-matter of inheritance, but not the inheritance itself; it cannot, therefore, by its own intrinsic force, enlarge an estate prima facie a life estate, into a fee; 2 B. & P. 251; 8 Term 503.

HEREDITARY. That which is the subject of inheritance.

HEREDITARY RIGHT TO THE CROWN. The crown of England, by the positive constitution of the kingdom, has ever been descendible, and so continues, in a course peculiar to itself, yet subject to limitation by parliament; but, notwithstanding such limitation, the crown retains its descendible quality, and becomes hereditary in the prince to whom it is limited. 1 Bla. Com. c. 3.

HEREFARE (Sax.). A going into or with an army; a going out to war (profectio militaris); an expedition. Cowell; Spel. Gloss.

HEREGEAT. A heriot (q. v.).

HEREGELD. A tribute or a tax levied for the maintenance of an army. Moz. & W.; Spel. Gloss.

HERENACH. An arch-deacon. Cowell.

HERES. See HÆRES.

HERESLITA, HERESSA, HERESSIZ. A hired soldier who departs without license. 4 Inst. 128.

HERESY. An offence which consists not in a total denial of Christianity, but of some of its essential doctrines, publicly and obstinately avowed. What in old times used to be adjudged heresy was left to the determination of the ecclesiastical judge; and the statute 2 Hen. 4, c. 15, defines heretics as teachers of erroneous opinions, contrary to the faith and blessed determinations of the holy church. Various laws have been passed before and after the reformation explaining wholly or partially what is meant by heresy. Heresy is now subject only to ecclesiastical correction, by virtue of Stat. 29 Car. 2, c. 9; 4 Bla. Com. 44; 4 Steph. Com. 203. See EXCOMMUNICATION; ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

Since 1577 no person could be indicted in England for heresy, but it is said to be theoretically possible that one guilty of heresy may be excommunicated and imprisoned for six months by an ecclesiastical court; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 386. See EXCOMMUNICATION.

HERETOCH. A general, leader, or commander, also a baron of the realm. Du Fresne.

HERETOFORE. Time past in distinction from time present and time future. Andrews v. Thayer, 40 Conn. 156.

HERETUM. In Old Records. A court or yard for drawing up guards or military retinue. Cowell; Jac. L. Dict.

HERGE. In Saxon Law. Offenders who joined in a body of more than thirty-five to commit depredation.

HERIOT. In English Law. A customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner of the land. If a man fell before his lord in battle, no heriot was demanded; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 293. It was the arms of the thegn, the stock of the peasant and the return to the lord of the capital he had advanced to the tenant. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 51. See a late case in 1 C. B. 402.

Heriot service is such as is due upon a special reservation in the grant or lease of lands, and therefore amounts to little more than a mere rent. Heriot custom arises upon no special reservation whatsoever, but depends merely upon immemorial usage and custom. See 2 Bla. Com. 97, 422; Comyns, Dig. Copyhold (K 18); Bacon, Abr.; 2 Saund.; 1 Vern. 441. It was claimed as late as [1907] 1 Ch. 366. See 23 L. Q. R. 251.

HERISCHILD. A species of English military service.

HERISCHULDÆ. A fine for disobedience to proclamation of warfare. Skene.

HERISCINDIUM. A division of household goods. Blount.

HERISLIT. Laying down of arms. Blount. Desertion from the army. Spel. Gloss.

HERISTALL. A castle; the station of an army; the place where a camp is pitched. Spel. Gloss.

HERITABLE. See INHERITANCE.

HERITABLE OBLIGATION. One whose rights and duties descend to the heir, so far as the heir accepts the succession. Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 133.

HERITABLE SECURITY. Security constituted by heritable property. Encyc. Dict.

HERITAGE. In Civil Law. Every species of immovable which can be the subject of property: such as lands, houses, orchards, woods, marshes, ponds, etc., in whatever mode they may have been acquired, either by descent or purchase. 3 Toullier 472. See Co. Litt. s. 731.

HERMANDAD (called also, Santa Hermandad). In Spanish Law. A fraternity formed among different towns and villages to prevent the commission of crimes, and to prevent the abuses and vexations to which they were subjected by men in power.

To carry into effect the object of this association, each village and town elected two alcaldes,—one by the nobility and the other by the community at large. These had under their order inferior officers, formed into companies, called cuad villeros. Their duty was to arrest delinquents and bring them before the alcaldes, when they were tried substantially in the ordinary form. This tribunal, established during the anarchy prevailing in feudal times, continued to maintain its organization in Spain for centuries; and various laws determining its jurisdiction and mode of proceeding were enacted by Ferdinand and Isabella and subsequent monarchs. Nov. Recop. tit. 35, b. 12. § 7. The abuses introduced in the exercise of the functions of the tribunals caused their abolition, and the santas hermandades of Ciudad Rodrigo, Talavera, and Toledo, the last remnants of these anomalous jurisdictions, were abolished by the law of the 7th May, 1835.

HERMAPHRODITES. Persons who have in the sexual organs the appearance of both sexes. They are adjudged to belong to that sex which prevails in them; Co., Litt. 2. 7; Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 1, t. 2, s. 1, n. 9.

The sexual characteristics in the human species are widely separated, and the two sexes are very rarely united in the same individual; there are a few cases on record, however, in which both ovaries and testicles were present. In one there were two ovaries, a rudimentary uterus, and a single testicle containing spermatozoa. Am. Text Book of Gynæcology. Cases of malformation are occasionally found, in which it is very difficult to decide to which sex the person belongs. In 2 Taylor, Med.-Leg. Jurispr. 80, is a report of a case of a wife who was divorced as "being an hermaphrodite with more of the male than female development." She was ordered to put on the clothes of a man.

See 2 Med. Exam. 314; 1 Briand, Med. Leg. c. 2, art. 2, § 2, n. 2; Guy Med. Jur. 42, 47; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 11th ed. 164 et seq.; Wharton & S. Med. Jur. § 408 et seq.

HERMENEUTICS (Greek, ἑρμηνεύω, to interpret). The art and science, or body of rules, of truthful interpretation. It has been used chiefly by theologians; but Zachariæ, in "An Essay on General Legal Hermeneutics" (Versuch einer allg. Hermeneütik des Rechts), and Dr. Lieber, in his work on Legal and Political Hermeneutics, also make use of it. See INTERPRETATION; CONSTRUCTION.

HERMER. A great lord. Jacob.

HERMOGENIAN CODE. See CODE.

HERNESIUM, or HERNASIUM. Household goods; implements of trade or husbandry; the rigging or tackle of a ship. Cowell.

HEROUDES. Heralds. Du Cange.

HERPEX. A harrow. Spel. Gloss.

HERPICATIO. In Old English Law. A day's work with a harrow. Spel. Gloss.

HERRING SILVER. A composition in money for the custom of supplying herrings for a religious house. Whart.

HERSHIP. The crime, in Scotland, of carrying off cattle by force; it is described as "the masterful driving off of cattle from a proprietor's grounds." Bell.

HERUS. A master. Servus facit ut herus det, the servant does (the work), in order that the master may give (him the wages agreed on). Herus dat ut servus faciat, the master gives (or agrees to give, the wages), in consideration of, or with a view to, the servant's doing (the work). 2 Bla. Com. 445.

HESIA. An easement. Du Cange.

HEST CORN. Corn or grain given or devoted to religious persons or purposes. Cowell; 2 Mon. Ang. 367 b.

HESTA. A capon or young cockerel.

HIDAGE. In Old English Law. A tax levied, in emergencies, on every hide of land; the exemption from such tax. Bract. lib. 2, c. 56. It was payable sometimes in money, sometimes in ships or military equipments; e. g. in the year 994, when the Danes landed in England, every three hundred hides furnished a ship to king Ethelred, and every eight hides one pack and one saddle. Jacob, Law Dict. See HIDE.

HIDALGO (spelled, also, Hijodalgo). In Spanish Law. He who, by blood and lineage, belongs to a distinguished family, or is noble by descent. Las Partidas 2. 12. 3.

HIDE (from Sax. hyden, to cover; so, Lat. tectum, from tegere). In Old English Law. Originally a building with a roof; a house; a tenement.

As much land as might be ploughed with one plough. The amount was probably determined by usage of the locality; some make it sixty, others eighty, others ninety-six, others one hundred or one hundred and twenty, acres. Co. Litt. 5; 1 Plowd. 167; Shepp. Touchst. 93; Du Cange.

A hide was anciently employed as a unit of taxation. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 347, such tax being called hidegild.

As much land as was necessary to support a hide, or mansion-house. Co. Litt. 69 a; Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange, Hida; 1 Introd. to Domesday 145.

The unit of superficial measure, at the time of the Domesday survey, usually found in the southern counties, while carucate or ploughland prevailed in the northern counties. Although these words had various customary values in different parts of the country, there is a good deal of evidence that, at the Conquest, there was a tendency to a mean or normal value of 120 acres for hide divided into four virgates or yardlands. The carucate was normally of the same acreage as hide, but divided into eight bovates or oxgangs, implying the land which eight oxen (caruca) could till in a year. Pollock, English Manor 144.

There is much doubt as to what it was; it may have been 30 acres or thereabouts or 120 acres or thereabouts; Maitland, Domesday and Beyond 357, where the opinion is expressed that in Anglo-Saxon times it was 120 acres.

HIDE AND GAIN. In English Law. A term anciently applied to arable land. Co. Litt. 85 b.

HIDE LANDS. Lands appertaining to a hide, or mansion. See HIDE.

HIDEL. A place of protection; a sanctuary. St. 1 Hen. VII. cc. 5, 6; Cowell.

HIDGILD, or HIDEGILD. A sum of money paid by a villein or servant to save himself from whipping. Fleta, l. 1, c. 47, § 20.

HIERARCHY. Originally, government by a body of priests. Stubbs, Const. Hist. § 376. Now, the body of officers in any church or ecclesiastical institution, considered as forming an ascending series of ranks or degrees of power and authority, with the correlative subjection, each to the one next above.

HIGH BAILIFF. An officer attached to an English county court. His duties are to attend the court when sitting; to serve summons; and to execute orders, warrants, writs, etc. Stats. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, § 33; Poll. C. C. Pr. 16. He also had similar duties under the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the county courts. Bankruptcy Rules 1870, 58.

HIGH COMMISSION COURT. See COURT OF HIGH COMMISSION.

HIGH CONSTABLE. See CONSTABLE.

HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY. See ADMIRALTY.

HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY. See CHANCERY.

HIGH COURT OF DELEGATES. In English Law. See COURT OF DELEGATES.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE. See COURTS OF ENGLAND; JUDICATURE ACTS.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY. See COURTS OF SCOTLAND.

HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT. The English Parliament, as composed of the house of peers and house of commons.

The house of lords sitting in its judicial capacity. See PARLIAMENT; COURTS OF ENGLAND; HOUSE OF LORDS.

HIGH CRIMES AND MISDEMEANORS. The constitution of the United States provides that the president, vice-president, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment, for treason, bribery, and other high crimes and misdemeanors. This does not apply to senators and members of congress, but does to United States circuit and district judges; Blount's Trial 102; Peck's Trial; 10 Law Trials; Chase's Trial; 11 id. See State v. Knapp, 6 Conn. 417, 16 Am. Dec. 68. See IMPEACHMENT.

HIGH SEAS. The uninclosed waters of the ocean, and also those waters on the sea-coast which are without the boundaries of low-water mark. U. S. v. Ross, 1 Gall. 624, Fed. Cas. No. 16,196; U. S. v. Grush, 5 Mas. C. C. 290, Fed. Cas. No. 15,268; 1 Bla. Com. 110; Bened. Adm.; 2 Hagg. Adm. 398.

Enclosed water on the sea coast and without the boundaries of low water mark. U. S. v. Imp. Co., 173 Fed. 426. The terms "high sea" and "main sea" are synonymous; id.

The act of congress of April 30, 1790, s. 8, enacts that if any person shall commit upon the high seas, or in any river, haven, basin, or bay, out of the jurisdiction of any particular state, murder, etc., which if committed within the body of a county would, by the laws of the United States, be punishable with death, every such offender, being thereof convicted, shall suffer death; and the trial of crimes committed on the high seas, or in any place out of the jurisdiction of any particular state, shall be in the district where the offender is apprehended, or into which he may first be brought. See U. S. v. McGill, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 426, 1 L. Ed. 894; U. S. v. Wiltberger, 3 Wash. C. C. 515, Fed. Cas. No. 16,738; U. S. v. Smith, 1 Mas. 147, Fed. Cas. No. 16,337; U. S. v. Seagrist, 4 Blatchf. 420, Fed. Cas. No. 16,245.

It was held in Ex parte Byers, 32 Fed. 406, that the Great Lakes are not high seas, and that these words have been employed from time immemorial to designate the ocean below low-water mark, and have rarely, if ever been applied to interior or land-locked waters of any kind; but the supreme court of the United States has held otherwise, saying that this term is also applicable to the open, unenclosed waters of the Great Lakes; U. S. v. Rodgers, 150 U. S. 249, 14 Sup. Ct. 109, 37 L. Ed. 1071. See FAUCES TERRÆ; GREAT LAKES.

HIGH TREASON. In English Law. Treason against the king, in contradistinction from petit treason, which is the treason of a servant towards his master, a wife towards her husband, a secular or religious man towards his prelate. See PETIT TREASON; TREASON.

HIGH-WATER MARK. That part of the shore of the sea to which the waves ordinarily reach when the tide is at its highest. Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 4 Am. Dec. 155; Com. v. Charlestown, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180, 11 Am. Dec. 161; Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 1, 10 Am. Dec. 356; 1 Russ. Cr. 107; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 803.

Wherever the presence of the water is so common as to mark on the soil a character, in respect to vegetation, distinct from that of the banks; it does not include low lands which, though subject to periodical overflow, are valuable for agricultural purposes. Carpenter v. Hennepin County, 56 Minn. 513, 58 N. W. 295. See FORESHORE; SEA-SHORE; TIDE.

HIGHWAY. A passage, road, or street which every citizen (person) has a right to use. 3 Kent 432; Respublica v. Arnold, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 421.

The term highway is the generic name for all kinds of public ways, whether they be carriage-ways, bridle-ways, foot-ways, bridges, turnpike roads, railroads, canals, ferries, or navigable rivers; 6 Mod. 255; Ang. Highw. c. 1; 3 Kent 432. A cul de sac may be a highway; 11 East 375, note; 18 Q. B. 870; Danforth v. Durell, 8 Allen (Mass.) 242; People v. Kingman, 24 N. Y. 559 (overruling Holdane v. Cold Spring, 23 Barb. [N. Y.] 103); Sheaff v. People, 87 Ill. 189, 29 Am. Rep. 49; Fields v. Colby, 102 Mich. 449, 60 N. W. 1048 (but against the presumption that it is such is the fact "that it leads nowhere"; [1905] 2 Ch. 188); an alley would not be; Face v. City of Ionia, 90 Mich. 104, 51 N. W. 184.

A public right of way over a highway is not an easement, for there is no dominant tenement, and the public are incapable of taking a grant from any one; Odgers, C. L. 24. A private right of way is wholly distinct from a public right of way; it can be exercised only by the occupier of the dominant tenement and his family. See EASEMENT.

Highways are created either by legislative authority or by dedication.

First, by legislative authority. In England, the laying out of highways is regulated by act of parliament; in this country, by general statutes, differing in different states. In England, the uniform practice is to provide a compensation to the owner of the land taken for highways. In the act authorizing the taking, in the United States, such a provision must be made, or the act will be void under the clause in the federal and in the several state constitutions that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. The amount of such compensation may be determined either by a jury or by commissioners, as shall be prescribed by law; 1 Bla. Com. 139; Highw. 233; 8 Price 535; McMasters v. Com., 3 Watts (Pa.) 292; Williams v. R. Co., 16 N. Y. 97, 69 Am. Dec. 651; Ford v. R. Co., 14 Wis. 609, 80 Am. Dec. 791. In case the statute makes no provision for indemnity for land to be taken, an injunction may be obtained to prevent the taking; Beekman v. R. Co., 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 45, 22 Am. Dec. 679; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. (N.

Y.) 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526; Cushman v. Smith, 34 Me. 247; see Kern v. Isgrigg, 132 Ind. 4, 31 N. E. 455; or an action at law may be maintained after the damage has been committed; Crittenden v. Wilson, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 165, 15 Am. Dec. 462; Denslow v. New Haven & N. Co., 16 Conn. 98, and cases cited above. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

Second, by dedication, which title see.

The owner of the land over which it passes retains the fee and all rights of property not incompatible with the public enjoyment, such as the right to the herbage, the trees and fruit growing thereon, or minerals below, and may work a mine, sink a drain or cellar, or carry water in pipes beneath it, or sell the soil if it be done without injury to the highway; 4 Viner, Abr. 502; Com. Dig. Chemin (A 2); Makepeace v. Worden, 1 N. H. 16; U. S. v. Harris, 1 Sumn. 21, Fed. Cas. No. 15,315; McDonald v. Lindall, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 495; Harris v. Elliott, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 9 L. Co., 45 Kan. 398, 25 Pac. 894. The title to a spring within the right of way of a turnpike company is in the owner, who may use the water as he pleases, and the turnpike company has no right in such spring; Upper Ten Mile Plank Road Co. v. Braden, 172 Pa. 460, 33 Atl. 562, 51 Am. St. Rep. 759. The owner may maintain ejectment for encroachments on the highway or an assize if disseized of it; 3 Kent 432; Adams, Eject. 19; Cooper v. Smith, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 26, 11 Am. Dec. 658; Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 135, 6 Am. Dec. 216; 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 141; Thomas v. Hunt, 134 Mo. 392, 35 S. W. 581, 32 L. R. A. 857; or trespass against one who builds on it; Cortelyou v. Van Brundt, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 357, 3 Am. Dec. 439; or who digs up and removes the soil; Gidney v. Earl, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 98; [1893] 1 Q. B. 142; or cuts down trees growing thereon; Makepeace v. Worden, 1 N. H. 16; or damages them in putting up telephone wires; 2 Can. S. C. R. 276; Daily v. State, 51 Ohio St. 348, 37 N. E. 710, 24 L. R. A. 724, 46 Am. St. Rep. 578; or who stops upon it for the purpose of using abusive or insulting language; Adams v. Rivers, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 390. No one can stand on a highway and shoot at pheasants flying over; 4 E. & B. 860; see [1908] 2 ch. 168. A landowner has the right to the lateral support of the soil in the adjoining street, and a city is liable for any damage occasioned by removing this lateral support in grading the street; Nichols v. City of Duluth, 40 Minn. 389, 42 N. W. 84, 12 Am. St. Rep. 743; and must furnish lateral support to the highway; Village of Haverstraw v. Eckerson, 192 N. Y. 54, 84 N. E. 578, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 287. He may recover for the destruction of trees resulting from leaking gas pipes; 39 Am. L. Rev. 616. A steam railroad used for the purposes of transporting persons and property upon a highway is an additional servitude for which an abutting owner is entitled to compensation; Trustees of Presbyterian Society v. R. Co., 3 Hill (N. Y.) 567; Starr v. R. Co., 24 N. J. L. 592; Donnaher v. State, 8 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 649; Grand Rapids & I. R. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62, 31 Am. Rep. 306; Indianapolis, B. & W. As to a railway for passengers only the question depends upon the character and extent of the use, and not upon the motive power; Newell v. Ry. Co., 35 Minn. 112, 27 N. W. 839, 59 Am. Rep. 303; Briggs v. R. Co., 79 Me. 363, 10 Atl. 47, 1 Am. St. Rep. 316; Williams v. Ry. Co., 41 Fed. 556; Nichols v. Ry. Co., 87 Mich. 361, 49 N. W. 538, 16 L. R. A. 371; People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188; Moses v. R. Co., 21 Ill. 516; but when such a road seriously interferes with the rights of an abutting owner, it is held an additional servitude. This rule applies to an elevated railroad, which is considered an obstruction to the easement of air and light and the easement of access; Story v. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146; Mahady v. R. But the occupation of a country road by an electric light company constitutes an additional servitude; Palmer v. Electric Co., 6 App. Div. 12, 39 N. Y. Supp. 522; or by a telegraph company; Eels v. Telephone & Telegraph Co., 143 N. Y. 133, 38 N. E. 202, 25 L. R. A. 640; or by an electric railway company; Pennsylvania R. R. v. Pass. Ry., 167 Pa. 62, 31 Atl. 468, 27 L. R. A. 766, 46 Am. St. Rep. 659; or a gas company; Bloomfield & R. Natural Gaslight Co. v. Calkins, 62 N. Y. 386. See POLES; WIRES. As to other uses of city streets and compensation to abutters for damages resulting therefrom, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

The owners on the opposite sides prima facie own respectively to the centre line of the street; Cox v. Freedley, 33 Pa. 124, 75 Am. Dec. 584; Edsall v. Howell, 86 Hun 424, 33 N. Y. Supp. 892; Hinchman v. R. Co., 17 N. J. Eq. 75, 86 Am. Dec. 252. And a grant of land "by," or "on," or "along" a highway carries, by presumption, the fee to the centre line, if the grantor own so far, though this presumption may be rebutted by words showing an intention to exclude the highway, such as, "by the side of," "by the margin of," or other equivalent expressions; Bucknam v. Bucknam, 12 Me. 463; Stiles v. Curtis, 4 Day (Conn.) 328; In re Reed, 13 N. H. 266; Hughes v. R. Co., 2 R. I. 508; English v. Brennan, 60 N. Y. 609; Union Burial Ground Society v. Robinson, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 18. But, while in most of the states this is the rule, there are exceptions as, in Kansas and Nebraska, where the fee of highways is vested in the county; Challiss v. R. Co., 45 Kan. 398, 25 Pac. 894; Lindsay v. Omaha, 30 Neb. 512, 46 N. W. 627, 27 Am. St. Rep. 415; and in New York City where by act of 1813 the fee is vested in the municipality in trust for the public; People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188; In re Ninth Ave. & Fifteenth St., 45 N. Y. 732; Washington Cemetery v. R. Co., 68 N. Y. 593; Kane v. R. Co., 125 N. Y. 164, 26 N. E. 278, 11 L. R. A. 640; and in Illinois, in the municipality in trust for the public; Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301; Board of Trustees of Illinois & Michigan Canal v. Haven, 11 Ill. 554; Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Hartley, 67 Ill. 439, 16 Am. Rep. 624; and it is held that even where the abutting owner does not own the fee in the highway, he has special rights therein not enjoyed by the public, as those of light, air, and access; In re New York Elevated R. Co., 36 Hun (N. Y.) 427; Rigney v. City of Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; Grafton v. R. Co., 21 Fed. 309; St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 272, 19 L. Ed. 74; City of Denver v. Bayer, 7 Colo. 113, 2 Pac. 6; Branahan v. Hotel Co., 39 Ohio St. 333, 48 Am. Rep. 457; McCaffrey v. Smith, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 117; Lippincott v. Lasher, 44 N. J. Eq. 120, 14 Atl. 103; Town of Rensselaer v. Leopold, 106 Ind. 29, 5 N. E. 761. Where the fee of a highway is in the adjoining owner, it reverts to him upon a discontinuance, vacation, or abandonment; Van Amringe v. Barnett, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 372; Ott v. Kreiter, 110 Pa. 370, 1 Atl. 724; Dunham v. Williams, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 136; Harris v. Elliott, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 26, 9 L. Ed. 333; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Patch, 28 Kan. 470. But in Illinois it is held that such land reverts to the original owner and not to the abutter who acquires title after the establishment of the way; Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301.

In England, the inhabitants of the several parishes were at common law bound to repair all highways lying within them; 5 Burr. 2700; 56 J. P. 517. The care of highways is now largely regulated by statute; see 3 Steph. Com. 83.

The liability to repair is here determined by statute, and, in most of the states, devolves upon the towns, or other local municipalities; Morey v. Newfane, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 645; Loker v. Inhabitants of Brookline, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 343; Township of Plymouth v. Graver, 125 Pa. 24, 17 Atl. 249, 11 Am. St. Rep. 867; Fowler v. Strawberry Hill, 74 Ia. 644, 38 N. W. 521. The liability being thus created, its measure is likewise to be ascertained by statute, the criterion being, generally, safety and convenience for travel, hav-of the road and the public needs; Ang. Highw. § 259; Hull v. Richmond, 2 W. & M. 337, Fed. Cas. No. 6,861; Rice v. Montpelier, 19 Vt. 470; Coggswell v. Inhabitants of Lexington, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 307; Fitz v. City of Boston, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 365; Cobb v. Standish, 14 Me. 198. For neglect to repair, the parish in England, and in this country the town or body chargeable, is indictable as for a nuisance; 2 Wms. Saund. 158, n. 4; State v. Canterbury, 28 N. H. 195; Ang. Highw. § 275; and, in many states, is made liable, by statute, to an action on the case for damages in favor of any person who may have suffered special injury by reason of such neglect; Providence v. Clapp, 17 How. (U. S.) 161, 15 L. Ed. 72; Bacon v. Boston, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 174; Erie v. Schwingle, 22 Pa. 384, 60 Am. Dec. 87; Verrill v. Minot, 31 Me. 299; Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 S. E. 369, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281; Klein v. City of Dallas, 71 Tex. 280, 8 S. W. 90. But to make a county liable, the defect in the highway must have been the sole cause of the injury; Phillips v. Ritchie County, 31 W. Va. 477, 7 S. E. 427. Contributory negligence defeats recovery for injuries caused by a defective highway; Laney v. Chesterfield County, 29 S. C. 140, 7 S. E. 56; Shonhoff v. R. Co., 97 Mo. 151, 10 S. W. 618; Phillips v. Ritchie County, 31 W. Va. 477, 7 S. E. 427.

The duty of repair may, in this country, rest on an individual to the exclusion of the town; Dygert v. Schenck, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 446, 35 Am. Dec. 575; or on a corporation who, in pursuance of their charter, built a road, and levy tolls for the expense of maintaining it; Goshen & Sharon Turnpike Co. v. Sears, 7 Conn. 86.

See TURNPIKE.

One who, knowing of a defect in a street or highway, uses it, is not, as matter of law, guilty of negligence, if, in the exercise of sound judgment, it may be deemed that with ordinary care and prudence the street may be used with safety; Mosheuvee v. District of Columbia, 191 U. S. 247, 24 Sup. Ct. 57, 48 L. Ed. 170; whether due care was used is a question for the jury; Mahoney v. R. Co., 104 Mass. 73; the same rule applies as to knowledge of snow and ice; Dewire v. Bailey, 131 Mass. 169, 41 Am. Rep. 219; and as to a tenant of a building using a common stairway; Looney v. McLean, 129 Mass. 33, 37 Am. Rep. 295. In New York the same rule prevails although the burden of showing due care is on the plaintiff; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43; Weston v. Troy, 139 N. Y. 281, 34 N. E. 780.

The right of the public to pass extends over the entire highway; Cro. Eliz. 446; therefore telegraph poles were held a nuisance; 3 F. & F. 73.

Any act or obstruction which incommodes or impedes the lawful use of a highway by the public, except such as arises by necessity from unloading wagons, putting up buildings, etc., is a common-law nuisance; 4 Steph. Com. 294; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 76; People v. Cunningham, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 524, 43 Am. Dec. 709; Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 590; Com. v. Dicken, 145 Pa. 453, 22 Atl. 1043; City & County of San Francisco v. Buckman, 111 Cal. 25, 43 Pac. 396; Williams v. Hardin, 46 Ill. App. 67. A fruit stand on a city street is an obstruction; State v. Berdetta, 73 Ind. 185, 38 Am. Rep. 117. The drawing large crowds before a shop window; Com. v. Passmore, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 219; the stopping teams or vehicles for such a time or at such a place as unreasonably to interfere with public travel; 3 Campb. 226; Turner v. Holtzman, 54 Md. 148, 39 Am. Rep. 361; Branahan v. Hotel Co., 39 Ohio St. 333, 48 Am. Rep. 457; State v. Edens, 85 N. C. 522 (but a reasonable necessity will justify a temporary obstruction; Jochem v. Robinson, 72 Wis. 199, 39 N. W. 383, 1 L. R. A. 178); collecting a noisy and disorderly crowd by music or speaking; Barker v. Com., 19 Pa. 412; State v. White, 64 N. H. 48, 5 Atl. 828; conducting an execution sale on the street; Com. v. Milliman, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 403; are nuisances and may be abated by any one whose passage is thereby obstructed; 3 Steph. Com. 5; 5 Co. 101; Inhabitants of Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70; Williams v. Fink, 18 Wis. 265; or the person causing or maintaining the same may be indicted; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 76; Thomp. Highw. 305; 2 Saund. 158, note; Renwick v. Morris, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 575; Com. v. King, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 115; or may be sued for damages in an action on the case by any one specially injured thereby; Co. Litt. 56 a; Hughes v. Heiser, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 463, 2 Am. Dec. 459; Pierce v. Dart, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 609; Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 147, 31 Am. Dec. 123; Milarkey v. Foster, 6 Or. 378, 25 Am. Rep. 531; Clark v. Lake, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 229; Osborn v. Ferry Co., 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 629; Martin v. Bliss, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 35, 32 Am. Dec. 52; and equity will take jurisdiction of a civil action to abate and enjoin the maintenance of an obstruction to a highway which is a public nuisance; Township of Hutchinson v. Filk, 44 Minn. 536, 47 N. W. 255. At common law the public have no right to pasture cattle on the highways; 2 H. Bla. 527; Stackpole v. Healy, 16 Mass. 33, 8 Am. Dec. 121; Harrison v. Brown, 5 Wis. 27.

The legislature has power to authorize certain obstructions which would otherwise be a public nuisance, such as the laying of railroad tracks or bridging of streams or constructing sewers, etc., or laying gas and water pipes; Com. v. R. Co., 14 Gray (Mass.) 93; Milburn v. City of Cedar Rapids, 12 Ia. 246; Randle v. R. Co., 65 Mo. 325; Williams v. R. Co., 16 N. Y. 97, 69 Am. Dec. 651; Arimond v. Canal Co., 31 Wis. 316; Lee v. Iron Co., 57 Me. 481, 2 Am. Rep. 59; Attorney General v. Booming Co., 34 Mich. 462; People v. Ferry Co., 68 N. Y. 71. See STREETS.

It is the duty of travellers upon highways, for the purpose of avoiding collision and accident, to observe due care in accommodating themselves to each other. To observe this purpose, it is the rule in England, that, in meeting, each party shall bear or keep to the left; and in this country, to the right; 2 Steph. N. P. 984; Story, Bailm. § 599; Thomp. Highw. 384; 2 Dowl. & R. 255; Norris v. Saxton, 158 Mass. 46, 32 N. E. 954. This rule, however, may and ought to be varied, where its observance would defeat its purpose; 8 C. & P. 103; Parker v. Adams, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 415, 46 Am. Dec. 694; Beach v. Parmeter, 23 Pa. 196. The rule does not apply to equestrians and foot-passengers; Dudley v. Bolles, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 465; Washburn v. Tracy, 2 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 128, 15 Am. Dec. 661; 8 C. & P. 373, 691; Mooney v. Bookbinding Co., 2 Misc. 238, 21 N. Y. Supp. 957; but it has been held to apply to bicyclists; Com. v. Forrest, 170 Pa. 40, 32 Atl. 652, 29 L. R. A. 365. It is another rule that travellers shall drive only at a moderate rate of speed, furious driving on a thronged thoroughfare being an indictable offence at common law; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 181, 10 L. Ed. 115; 8 C. & P. 694. In case of injury by reason of the non-observance of these rules or of other negligence, as by the use of unsuitable carriages or harness, or horses imperfectly trained, the injured party is entitled to recover his damages in an action on the case against the culpable party, unless the injury be in part attributable to his own neglect; Fales v. Dearborn, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 345; 11 East 60; O'Neil v. East Windsor, 63 Conn. 150, 27 Atl. 237; Dean v. New Milford Tp., 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 545; 5 C. & P. 379; Rathbun v. Payne, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 399. The legislature has complete power to regulate the highways in a state, and may prescribe what vehicles may be used on them with a view to the safety of the passengers over them and the preservation of the roads; State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 477, 2 S. E. 458, 2 Am. St. Rep. 305; it may regulate the improvement for the public good of highways, whether on land or by water, subject to the right of congress to interpose when such highways are the means of interstate and foreign commerce; Huse v. Glover, 119 U. S. 543, 7 Sup. Ct. 313, 30 L. Ed. 487. See Thompson; Pope, Highw.; Elliott, Roads & Streets; Booth, Street Ry.

If a highway be impassable, from being out of repair or otherwise, the public have a right to go on the adjoining ground, even when sown with grain and enclosed with a fence; but they must do no unnecessary damage; Cro. Car. 366; Campbell v. Race, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 408, 54 Am. Dec. 128; Williams v. Safford, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 309. This right, however, is only temporary and gives the public no permanent right; State v. Northumberland, 44 N. H. 628. Where the abutting owner fenced a highway through open country, he became, in such case, liable for repairs; 1 Rolle, Abr. 390.

HIGHWAYS, ROYAL. There were four royal highways in Yorkshire, three by land and one by water, where the king claimed all forfeitures. Maitl. Domesd. Book and Beyond 87.

HIGLER. In English Law. A person who carries from door to door, and sells by retail, small articles of provisions, and the like.

HIGUELA. In Spanish Law. The written acknowledgment given by each of the heirs of a deceased person, showing the effects he has received from the succession.

HIIS TESTIBUS. Words formerly used in deeds, signifying these being witness. They have been disused since Henry VIII. Co. Litt.; Cowell.

HILARY RULES. Common-law rules of practice drawn up by the judges of the superior courts at Westminster under an act of parliament (1834) and laid before parliament. They may be found in 11 Law Mag. & Quart. Review 263 (1834).

HILARY TERM. In English Law. A term of court, beginning on the 11th and ending on the 31st of January in each year. Superseded (1875) by Hilary Sittings, which begin January 11th and end on the Wednesday before Easter. See TERM.

HINDENI HOMINES. A society of men in the Saxon times. Toml.

HINDER AND DELAY. A phrase used to signify an act amounting to an attempt to defraud rather than a successful fraud. To put some obstacle in the path of, or interpose some time unjustifiably, before a creditor can realize what is owed out of his debtor's property. Burnham v. Brennan, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 63. The question of fraudulent intent is one of fact; Burr v. Clement, 9 Col. 8, 9 Pac. 633. The word "hinder" is not synonymous with "delay"; Crow v. Beardsley, 68 Mo. 435.

HINDU LAW. The system of native law prevailing among the Gentoos, and administered by the government of British India.

It is not the law of India or of any defined region. It is the law of castes, class, orders and even families which the Hindus carry about with them. 17 L. Q. R. 209.

In all the arrangements for the administration of justice in India, made by the British government and the East India Company, the principle of reserving to the native inhabitants the continuance of their own laws and usages within certain limits has been uniformly recognized. The laws of the Hindus and Mohammedans have thus been brought into notice in England, and are occasionally referred to by writers on English and American law. The native works upon these subjects are very numerous. The chief English republications of the Hindu law are, Colebrooke's Digest of Hindu Law, London 1801; Sir Wm. Jones's Institutes of Hindu Law, London, 1797. For a fuller account of the Hindu Law, and of the original Digests and Commentaries, see Morley's Law of India, London, 1858, and Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu and Mohammedan Law, London, 1860. The principal English republications of the Mohammedan Law are Hamilton's Hedaya, London, 1791; Baillie's Digest, Calcutta, 1805; Précis de Jurisprudencé mussulmane selon le Rite malikite, Paris, 1848; and the treatises on Succession and Inheritance translated by Sir William Jones. See, also, Norton's Cases on Hindu Law of Inheritance; Rattigan, Hindu Law. An approved outline of both systems is Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu and Mohammedan Law; also contained in the "Principles and Precedents" of the same law previously published by the same author.

See Bryce, Extension of Law in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 597; Ilbert, Government of India; Sir W. Markby (1906); Mulla, Principles of Hindu Law.

HINE, or HIND. A servant, or one of the family, but more properly a servant at husbandry; and he that oversees the rest is called the master hine. Cowell; Moz. & W.

HINE-FARE. The loss or departure of a servant from his master. Domesd.

HINEGELD. A ransom for an offence committed by a servant. Cowell.

HIPOTECA. In Spanish Law. A mortgage of real property. Johnson, Civ. Law of Spain, 156 [149]; White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 7.

HIRE. A bailment in which compensation is to be given for the use of a thing, or for labor and services about it. 2 Kent 456; Story, Bailm. § 359. The divisions of this species of contract are denoted by Latin names.

Locatio operis faciendi is the hire of labor and work to be done or care and attention to be bestowed on the goods let by the hirer, for a compensation.

Locatio operis mercium vehendarum is the hire of the carriage of goods from one place to another, for a compensation. Jones, Bailm. 85, 86, 90, 103, 118; 2 Kent 456.

Locatio rei or locatio conductio rei is the bailment of a thing to be used by the hirer for a compensation to be paid by him.

This contract is voluntary, and founded in consent; it involves mutual and reciprocal obligations; and it is for mutual benefit. In some respects it bears a strong resemblance to the contract of sale; the principal difference between them being that in cases of sale the owner parts with the whole proprietary interest in the thing, and in cases of hire the owner parts with possession only for a temporary purpose. In a sale, the thing itself is the object of the contract; in hiring, the use of the thing is its object; Vinnius, lib. 3, tit. 25, in pr.; Pothier, Louage, nn. 2–4; Jones, Bailm. 86; Story, Bailm. § 371.

Hiring a servant for a fixed sum per week, with no fixed period of duration, may be terminated by either party at any time without notice; Warden v. Hinds, 163 Fed. 201, 90 C. C. A. 449, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529 and note; so if the contract is for a fixed sum per year; Martin v. Ins. Co., 148 N. Y. 117, 42 N. E. 416; Weidman v. Cigar Stores Co., 223 Pa. 160, 72 Atl. 377, 132 Am. St. Rep. 727 (dictum); Edwards v. R. Co., 121 N. C. 490, 28 S. E. 137; and per month; Kosloski v. Kelly, 122 Wis. 665, 100 N. W. 1037; The Pokanoket, 156 Fed. 241, 84 C. C. A. 49. Other cases hold that the hiring, in such case, is for the full period; Douglass v. Ins. Co., 118 N. Y. 484, 23 N. E. 806, 7 L. R. A. 822; Horn v. Land Ass'n, 22 Minn. 233; Bascom v. Shillito, 37 Ohio St. 431. So much per week or per month imports a contract for a week or a month; Beach v. Mullin, 34 N. J. L. 343. Where a salary was to be paid "in equal quarterly payments," it was held to be for a year; Kirk v. Hartman, 63 Pa. 97; so where there was a weekly compensation but the employee was to have a percentage "at the end of the year"; Babcock & Wilcox Co. v. Moore, 62 Md. 161. An offer of $1,000 a year, duly accepted, imports a contract for a year; Liddell v. Chidester, 84 Ala. 508, 4 South. 426, 5 Am. St. Rep. 387; so does a contract with a solicitor for a fixed sum per annum; 4 H. L. Cas. 624. It was held in Maynard v. Corset Co., 200 Mass. 1, 85 N. E. 877, that "salary" usually imports permanence. See MASTER AND SERVANT; BAILMENT.

HIREMAN. A subject. Du Cange.

HIRST, or HURST. In Old English Law. A wood. Domesd.; Co. Litt. 4 b.

HIS. A demise by A to B for the term of "his" natural life may enure as a demise either for the life of A or that of B according to circumstances; 2 Nev. and M. 838.

In a policy of insurance the word "his" instead of "their" as descriptive of the property of the assured, does not render the policy void, if the assured has an insurable interest, although the interest may be qualified or defeasible or even an equitable interest; Strong v. Ins. Co., 10 Pick. (Mass.) 40, 20 Am. Dec. 507; Hough v. Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581; Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90; but where the policy expressly requires that a statement be made whether the insured owns the sole interest in the premises, the use of the word "his" instead of "their" amounts to a misrepresentation, if the insured is not the sole owner; Mers v. Ins. Co., 68 Mo. 127. See REPRESENTATION.

The ninth clause of the thirty-ninth section of the bankruptcy act does not apply to an accommodation indorser of negotiable paper whose indorsement is in no way connected with the business of the indorser, as such paper is not "his" commercial paper within the meaning of said clause; In re Clemens, 2 Dill. 533, Fed. Cas. No. 2,877.

HIS EXCELLENCY. A title given by the constitution of Massachusetts to the governor of that commonwealth. Mass. Const. part 2, c. 2, s. 1, art. 1. This title is customarily given to the governors of the other states, whether or not it be the official designation in their constitutions and laws; also to ambassadors.

HIS HONOR. A title given by the constitution of Massachusetts to the lieutenant governor of that commonwealth. Mass. Const. part 2, c. 2, s. 2, art. 1. It is also customarily given to some inferior magistrates, as the mayor of a city.

HISSA. A lot or portion; a share of revenue or rent. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

HIWISC. According to Maitland (Domesday Book 359), a household.

HLAFORDSWICE (Sax. hlaford, lord, literally bread-giver, and wice). In Old English Law. Betraying one's lord; treason. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law 59, 301.

HLASOCNE. The benefit of the law. Du Cange; Toml.

HLOTH (Sax.). An unlawful company. Moz. and W.

HLOTHBOTE (Sax. hloth, company, and bote, compensation). In Old English Law. Fine for presence at an illegal assembly. Du Cange, Hlotbota.

HOCK-TUESDAY MONEY. A duty given to the landlord, that his tenants and bondmen might solemnize the day on which the English mastered the Danes, being the second Tuesday after Easter week. Cowell.

HODGE-PODGE ACT. A name given to a legislative act which embraces many subjects. Such acts, besides being evident proofs of the ignorance of the makers of them, or of their want of good faith, are calculated to create a confusion which is highly prejudicial to the interests of justice. Instances of this legislation are everywhere to be found. See Barrington, Stat. 449. In many states bills, except general appropriation bills, can contain but one subject, which must be expressed in the title.

HOG. This word may include a sow; Shubrick v. State, 2 S. C. 21; a pig; Lavender v. State, 60 Ala. 60; Washington v. State, 58 Ala. 355; and may refer to dead as well as a living animal; Whitson v. Culbertson, 7 Ind. 195; Hunt v. State, 55 Ala. 140; Reed v. State, 16 Fla. 564; and it is synonymous with swine; Rivers v. State, 10 Tex. App. 177.

HOGA. In Old English Law. A hill or mountain. Domesday.

HOGHENHYNE (from Sax. hogh, house, and hine, servant). Third night servant. Among the Saxons, a stranger guest was, the first night of his stay, called uncuth, or unknown; the second, gust, guest; the third, hoghenhyne; and the entertainer was responsible for his acts as for those of his own servant. Bract. 124 b; Du Cange, Agenhine; Spelman, Gloss. Homehine.

HOGSHEAD. A liquid measure, containing half a pipe; the fourth part of a tun, or sixty-three gallons.

HOKE DAY (Heck Day). A day of feasting or mirth kept formerly in England on the second or third Tuesday after Easter; Cent. Dict.; or, as a recent writer concludes, the first Sunday after Easter; 28 L. Q. Rev. 283, where it is suggested that it was originally the great spring festival of the pre-Roman British.

HOLD. A technical word in a deed introducing with "to have" the clause which expresses the tenure by which the grantee is to have the land. The clause which commences with these words is called the tenendum. See TENENDUM; HABENDUM.

For the distinction between the power to hold and the power to purchase, see Leazure v. Hillegas, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 313; Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 122, 10 L. Ed. 382.

To decide, to adjudge, to decree: as, the court in that case held that the husband was not liable for the contract of the wife, made without his express or implied authority.

To bind under a contract: as, the obligor is held and firmly bound.

In the constitution of the United States it is provided that no person held to service or labor in one state under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on the claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due. Art. iv. sec. ii. § 3. The main purpose of this provision in the constitution no longer exists, through the abolition of slavery; but it includes apprentices; Boaler v. Cummines, 1 Am. L. Reg. 654, Fed. Cas. No. 1,584. See FUGITIVE SLAVE; PEONAGE.

HOLD PLEAS. To hear or try causes. 3 Bla. Com. 35, 298.

HOLDER. The holder of a bill of exchange is the person who is legally in the possession of it, either by indorsement or delivery, or both, and entitled to receive payment either from the drawee or acceptor, and is considered as an assignee. Ludlow v. Bingham, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 53, 1 L. Ed. 736. And one who indorses a promissory note for collection, as an agent, will be considered the holder for the purpose of transmitting notices; Smedes v. Bank, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 372; Bowling v. Harrison, 16 How. (U. S.) 248, 12 L. Ed. 425. No one but the holder can maintain an action on a bill of exchange; Byles, Bills 2. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

HOLDER FOR VALUE IN DUE COURSE. See BONA FIDE HOLDER FOR VALUE.

HOLDING COMPANY. A corporation organized to hold the stock of another or other corporations. Such companies become legally possible by virtue of the legislation, which is said to exist in nearly all the states, which authorizes a corporation to hold and own the capital stock of other corporations.

Edgar H. Farrar (Am. B. Ass'n [1911] 241) said: "The most vicious of all the provisions in the statutes above enumerated is that authorizing one corporation to own and vote stock in another. This provision is the mother of the holding company and the trust. . . . Before these statutes were passed, the courts of the country had held with great unanimity that it is against public policy for one corporation to hold and vote stock in another, and the general ground of the doctrine is that such stockholding tends to restrain trade and to foster monopoly. That this doctrine is true has been demonstrated by the fact that most of the great trusts have clothed themselves in the form of holding companies." He points out a Utah statute of 1907 under which a Utah railroad company could acquire and control the stock of all transportation companies by land, river, lake, or sea, in the United States, all terminal docks, etc., and all express companies, etc., except the stock of a competing railroad situated within the state of Utah.

It is probably more usual to find a corporation adding to its own business the control, by such stock ownership, of other corporations. The legal principles involved appear to be the same. There are instances of unincorporated associations acting as holding companies: e. g., the Mackey companies controlling cable companies; see 1 Cook, Corp. 952. In Massachusetts a practice obtains of vesting corporate stocks in a body of trustees, who hold the stock and manage the corporations for the parties in interest. See TRUST ESTATES AS BUSINESS CORPORATIONS.

When a corporation asserts that it has power to hold stock in another corporation, the burden rests on it to show whence such power is derived; Mannington v. Ry. Co., 183 Fed. 133.

In U. S. v. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325, where a New Jersey corporation controlled a majority of the manufacturers of sugar in the United States, and acquired a practical monopoly of the business, it was held that the business had no direct relation to commerce between the states and that the monopoly acquired by the corporation could not be suppressed under the Sherman act.

The acquisition by a corporation of a controlling interest in the stock of corporations owning or controlling and operating all the street railway lines in parts of the city of New York, underground, elevated and surface, is an unlawful monopoly and in violation of the stock corporation act of the state; Burrows v. Interborough Metropolitan Co., 156 Fed. 389 (C. C., S. D. of N. Y.).

Where a New Jersey holding company held more than nine-tenths of the stock of the Northern Pacific R. Co. and more than three-fourths of the stock of the Great Northern R. Co., operating competing lines of railroad, and issued its shares of stock to the depositing stockholders, it was held that the constituent companies became one consolidated corporation by the name of the holding company, the principal, if not the sole, object of which was to prevent competition between the constituent companies, that this was an illegal combination to restrain interstate commerce within the Sherman act, that on a bill by the Attorney General of the United States, the holding company would be enjoined from voting such stock and from exercising any action whatever over the acts of the railroad companies, and that the railroad companies would be enjoined from paying dividends to the holding corporation on any of their stock held by it; Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679. The purchase by the Union Pacific R. Co. of forty-six per cent. of the stock of the Southern Pacific R. Co., with the resulting control of the latter by the former, is in restraint of trade and will be dissolved; U. S. v. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, 33 Sup. Ct. 53, 57 L. Ed. 124.

Where the stock of two railroad companies is held by a holding company, it may be sufficient to bring them within the interstate commerce act where the joint work performed by both of them will do so; U. S. v. Stock Yard, 226 U. S. 286, 33 Sup. Ct. 83, 57 L. Ed. 226.

A Massachusetts statute forbids railroad companies from holding, directly or indirectly, the stock of any other corporation; see Attorney General v. R. Co., 198 Mass. 413, 84 N. E. 737; while in Connecticut one railroad company may buy a majority of the stock of another and in some cases condemn the minority holdings.

Where an insurance company acquired a majority of the stock of a trust company, and the latter acquired a majority of the stock of the former, it was held illegal upon a bill by a dissenting stockholder of the insurance company; Robotham v. Ins. Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 673, 53 Atl. 842.

A New Jersey corporation, with power to do so, may buy stock in another company and guarantee and agree to pay dividends on outstanding prior stock of the latter corporation; Windmuller v. Distilling Co., 186 N. Y. 572, 79 N. E. 1119; and may legally acquire a majority of the stock of street railways in different cities in Tennessee, if it does not create an unlawful restraint of trade; Clark v. Ry. Co., 123 Tenn. 232, 130 S. W. 751.

Where one railroad holds a small minority interest in another, no more than two-thirteenths, it is not an unlawful combination; State v. Missouri Ry. Co., 241 Mo. 1, 144 S. W. 863; but in Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 582, one railroad company was enjoined from purchasing a minority interest in a competing line.

The ownership of stock in a coal producing company by a railroad company does not cause it, as the owner of such stock, to have a legal interest in the commodity manufactured by the producing company; U. S. v. Delaware & H. Co., 213 U. S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836.

A corporation owning all the stock of another corporation may take the profits of the latter without a declaration of a formal dividend, if other parties are not prejudiced; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Trust Co., 135 Ga. 472, 69 S. E. 708.

A corporation organized in Delaware by residents of Pennsylvania, to own stock of and finance Pennsylvania corporations, having the same officers and substantially the same stockholders, and which maintains its office and holds directors' meetings, etc., in Pennsylvania, was held to be doing business in Pennsylvania and bound to register there under the statute; Colonial Trust Co. v. Brick Works, 172 Fed. 310, 97 C. C. A. 144.

Shares of stock in an elevator company owned by a railroad company do not become subject to the general mortgage of the latter; Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 304, 11 Sup. Ct. 779, 35 L. Ed. 473; but it is held that stock belonging to a railroad passes to its receiver when foreclosure of a mortgage is begun, and becomes subject thereto; Herring v. R. Co., 105 N. Y. 340, 12 N. E. 763.

The subject is fully treated in Cook, Corporations. See VOTING TRUSTS; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

HOLDING OVER. The act of keeping possession by the tenant, without the consent of the landlord, of premises which the latter, or those under whom he claims, had leased to the former, after the term has expired.

When a proper notice has been given, this injury is remedied by ejectment, or, under local regulations, by summary proceedings. See Lesley v. Randolph, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 123; 2 Bla. Com. 150; 3 id. 210; Woodf. L. & T. 788. A tenant enters on another term by holding over, notwithstanding his inability to move on the day the term ended; Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 287, 31 N. E. 94, 28 Am. St. Rep. 636; Cavanaugh v. Clinch, 88 Ga. 610, 15 S. E. 673. If a lessee for years holds over, the landowner has the legal option to treat him as a trespasser or as a tenant for another year; Scott v. Beecher, 91 Mich. 590, 52 N. W. 20; Voss v. King, 38 W. Va. 607, 18 S. E. 762; Hall Steam Power Co. v. Printing Press & Mfg. Co., 8 Misc. 430, 28 N. Y. Supp. 662. And the law presumes this holding to be upon the terms of the original demise; Voss v. King, 38 W. Va. 607, 18 S. E. 762. See Haeussler v. Paper-Box Co., 49 Mo. App. 631; LANDLORD AND TENANT; FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

The term is also applied to the retaining possession of a public office by an incumbent, after his term has expired, which is not always unlawful, as such action is sometimes authorized by statute or common law, to prevent an interregnum.

HOLIDAY. A religious festival; a day set apart for commemorating some important event in history; a day for exemption from labor. Webster, Dict. (Webster applies holyday especially to a religious, holiday to a secular festival.) In England they are either by act of legislation, or by ancient usage, and are now regulated by the Bank Holiday Act of 1871, extended by the act 38 Vict. c. 13. Fasts and thanksgiving days are also occasionally appointed by the crown. See Wharton, Dict.; 2 Burn. Eccl. Law 308.

In the dark ages, the church repressed the blood-feuds during certain seasons. These were "holy days" (holidays) in which the avenger of blood could not challenge the accused to battle. Jenks, Hist. E. L. 157.

In the United States there are no established holidays of a religious character having a legal status without legislation, and the lack of precision in the earlier statutes on the subject has given rise to much confusion and a great variety of definition. It has been said that a legal holiday is, ex vi termini, dies non juridicus; Lampe v. Manning, 38 Wis. 673; but this case does not warrant so broad a statement; 29 Am. L. Reg. 139. One thing which seems to be absolutely settled is that a legal holiday does not have the legal relations of Sunday, which was clothed with the idea of sanctity and is in its very nature dies non juridicus. Legal holidays are, however, merely the creation of statute law, and the lack of uniformity in the statutes of the several states makes the term itself very difficult of exact definition. The various definitions of the term holiday are collected in an article on the subject in 29 Am. L. Reg. 137, the writer of which thus states the conclusion reached after a critical examination of them: "Legal holidays as distinguished from the first day of the week are those days which are set apart by statute or by executive authority for fasting and prayer, or those given over to religious observance and amusements, or for political, moral or social, duties or anniversaries, or merely for popular recreation and amusement under such penalties and prohibitions alone as are expressed in positive legislative enactments."

The earlier statutes had for their object, mainly, the regulation of commercial paper falling due on days which were by general consent observed as holidays. Under such statutes it is simply provided that such paper payable upon the day named shall be due and payable on the day before or the day after. The difference in the statute law of several states as to this point is stated infra. As in the statutes, the day is specified and they are construed with exactness, there is little in the way of decision on this subject. It has been held that usage at a bank known to the parties to a note is sufficient to make a holiday such as to change the day for demanding payment, at least so far as to authorize a tender by the endorser on the following day; President of City Bank v. Cutter, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 414. In most of the states it is the rule, and such is the general commercial usage, to allow only two days of grace where the third would fall on a holiday, and to authorize demand of payment and protest on the day next preceding it. The question when a note falling due on a legal holiday which happens to be Sunday is legally payable is to be determined as in the case of any other note falling due on Sunday. This is so by general usage without special provision by statute. In New Jersey a note falling due on the 30th of May, Decoration Day, when Sunday, cannot be presented and protested for nonpayment until the following Tuesday; Hagerty v. Engle, 43 N. J. L. 299. Where paper is drawn without grace, payment may not be demanded until the next day; Commercial Bank of Kentucky v. Varnum, 49 N. Y. 269; as in the case with respect to Sunday; Salter v. Burt, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 205, 32 Am. Dec. 530; Avery v. Stewart, 2 Conn. 69, 7 Am. Dec. 240.

The rule of commercial paper as affected by holidays has been applied for the sake of uniformity to other maturing contracts; Siegbert v. Stiles, 39 Wis. 533. In some states, as California, the Dakotas, Idaho, and Massachusetts, the statutes extend the time for the performance of all contracts, except works of charity or necessity, to the next following day; but in Kentucky it was held that there being nothing in the statute prohibiting business transactions on a holiday, the performance of a contract was required according to its terms; National Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Miller, 85 Ky. 88, 2 S. W. 900; and this, it has been said, is the reasonable and logical view, the doctrine of the Wisconsin case being probably founded upon the confusion of holidays with Sundays; 29 Am. L. Reg. 153.

The Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act (see NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS for the states in which it is in force) provides that when the day or the last day for doing any act required or permitted to be done "falls on Sunday or on a holiday, the act may be done on the next succeeding secular or business day"; sec. 194.

Judicial proceedings are usually invalid on holidays, and in most of the state statutes such proceedings are expressly prohibited, but a mere statutory provision requiring that public offices be closed does not prevent the sitting of courts or the discharge of judicial duties by judges; People v. Kearney, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 129; which are valid unless prohibited by a statute; Russ v. Gilbert, 19 Fla. 54.

The following acts have been held valid when wholly or partially done upon a holiday; a sheriff's sale; Crabtree v. Whiteselle, 65 Tex. 111; a criminal examination on which a commitment was based; Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 175; giving a case to the jury in a trial for murder; State v. Sorenson, 32 Minn. 118, 19 N. W. 738; or trying a murder case; Pender v. State, 12 Tex. App. 496; the conclusion of such trial and the conviction of the prisoner; State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 743, 10 S. E. 183; Pfister v. State, 84 Ala. 432, 4 South. 395; entering a judgment by a justice of the peace; Bear v. Youngman, 19 Mo. App. 41; Elrod v. Lumber Co., 92 Tenn. 476, 22 S. W. 2; commencing a criminal trial; Dunlap v. State, 9 Tex. App. 179, 35 Am. Rep. 736; hearing a civil case; Houston, E. & W. T. Ry. Co. v. Harding, 63 Tex. 162; service of process; Nichols v. Kelsey, 20 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 14; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 50 Hun 105, 3 N. Y. Supp. 751; notice of days of election; Whitney v. Blackburn, 17 Or. 564, 21 Pac. 874, 11 Am. St. Rep. 857; return of process; Kinney v. Emery, 37 N. J. Eq. 339; McEvoy v. Trustees of School Dist., 38 N. J. Eq. 420, which see as to legal proceedings, and see also Gould v. Spencer, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 541; service of a statement for a new trial; Reclamation Dist. No. 535 of Sacramento County v. Hamilton, 112 Cal. 603, 44 Pac. 1074; service of an order for payment of money; In re Bornemann, 6 App. Div. 524, 39 N. Y. Supp. 686; a judgment by confession; Bradley v. Claudon, 45 Ill. App. 326; and the entry of an appeal; Worthington v. Hobensack, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 65. In Pennsylvania the supreme court hears arguments on a legal holiday; Payne v. Fresco, 17 W. N. C. (Pa.) 502. Memorial day is not dies non; Morel v. Stearns, 75 N. Y. Supp. 1082, 37 Misc. 486.

The following acts have been held invalid: the appointment of justices to hear the disclosure of an insolvent debtor; Poor v. Beatty, 78 Me. 580, 7 Atl. 541; entering judgment by default; Bierce v. Smith, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 411; entering a judgment where the statute prescribed that the day should be for all purposes whatever considered as the first day of the week; Spiedel Grocery Co. v. Armstrong, 8 Ohio C. C. 489, 4 O. C. D. 498.

With respect to ministerial acts the question may arise whether attendance of the officer and the performance of the duty is required, and this is to be settled entirely by the language of the statute. With respect to the validity of such acts performed on a holiday, unless expressly made void by statute, the general rule is that an officer may act. This is held even where the statute expressly prohibits the transaction of judicial business, so an order of attachment past due is ministerial business, and may be issued where such a statute exists; Whipple v. Hill, 36 Neb. 720, 55 N. W. 227, 20 L. R. A. 313, 38 Am. St. Rep. 742. Acts which have been held ministerial are taking a judgment; In re Worthington, 7 Biss. 455, Fed. Cas. No. 18,051; the entry of a judgment on a warrant of attorney; Paine v. Fesco, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 562; a sale for taxes; Hadley v. Musselman, 104 Ind. 459, 3 N. E. 122; the issuing of a summons by a justice of the peace; Smith v. Ihling, 47 Mich. 614, 11 N. W. 408; but where the statute prohibits judicial business a trial and judgment would not be valid; Lampe v. Manning, 38 Wis. 673; and it has been held that a sheriff's sale was not void because made on a holiday and, if confirmed, the title would not be endangered, but that it was not a proper day and that, upon exception, the sale would have been set aside; Rice v. Gable, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 567.

For loading or unloading ships in maritime commerce, in the absence of any statute to the contrary or established general usage, the annual fast day in Massachusetts must be considered as an ordinary working day; The Tangier, 1 Cliff, 383, Fed. Cas. No. 13,743.

In the absence of statutory requisitions it was held that a school should be allowed the legal holidays without deduction of salary to the teachers; School Dist. No. 4 v. Gage, 39 Mich. 484, 33 Am. Rep. 421.

The taking of an acknowledgment or deposition is usually held valid if performed upon a legal holiday, as being not a judicial act but private business; Rogers v. Brooks, 30 Ark. 612; Green v. Walker, 73 Wis. 548, 41 N. W. 534; Slater v. Schack, 41 Minn. 269, 43 N. W. 7. Under a statute excluding from computation of time for serving papers Sunday, a holiday, or Saturday, which is made a half-holiday, is excluded; Fries v. Coar, 19 Abb. N. C. 267.

An act making Saturday afternoon a legal half-holiday so far as regards the transaction of business in the public offices does not apply to proceedings by a municipal common council, and an ordinance passed on Saturday afternoon is valid; Mueller v. Egg Harbor City, 55 N. J. L. 245, 26 Atl. 89.

Acts designating holidays for the presentment and payment of commercial paper constitute them such for that purpose only; State v. Atkinson, 139 Ind. 426, 39 N. E. 51. Such an act does not apply to other business transactions; Nat. Mut. Benefit Ass'n v. Miller, 85 Ky. 88, 2 S. W. 900. An act providing that a holiday shall be considered the same as Sunday, and an act forbidding the holding of courts on Sunday, and one forbidding service of process on February 22d do not invalidate a sale on that day under a power in a deed of trust; Stewart v. Brown, 112 Mo. 171, 20 S. W. 451.

Under a statute providing that no court shall be open or transact any business on any legal holiday, unless it be to instruct or discharge a jury, or receive a verdict and render judgment thereon, an assignment for the benefit of creditors was not avoided by the fact that the assignee's bond was approved by a court commissioner on a legal holiday, though that be considered a judicial act; Spaulding & Bro. v. Bernhard, 76 Wis. 368, 44 N. W. 643, 7 L. R. A. 423, 20 Am. St. Rep. 75. Under a rule of reference fixing Decoration Day as the day for choosing arbitrators, the defendant could not be required to attend on a legal holiday and the proceedings were void; Doles v. Powell, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 207.

HOLLAND. A constitutional monarchy. The crown is hereditary in the male line, or, failing male heirs, in the female line. The sovereign has the sole executive authority. He establishes ministerial departments under responsible ministers, and shares the legislative power with the first and second chambers of the parliament which constitute the States-General and sits at The Hague. The first chamber has fifty members, chosen by the provincial states for nine years. The members of the second chamber are chosen for four years in electoral districts, by male voters over twenty-three years of age, possessing a certain taxable qualification. The highest court of justice is the High Council at The Hague. There are five other courts of justice in five different cities; and courts in each arrondissement and cantonal judges. The constitution was formed in 1815 and revised in 1848 and 1887. Encycl. Br.

HOLOGRAFO. In Spanish Law. Olographi. A term applicable to the paper, document, disposition, and more particularly to the last will of a person, which in order to be valid must be wholly written, signed, and dated by the testator. "Holographum, apud Testum, appellatur testamentum, quod totum manu testatoris scriptum est et subsignatum."

HOLOGRAPH. What is written with one's own hand. A term which signifies that an instrument is wholly written by the party. See La. Civ. Code, art. 1581; Code Civ. 970; 5 Toullier, n. 357; 1 Stu. Low. C. 327. See WILL.

HOLY GHOST'S PENNY. See GOD'S PENNY.

HOLY ORDERS. In Ecclesiastical Law. The orders or dignities of the church. Those within holy orders are archbishops, bishops, priests, and deacons. The form of ordination in England must be according to the form in the Book of Common Prayer. Besides these orders, the church of Rome had five others, viz.: subdeacons, acolytes, exorcists, readers, and ostiaries. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 39.

HOMAGE (anciently hominium, from homo). A mere acknowledgment of tenure made by a tenant by knight-service upon investiture, in the following form:

The tenant in fee or fee-tail that holds by homage shall kneel upon both his knees, ungirded, and the lord shall sit and hold both the hands of his tenant between his hands, and the tenant shall say, "I become your man (homo) from this day forward of life, and member, of earthly honor, and to you shall be faithful and true, and shall bear to you faith for the lands that I claim to hold of you, saving that faith that I owe to our lord the king;" and then the lord so sitting shall kiss him. The kiss is indispensable (except sometimes in the case of a woman. Du Cange). After this the oath of fealty (q. v.) is taken; but this may be taken by the steward, homage only to the lord. Termes de la Ley. This species of homage was called homagium planum or simplex, 1 Bla. Com. 367, to distinguish it from homagium ligium, or liege homage, which included fealty and the services incident. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

Liege homage was that homage in which allegiance was sworn without any reservation, and was, therefore, due only to the sovereign; and, as it came in time to be exacted without any actual holding from him, it sunk into the oath of allegiance. Termes de la Ley.

The obligation of homage is mutual, binding the lord to protection of the vassal, as well as the vassal to fidelity. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 16.

See FEALTY.

HOMAGE ANCESTRAL. Homage was so called where time out of mind a man and his ancestors had held by homage; and in this case the lord who had received the homage was bound to acquit the tenant of all services to superior lords, and, if vouched, to warrant his title. If the tenant by homage ancestral alienated in fee, his alienee held by homage, but not by homage ancestral. Termes de la Ley; 2 Bla. Com. 300.

HOMAGE JURY. The jury of a lord's court, or court baron: so called because generally composed of those who owed homage to the lord, or the pares curiæ. Kitchen; 2 Bla. Com. 54, 366.

HOMAGER. One that is bound to do homage to another. Jacob, Law Dict.

HOMAGIO RESPECTUANDO. A writ to the escheator commanding him to deliver seisin of land to the heir of full age, notwithstanding his homage not done which ought to be performed before the heir had livery, except there fall out some reasonable cause to hinder him. Termes de la Ley.

HOMAGIUM LIGIUM. See HOMAGE.

HOMAGIUM PLANUM. See HOMAGE.

HOMAGIUM REDDERE. The renunciation of homage, as when a vassal made a final declaration of defying his lord, of which there was a set form and method prescribed by the feudal law. Jac. L. Dict.

HOMBRE BUENO. In Spanish Law. The ordinary judge of a district.

Arbitrators chosen by litigants to determine their differences.

Persons competent to give testimony in a cause. L. 1. t. 8, b. 2, Fuero Real.

HOME. That place or country in which one in fact resides with the intention of residence, or in which he has so resided, and with regard to which he retains either residence or the intention of residence. Dicey, Confl. L. 81.

"'Home' and 'domicil' do not correspond, yet 'home' is the fundamental idea of 'domicil.' The law takes the conception of 'home,' and moulding it by means of certain fictions and technical rules to suit its own requirements, calls it 'domicil.' Or perhaps this may be best expressed by slightly altering Westlake's statement, 'Domicil is, then, the legal conception of residence,' etc., and saying, 'Domicil is, then, the legal conception of home.' 'Domicil' expresses the legal relation existing between a person and the place where he has, in contemplation of law, his permanent home." Jac. Dom. c. 3, § 72.

A person having a dwelling-house in each of two towns of the state may have his home in one town for the purposes of taxation, although he spends the greater portion of the year in the other, and is there on the first of May; Thayer v. City of Boston, 124 Mass. 132, 26 Am. Rep. 650. In this case domicil for taxation and home are treated as synonymous. The principal place of abode of a man and his family, when it is only a temporary abode, is not his home in the sense here required; Thayer v. City of Boston, 124 Mass. 147, 26 Am. Rep. 650.

Dwelling-place, or home, means some permanent abode or residence, with intention to remain; and it is not synonymous with domicil, as used in international law, but has a more restricted meaning; Inhabitants of Jefferson v. Washington, 19 Me. 293.

They do not, necessarily, continue until another is acquired; it may be abandoned, and the individual cease to have any home; id. One who abandons his home or dwelling-house, with or without design of acquiring one elsewhere, has no home by construction, in the place abandoned; id. This case was disapproved and it was held that the town domicil, not being used in a statute (under construction) to indicate a particular status as to habitation can only be used properly as synonymous with the town residence, dwelling-place, or home; Inhabitants of Warren v. Thomaston, 43 Me. 406, 69 Am. Dec. 69.

The maxim that "a man's house is his castle" does not protect a man's house as his property or imply that, as such, he has a right to defend it by extreme means. The sense in which the house has a peculiar immunity is that it is sacred for the protection of the man's person. A trespass upon his property is not a justification for killing the trespasser. It is a man's house, barred and inclosing his person, that is his castle. The lot of ground on which it stands has no such sanctity. When a man opens his door and puts himself partly outside of it, he relinquishes the protection which, remaining within and behind closed doors, it would have afforded him. Com. v. McWilliams, 21 Pa. Dist. R. 1131.

See DOMICIL; HOMESTEAD; FAMILY.

HOME PORT. Any port within a state in which the owner of a ship resides.

The question as to what constitutes a foreign port has usually arisen respecting the claims of material-men for supplies furnished to the master, and in this respect it has been held that the home port of a vessel does not necessarily imply the limits of the state in which her owner resides; The Merino, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 401, 6 L. Ed. 118; contra, The William and Emmeline, 1 Blatchf. & H. 66, Fed. Cas. No. 17,687, where Charleston, S. C., was held a foreign port in respect to New York.

In England by the Mercantile Law Amendment Act it is provided that every port within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Stark, and the islands adjacent to any one of them, being part of the dominions of Her Majesty, shall be deemed a home port; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97. See BOTTOMRY; PORT.

HOMESTALL. The mansion-house.

HOMESTEAD. The home place—the place where the home is. It is the home—the house and the adjoining land—where the head of the family dwells—the home farm. Hoitt v. Webb, 36 N. H. 166.

The place of a home or house; that part of a man's landed property which is about and contiguous to his dwelling-house; the land, or town, or city lot, upon which the family residence is situated. McKenzie v. Murphy, 24 Ark. 158; McCrosky v. Walker, 55 Ark. 303, 18 S. W. 169; Linn County Bank v. Hopkins, 47 Kan. 580, 28 Pac. 606, 27 Am. St. Rep. 309.

The term necessarily includes the idea of a residence; Stanley v. Greenwood, 24 Tex. 224, 76 Am. Dec. 106. It must be the owner's place of residence—the place where he lives; Philleo v. Smalley, 23 Tex. 502.

The homestead laws of various states are constitutional or statutory provisions for the exemption of a certain amount or value of real estate occupied by a debtor as his homestead from a forced sale for the payment of his debts. In some cases restraints are placed upon the alienation by the owner of his property, and in some cases the exempt property, upon the death of the owner, descends to the widow and minor children, free from liability for his debts. They are of a comparatively recent origin; Barney v. Leeds, 51 N. H. 261; but are now said to exist in all but seven states; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. Their policy has been eulogized in many decided cases. See Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 26; Charless v. Lamberson, 1 Ia. 439, 63 Am. Dec. 457; Franklin v. Coffee, 18 Tex. 415, 70 Am. Dec. 292; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 1.

Homestead acts have generally received a liberal construction; Campbell v. Adair, 45 Miss. 182; Mills v. Grant's Estate, 36 Vt. 271; Buxton v. Dearborn, 46 N. H. 43; contra, Fuselier v. Buckner, 28 La. Ann. 594; Olson v. Nelson, 3 Minn. 53 (Gil. 22). They cannot be considered as in derogation of the common law, inasmuch as, at common law, real estate was not liable to execution for the payment of debts; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 4; Lindley v. Davis, 7 Mont. 206, 14 Pac. 717; but see Ward v. Huhn, 16 Minn. 161 (Gil. 142); Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 501; Helfenstein & Gore v. Cave, 3 Ia. 287. Exemption laws giving a right to a homestead are for protection of the citizens of the state only; Prater v. Prater, 87 Tenn. 78, 9 S. W. 361, 10 Am. St. Rep. 623.

In some states there is a money limit put to the homestead; in others a limit of the quantity of land exempted. The value, under the statute, is the value at the time the homestead is designated; Iken v. Olenick, 42 Tex. 199; contra, Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 180. The courts cannot exempt money instead of land; Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 500; but see Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 180, where it was held that if the homestead exceeded the constitutional limit of value, and enough of it could not be separated and subjected to execution to reduce the value to that limit, the property would be sold and the constitutional amount set apart to the debtor. But where it can be separated, it will be, although it is within the same enclosure and used in connection with the dwelling for the use of the family; Herdman v. Cooper, 39 Ill. App. 330. In Casebolt v. Donaldson, 67 Mo. 308, it was held that the law confers a homestead right only in land and not in the proceeds of the sale of land.

The owner of an undivided interest in land is not entitled to a homestead exemption therein; Avans v. Everett, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 76; Greig v. Eastin, 30 La. Ann. 1130; McGrath v. Sinclair, 55 Miss. 89; Watson v. McKinnon, 73 Tex. 210, 11 S. W. 197; so where land is held by the parties as partners; Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Corbett, 5 Sawy. 543, Fed. Cas. No. 3,058. A learned author gives as the conclusive test of a homestead—"that the form, physical characteristics, and geography of the premises must be such as, when taken in connection with their use by the owner, and their value when the statute creates a limit as to value, will convey notice to persons of ordinary prudence who deal with him that they are his homestead." Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 104, citing Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Winter, 44 Tex. 597, as sustaining this doctrine.

"The courts have generally held that the mere fact that the debtor carries on his business upon his homestead premises or rents out a portion thereof, as in case of one who keeps a country tavern; Ackley v. Chamberlain, 16 Cal. 181, 76 Am. Dec. 561; or uses the lower part of his dwelling for business purposes; Orr v. Shraft, 22 Mich. 260; or who, living in town, keeps boarders and lodgers; Goldman v. Clark, 1 Nev. 607; or one who lets rooms in his dwelling to tenants; Mercier v. Chace, 11 Allen (Mass.) 194; or who rents out part for a store and uses another part for a printing office; Kelly v. Baker, 10 Minn. 154; (Gil. 124); does not deprive it of its homestead character." Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 120; nor does he, where he leases the greater part of his house to be used as a boarding-house, he retaining several rooms in which he and his family lived; Heathman v. Holmes, 94 Cal. 291, 29 Pac. 404. A building may not be used exclusively as a residence and yet retain the character of a homestead; Palmer v. Hawes, 80 Wis. 474, 50 N. W. 341. A store; Hubbell v. Canady, 58 Ill. 425; or mill; Greeley v. Scott, 2 Woods 657, Fed. Cas. No. 5,746 (per Bradley, J.); situated on the homestead lot; a smith-shop separated from it by a highway; West River Bank v. Gale, 42 Vt. 27; a brewery in which the debtor lives with his family; In re Tertelling, 2 Dill. 339, Fed. Cas. No. 13,842; a lawyer's office in a separate block; Pryor v. Stone, 19 Tex. 371, 70 Am. Dec. 341; and a garden adjoining the dwelling; Arendt v. Mace, 76 Cal. 315, 18 Pac. 376, 9 Am. St. Rep. 207; a business block, partly a residence; De Ford v. Painter, 3 Okl. 80, 41 Pac. 96, 30 L. R. A. 722; part store-room and part dwelling; Corey v. Schuster, 44 Neb. 269, 62 N. W. 470; have been included within the rule. A house built in the business part of the town and used principally as a store-building, though the owner sleeps in a small back room and takes his meals elsewhere, is not a homestead; Garrett v. Jones, 95 Ala. 96, 10 South. 702. And in Iowa a building occupied at once for a dwelling and for business purposes may be divided horizontally and the business part sold in execution; Rhodes v. McCormack, 4 Ia. 368, 68 Am. Dec. 663; but see, contra, Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 134, n.; Phelps v. Rooney, 9 Wis. 70, 76 Am. Dec. 244; "and in other states a homestead cannot be reserved in tenements and separate buildings occupied by tenements, although upon the enclosure whereon is situated the debtor's dwelling;" Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 120; Hoitt v. Webb, 36 N. H. 158; Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 220, 91 Am. Dec. 637; Casselman v. Packard, 16 Wis. 114, 82 Am. Dec. 710. Nor can a person have two homesteads at the same time; Wheeler v. Smith, 62 Mich. 373, 28 N. W. 907; Waggle v. Worthy, 74 Cal. 266, 15 Pac. 831, 5 Am. St. Rep. 440; Archibald v. Jacobs, 69 Tex. 248, 6 S. W. 177. Where land was occupied by a tenant at the time of levy and execution, the levy is not void as on a homestead because the owner intended at some future time to occupy it as a house; Evans v. Calman, 92 Mich. 427, 52 N. W. 787, 31 Am. St. Rep. 606.

The homestead laws are not to be taken only to save a mere shelter for the debtor and his family, but to give him the full enjoyment of the entire lot of ground exempted, to be used either in the cultivation of it, or in the erection and use of buildings on it, either for his own business or for deriving income in the way of rent; Stevens v. Hollingsworth, 74 Ill. 206; and the homestead right may be conveyed separately from the fee; Lorimer v. Marshall, 44 Ill. App. 645.

There is a conflict of decision as to whether a tract of land detached from the one on which the homestead dwelling-house is built, but used by the debtor in connection with it, is exempt. The opinion supported by the weight of authority is that it is not; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 145; Reynolds v. Hull, 36 Ia. 394; Kresin v. Mau, 15 Minn. 116 (Gil. 87); Adams v. Jenkins, 16 Gray (Mass.) 146; Bunker v. Locke, 15 Wis. 635; Linn County Bank v. Hopkins, 47 Kan. 580, 28 Pac. 606, 27 Am. St. Rep. 309; McCrosky v. Walker, 55 Ark. 303, 18 S. W. 169; Dicus v. Hall, 83 Ala. 159, 3 South. 239; contra, Mayho v. Cotton, 69 N. C. 289; Williams v. Willis, 84 Tex. 398, 19 S. W. 683; Perkins v. Quigley, 62 Mo. 498; Acker v. Trueland, 56 Miss. 30. A homestead may be designated in an undivided interest in lands; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Kopplin, 1 Kan. App. 599, 42 Pac. 263; but not in partnership real estate; Michigan Trust Co. v. Chapin, 106 Mich. 384, 64 N. W. 334, 58 Am. St. Rep. 490; or by a cotenant in lands held in common; Rosenthal v. Bank, 110 Cal. 198, 42 Pac. 640; or by a remainderman, though after the estate vests in possession it may be held as a homestead against a judgment creditor; Stern v. Lee, 115 N. C. 426, 20 S. E. 736, 26 L. R. A. 814. It may be claimed in lands situated in different counties; Springer v. Colwell, 116 N. C. 520, 21 S. E. 301.

A homestead law, so far as it attempts to withdraw from the reach of creditors property which would have been within their reach under the laws in force at the time the debt was contracted, is unconstitutional; Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 212; reversing 44 Ga. 353; Hannum v. McInturf, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 225.

Provisions exist in most of the states forbidding the alienation of the property designated as a homestead, except when the deed is joined in by the wife; Myers v. Evans, 81 Tex. 317, 16 S. W. 1060; Simpson v. Houston, 97 N. C. 344, 2 S. E. 651, 2 Am. St. Rep. 297. In others the payment of purchase money can be secured by a mortgage; so may the payment of purchase money and money borrowed for improvements on the property. Where the existence of a homestead is made to depend upon a selection by the debtor, the latter may alien the property at any time prior to such selection, by the usual formalities; People v. Plumsted, 2 Mich. 465. The purchaser in good faith of a homestead succeeds to the debtor's rights and will be protected against his creditors; Shackleford v. Todhunter, 4 Ill. App. 271. A homestead right is not forfeited by a conveyance of land with the intent to defraud creditors; Dortch v. Benton, 98 N. C. 190, 3 S. E. 638, 2 Am. St. Rep. 331; Snapp v. Snapp, 87 Ky. 554, 9 S. W. 705; Horton v. Kelly, 40 Minn. 193, 41 N. W. 1031; Wood v. Timmerman, 29 S. C. 175, 7 S. E. 74.

Homesteads may be designated by one of three ways: 1, By a public notice of record; 2, by visible occupancy and use; 3, by the actual setting apart of the homestead under the direction of a court of justice; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 230. Statutory provisions, if they exist, must be followed. In the absence of a statutory provision, filing a declaration of intention to designate a certain property as a homestead has no legal effect; Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 23. The right to a homestead existing at the time the statute is passed is not affected by a declaration under the statute; Hebert v. Mayer, 47 La. Ann. 563, 17 South. 131.

As to construction of declarations and what is sufficient, see Dunlop v. Blacker, 93 Ga. 819, 21 S. E. 135; In re Ogburn's Estate, 105 Cal. 95, 38 Pac. 498. A declaration enures to the benefit of the wife whether she knows of it or not; Security Loan & Trust Co. v. Kauffman, 108 Cal. 214, 41 Pac. 467; and a wife may make a declaration; Mutual Benefit Bldg. Ass'n v. Tanner, 96 Ga. 338, 23 S. E. 403. As to the designation of a homestead by occupancy, "it may be laid down as the prevalent doctrine that actual residence by the head of the family prior to the contraction of the debt, etc., he occupying it as a home and with the intention of dedicating it to the uses of a residence for his family, will be sufficient to impress upon the premises so occupied the character of a homestead." Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 260. This designation will be sufficient to preserve the homestead character for the benefit of the widow and minor children; Johnston v. Turner, 29 Ark. 280. In order to give the character of a homestead, the purchase must always be with the intent of present, and not simply future, occupancy; Swenson v. Kiehl, 21 Kan. 533; Van Ratcliff v. Call, 72 Tex. 491, 10 S. W. 578; Bowles v. Hoard, 71 Mich. 150, 39 N. W. 24. And temporary absence of the owner will not divest him of the right to the same; Deering & Co. v. Beard, 48 Kan. 16, 28 Pac. 981; Robinson v. Swearingen, 55 Ark. 55, 17 S. W. 365. Actual occupancy is necessary; Givans v. Dewey, 47 Ia. 414; Wilson v. Swasey (Tex.) 20 S. W. 48; Tillar v. Bass, 57 Ark. 179, 21 S. W. 34; Turner v. Turner, 107 Ala. 465, 18 South. 210, 54 Am. St. Rep. 110. But one occupying a house with persons whom he is under no obligation to support, is not a householder within the homestead act; Holnback v. Wilson, 159 Ill. 148, 42 N. E. 169. When one occupies a homestead but has a fixed intention of occupying and holding other lands as such and is prevented by death, the latter will be treated as his homestead; Ross v. Porter, 72 Miss. 361, 16 South. 906.

Of the debts for which a homestead is liable, the first is taxes; Crine v. Johns, 96 Ga. 220, 22 S. E. 913. An assessment for municipal improvements is not a "tax" within the provision of a state constitution permitting a homestead to be subjected to a forced sale for taxes; Higgins v. Bordages, 88 Tex. 458, 31 S. W. 52, 803, 53 Am. St. Rep. 770, overruling Lufkin v. City of Galveston, 58 Tex. 549. This view is said to be supported by an almost unbroken line of decisions; 4 Ballard's Ann. of R. P. § 346; 3 id. § 720. A homestead may be sold on a judgment for alimony; Mahoney v. Mahoney, 59 Minn. 347, 61 N. W. 334.

Homesteads have also been held liable to an equitable lien for materials furnished for their improvement; Ross v. Perry, 105 Ala. 533, 16 South. 915; to prior liens on the land; Aldrich v. Boice, 56 Kan. 170, 42 Pac. 695; or contracts existing when the statute is enacted; Dunagan v. Webster, 93 Ga. 540, 21 S. E. 65; Dunn v. Stevens, 62 Minn. 380, 64 N. W. 924, 65 N. W. 348. When the statute makes it liable to debts existing at the time of its purchase this includes renewal of prior notes; Robinson v. Leach, 67 Vt. 128, 31 Atl. 32, 27 L. R. A. 303, 48 Am. St. Rep. 807.

When the exemption does not apply to a debt contracted for the purchase of the homestead, it has been held that the homestead cannot be sold to pay money borrowed from a third person to pay off that debt; Loftis v. Loftis, 94 Tenn. 232, 28 S. W. 1091; Eyster v. Hatheway, 50 Ill. 521, 99 Am. Dec. 537; Dreese v. Myers, 52 Kan. 126, 34 Pac. 349, 39 Am. St. Rep. 336; contra, Coleman's Adm'r v. Parrott (Ky.) 32 S. W. 679. There is however, a conflict of authority on this point from which it is said to be impossible to extract any consistent rule. See Thomp. Hom. & Ex. §§ 338–347; Waples, Hom. & Ex. 337–346; 99 Am. Dec. 574, note.

Money due on an insurance policy upon homestead property is not subject to garnishment; Chase v. Swayne, 88 Tex. 218, 30 S. W. 1049, 53 Am. St. Rep. 742; Reynolds v. Haines, 83 Ia. 342, 49 N. W. 851, 13 L. R. A. 719, 32 Am. St. Rep. 311; Houghton v. Lee, 50 Cal. 101; Culbertson v. Cox, 29 Minn. 309, 13 N. W. 177, 43 Am. Rep. 204; Probst v. Scott, 31 Ark. 652; Bernheim v. Davitt (Ky.) 5 S. W. 193.

The increase in value of a homestead set apart to a widow and child above the limit of the statute does not constitute assets for further administration of the decedent's estate where the statute makes the homestead the absolute property of those to whom it is set apart; In re Bedford's Estate, 34 Utah 24, 95 Pac. 518, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 728, 16 Ann. Cas. 118; and this is in accordance with the weight of authority in the case of homesteads in a decedent's estate, though in the lifetime of the husband a re-valuation would seem generally to be allowed. See 44 L. R. A. 400, note, where the earlier cases are collected and 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 728, note, which contains the later ones.

The right of exemption is lost by the unequivocal abandonment of the homestead by the owner, with the intention of no longer treating it as his place of residence; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 263, citing Archibald v. Jacobs, 69 Tex. 248, 6 S. W. 177; Waples, Hom. & Ex. 558. A lease of land for more than a year, and a residence elsewhere, was held to forfeit the homestead; Boyle v. Shulman, 59 Ala. 566; also the owner's removal from the state; Jackson v. Du Bose, 87 Ga. 761, 13 S. E. 916; Lee v. Moseley, 101 N. C. 311, 7 S. E. 874, 2 L. R. A. 106. The building situated on the homestead loses its exemption from seizure and sale upon being segregated from the homestead property; Curtis v. Des Jardins, 55 Ark. 126, 17 S. W. 709.

To establish an abandonment there must be a removal with the intention of not returning; Corey v. Schuster, 44 Neb. 269, 62 N. W. 470; but when removal for a temporary purpose is permitted by statute, it must be for a fixed and temporary purpose or for a temporary reason; Moore v. Smead, 89 Wis. 558, 62 N. W. 426. To leave a homestead farm and move in town to become a merchant, intending to return "if he quit business," was an abandonment; Wolf v. Hawkins, 60 Ark. 262, 29 S. W. 892. See also Lehman, Durr & Co. v. Bryan, 67 Ala. 558; Smith v. Bunn, 75 Mo. 559. Leaving a tenant at will in possession is not abandonment; Derickson v. Gilespie (Ky.) 32 S. W. 1084; nor temporary absence with intention to reoccupy; Robson v. Hough, 56 Ark. 621, 20 S. W. 523; nor mere removal with or without intention of returning; Donaldson v. Lamprey, 29 Minn. 20, 11 N. W. 119; nor is storing goods in the house and sleeping in it at times, the wife being insane.

In California, to constitute abandonment of homestead requires a declaration to that effect, signed, acknowledged and recorded. Mere removal without intention of returning is held not sufficient; Tipton v. Martin, 71 Cal. 325, 12 Pac. 244; nor letting it to a tenant at will with an option to purchase at a price named, and leaving to earn a livelihood with intention to return; Boot v. Brewster, 75 Ia. 631, 36 N. W. 649, 9 Am. St. Rep. 515; nor, upon its destruction by fire, application to another for aid in rebuilding, saying that if it was refused he must abandon it, is a finding of abandonment justified; Stewart v. Rhoades, 39 Minn. 193, 39 N. W. 141. An abandonment does not relate back so as to give validity to a void prior sale of the homestead under an execution; Asher v. Sekofsky, 10 Wash. 379, 38 Pac. 1133.

It has been held that the homestead may be abandoned by a husband's conveyance and the removal to another place against the desire of the wife; Marler v. Handy, 88 Tex. 421, 31 S. W. 636; Guiod v. Guiod, 14 Cal. 507, 76 Am. Dec. 440; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 276; contra, Sharp v. Mortgage Co., 95 Ga. 415, 22 S. E. 633. See ABANDONMENT.

When the homestead character has once attached, it may persist for the benefit of a single individual, who is the sole surviving member of the family; Weaver v. Bank, 76 Kan. 540, 94 Pac. 273, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 110, 123 Am. St. Rep. 155; Burns v. Keas, 21 Ia. 257; Stults v. Sale, 92 Ky. 5, 17 S. W. 148, 13 L. R. A. 743, 36 Am. St. Rep. 575; Silloway v. Brown, 12 Allen (Mass.) 30; Kimbrel v. Willis, 97 Ill. 494; Stanley v. Snyder, 43 Ark. 429; Beckmann v. Meyer, 75 Mo. 333; Blum v. Gaines, 57 Tex. 119; but that it does not continue where the family has ceased to occupy the original homestead and a single individual only is in possession is held by other courts; Santa Cruz Bank v. Cooper, 56 Cal. 339; Cooper v. Cooper, 24 Ohio St. 488; Fullerton v. Sherrill, 114 Ia. 511, 87 N. W. 419; Hill v. Franklin, 54 Miss. 632. A valid decree of divorce, where there are no children, terminates the homestead rights; Brady v. Kreuger, 8 S. D. 464, 66 N. W. 1083, 59 Am. St. Rep. 771; Kern v. Field, 68 Minn. 317, 71 N. W. 393, 64 Am. St. Rep. 479; Burns v. Lewis, 86 Ga. 591, 13 S. E. 123; Arp v. Jacobs, 3 Wyo. 489, 27 Pac. 800. Where the wife secured the divorce, the custody of the children, and a lump sum as alimony, she was held to lose her homestead rights in property remaining in the possession of her husband; Barkman v. Barkman, 209 Ill. 269, 70 N. E. 652; but the husband in such a case was held not to lose his right of homestead exemption, as he was still liable for the support of his children; Biffle v. Pullam, 114 Mo. 50, 21 S. W. 450; Hall v. Fields, 81 Tex. 553, 17 S. W. 82.

A deed or mortgage of a homestead must be the joint conveyance of the husband and wife; Van Sandt v. Alvis, 109 Cal. 165, 41 Pac. 1014, 50 Am. St. Rep. 25; Seiffert & Wiese Lumber Co. v. Hartwell, 94 Ia. 576, 63 N. W. 333, 58 Am. St. Rep. 413. A mere release of dower by the wife is not sufficient; Bank of Harrison v. Gibson, 60 Ark. 269, 30 S. W. 39; nor an execution by the husband under a power of attorney from the wife; Wallace v. Ins. Co., 54 Kan. 442, 38 Pac. 489, 26 L. R. A. 806, 45 Am. St. Rep. 288. And a conveyance by the claimant to his or her wife or husband, not subscribed or acknowledged by the latter is a nullity; Anderson v. Smith, 159 Ill. 93, 42 N. E. 306. Even when the wife is insane, a conveyance by the husband is void; Thompson v. Security Co., 110 Ala. 400, 18 South. 315, 55 Am. St. Rep. 29; Alexander v. Vennum, 61 Ia. 160, 16 N. W. 80; Whitlock v. Gosson, 35 Neb. 829, 53 N. W. 980; and so also where the wife is living apart from her husband; Herron v. Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, 72 Wis. 553, 40 N. W. 149; Bradford v. Trust Co., 47 Kan. 587, 28 Pac. 702; Johnston v. Turner, 29 Ark. 280; Castlebury v. Maynard, 95 N. C. 281. See 65 Am. Dec. 481, note.

This right of exemption depends upon the construction of statutes in various states. The decisions are, therefore, far from harmonious.

Every person who is the head of a family, or is over 21 years of age and is a citizen, or has declared his intention to become such, also soldiers, seamen, and members of the marine corps, including officers, who have served in the rebellion for ninety days, and remained loyal to the government, may take up a quarter section or less of unappropriated public lands, as a homestead; U. S. R. S. § 2289 et seq.

The subject has been fully treated in Judge Thompson's work frequently cited above. See also 36 Am. Rep. 728, note; 10 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 1, 137; French v. Tumlin, 10 Am. Law Reg. (N. S.) 641, Fed. Cas. No. 5,104 (by Judge Dillon). See FAMILY; EXEMPTION; MANOR; MANSION.

HOMICIDE (Lat. homo, a man, cedere, to kill). The killing any human creature. 4 Bla. Com. 177.

Excusable homicide is that which takes place under such circumstances of accident or necessity that the party cannot strictly be said to have committed the act wilfully and intentionally, and whereby he is relieved from the penalty annexed to the commission of a felonious homicide.

Felonious homicide is that committed wilfully under such circumstances as to render it punishable.

Justifiable homicide is that committed with full intent, but under such circumstances of duty as to render the act one proper to be performed.

According to Blackstone, 4 Com. 177, homicide is the killing of any human creature. This is the most extensive sense of this word, in which the intention is not considered. But in a more limited sense, it is always understood that the killing is by human agency; and Hawkins defines it to be the killing of a man by a man. 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 8, § 2. See Dalloz. Dict.; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 303, 52 Am. Dec. 711. Homicide may perhaps be described to be the destruction of the life of one human being, either by himself or by the act, procurement, or culpable omission of another. When the death has been intentionally caused by the deceased himself, the offender is called felo de se; when it is caused by another, it is justifiable, excusable, or felonious homicide.

The distinction between justifiable and excusable homicide is that in the former the killing takes place without any manner of fault on the part of the slayer; in the latter there is some slight fault, or at any rate the absence of any duty rendering the act a proper one to be performed, although the blame is so slight as not to render the party punishable. The distinction is very frequently disregarded, and would seem to be of little practical utility; See 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 617. But between justifiable or excusable and felonious homicide the distinction, it will be evident, is of great importance. 1 East, Pl. Cr. 260, gives the following example: "If a person driving a carriage happen to kill another, if he saw or had timely notice of the mischief likely to ensue, and yet wilfully drove on, it will be murder; if he might have seen the danger, but did not look before him, it will be manslaughter; but if the accident happened in such a manner that no want of due care could be imputed to the driver, it will be accidental death and excusable homicide." See 4 Bla. Com. 176; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 580; Cl. Cr. L. 131.

There must be a person in actual existence; 6 C. & P. 349; 7 id. 814, 850; 9 id. 25; Johnson v. State (Tex.) 24 S. W. 285; but the destruction of human life at any period after birth is homicide, however near it may be to extinction from any other cause; 2 C. & K. 784; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 632; but a child in the act of being born would not be included; 5 C. & P. 539; and the death must have occurred within a year and a day from the time the injury was received; State v. Orrell, 12 N. C. 139, 17 Am. Dec. 563; People v. Kelly, 6 Cal. 210; Edmondson v. State, 41 Tex. 496; State v. Mayfield, 66 Mo. 125; Com. v. Macloon, 101 Mass. 6, 100 Am. Dec. 89. It is not necessary that the injury inflicted was the sole cause of the death, provided it contributed mediately or immediately in a degree sufficient for the law's notice; State v. Matthews, 38 La. Ann. 795; 2 Bish. Cr. Law §§ 637, 638; State v. Smith, 10 Nev. 106. A person illegally arrested may use such force as is necessary to regain his liberty, and should there be reasonable ground to believe that the officer making the arrest intends shooting the prisoner to prevent his escape, such prisoner may shoot the officer in self-defence; Miers v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 161, 29 S. W. 1074, 53 Am. St. Rep. 705. So where one is assaulted and there is reasonable ground for him to fear loss of his life, or great bodily harm, he is not obliged to retreat nor consider whether he may so act in safety, but he is entitled to stand his ground and meet any attack made upon him with a deadly weapon, even if in so doing he cause the death of his assailant; Beard v. U. S., 158 U. S. 550, 15 Sup. Ct. 962, 39 L. Ed. 1086; Page v. State, 141 Ind. 236, 40 N. E. 745.

Where malice and intent are elements of murder in the second degree, a person is not as a matter of law guilty of that crime because he sets a spring gun from which a homicide results; State v. Marfaudille, 48 Wash. 117, 92 Pac. 939, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 346, 15 Ann. Cas. 584, where the defendant had placed the spring gun in his locked trunk, having warned the deceased of its presence there. She, having a right to enter his room, procured the key, unlocked the trunk and was killed. The owner of a shop might be justified in case of the death of a burglar for having placed a spring gun on his premises; State v. Moore, 31 Conn. 479, 83 Am. Dec. 159.

The person killed, to constitute the homicide felonious, must have been entitled to his existence. Thus, a soldier of the enemy in time of war has no right to his life, but may be killed. A criminal sentenced to be hanged has no right to his life; but no person can take it but the authorized officer, in the prescribed manner. Where a soldier, in the regular army, to prevent an escape, shot at a fleeing prisoner and killed a bystander, it was held that he acted in the supposed discharge of his duty and was not guilty of manslaughter; U. S. v. Lipsett, 156 Fed. 65.

The elements of felonious homicide under the United States laws are to be determined by the principles of common law; U. S. v. Lewis, 111 Fed. 630.

In Feudal Law. A vassal; one who, having received a feud, is bound to do homage and military service for his land; variously called vassalus, vassus, miles, cliens, feodalis, tenens per servitium militare, sometimes baro, and most frequently leudes. Spelman, Gloss. Homo is sometimes also used for a tenant by socage, and sometimes for any dependent. A homo claimed the privilege of having his cause and person tried only in the court of his lord. Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. 152.

Homo chartularius. A slave manumitted by charter. Homo commendatus. In feudal law. One who surrendered himself into the power of another for the sake of protection or support. See COMMENDATION. Homo ecclesiasticus. A church vassal; one who was bound to serve a church, especially to do service of an agricultural character. Spel. Gloss. Homo exercitalis. A man of the army (exercitus); a soldier. Homo-feodalis. A vassal or tenant; one who held a fee (feodum), or part of a fee. Spel. Gloss. Homo fiscalis, or fiscalinus. A servant or vassal belonging to the treasury or fiscus. Homo francus. In old English law. A freeman. A Frenchman. Homo ingenuus. A free man. A free and lawful man. A yeoman. Homo liber. A freeman. Homo ligius. A liege man; a subject; a king's vassal. The vassal of a subject. Homo novus. In feudal law. A new tenant or vassal; one who was invested with a new fee. Spel. Gloss. Homo pertinens. In feudal law. A feudal bondman or vassal, one who belonged to the soil (qui glebæ adscribitur). Homo regius. A king's vassal. Homo Romanus. A Roman. An appellation given to the old inhabitants of Gaul and other Roman provinces, and retained in the law of the barbarous nations. Spel. Gloss. Homo trium litterarum. A man of three letters; that is the three letters, "f," "u," "r," composing the Latin word fur meaning "thief."

HOMOLOGACION. In Spanish Law. The tacit consent and approval, inferred by law from the omission of the parties, for the space of ten days, to complain of the sentences of arbitrators, appointment of syndics, or assignees, of insolvents, settlements of successions, etc. Also, the approval given by the judge of certain acts and agreements for the purpose of rendering them more binding and executory. Escriche.

HOMOLOGATION. In Civil Law. Approbation; confirmation by a court of justice; a judgment which orders the execution of some act: as, the approbation of an award and ordering execution on the same. Merlin, Répert.; La. Civ. Code; Dig. 4. 8; 7 Toullier, n. 224. See L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1026. To homologate is to say the like, similiter dicere. Viales' Syndics v. Gardenier, 9 Mart. O. S. (La.) 324.

A judgment homologating, as far as not opposed, the account of distribution of a syndic, is res judicata, except as to opponents, whether the account was correct or not; Searcy v. Creditors, 46 La. Ann. 376, 14 South. 910.

HOND HABEND. See HAND HABEND.

HONOR. In English Law. See HONOUR.

In Common Law. To accept a bill of exchange; to pay a bill accepted, or a promissory note, on the day it becomes due. 7 Taunt. 164.

HONORABLE. A title of distinction or respect.

In England it is given to the younger sons of earls, to the children of viscounts and barons, to persons occupying official places of trust and honor, and to the house of commons as a body, and to members of the Executive Councils in India and the colonies. In the United States it is usually given to persons who hold or have held positions of importance under the national or state government.

HONORARIUM. Something given in gratitude for services rendered.

A voluntary donation in consideration of services which admit of no compensation in money; in particular to advocates at law, deemed to practice for honor or influence and not for fees. McDonald v. Napier, 14 Ga. 89.

It is so far of the nature of a gift that it cannot be sued for; Mooney v. Lloyd, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 412; 1 Chitty, Bailm. 38; 3 Bla. Com. 28. Of this character are in England, the professional fees of barristers and of physicians. The same rule once prevailed in Pennsylvania, but was afterwards rejected; Balsbaugh v. Frazer, 19 Pa. 95; and now prevails in New Jersey; Seeley v. Crane, 15 N. J. L. 35; and to some extent in the federal courts, as applied to counsel in the special sense of the term; Weeks, Atty. 548; Law v. Ewell, 2 Cra. C. C. 144, Fed. Cas. No. 8,127. In many states the contrary rule has been expressly laid down; Adams v. Stevens, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 452 (a full discussion by Walworth, C.); Thurston v. Percival, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 415. The payment of the fees of English solicitors, attorneys, and proctors is provided for by statute and rules of court. See Weeks, Atty. 536. See 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 28.

HONORARY CANONS. Those without emolument. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, § 23.

HONORARY FEUDS. Titles of nobility which were not of a divisible nature, but could only be inherited by the eldest son in exclusion of the rest. 2 Bla. Com. 56; Wright, Tenures 32.

HONORARY SERVICES. Services by which lands in grand serjeantry were held: such as, to hold the king's banner, or to hold his head in the ship which carried him from Dover to Whitsand, etc. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 73, and note.

HONOUR. The seignory of a lord paramount. 2 Bla. Com. 91. In Domesday Book, the complex of landed property and rights combined in one person and perpetuated as a unit after the original holder has given place to others. Later, great fiefs created for well-known men; also the capital manor of a locality. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. 348.

HOO. A hill. Co. Litt. 5 b.

HOPCON. A valley. Cowell.

HOPE. A valley. Co. Litt. 5 b.

HORA AURORÆ. The morning bell.

HORÆ JUDICIÆ (Lat.). Hours judicial, or those in which judges sit in court. In Fortesque's time, these were from 8 to 11 A. M., and the courts of law were not open in the afternoon. Co. Litt. 135 a; Co. 2d Inst. 246; Fortesque 51, p. 120, note.

HORDERA. A treasurer. Du Cange.

HORDERIUM. A hoard, treasury, or repository. Cowell.

HORN TENURE. Tenure by winding a horn on approach of an enemy, called tenure by cornage. If lands were held by this tenure of the king, it was grand serjeanty; if of a private person, knight-service. Many anciently so held their lands towards the Picts' Wall. Co. Litt. § 156; Camd. Britan. 609.

HORNBOOK. A book containing the first principles of any science or branch of knowledge; a primer, so called because the material was horn.

Horn book law. The elementary or rudimentary law, colloquially so called.

HORNGELD. A forest tax paid for horned beasts, also an acquittance thereof, which was granted by the king unto such as he thought good. Cowell; Toml.

HORREUM. A place for keeping grain, a storehouse. Calvinus, Lex.; Bract. fol. 48.

HORS DE SON FEE (Fr. out of his fee). In Old English Law. A plea to an action brought by one who claimed to be lord for rent-services as issuing out of his land, by which the defendant asserted that the land in question was out of the fee of the demandant. 9 Co. 30; 2 Mod. 104.

HORS WEALH. In Old English Law. The wealh, or Briton who had the care of the king's horses.

HORS WEARD. In Old English Law. A service or corvée, consisting in watching the horses of the lord. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HORSE. Until a horse has attained the age of four years he is called a colt. 1 Russ. & R. 416. This word is sometimes used as a generic name for all animals of the horse kind; Taylor v. State, 44 Ga. 263; State v. Dunnavant, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 9, 5 Am. Dec. 530. See Yelv. 67 a; Miller v. Hahn, 84 N. C. 226. It is also used to include every description of the male, as gelding or stallion, in contradistinction to the female; Owens v. State, 38 Tex. 555. In a statute giving a remedy against railroad companies for injuries to horses and cattle, it includes mules; Toledo, Wabash & W. Ry. Co. v. Cole, 50 Ill. 184. The exemption of a horse from execution has been held to include whatever is essential to his enjoyment, as shoes and saddle; Dearborn v. Phillips, 21 Tex. 449; and it may include an ass or a jackass; Richardson v. Duncan, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 222; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Brubaker, 47 Ill. 463; but not a stallion not kept for farm work; Robert v. Adams, 38 Cal. 383, 99 Am. Dec. 413.

HORSE GUARDS. The name applied to the public office in Whitehall appropriated to the departments under the general-commanding-in-chief. The term is also used conventionally to signify the military authorities at the head of army affairs, in contradistinction to the civil chief, the secretary of state for war.

HORSE RACE. Any race in which any horse, mare, or gelding is run or made to run in competition with any other horse, mare, or gelding or against time, for any prize of what nature or kind soever, or for any bet or wager made or to be made in respect to any such horse, mare, or gelding or the riders thereof, and at which more than twenty persons are present. Stat. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 18, s. 1.

The first statute regarding horse-racing was passed in 1664, entitled an act against deceitful, disorderly, and excessive gaming; but this act being found insufficient to prevent the abuses at which it was directed, the statute 9 Anne, c. 14, was passed in 1710, reciting that all mortgages and instruments, where the consideration was money won by gaming or betting, or the repayment of money lent at such gaming and betting, should be void; and that the loser of ten pounds or upward on such gaming or betting might, within three months, sue and recover back treble the value of his losses; and that any person winning ten pounds or upwards might be indicted and, on conviction, forfeit five times the value so won, and if won by cheating, the winner should be deemed infamous, and suffer such corporal punishment as in cases of wilful perjury. This act, being only directed to races at which betting of ten pounds or over was indulged, increased the number at which the limit was below that amount to such an extent that it was found necessary to restrict still further the practice, and in 1740 and 1745 the acts 13 Geo. II. c. 19 and 18 Geo. II. c. 34 went into effect. The latter, as an encouragement to breeders, legalized those races at which the stakes amounted to fifty pounds, and also made a distinction between matches and races. So much of the acts 16 Car. II. c. 7 and 9 Anne, c. 14 as rendered void any note, bill or mortgage given for a gambling contract was repealed during the reign of William IV. and they were amended so as to make such instruments not void, but given for an illegal consideration; 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 41. This statute is still in force. The acts 3 & 4 Vict. c. 5 and 8 & 9 Vict. c, 109 repealed the former acts of 16 Car. II. c. 7, and all of 9 Anne, c. 14 that had not already been altered by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 41. The act 17 & 18 Vict. c. 38 was supplementary to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, as were also 37 Vict. c. 15 and 42 & 43 Vict. c. 18, and 55 Vict. c. 9.

Contributions or subscriptions towards any plate, prize, or sum of money to be awarded to the winner of any lawful horse race are not unlawful and do not constitute a wager; [1895] 1 Q. B. 698; but a match between two horses, for a sum of money contributed by their respective owners, although legal, is a void contract within the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109; and money in the hands of a stakeholder or loser cannot be recovered by the winner in an action at law; 1 C. P. D. 573; and see 2 Ex. D. 442 (overruling 5 C. B. 831); 5 App. Cas. 342 approving 2 Ex. D. 442.

The stakeholder is bound to retain the money in his hands until it is clearly decided which party is entitled to it; 2 M. & W. 369; but he is merely a stakeholder, and has no right to the stakes until he actually receives them in his hands; 5 C. & P. 147. Where the race has not been, and cannot be, run, the position of the stakeholder is that of a debtor to each party for the amount contributed by each, and a specific demand of the stake from him is unnecessary; but where there is a possibility that the race may still be run and decided, each party must make a specific demand of his stake from the stakeholder before he can recover from him; 28 L. J. Q. B. 126. In a lawful horse race, the payment of entrance money to the stakeholder constitutes a legal contract, and such money cannot be recovered back unless there is a mutual rescission of the contract; 2 M. & W. 369. As to the recovery back of money paid to a stakeholder pending the result of an illegal contest, it may be recovered before the contest takes place, but not afterwards; 8 B. & C. 226; Deaver v. Bennett, 29 Neb. 812, 46 N. W. 161, 26 Am. St. Rep. 415; but the former case, although regarded as an authority; [1895] 1 Q. B. 698; Wise v. Rose, 110 Cal. 159, 42 Pac. 569; has been doubted; 14 M. & W. 712; and held irreconcilable with the statute; 9 Ir. C. L. R. 13. In Diggs v. Higgs, 2 Ex. D. 442, the court say "what legal right there may be to recover back money paid under such a contract, the statute leaves it untouched." In the United States it is held that the depositor may revoke the stakeholder's authority to pay over the stakes and bring an action against him for its recovery; Corson v. Neatheny, 9 Col. 212, 11 Pac. 82; and if, after the receipt of such notice, the stakeholder pay over the money to the winner, he is liable to the depositor; Wise v. Rose, 110 Cal. 159, 42 Pac. 569.

If the owner of a horse entered for a race is aware of its disqualification he may recover his money back before the race, but not afterwards; 2 C. & P. 608.

Money expended by one part owner of a race horse for the common benefit of another owner and himself, with the understanding that the owners are to share alike in the winnings of such horse, is recoverable (from the second owner), to the amount of one-half the sum expended where the horse loses the race; 26 L. J. C. P. 181.

In this country the decisions as to whether horse racing constitutes gaming within the statutes are not uniform. It has been held, to be gaming or a gambling device; Redman v. State, 33 Ala. 428; State v. Rorie, 23 Ark. 726; Corson v. Neatheny, 9 Cal. 214, 11 Pac. 82; Cheesum v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 332, 44 Am. Dec. 771; Cain v. McHarry, 2 Bush (Ky.) 263; Dyer v. Benson, 69 Ga. 609; Van Valkenburgh v. Torrey, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 252; Mosher v. Griffin, 51 Ill. 184, 99 Am. Dec. 541; Wade v. Deming, 9 Ind. 35; Grace v. McElroy, 1 Allen (Mass.) 563; People v. Weithoff, 51 Mich. 212, 16 N. W. 442, 47 Am. Rep. 557; Wilkinson v. Tousley, 16 Minn. 299 (Gil. 263), 10 Am. Rep. 139; State v. Hayden, 31 Mo. 35; Haywood v. Sheldon, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 88; State v. Catchings, 43 Tex. 654; Ellis v. Beale, 18 Me. 337, 36 Am. Dec. 726; contra, Com. v. Shelton, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 592; State v. Lemon, 46 Mo. 375.

Racing a horse on or along a public road, though no bet has been offered on the result of such race, has been held an indictable offence; State v. Fidler, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 502; and the fact that a charter has been granted for a race-course will not authorize betting thereon; Cain v. McHarry, 2 Bush (Ky.) 263. In many of the states, however, the times at, and seasons in, which horse racing may be indulged are regulated by statutes which tax and license the racing associations. The trotting for a purse or premium contributed or subscribed by other persons is not trotting for a wager; Ballard v. Brown, 67 Vt. 586, 32 Atl. 485; People v. Fallon, 152 N. Y. 12, 46 N. E. 296, 37 L. R. A. 227, 57 Am. St. Rep. 492; Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532; Delier v. Agricultural Society, 57 Ia. 481, 10 N. W. 872; Misner v. Knapp, 13 Or. 135, 9 Pac. 65, 57 Am. Rep. 6; Porter v. Day, 71 Wis. 296, 37 N. W. 259; Alvord v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58; but see Dudley v. Jockey Club, 14 Misc. 58, 35 N. Y. Supp. 245; Comly v. Hillegass, 94 Pa. 132, 39 Am. Rep. 774; Bronson Agricultural & Breeders' Ass'n v. Ramsdell, 24 Mich. 441.

Pools on horse races are games within the statute against gaming; People v. Weithoff, 51 Mich. 203, 16 N. W. 442, 47 Am. Rep. 557; Swigart v. People, 154 Ill. 284, 40 N. E. 432; contra, James v. State, 63 Md. 242; and the rule applies to pools sold in one state on a race to be run in another; Williams v. State, 92 Tenn. 275, 21 S. W. 662; Lacey v. Palmer, 93 Va. 159, 24 S. E. 930, 31 L. R. A. 822, 57 Am. St. Rep. 795; but not where only the orders for bets were taken and transmitted by telegraph, as it was held that the actual betting was done out of the state; Lescallett v. Com., 89 Va. 878, 17 S. E. 546.

The general rule against betting on horse races applies to all betting wherever done; State v. Lovell, 39 N. J. L. 463; and all pooling schemes are within the statute; Com. v. Simonds, 79 Ky. 618; but in some states betting or pool-selling with reference to races run on a licensed track are excepted from the statutory prohibition; State v. Posey, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 384; State v. Fidler, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 501; State v. Blackburn, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 235; Huff v. State, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 279; but not otherwise; Williams v. State, 92 Tenn. 275, 21 S. W. 662.

The regulation of horse racing falls under the police power; the right to license may be delegated to a commission; and an act regulating it is not invalid because trotting races are excepted; State Racing Commission v. Agricultural Ass'n, 136 Ky. 173, 123 S. W. 681, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905. This case contains much horse and horse racing history. The same act was sustained in Grainger v. Jockey Club, 148 Fed. 513, 78 C. C. A. 199, 8 Ann. Cas. 997. A delegation of the supervision of horse racing to a commission was upheld in State v. Williams, 160 Mo. 333, 60 S. W. 1077. See also Grannan v. Racing Ass'n, 153 N. Y. 449, 47 N. E. 896. An act prohibiting horse racing during the winter months or on any track more than three times a year, etc., is valid; State v. Roby, 142 Ind. 168, 41 N. E. 145, 33 L. R. A. 213, 51 Am. St. Rep. 174. An act penalizing betting by machines or other contrivances was held to include "Paris" Mutual; Com. v. Simonds, 79 Ky. 618. Book making on a horse race is a gambling device within a statute; Miller v. U. S., 6 App. D. C. 6.

One who keeps a room as a resort for persons who bet on horse races is guilty of keeping a disorderly house; Haring v. State, 53 N. J. L. 604, 23 Atl. 581; so where one maintains a partly enclosed place for the purpose of making books and selling pools; Swigart v. People, 154 Ill. 284, 40 N. E. 432.

Blackboards, sheets, manifold books, and policy slips for placing bets on horse races are gambling devices; Com. v. Adams, 160 Mass. 310, 35 N. E. 851; State v. Shaw, 39 Minn. 153, 39 N. W. 305; contra, People v. Weithoff, 93 Mich. 631, 53 N. W. 784, 32 Am. St. Rep. 532.

Although the business of pool selling is illegal, the crime of embezzlement may be committed by the agent who receives the money, in appropriating it to his own use; State v. Shadd, 80 Mo. 358.

Money lent for the purpose of betting on a gambling device cannot be recovered; Shaffner v. Pinchback, 133 Ill. 410, 24 N. E. 867, 23 Am. St. Rep. 624; nor can a note given for money lent for such a purpose; Cutler v. Welsh, 43 N. H. 497; and see Lanahan v. Pattison, 1 Flip. 410, Fed. Cas. No. 8,036. In the District of Columbia, it is held that the Statute 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, supra, is still in force and that all notes given for gambling contracts are void, even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser; Lulley v. Morgan, 21 D. C. 88; contra, Bozeman v. Allen, 48 Ala. 512. A check given to enter a horse for a horse race is given for an illegal purpose and there can be no recovery thereon; Comly v. Hillegass, 94 Pa. 132, 39 Am. Rep. 774. A promissory note given for an interest in a race horse is not void; Biegler v. Trust Co., 62 Ill. App. 560.

A jockey, under a contract to perform his services in "a good and workmanlike manner," need possess and exercise only a reasonable degree of skill, knowledge and ability as such; Middendorf v. Schreiber, 150 Mo. App. 530, 131 S. W. 122.

See GAMING; LOTTERY; WAGER; STAKEHOLDER; BETTING.

HORTUS (Lat.). In the Civil Law. A garden. Dig. 32, 91, 5.

HOSPITAL. An institution for the reception and care of sick, wounded, infirm, or aged persons; generally incorporated, and then of the class of corporations called "eleemosynary" or "charitable." See CHARITABLE USES.

As to the liability of a hospital in tort, see CHARITABLE CORPORATIONS. As to hospital records as evidence, see PHYSICIAN.

HOSPITALLERS. The knights of a religious order, so called because they built a hospital at Jerusalem, wherein pilgrims were received. All their lands and goods in England were given to the sovereign by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 34. Cowell.

HOSPITATOR (Lat.). A host or entertainer.

Hospitator communis. An innkeeper. 8 Co. 32.

Hospitator magnus. The marshal of a camp.

HOSPITIA. Inns. Hospitia communia, common inns. Reg. Orig. 105.

Hospitia curiæ, inns of the court. Hospitia cancellariæ, inns of chancery. Crabb, Eng. Law 428; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 102.

HOSPITICIDE. One who kills his guest or host.

HOSPITIUM. An inn; a household.

HOSPODAR. A Turkish governor in Moldavia or Wallachia.

HOSTAGE. A person delivered into the possession of a public enemy in the time of war, as a security for the performance of a contract entered into between the belligerents.

Hostages were frequently given as a security for the payment of a ransom-bill; and if they died their death did not discharge the contract; 3 Burr. 1734; 1 Kent 106; Dane, Abr. Index.

HOSTELER. An innkeeper. Now applied, under the form ostler, to those who look to a guests's horses. Cowell.

HOSTELAGIUM. In English Law. A right reserved to the lords to be lodged and entertained in the houses of their tenants.

HOSTES. Enemies. Hostes humani generis, enemies of the human race; i. e. pirates.

HOSTIÆ. In Old Records. The hostbread, or consecrated wafer, in the eucharist. Cowell.

HOSTILARIA, HOSPITALARIA. A place or room in religious houses used for the reception of guests and strangers.

HOSTILE. When applied to the possession of an occupant of real estate holding adversely it is not to be construed as showing ill-will, or that he is an enemy of the person holding the legal title; but it means an occupant who holds and is in possession as owner, and therefore against all other claimants of the land. Ballard v. Hansen, 33 Neb. 861, 51 N. W. 295.

HOSTILE EMBARGO. One laid upon the vessels of an actual or prospective enemy. See EMBARGO.

HOSTILE WITNESS. A witness who manifests so much hostility or prejudice under examination in chief that the party who has called him, or his representative, is allowed to cross-examine him, i. e. to treat him as though he had been called by the opposite party. Whart. See WITNESS.

HOSTILITY. A state of open enmity; open war. Wolff, Droit de la Nat. § 1119.

Permanent hostility exists when the individual is a citizen or subject of the government at war.

Temporary hostility exists when the individual happens to be domiciliated or resident in the country of one of the belligerents; in this latter case the individual may throw off the national character he has thus acquired by residence, when he puts himself in motion, bona fide, to quit the country sine animo revertendi; 3 C. Rob. 12; The Friendschaft, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 14, 4 L. Ed. 322. See ENEMY; DOMICIL.

HOT WATER ORDEAL. See ORDEAL.

HOTCHPOT (spelled, also, hodgepodge, hotch-potch). The blending and mixing of property belonging to different persons in order to divide it equally. 2 Bla. Com. 190.

The bringing together all the personal estate of the deceased, with the advancements he has made to his children, in order that the same may be divided agreeably to the provisions of the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates.

By hotchpot is meant "that the estate of the ancestor is to be considered as a common fund out of which each child is to draw at the death an equal proportion. That part of the estate which has been given is to be estimated at what it is worth at the death, relation being had to its situation at the time of the gift." McCaw v. Bleevit, 2 McCord Ch. (S. C.) 90, 104. See McLure v. Steele, 14 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 105.

In bringing an advancement into hotchpot, the donee is not required to account for the profits of the thing given: for example, he is not required to bring into hotchpot the produce of negroes, nor the interest of money. The property must be accounted for at its value when given; Beckwith v. Butler, 1 Wash. (Va.) 224; Richardson v. Sinkler, 2 Des. (S. C.) 127; Hudson v. Hudson's Ex'r, 3 Rand. (Va.) 117; Williams v. Stonestreet, id. 559. See ADVANCEMENT.

HOTEL. Under the Raines law of 1896, a building was not a legal hotel unless it had six rooms furnished as bedrooms with independent access by door from the hall, exclusive of rooms occupied by the family and servants of the proprietor; In re McMonagle, 41 Misc. Rep. 407, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1068; In re Brewster, 85 App. Div. 235, 83 N. Y. Supp. 564. In 1897 this law was amended so as to require ten bedrooms; In re Clement, 117 App. Div. 5, 102 N. Y. Supp. 37. See INNKEEPER; BOARDER; GUEST; TAVERN; INN.

HOUGH. A valley. Co. Litt. 5 b.

HOUR. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes of time. Co. Litt. 135.

HOURS OF SERVICE ACT. See EIGHT HOUR LAW.

HOUSAGE. A fee paid by a carrier for housing goods. Toml.

HOUSE. A place for the habitation and dwelling of man.

A collection of persons; an institution; a commercial firm; a family.

In a grant or demise of a house, the curtilage and garden will pass, even without the words "with the appurtenances" being added; Cro. Eliz. 89; 3 Leon. 214; 1 Plowd. 171; 2 Wms. Saund. 401, n. 2; Rogers v. Smith, 4 Pa. 93; Brown v. Turner, 113 Mo. 27, 20 S. W. 660. In a grant or demise of a house with the appurtenances, no more will pass although other lands have been occupied with the house; 1 P. Wms. 603; Cro. Jac. 526; 2 Co. 32; Co. Litt. 5 d, 36 a, b; 2 Wms. Saund. 401, n. 2.

If a house, originally entire, be divided into several apartments, with an outer door to each apartment, and no communication with each other subsists, in such case the several apartments are considered as distinct houses; 6 Mod. 214; Woodf. L. & T. 178.

A church is a "house" within a statute prescribing a street line for houses; L. R. 15 Eq. 159; a smoke house is a house; Irvin v. State, 37 Tex. 412; but a theatre is not a house; 14 M. & W. 181.

As to what the term includes in cases of arson and burglary, see ARSON; BURGLARY; DWELLING-HOUSE; FLAT; APARTMENT. See also, ARREST.

HOUSE-BOTE. An allowance of necessary timber out of the landlord's woods for the repairing and support of a house or tenement. This belongs of common right to any lessee for years or for life. House-bote is said to be of two kinds, estoverium ædificandi et ardendi. Co. Litt. 41 b.

HOUSE-DUTY. A tax on inhabited houses imposed by 14 and 15 Vict. c. 36, in lieu of window-duty, which was abolished.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. One of the constituent houses of the British parliament.

It is composed of the representatives elected by the people, as distinguished from the house of lords, which is composed chiefly of the nobility. It consists of six hundred and seventy members; four hundred and ninety-five from England and Wales, seventy-two from Scotland, and one hundred and three from Ireland. See PARLIAMENT; HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION. A place for the imprisonment of those who have committed crimes of lesser magnitude.

HOUSE OF ILL-FAME. A house resorted to for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness. State v. Evans, 27 N. C. 603.

A disorderly house need not be a dwelling house. "However lexicographers may define the word 'house,' it is clear the legislature has used it as generic, and has applied it to nearly all kinds of buildings;" State v. Powers, 36 Conn. 77. A flat boat, floating on a river, with a cabin on it, with men and women eating, sleeping, and living on it, may be such; State v. Mullen, 35 Ia. 199; so also a tent, of which it has been said, "such structures are more apt to become disorderly nuisances than houses of brick or stone, owing to the facility with which noises made within could be heard from without;" Killman v. State, 2 Tex. App. 222, 28 Am. Rep. 432. So it has been held of one room of a steamship, though the latter is not an inn; Com. v. Bulman, 118 Mass. 456, 19 Am. Rep. 469. It may be a single room; State v. Garity, 46 N. H. 61.

Keeping a house of ill-fame is an offence at common law; Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 26; 1 Russ. Cr. 322; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 1082. Such a house is a common nuisance; 1 Russ. Cr. 199; one who assists in establishing such is guilty of a misdemeanor; Ross v. Com., 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 417; so of a lessor with knowledge; Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 26. So the letting of a house to a woman of ill-fame, knowing her to be such, with the intent that it shall be used for purposes of prostitution, is an indictable offence at common law; Com. v. Moore, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 600. And it is no defence that the landlord did not know the character of the tenant; Price v. State, 96 Ala. 1, 11 South. 128. Exemplary damages may be awarded against one permitting such house to be kept upon his premises; Besso v. Southworth, 71 Tex. 765, 10 S. W. 523, 10 Am. St. Rep. 814. If a lodger lets her room for the purpose of indiscriminate prostitution, she is guilty of keeping a house of ill-fame, as much as if she were the proprietor of the whole house; 2 Raym. 1197; State v. Smith, 15 R. I. 24, 22 Atl. 1119. A married woman who lives apart from her husband may be indicted alone, and punished, for keeping a house of ill-fame; Com. v. Lewis, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 151. The house need not be kept for lucre, to constitute the offence; State v. Bailey, 21 N. H. 345; Com. v. Ashley, 2 Gray (Mass.) 357; State v. Nixon, 18 Vt. 70, 46 Am. Dec. 135; See Smith v. State, 6 Gill (Md.) 425; Abrahams v. State, 4 Ia. 541; Ross v. Com. 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 417.

It is not necessary, in order to sustain a charge of keeping such a house, that the indecency, disorder, or misconduct should be patent from the outside; L. R. 1 C. C. R. 21; and it has been said evidence of its general reputation as a house of ill-fame is admissible; State v. Toombs, 79 Ia. 742, 45 N. W. 300; Graeter v. State, 105 Ind. 271, 4 N. E. 461; People v. Lock Wing, 61 Cal. 380; 20 Ont. 489; contra, State v. Foley, 45 N. H. 466; Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 342; People v. Mauch, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 276; U. S. v. Jourdine, 4 Cra. C. C. 338, Fed. Cas. No. 15,499; State v. Lyon, 39 Ia. 379; State v. Boardman, 64 Me. 523; but evidence of the reputation of the women frequenting the house and the character of their conversation and acts in and about it is admissible; id.; Com. v. Kimball, 7 Gray (Mass.) 328. The reputation of the house and its visitors is sufficient proof; King v. State, 17 Fla. 183; A single act of lewdness by defendant will not make it a house of prostitution; People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 42 N. W. 937; nor is it a crime to let rooms to prostitutes for quiet and decent occupation, or to permit a house to be visited by disreputable people for proper and innocent purposes; State v. Smith, 15 R. I. 24, 22 Atl. 1119. Wharton says: "It has been ruled, though on questionable authority, that the 'ill-fame,' or bad repute, may be proved"; 2 Whart. Cr. L. 10th ed. § 1452; but the doubt cast by this language on the cases referred to is not warranted by the cases, a long list of which, in addition to those above cited, may be found in a note to the section quoted. And indeed the same author in another work says: "On indictments, however, for keeping houses of ill-fame, when such is the statutory term describing the offence, the ill-fame or bad reputation of the house may be put in evidence. The bad reputation of the visitors is, in any view, competent evidence. But of a disorderly house the reputation is inadmissible, being secondary evidence of disorder, which is susceptible of immediate proof;" Whart. Cr. Ev. 9th ed. § 261. On indictment for keeping a house of ill-fame the reputation of the house as such must be proved; Cadwell v. State, 17 Conn. 467; State v. Blakesley, 38 Conn. 523; but it must be "ill-repute in the vicinity. . . . Rumors at a distance do not make up reputation"; People v. Pinkerton, 79 Mich. 110, 44 N. W. 180. But the reputation where admitted at all must be connected in time with the person who is now the proprietor; Sara v. State, 22 Tex. App. 639, 3 S. W. 339. It is not necessary to prove who frequents the house; it is enough to show that unknown persons were there behaving as charged; 1 Term 748. Contracts of lease of such a house, or to furnish goods for the purposes of the business, if made with knowledge of the use intended, are illegal and void; L. R. 1 Eq. 626. See BAWDY HOUSE; BROTHEL; DISORDERLY HOUSE.

HOUSE OF LORDS. One of the constituent houses of the English parliament. See PARLIAMENT; HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF REFUGE. A prison for juvenile delinquents. See 55 Am. Rep. 456.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. The name given to the more numerous branch of the federal congress, and of the legislatures of the states of the United States.

The constitution of the United States, art. I. s. 2, § 1, provides that the "house of representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several states; and the electors of each state shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature." No person can be a representative until he shall have attained the age of twenty-five and has been seven years a citizen of the United States, and unless he is at the time of his election an inhabitant of the state in which he is chosen; U. S. Const. art. I. sec. 2, § 2. A representative cannot hold any office under the United States; art. I. s. 6, § 2; nor can any religious test be required of him; art. VI. § 3; nor is any property qualification imposed upon him. Representatives are apportioned (Amend. XIV. sec. 2) among the several states according to their respective numbers, excluding Indians not taxed; with a proviso, that, if the right to vote for state or U. S. officers is denied to any male inhabitants of a state, of 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the representation in such state shall be proportionately reduced. The number of representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand, but each state shall have at least one representative; U. S. Const. art. I. sec. 1. A reapportionment among the states is made every tenth year. Under the act of Aug. 8, 1911, the number was increased to 435, including one representative each from Arizona and New Mexico, not at that time admitted as states. The house of representatives has the exclusive right of originating bills for raising revenues, but the senate may concur with amendments, U. S. Const. I. sec. 7; Story on Const. 571. See CONGRESS; QUORUM; SPEAKER; MAJORITY; MONEY BILLS; APPORTIONMENT.

HOUSEBREAKING. The breaking and entering the dwelling house of another by night or by day, with intent to commit some felony within the same, whether such felonious intent is executed or not. Housebreaking by night is burglary. Cl. Cr. L. 237.

This crime is of a local character, and the evidence respecting the place must correspond with the allegation in the indictment. An indictment for housebreaking must allege the ownership of the house; State v. Hupp, 31 W. Va. 355, 6 S. E. 919. See BURGLARY; BREAKING.

HOUSEHOLD. Those who dwell under the same roof and constitute a family. Webst. But it is not necessary that they should be under a roof, or that the father of the family be with it, if the mother and children keep together so as to constitute a family; Woodward v. Murray, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 402.

Belonging to the house and family; domestic. Webster, Dict.

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE. By this expression, in wills, all personal chattels will pass that may contribute to the use or convenience of the household or the ornament of the house: as, plate, linen, china, both useful and ornamental, and pictures. 2 Wms. Exec. 1185. But goods or plate in the hands of testator in the way of his trade will not pass, nor books, nor wines; 1 Jarm. Wills 591, 596; 2 Will. Ex. 1017; Bunn v. Winthrop, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329.

But books and wines have been held, on the other hand, to pass in a bequest, where the testator had made them part of the household furniture by his use of them; 1 Robt. 21; see 2 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 489; Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535; Appeal of Hoopes, 60 Pa. 220, 100 Am. Dec. 562; and so has plate; 29 Beav. 573; bronzes, statuary, pictures; Richardson v. Hall, 124 Mass. 228. See FIXTURES; FURNITURE.

HOUSEHOLD GOODS. In a will this expression will pass everything of a permanent nature (that is, articles of household which are not consumed in their enjoyment) that were used or purchased, or otherwise acquired by the testator, for his house, but not goods in the way of his trade. Plate will pass by this term, but not articles of consumption found in the house, as malt, hops, or victuals, nor guns and pistols, if used in hunting or sport, and not for defence of house. A clock in the house, if not fixed to it, will pass; 1 Jarm. Wills 589; 2 Will. Exec. 464. See Carnagy v. Woodcock, 2 Munf. (Va.) 234, 5 Am. Dec. 470; Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535.

HOUSEHOLD STUFF. Words sometimes used in a will. Plate will pass under the term; 2 Freem. 64; but not apparel, books, cattle, victuals, and choses in action, which do not fall within the natural meaning of the word, unless there be an intention manifest that they should pass; 15 Ves. 319. Goods, as seven hundred beds in possession of testator for purposes of trade, do not pass under the term "utensils of household stuff;" 2 P. Wms. 302. In general, "household stuff" will pass all articles which may be used for the convenience of the house; Swinb. Wills 484. See FIXTURES; HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE.

HOUSEHOLDER. Master or chief of a family; one who keeps house with his family. Webst. But a man who has absconded from the state, and left his wife and children remaining together as a family, was for their benefit held to be a householder; Woodward v. Murray, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 402; Bowne v. Witt, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 475.

A keeper of a tavern or boarding-house, or a master or mistress of a dwelling-house; Hutchinson v. Chamberlin, 11 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 248. A person having and providing for a household. The character is not lost by a temporary cessation from housekeeping; Griffin v. Sutherland, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 456. For purposes of bail, one who rents and occupies part of a building as an office has been held a householder; Somerset & Worcester Sav. Bank v. Huyck, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 323. See Aaron v. State, 37 Ala. 106; 1 Q. B. 72.

HOUSEKEEPER. One who occupies a house.

A person who, under a lease, occupies every room in the house except one, which is reserved for his landlord, who pays all the taxes, is not a housekeeper; 1 Chitty, Bail. 502. Nor is a person a housekeeper who takes a house which he afterwards underlets to another, whom the landlord refuses to accept as his tenant: in this case the undertenant paid the taxes, and let to the tenant the first floor of the house, and the rent was paid for the whole house to the tenant, who paid it to the landlord; id. note.

In order to make the party a housekeeper, he must be in actual possession of the house; 1 Chitty, Bail. 288; and must occupy a whole house. See 1 B. & C. 178; 3 Petersd. Abr. 103, note; Parmele's Case, 2 Mart. O. S. (La.) 313. See HOUSEHOLDER.

HOWE. In Old English Law. A hill. Co. Litt. 5 b.

HOY. A small vessel usually rigged as a sloop, and employed in conveying passengers and goods from place to place on the sea coast. Webster.

HOYMAN. The master or captain of a hoy. He is a common carrier. Story, Bailm. 496.

HUDE-GELD. In Old English Law. A compensation for an assault (transgressio illata) upon a trespassing servant (servus). Supposed to be a mistake or misprint in Fleta for hinegeld. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 20. Cowell.

Also, the price of one's skin, or the money paid by a servant to save himself from a whipping. Du Cange.

HUE AND CRY. A pursuit of one who had committed felony, by the highway.

The meaning of hue is said to be shout, from the Saxon huer; but this word also means to foot, and it may be reasonably questioned whether the term may not be up foot and cry, in other words, run and cry after the felon. We have a mention of hue and cry as early as Edward I.; and by the Statute of Winchester, 13 Edw. 1., "immediately upon robberies and felonies committed, fresh suit shall be made from town to town, and county to county, by horsemen and footmen, to the seaside. The constable (the person being described, etc.) is to call upon the parishioners to assist him in the pursuit in his precinct; and to give notice to the next constable, who is to do the same as the first, etc. If the county will not answer the bodies of the offenders, the whole hundred shall be answerable for the robberies there committed, etc." A person engaged in the hue and cry apprehending a felon was, on the felon's conviction, entitled to forty pounds, on a certificate of the judge or justice before whom there was conviction, as well as to the felon's horse, furniture, arms, money, and other goods taken with him, subject to the rights of other persons therein; Wood, Inst. 370. See 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 100.

The person who has lost his property must raise the hue and cry. All who refused to assist were liable. When the owner found his property he could seize and claim it. The person in whose possession it was found must either give it and pay a fine or appear before the court. If the property was found by the following of the hue and cry, he could claim it at once; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 99.

From the fourteenth to the seventeenth centuries summons and warrants took the place of hue and cry, which practically fell into disuse.

Where one ran from his place of business to join the hue and cry and shot the fugitive, his conviction was reversed; People v. Lillard, 18 Cal. App. 343, 123 Pac. 221.

HUEBRA. In Spanish Law. An acre of land, or as much as can be ploughed in a day by two oxen. 2 White, Recop. 49.

HUISSERIUM. A ship used to transport horses. Also termed "uffer." Tomlin.

HUISSIER. An usher of the court. An officer who serves process.

In France, an officer of this name performs many of the duties of an English sheriff or constable. In Canada there may be many huissiers in each county, whose acts are independent of each other, while there can be but one sheriff, who is presumed cognizant of the acts of his subordinates. The French huissier certifies his process; the Canadian merely serves what is put into his hands.

HULKA. A hulk, or small vessel. Cowell.

HULKS. A place of punishment for convicts in England, abandoned with the reform in the punishment of convicts which began in England about 1840.

HULL. In a statute requiring ships of a certain size to carry lights, etc., it includes the forecastle deck. The Europe, 190 Fed. 475, 111 C. C. A. 307.

HULLUS. A hill. Cowell; 2 Mon. Angl. 292.

HUNDRED. In English Law. A division of a county, which some make to have originally consisted of one hundred hides of land, others of ten tithings, or one hundred free families. See Regan v. R. Co., 60 Conn. 124, 22 Atl. 503, 25 Am. St. Rep. 306.

It differed in size in different parts of England; 1 Steph. Com. 122. In many cases, when an offence is committed within a hundred, the inhabitants are liable to make good the damage if they do not produce the offender. See 12 East 244.

This system was probably introduced by Alfred (though mentioned in the Pœnitentiæ of Egbert, where it seems to be the addition of a later age), being borrowed from the continent, where it was known to the Franks, under the name centena, in the sixth century. See Charlemagne Capit. l. 3, c. 10; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 543.

"The hundred, and the principle that the hundred community is a judicial body, outlived the storms of the folk-wanderings, the political creations of Clovis, the reforms of Charlemagne, the dissolution of the Frankish Empire, the dissolution of the county system." Sohm, Die Fränkische Reichs- und Gerichtsverfassung I. 541.

It had a court attached to it, called the hundred court, or hundred lagh, like a court baron, except in its larger territorial jurisdiction. It was governed by the hundredary (hundredarius); 9 Co. 25. Hundred-penny was a tax collected from the hundred by its lord or by the sheriff. Hundred-fetena signified the dwellers in the hundred; Charta Edg. Reg. Mon. Angl. to. 1, p. 16. In Delaware the subdivisions of a county are called hundreds. They correspond to towns in New England, townships in Pennsylvania, parishes in Louisiana, and the like.

HUNDRED COURT. An inferior court, long obsolete, and practically abolished by the County Courts Act of 1867, sec. 28, whose jurisdiction extended to the whole territory embraced in a hundred. They were courts not of record; the freeholders were the judges; they were held before the stewart of the manor as register; and they resembled courts baron in all respects except in their territorial jurisdiction; 3 Bla. Com. 34, 35.

There is no doubt that this was the primary court. Pollock, 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 91; it was the first well known judicial institution in the history of England. James C. Carter, The Law, etc. See 14 L. Q. R. 292.

HUNDRED-FECTA. The performance of suit and service at the hundred courts.

HUNDRED-FETENA. Dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred.

HUNDRED GEMOTE. An assembly among the Saxons of the freeholders of a hundred.

It met twelve times in the year, originally; though subsequently its meetings became less frequent.

It had an extensive jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, and was the predecessor of the county court and sheriff's tourn, and possessed very similar powers; Spelman, Gloss. Hundredum; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 7.

HUNDRED LAGH (Sax.). Liability to attend the hundred court. Spelman, Gloss. See Cowell; Blount.

HUNDRED-PENNY. The hundred-feh, or tax collected by the sheriff or lord of a hundred.

HUNDRED ROLLS. Rolls embodying the result of investigations made by the commissioners in 1274 as to usurpations of the royal rights. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 48.

HUNDREDARIUS, HUNDREDARY. The chief officer of a hundred. Cowell.

HUNDREDES EALDOR, or HUNDREDEDES MAN. The presiding officer in the hundred-court. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HUNDREDORS. The inhabitants of a hundred, who, by several statutes, are held to be liable, in the cases therein specified, to make good the loss sustained by persons within the hundred by robbery or other violence, therein also specified. The principal of these statutes are 13 Edw. I. st. 2, c. 1, s. 4; 28 Edw. III. c. 11; 27 Eliz. c. 13; 29 Car. II. c. 7; 8 Geo. II. c. 16; 22 Geo. II. c. 24.

Persons serving on juries, or fit to be empanelled thereon, dwelling within the hundred where the land in question lies. 35 Hen. VIII. c. 6. And some such were necessarily on every panel till the 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16. 4 Steph. Com. 370. One that had the jurisdiction of the hundred. The bailiff of the hundred. Jacob, L. Dict.

HUNG. Sometimes applied to a jury which fails to agree upon a verdict. Anderson, L. Dict.

HUNGER. The desire to eat. Hunger is no excuse for larceny; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 54; 4 Bla. Com. 31. As to death from hunger, see DEATH.

HUNTING. The act of pursuing and taking wild animals; the chase.

The chase gives a kind of title by occupancy by which the hunter acquires a right or property in the game which he captures. In the United States the right of hunting was formerly limited only so far as to exclude hunters from committing injuries to private property or to the public—as, by shooting on public roads—or from trespassing. But see GAME LAWS. See FERÆ NATURÆ; OCCUPANCY.

HURDLE. In English Law. A species of sledge, used to draw traitors to execution.

HURST, HYRST, HERST, or HIRST. A wood or grove of trees. Co. Litt. 4 b.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. The parties to the marriage relation.

Mutual and Marital Relations. The liabilities, rights and duties of the husband and wife, both with respect to each other, and as to third persons, necessarily depend largely upon the legal conception of the relation existing between them which at the time obtains within the jurisdiction in which they have their domicil. This conception, as will appear infra, has greatly changed in modern times. At common law, the identity of the wife was practically merged in that of the husband, while under modern statutes both the right of individual initiative and action is conferred upon married women to a very large extent. Under the Roman law the power of the husband over the wife was even more absolute than under the English common law, and the wife's identity was entirely merged in that of the husband, who could correct and chastise or sell, and even kill her, though the sale was, in fact, of her labor and not of her person; see Sohm, Inst. sec. 93; Bryce, Stud. Hist. & Jur. 787; but his power in Roman law to kill the wife has been doubted; Hunter, Rom. L. 224. Notwithstanding the greater freedom given to married women under modern statutes, as above stated, the separation of the individuality of the husband and wife is rather with respect to property rights than personal relations. As to the latter, the merging of the identity of the wife in that of the husband is still recognized to a large extent. This is well illustrated by a case in which under a statute, a person losing money by gambling was permitted to sue for it, and if he failed to do so within three months "any other person" might sue for treble the amount; it was held that the identity of the loser's wife was so merged in that of the husband that she was not comprehended in the phrase "any other person"; Spiller v. Close, 110 Me. 302, 86 Atl. 173. The personal and exclusive rights of a husband with regard to his wife's person are invaded by a criminal conversation with her, and such an act, even when the wife consents, is an assault; Tinker v. Colwell, 193 U. S. 473, 24 Sup. Ct. 505, 48 L. Ed. 754. Case as well as trespass vi et armis will lie; id.

Under the common law he was bound to furnish his wife with a home; it was his right to choose and establish the domicil; Hair v. Hair, 10 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 163; and it was her duty to follow the husband to it; Boyce v. Boyce, 23 N. J. Eq. 337; Colvin v. Reed, 55 Pa. 375; Powell v. Powell, 29 Vt. 148; 4 Ves. Jr. 798; and this control by the husband of the matrimonial domicil goes to such an extent that an ante-nuptial agreement of the husband to live in a certain state is not enforceable; Isaacs v. Isaacs, 71 Neb. 537, 99 N. W. 268; and since the domicil of the husband is the matrimonial domicil, it is unaffected by a change of residence of the wife; Anderson v. Watt, 138 U. S. 694, 11 Sup. Ct. 449, 34 L. Ed. 1078; Scholes v. Iron Works Co., 44 Ia. 190; Porterfield v. Augusta, 67 Me. 556.

A wife deserted by her husband may acquire a separate domicil which, in a suit by her for alienation of affections, gives jurisdiction because of diversity of citizenship; Gordon v. Yost, 140 Fed. 79; and see 19 Harv. L. Rev. 381. See DOMICIL.

A wife is entitled to a home suitable with respect to the circumstances and condition of her husband, over which she shall be permitted to preside as mistress, and she does not forfeit her right to maintenance by refusing to live in the home with and under the control of the husband's mother; Brewer v. Brewer, 79 Neb. 726, 113 N. W. 161, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 222; or by refusing to live as a boarder in the home of his family; Edwards v. Edwards, 69 N. J. Eq. 522, 61 Atl. 531; Powell v. Powell, 29 Vt. 148; Albee v. Albee, 141 Ill. 550, 31 N. E. 153; and a similar rule was applied to permit the husband to refuse to be subjected to insults from the wife's family; Cutler v. Cutler, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 511. In addition to furnishing a home the husband is required to supply, to and for his wife, necessaries and conveniences which his fortune and his rank enable him to do, and which her situation require; 1 Hurl. & N. 641; Wagner v. Nagel, 33 Minn. 348, 23 N. W. 308; but this did not include such luxuries as, according to her fancies, she deemed necessaries; Thill v. Pohlman, 76 Ia. 638, 41 N. W. 385. His obligation to support his wife is based upon the policy of the law and not on his contractual relations; 196 U. S. 68.

A wife has a right to relief against a conveyance or transfer made or contemplated by her husband in fraud of her support and maintenance which is generally recognized by the courts; Fahey v. Fahey, 43 Colo. 354, 96 Pac. 251; 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, and note with cases.

The husband is not liable for necessaries furnished to a wife after desertion without cause; Board of Sup'rs of Monroe Co. v. Budlong, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 493; or where the husband has abandoned her for just cause; Sawyer v. Richards, 65 N. H. 185, 23 Atl. 150; Billing v. Pilcher, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 458, 46 Am. Dec. 523; contra, Button v. Weaver, 87 App. Div. 224, 84 N. Y. Supp. 388; Hatch v. Leonard, 165 N. Y. 435, 59 N. E. 270; 6 Mod. 171; but see 19 Q. B. D. 379. Even where the common law disabilities of the wife, during coverture, have been removed, she cannot, either before or after divorce, maintain an action to recover damages from the husband for his failure to supply her with necessaries or for any other act or failure of duty arising out of the marital relation; Decker v. Kedly, 148 Fed. 681, 79 C. C. A. 305.

He was required to fulfil toward her his marital promise of fidelity, and could, therefore, have no carnal connection with any other woman without a violation of his obligations. She is under obligation to be faithful in chastity to her marriage vow; See DIVORCE; ADULTERY; CRIM. CON.

As he was bound to govern his house properly, he was liable for its misgovernment, and he could be punished for keeping a disorderly house, even where his wife had the principal agency. See BAWDY HOUSE; DISORDERLY HOUSE; HOUSE OF ILL-FAME. He was liable for his wife's debts incurred before coverture; 1 P. Wms. 462, 469; Barnes v. Underwood, 47 N. Y. 351; Cole v. Shurtleff, 41 Vt. 311, 98 Am. Dec. 587; Platner v. Patchin, 19 Wis. 333; Howes v. Marshall, 13 Mass. 384; Bryan v. Doolittle, 38 Ga. 255; Hetrick v. Hetrick, 13 Ind. 44; Morrow v. Whitesides' Ex'r, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 411; Hawthorne v. Beckwith, 89 Va. 786, 17 S. E. 241; provided they were recovered from him during their joint lives; id.; and this rule applies where the husband was an infant; Roach v. Quick, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 238; Butler v. Breck, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 164, 39 Am. Dec. 768; Cole v. Seeley, 25 Vt. 220, 60 Am. Dec. 258; and, generally, for such as were contracted by her after coverture, for necessaries, or by his authority, express or implied, and for her funeral expenses; 12 C. B. 344; 1 H. Bla. 90; Cunningham v. Reardon, 98 Mass. 538, 96 Am. Dec. 670; Sears v. Giddey, 41 Mich. 596, 2 N. W. 917, 32 Am. Rep. 168. See DEAD BODY; FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Rights, Duties and Liabilities of the Husband. Where a tradesman attempts to establish a joint liability against the husband and wife and fails to do so, he cannot then be permitted to charge against the husband a separate liability as contracting from his wife as agent; [1903] 1 K. B. 64, where it is clearly held that the mere fact of two persons living together as man and wife does not of itself hold out the wife to the tradesman as authorized to incur debts on the husband's behalf for ordinary household expenses; 6 App. Cas. 24; 15 C. B. (N. S.) 628. The liability of the husband for debts incurred by his wife, depends upon the law of principal and agent, and further, that the relation has been established, it seems to be necessary to determine in each case; 19 L. Q. R. 122. See an article on the "Changes in the Law of Husband and Wife in England," by Alfred Fellows, 22 L. Q. R. 64.

The husband is head of the family and as such had the right to establish himself wherever he pleased, and in this he could not be controlled by his wife; Angier v. Angier, 63 Pa. 450; Hunt v. Hunt, 29 N. J. Eq. 96; Kennedy v. Kennedy, 87 Ill. 250. Although he be a drunkard and the wife support the family, he still continues the head of it and his admission as to the adverse occupation of land concludes her right after his death; Com. v. Wood, 97 Mass. 225; Daveis v. Collins, 43 Fed. 31. As head of the family he has the general common-law right to regulate it and exercise general control over it; Lawrence v. Lawrence, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 267; Shaw v. Shaw, 17 Conn. 189; L. R. 2 P. & D. 31; he has also the right to fix the family name; Linton v. Bank, 10 Fed. 894; and to the custody and control of the children. See PARENT AND CHILD.

Though, under a modern statute, the wife may, with her husband's consent, conduct a business on her own account, she may not compete with him against his consent, if he is willing and able to support her; Root v. Root, 164 Mich. 638, 130 N. W. 194, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 740. He was entitled to all her earnings; 2 Man. & G. 172; Russell v. Brooks, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 65; McDavid v. Adams, 77 Ill. 155; Prescott v. Brown, 23 Me. 305, 39 Am. Dec. 623; Seitz v. Mitchell, 94 U. S. 580, 24 L. Ed. 179; Yopst v. Yopst, 51 Ind. 61; Turtle v. Muncy, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 82; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 32 Miss. 279; Skillman v. Skillman, 15 N. J. Eq. 478, 82 Am. Dec. 279; Bucher v. Ream, 68 Pa. 421; Reynolds v. Robinson, 64 N. Y. 589; and formerly he might use such gentle force to restrain her of her liberty as might seem necessary; 2 Kent 181; but this is now otherwise; 1 Q. B. D. 671; although it has been held that he may restrain her from committing a crime; Richards v. Richards, 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 389; or from interfering with the exercise of his parental control over his children; Gorman v. State, 42 Tex. 221. He also is said to have had the right moderately to chastise her; 1 Bla. Com. 445; State v. Rhodes, 61 N. C. 453, 98 Am. Dec. 78; but this is no longer recognized, and any chastisement inflicted on the wife renders him guilty of assault and battery; Com. v. McAfee, 108 Mass. 458, 11 Am. Rep. 383; Perry v. Perry, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 501; [1891] 1 Q. B. 671; Abbott v. Abbott, 67 Me. 304, 24 Am. Rep. 27; Poor v. Poor, 8 N. H. 307, 29 Am. Dec. 664; and excessive cruelty or frequent repetition of slight abuses is in many states a ground of divorce. See DIVORCE; CRUELTY.

He was liable for her torts; Com. v. Munsey, 112 Mass. 287; 5 Car. & P. 484; Flesh v. Lindsay, 115 Mo. 1, 21 S. W. 907, 37 Am. St. Rep. 374; Baker v. Young, 44 Ill. 42, 92 Am. Dec. 149; Fowler v. Chichester, 26 Ohio St. 9; Ball v. Bennett, 21 Ind. 427, 83 Am. Dec. 356; Hinds v. Jones, 48 Me. 348; Dailey v. Houston, 58 Mo. 361; Carleton v. Haywood, 49 N. H. 314; Jackson v. Kirby, 37 Vt. 448; Brazil v. Moran, 8 Minn. 236 (Gil. 205), 83 Am. Dec. 772; Morgan v. Kennedy, 62 Minn. 348, 64 N. W. 912, 30 L. R. A. 521, 54 Am. St. Rep. 647. But he should not be joined for trespass committed by her in the management of her separate estate; Quilty v. Battie, 135 N. Y. 201, 32 N. E. 47, 17 L. R. A. 521.

At common law a wife was liable for her torts; Hall v. White, 27 Conn. 488; but her legal incapacity made it necessary to join her husband as a defendant; 17 C. B. N. S. 744; and as a consequence his property was liable for execution, as originally was his person; 2 Rolle 53; but this liability ceased at the death of the wife because it arose solely because of her incapacity; see 21 Harv. L. Rev. 631.

Where a former act provided that, where the husband and wife were jointly sued for the tort of the wife, execution should first be levied against the wife's property, and a later statute repealed it, and provided that the wife might be sued as if she were sole, it was held that the statute abolished, by implication, the common-law liability of the husband for the torts of his wife; Schuler v. Henry, 42 Colo. 367, 94 Pac. 360, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1009.

The husband's liabilities for his wife's torts is not removed by the modern married women's acts; Kellar v. James, 63 W. Va. 139, 59 S. E. 939, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1003, and note, which concludes that the weight of authority is that the statutes do abrogate the liability, so far as concerns torts connected with the wife's separate property; Quilty v. Battie, 135 N. Y. 201, 32 N. E. 47, 17 L. R. A. 521; and the common law liability of the husband for a tort committed out of his presence is held to be repealed by implication by the married women's acts; Schuler v. Henry, 42 Colo. 367, 94 Pac. 360, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1009. The common-law liability of the husband for her wrongs still obtains in England and when he and she are sued for her libel, he cannot plead payment into court and she deny liability; [1904] 1 K. B. 292.

The husband was also liable for her crimes, if committed in his presence, except treason and murder where they were jointly liable; Davis v. State, 15 Ohio 72, 45 Am. Dec. 559; Bibb v. State, 94 Ala. 31, 10 South. 506, 33 Am. St. Rep. 88; State v. Kelly, 74 Ia. 589, 38 N. W. 503; Com. v. Dewitt, 10 Mass. 154; Mangam v. Peck, 111 N. Y. 401, 18 N. E. 617. The liability of the husband for crimes grew out of the original idea of the subjection and dependence of the wife. It was a rule of the common law that a married woman who committed a criminal offence in the presence of her husband is presumed to act under his coercion and is therefore exempt from responsibility; unless it is of a very aggravated character, she is presumed to act by his coercion, and, unless the contrary is proved, she is irresponsible. Under other circumstances she is liable, criminally, as if she were a feme sole. See COERCION; DURESS; WILL.

A husband is not entitled to alimony. The latter is based upon the common-law requirement, to which the husband was subject, of providing his wife with necessaries, and there is no reciprocal obligation on her; Tootle, Hosea & Co. v. Coldwell, 30 Kan. 132, 1 Pac. 329. In some states there are statutes providing that alimony, or an allowance out of the wife's estate, in the nature of alimony, may be granted the husband. In Kansas alimony was denied the husband because no authority could be found to authorize it; Tootle, Hosea & Co. v. Coldwell, 30 Kan. 132, 1 Pac. 329; Greene v. Greene, 49 Neb. 546, 68 N. W. 947, 34 L. R. A. 110, 59 Am. St. Rep. 560. See ALIMONY; 55 Alb. L. J. 15.

THE POSITION AND RIGHTS OF THE WIFE. At Common Law. Her property rights were put by the marriage very much under the control of the husband. He could manage his own affairs in his own way, buy and sell all kinds of personal property, without her control, and he might buy any real estate he might deem proper; but, as the wife acquired a right in the latter, he could not sell it, discharged of her dower, except by her consent, expressed in the manner prescribed by the laws of the state where such lands lay. Her personal property in possession was vested in him, and he could dispose of it as if he had acquired it; this arose from the principle that they were considered one person in law; 2 Bla. Com. 433; Jaffrey v. McGough, 83 Ala. 202, 3 South. 594; and he was entitled to all her property in action, provided he reduced it to possession during her life; 2 Bla. Com. 434. If the wife died before the claims were collected, the husband received them as her administrator, in which case, after payment of her debts, the surplus belonged to him absolutely. He was also entitled to her chattels real, but these vested in him not absolutely, but sub modo: as, in the case of a lease for years, the husband was entitled to receive the rents and profits of it, and could, if he pleased, sell, surrender, or dispose of it during the coverture, and it was liable to be taken in execution for his debts; and, if he survived her, it was to all intents and purposes his own. In case his wife survived him, it was considered as if it had never been transferred from her, and it belonged to her alone. In his wife's freehold estate he had a life estate during the joint lives of himself and wife; and when he had a child by her who could inherit, he had an estate by the curtesy. See CURTESY. She was entitled, on his death, to dower in all the real estate of which he was seised at any time during coverture. See DOWER.

At common law a married woman could not bind herself by contract, express or implied, by parol or under seal, even for necessaries, nor, though living apart from her husband, could she make a binding contract except for necessaries or for the benefit of her separate estate; Farrand v. Beshoar, 9 Col. 291, 12 Pac. 196; and a contract made by her being invalid would be no consideration for a subsequent promise during widowhood; Condon v. Barr, 49 N. J. L. 53, 6 Atl. 614. Her husband might be bound by her acts as his agent, duly authorized; 4 Man. & G. 253; but where payment to her was pleaded, her authority must be stated; 2 id. 173. By her own act her authority could not be enlarged; Bank of America v. Banks, 101 U. S. 240, 25 L. Ed. 850; and she could not execute a conveyance, even in release of dower, otherwise than by joining with her husband in a deed to a third person; Tompkins v. Fonda, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 448. No promise of a wife could at common law be enforced against her unless she had a separate estate, and then not by a personal decree but only by treating it as an appointment out of such estate; Condon v. Barr, 49 N. J. L. 53, 6 Atl. 614; and then only for her or its benefit; Stowell & Heinz v. Grider, 48 Ark. 220, 2 S. W. 786; and no implied promise could be raised against her; Southworth v. Kimball, 58 Vt. 337, 2 Atl. 120.

In the absence of an enabling act the contracts of a married woman are cognizable only in equity, and cannot be enforced at law, except as affected by the so-called Married Women's Acts; Mueller v. Wiese, 95 Wis. 381, 70 N. W. 485. The right to contract conferred by these acts has been held to give her not a general contractual capacity, but only ability to make such contracts as have direct relation to the improvement of her separate property; Reed v. Buys, 44 Mich. 80, 6 N. W. 111; and her property must not merely be incidentally benefited, but there must be a direct relation between it and the contract; Russel v. Bank, 39 Mich. 671, 33 Am. Rep. 444. Such is the general construction of such statutes destroying the common-law rights of the husband in his wife's property; Canal Bank v. Partee, 99 U. S. 325, 25 L. Ed. 390; Huyler's Ex'rs v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq. 504; State v. Dredden, 1 Marvel (Del.) 522, 41 Atl. 925; that, as a general rule, her contracts are binding when necessary or convenient to the use and enjoyment of her separate estate; Todd v. Lee, 15 Wis. 365, 380.

The power of a married woman to make a valid contract, though she has no separate estate, was upheld in Harrington v. Lowe, 73 Kan. 11, 84 Pac. 570, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 547, and note, in which the cases are collected and the conclusion reached that the weight of authority is that statutes which confer the right on married women to contract with respect to their separate estates, do not confer the right to contract generally. A paper indorsed to enable her husband to raise money does not charge her property; Levi v. Earl, 30 Ohio St. 147, where there is an exhaustive examination of the subject. For extreme cases, see Deering v. Boyle, 8 Kan. 525, 12 Am. Rep. 480; Wicks v. Mitchell, 9 Kan. 80; Metropolitan Bank of St. Louis v. Taylor, 62 Mo. 338. See a full discussion of the effect of these statutes conferring contractual power upon a married woman; Stew. H. & W. §§ 369, 378 a.

Where a married woman performs her part of a contract, she may enforce performance against the other party, though she could not have been compelled to perform her part of the agreement; Sanguinett v. Webster, 127 Mo. 32, 29 S. W. 698; and if she made a contract, not enforceable against her, to purchase real estate and fail to pay for the same, it may be sold for the unpaid purchase money; Blanz v. Bain, 95 Tenn. 87, 31 S. W. 159. In some states provision is made for a conveyance of land by a married woman, abandoned by her husband, under permission of court or otherwise; and under such statute it has been held that, having conveyed without compliance with the statute, she may not rescind the deed long afterwards, on account of coverture, without returning the consideration; Gray v. Shaw, 30 S. W. 402, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 61.

The common-law disabilities of a married woman could not be avoided by any false representations with respect to her capacity, and no estoppel would be raised thereby; Keen v. Coleman, 39 Pa. 299, 80 Am. Dec. 524; Bodine v. Killeen, 53 N. Y. 96; Lowell v. Daniels, 2 Gray (Mass.) 161, 61 Am. Dec. 448; but in the management of her separate property she would be answerable for the frauds of her agent, within the scope of his agency, though she were ignorant of it; Baum v. Muller, 47 N. Y. 577. The disabilities of a married woman are her personal privilege, and must be pleaded; Hubert v. Fera, 99 Mass. 199, 96 Am. Dec. 732. See COVERTURE. And no one but the husband can object to a suit against him by the wife, so that a judgment against a firm of which he is a member is good if he do not himself raise the defence; Freiler v. Kear, 126 Pa. 470, 17 Atl. 668, 906, 3 L. R. A. 839. Her common-law disability is not removed by the so-called married woman's acts which operate only to give her such capacity as is expressed in them; McFerran v. Kinney, 22 Mo. App. 554; Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy. 604, Fed. Cas. No. 10,351; Canal Bank v. Partee, 99 U. S. 325, 25 L. Ed. 390; Stephenson v. Osborne, 41 Miss. 125, 90 Am. Dec. 358; Avery v. Doane, 1 Biss. 64, Fed. Cas. No. 673; and where such statutes authorize her to contract as though single, she is bound by estoppel arising from her misrepresentation or concealment; Towles v. Fisher, 77 N. C. 437; Godfrey v. Thornton, 46 Wis. 677, 1 N. W. 362; or by the acts of her husband; Hockett v. Bailey, 86 Ill. 74; Upshaw v. Gibson, 53 Miss. 344. Where such estoppel operates, it is only in respect to her personal estate; Wood v. Terry, 30 Ark. 393; but the weight of authority is against sustaining estoppel against her; 2 L. R. A. 345, n., where are collected cases of common-law disabilities of a married woman and estoppel against her. The rigor of the common-law disabilities of a married woman and the merger of her individual and property rights in her husband gave rise to certain equitable remedies against her husband, intended to secure at least a portion of her property to the use of herself and her children. As to the character and extent of these rights, see Wife's Equity, subtit. infra.

As a general rule, a contract made between parties who subsequently intermarry is, both at law and in equity, extinguished by the marriage; 1 Bla. Com. 442; but when articles are entered into or a settlement is executed whereby the wife is to have a certain provision in lieu of her fortune, the husband becomes virtually a purchaser of her fortune, and she becomes entitled to her provision, though there may be no intervention of trustees, and equity will enforce the contract; 2 Ves. Sen. 675; Husbands, on Married Women 125; MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT.

At common law a married woman was personally liable jointly with her husband for her torts unless committed under the coercion of her husband; Appeal of Franklin's Adm'r, 115 Pa. 534, 6 Atl. 70, 2 Am. St. Rep. 583; Southworth v. Kimball, 58 Vt. 337, 2 Atl. 120. The death of the wife terminated the liability of the husband, but if the husband died the wife might be sued alone; Appeal of Franklin's Adm'r, 115 Pa. 534, 6 Atl. 70, 2 Am. St. Rep. 583.

It has been remarked that "the main idea which governs the law of husband and wife is not that of a 'unity of person,' but that of the guardianship, the mund, the profitable guardianship, which the husband has over the wife and over her property;" 1 Poll. & Maitl. 468. The difficulties arising from the common-law doctrine of a married woman's incapacity, and her practical non-existence as a legal person, resulted in a qualified recognition by courts of equity of the individuality and existence of a married woman as such. This, however, was only granted in cases where she had what was termed a separate estate. This gave rise to two great doctrines of the law, the separate use and restraint on anticipation.

In Equity. The latter was an invention of the court of equity and an exception to the general law of inalienability of property. It was justified as the most satisfactory method of giving property to a married woman so that it should not be practically given to her husband, to prevent which the "condition was allowed to be imposed restraining her from anticipating her income and thus fettering the free alienation of her property;" Jessel, M. R., in 11 Ch. D. 644. By the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the court was authorized, where it appeared to be for the benefit of a married woman, by judgment or order with her consent, to bind her interest in any property, notwithstanding that she was restrained from anticipation; 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, §§ 39, 40. This was held to be not "a general power of removing the restraint upon anticipation, but only a power to make binding a particular disposition of property by a married woman if it be for her benefit;" 52 L. J. Ch. 928. See as to this doctrine, Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 104. The separate use was also originally a creation of the court of chancery, but in recent years it has been adopted in statutes with the effect of abolishing the common-law marital rights of the husband, to the same extent that they were avoided by a trust, in equity, to her sole and separate use.

The separate property of a feme covert as to which equity considers her as a feme sole, is that property alone which is settled to her sole and separate use by some will, writing, or deed of settlement with a power expressly or impliedly given her of managing it without the concurrence of her husband; Hebron v. Colchester, 5 Day (Conn.) 174. This estate may be created by any form of settlement, written or oral (as to personalty), by deed or will, to her directly or in trust for her; or, it may be by antenuptial agreement (q. v.). It may be settled by the husband; Williams v. Williams, 68 Ala. 405; herself; L. R. 16 Eq. 29; or a stranger; Charles v. Coker, 2 S. C. 122, 129, 133. The one essential ingredient required for its creation is a sufficient indication of an intention to bar or exclude the marital rights; Vail v. Vail, 49 Conn. 52; Buck v. Wroten, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 250; of the husband contemplated by the settlement; 1 Beav. 1. No particular form of words is required, but any which sufficiently indicate this intention will be sufficient. For a great variety of phrases which have been judicially passed upon as sufficient or insufficient, see Stew. H. & W. § 200. Where a wife purchases land in her own name and with her own money it will be presumed to be her separate property; Webster v. Thorndyke, 11 Wash. 390, 39 Pac. 677.

To an ordinary equitable estate of a married woman the marital rights of the husband attach; Banks v. Green, 35 Ark. 84, 88; but the effort to mitigate the severity of the common-law doctrine gave rise to the equitable creations of the wife's equity (q. v.) and the equitable separate estate; 1 Bro. C. C. 16; White v. Gouldin's Ex'rs, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 491, 507; 1 L. Cas. Eq. 481; 2 Perry, Trusts, § 625.

The Wife's Equity. What is termed the wife's equity is her right, whenever the husband cannot obtain possession of her estate without the aid of a court of equity, to have settled upon her and her children out of it a suitable provision, for herself and her children; Shelf. Marr. & D. 605.

In consideration of the obligation assumed by the contract of marriage, the husband acquires an interest in the property of his wife which is enforceable at common law by an action, and therefore he may alien the property to which he is so entitled, jure mariti, or in case of bankruptcy or insolvency it would vest in his assignee, and the wife and children be left destitute, whatever her fortune might be. It was to remedy this evil that the courts of equity devised a method of making provision for the wife, known as the wife's equity. The principle upon which courts of equity act is, that he who seeks the aid of equity must do equity; and that will be withheld until an adequate settlement has been made; 1 P. Wms. 459.

Where the property is equitable and not recoverable at law, it cannot be obtained without making a settlement upon a wife and children, if one be required by her; 2 P. Wms. 639; and where, though the property be legal in its nature, it becomes from collateral circumstances the subject of a suit in equity, the wife's right to a settlement will attach; 5 My. & C. 97. See Tucker v. Andrews, 13 Me. 124; Rees v. Waters, 9 Watts (Pa.) 90; Kenny v. Udall, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 464; Helms v. Franciscus, 2 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 545, 20 Am. Dec. 402.

The wife's equity to a settlement is binding not only upon the husband, but upon his assignee, under the bankrupt or insolvent laws; 3 Ves. 607; Haviland v. Myers, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 25; Gassett v. Grout, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 486; Duvall v. Bank, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 283, 23 Am. Dec. 558; Elliott v. Waring, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 338, 17 Am. Dec. 69; Andrews v. Jones, 10 Ala. 401;

Bell v. Bell, 1 Ga. 637. And even where the husband assigned the wife's equitable right for a valuable consideration, the assignee was considered liable; 4 Ves. 19. When the property of the husband is settled upon his wife and children, the settlement will be valid against subsequent creditors if at the time of the settlement being made he was not indebted; Sexton v. Wheaton, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 229, 5 L. Ed. 603; Picquet v. Swan, 4 Mas. 443, Fed. Cas. No. 11,133; Wells v. Treadwell, 28 Miss. 717; Riley v. Riley, 25 Conn. 154; but if he was then indebted it will be void as to the creditors existing at the time of the settlement; Reade v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 481, 8 Am. Dec. 520; Albert v. Winn, 5 Md. 68; Kinnard v. Daniel, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 496; Sexton v. Wheaton, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 229, 5 L. Ed. 603; unless in cases where the husband received a fair consideration in value for the thing settled, so as to repel the presumption of fraud; 10 Ves. 139; Hale v. Plummer, 6 Ind. 121; Andrews v. Andrews, 28 Ala. 432; Bullard v. Briggs, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 533, 19 Am. Dec. 292.

The general rule is that one-half of the wife's property shall be settled upon her; 2 Atk. 423. But it is in the discretion of the court to give her an adequate settlement for herself and children; Kenny v. Udall, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 464; Ex parte Beresford, 1 Des. (S. C.) 263; Helms v. Franciscus, 2 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 546, 20 Am. Dec. 402; Bowling v. Winslow's Adm'r, 5 B. Monr. (Ky.) 31; Howard v. Napier, 3 Ga. 193; 9 S. & S. 597.

Whenever the wife insists upon her equity, the right will be extended to her children; but the right is strictly personal to the wife, and her children cannot insist upon it after her death; 1 J. & W. 472; Howard v. Moffatt, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 206; Andrews v. Jones, 10 Ala. 401.

The wife's equity will be barred by an adequate settlement having been made upon her; 2 Ves. Ch. 675; by living in adultery apart from her husband; 4 Ves. Ch. 146; but a female ward of court, married without its consent, will not be barred although she should be living in adultery; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. 302.

In Lady Elibank v. Montolieu, 1 Wh. & Tud. L. Cas. 486, on a bill of a married woman for a distributive share as next of kin, a decree was made for a settlement on her and her children; and Lord Loughborough treated it as a case of equity to a settlement.

Her Separate Estate. In England a married woman's capacity to dispose of property of whatever kind settled to her separate use, by deed or will, is absolute, unless she be expressly restrained by the settlement; and, generally speaking, it is bound by her contracts, written or verbal; 3 Bro. C. C. 347. But it was contended by Chancellor Kent that this was not always so held, and that the English cases were too contradictory to afford a safe guide, and he held (practically the converse of the English rule) that she could exercise only such power, to be exercised in such manner as was prescribed by the instrument creating the estate; Trustees of Methodist Episcopal Church v. Jaques, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 77. But this decision was reversed; Jaques v. Trustees, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 548, 8 Am. Dec. 447, in which the English doctrine substantially was adopted.

The course of subsequent New York decisions is neither clear nor consistent, but may, probably, on the whole, be considered as following the last cited case with a qualification that the married woman is not to be charged unless her intention to charge her separate estate is sufficiently indicated in the contract or implied from some benefit to be derived by her separate estate from the consideration. See Yale v. Dederer, 18 N. Y. 265, 72 Am. Dec. 503; id., 22 N. Y. 451, 78 Am. Dec. 216; Manhattan Brass & Mfg. Co. v. Thompson, 58 N. Y. 80; Second Nat. Bank v. Miller, 63 N. Y. 639; Conlin v. Cantrell, 64 N. Y. 217; Yale v. Dederer, 68 N. Y. 329.

Most of the states adopt, in the main, the English doctrine of power to charge the separate estate, but many jurisdictions follow what is known as the American doctrine—that a married woman, as to her separate estate, is feme sole in so far as the instrument has expressly conferred on her the power to act as such, and that she is confined to the particular mode of disposition prescribed in the instrument, if any, and the estate is not liable for her contracts, bonds, and notes, unless the instrument expressly declares that it shall be charged. It was first established in South Carolina and adhered to as above stated, by Chancellor Kent. See Lancaster v. Dolan, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 231, 18 Am. Dec. 625; Walker v. Coover, 65 Pa. 430; Metcalf v. Cook, 2 R. I. 355; Litton v. Baldwin, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 209, 47 Am. Dec. 605; Pippen v. Wesson, 74 N. C. 442; Armstrong v. Stovall, 26 Miss. 275. See Kelly, Cont. M. W. 259, n. 5, and a critical annotation by the same author; 23 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 321; Stew. H. & W. § 203.

An instrument creating such an estate is excepted from the rule which makes void clauses in restraint of alienation, provided only that the rule against perpetuities is not violated; id. § 204.

Under Statutes. Superimposed upon this complex combination of common-law disability and equitable protection for separate estate, there is now, both in England and in the United States, a mass of statute law, as to most of which a classification to be relied on is impossible. The course of legislation in the United States has been such as almost entirely to remove the common-law disabilities of a married woman, and to secure to her the management and control of her own property with power to contract concerning it, and also largely to increase both her individual rights and liabilities. It has been said that the protection and the disability of marriage have been linked together, and the wife when deprived of the one has been released from the other; Cullers v. James, 66 Tex. 494, 1 S. W. 314; but this broad statement does not seem to express the rule of construction generally adopted; see supra. The first tendency of the married woman's acts was to emancipate her property both from control and from any liability for obligations naturally springing from the marriage relation. In this country, however, there has been lately a strong current in the direction of creating and enforcing liability for such debts against both husband and wife.

In all the states and the District of Columbia the real property of a married woman remains her separate property, generally free from the control or interference of her husband or liability for his debts; and in most of the states her personal property is equally so.

As to the statutory liability of a married woman and her property for necessaries and family expenses and also for her own torts, see infra. The separate property of a married woman is not liable in most states for the debts of the husband, nor bound by judgment or execution against him.

English legislation has been much more according to a definite plan, commencing with 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, which enabled a married woman deserted by or judicially separated from her husband to obtain orders of protection against his creditors. The acts of 1870, and 1874 secured to married women several specific property rights, but these acts were repealed and supplied by the act of 1882, under which a married woman could acquire and hold separate property in her own name, and sue and be sued severally, the husband, however, remaining liable for her torts. The purpose of this act was thus stated by Wills, J., to be, not destructive of the "doctrine of the common law by which there was what has been called a unity of person between husband and wife, but to confer in certain specified cases new powers upon the wife, and in others new powers upon the husband, and gives them in certain specified cases new remedies against one another." 14 Q. B. Div. 835. This act is still the married woman's property law of England. The act of 56 & 57 Vict. c. 63, provided that contracts of married women should be deemed as being entered into with respect to and binding her separate property then or thereafter acquired, being limited in its scope. The act of 7 Edw. VII, c. 18, made no general change, but authorized dispositions of trust estates by married women, as if sole, and made provision as to the settlement of married women's property.

For provisions of the English statute in detail, see an interesting comparison between English and American legislation on the subject, 22 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 761; Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 96; 1 Brett, Com. ch. 18, at the end of which may be found a list of the English statutes to that date; 7 So. L. Rev. 68; 11 Cent. L. J. 41; 27 id. 279.

While the legislation of England and the United States with respect to married women has been mainly in the direction of giving to her property interests such a legal status as had been secured to her in equity in spite of her common law footing, there has, at the same time, been secured to her in both countries, by judicial action, emancipation of the person to the extent of practically abrogating the common-law rule on that subject.

The effect of this modern legislation is to create what has been termed a statutory separate estate, which is not to be confused with the equitable separate estate; Stew. H. & W. § 217; the two may exist side by side; Musson v. Trigg, 51 Miss. 172. The word property in these acts has been held to include money; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 35 Miss. 108; choses in action ex contractu; Vreeland v. Schoonmaker, 16 N. J. Eq. 512; Williams v. Lord, 75 Va. 390; and ex delicto; Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 621, 32 Am. Rep. 397; Leonard v. Pope, 27 Mich. 145; Laughlin v. Eaton, 54 Me. 156; Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23, 28 Am. Rep. 527; corporeal and incorporeal interests; Smilie v. Siler's Adm'r, 35 Ala. 88; animate and inanimate; Gans v. Williams, 62 Ala. 41 (but not mere contingent interest; L. R. 6 Eq. 210); a mining interest in a lead; Cheuvete v. Mason, 4 G. Greene (Ia.) 231. In England married woman's property does not include a general power of appointment under a deed or will of which she is donee; 17 Q. B. Div. 521. Most of the acts define the mode of acquisition of property which shall be affected by it, and such specification excludes all others; 2 Bish. M. W. § 17. The most common methods of acquisition are, purchase, gift or grant, devise, bequest, descent, distribution, exchange, increase, trade or service, contract, and tort; Stew. H. & W. §§ 223–230, where the cases, as to each, are collected.

Earnings of the wife made by her in carrying on a business, such as keeping a boarding house, and used to pay for stock in a building association, belong to her, and the stock is her separate estate; Wenger v. Wenger, 34 Pa. Co. Ct. 93.

Where a husband employs his wife and pays her wages otherwise payable to some other employé, she cannot be deprived of the money or of her property in which she has invested it; Woodruff v. Clark & Apgar, 42 N. J. L. 198; Savage v. O'Neil, 44 N. Y. 298; Henderson v. Warmack, 27 Miss. 830.

A grant or devise to a married woman and her husband as tenants by entireties, is not abrogated by the married women's property acts even where they provide that she shall hold real estate as if sole; Bertles v. Nunan, 92 N. Y. 152, 44 Am. Rep. 361; Bramberry's Estate, 156 Pa. 628, 27 Atl. 405, 22 L. R. A. 594, 36 Am. St. Rep. 64; Phelps v. Simons, 159 Mass. 415, 34 N. E. 657, 38 Am. St. Rep. 430; Chambers v. Chambers, 92 Tenn. 707, 23 S. W. 67; Noblitt v. Beebe, 23 Or. 4, 35 Pac. 248; Georgia, C. & N. Ry. Co. v. Scott, 38 S. C. 34, 16 S. E. 185, 839; Appeal of Robinson, 88 Me. 17, 33 Atl. 652, 30 L. R. A. 331, 51 Am. St. Rep. 367; contra, Clark v. Clark, 56 N. H. 105; but a married woman may, under those acts, without joining her husband, sue for and recover land conveyed to her and him in fee; Bains v. Bullock, 129 Mo. 117, 31 S. W. 342; and the husband is not exclusively entitled to the use and benefit of lands held in entirety or as joint tenant with his wife; Hiles v. Fisher, 144 N. Y. 306, 39 N. E. 337, 30 L. R. A. 305, 43 Am. St. Rep. 762. In England, since the married women's property act, a conveyance to both creates the same estate as if they were not married; L. R. 39 Ch. D. 148; 1 Brett, Com. 62. In some states a conveyance to a married woman and her husband is unaffected by these statutes, either because tenancy by entireties and joint tenancy have not been adopted; Whittlesey v. Fuller, 11 Conn. 337; or not recognized by the courts; Wilson v. Fleming, 13 Ohio 68; Hoffman v. Stigers, 28 Ia. 302; or are abolished by statute; Oglesby v. Bingham, 69 Miss. 795, 13 South. 852. Where a married woman was a tenant by entirety it has been held that a divorce changed it into a tenancy in common; Enyeart v. Kepler, 118 Ind. 36, 20 N. E. 539, 10 Am. St. Rep. 94; Kirkwood v. Domnau, 80 Tex. 645, 16 S. W. 428, 26 Am. St. Rep. 770; Harrer v. Wallner, 80 Ill. 197; Hopson v. Fowlkes, 92 Tenn. 697, 23 S. W. 55, 23 L. R. A. 805, 36 Am. St. Rep. 120; Russell v. Russell, 122 Mo. 235, 26 S. W. 677, 43 Am. St. Rep. 581. See In re Bramberry's Estate, 156 Pa. 628, 27 Atl. 405, 22 L. R. A. 594, 36 Am. St. Rep. 64; Hiles v. Fisher, 144 N. Y. 306, 39 N. E. 337, 30 L. R. A. 305, 43 Am. St. Rep. 762.

In most of the states the deed of a married woman is ineffectual to pass a title, unless when her husband is a party; and generally a separate acknowledgment and private examination of the wife is required; and if signed by her alone without her husband it is absolutely void; Overseers of Poor v. Overseers of the Poor, 112 Pa. 99, 3 Atl. 862; Franklin v. Mill Co., 88 Ala. 318, 6 South. 685; and so by statute is a mortgage; Cook v. Walling, 117 Ind. 9, 19 N. E. 532, 2 L. R. A. 769, 10 Am. St. Rep. 17. The deed of a married woman without the separate examination will pass neither her interest nor that of the husband; Rust v. Goff, 94 Mo. 511, 7 S. W. 418. Where her acknowledgment is not made in compliance with the statute she is presumed to have acted under the coercion of her husband; Hepburn v. Dubois, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 345, 9 L. Ed. 1111; Rust v. Goff, 94 Mo. 511, 7 S. W. 418.

In Indiana the deed of a married woman to which her husband is not joined gives color of title; Wright v. Kleyla, 104 Ind. 223, 4 N. E. 16. If the deed of a married woman be void by reason of a defective acknowledgment, it may be ratified by her after her husband's death; Jourdan v. Jourdan, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 268, 11 Am. Dec. 724.

A deed purporting to be an absolute conveyance of lands of a married woman will not be construed as a release of dower because her husband's name appears first therein; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Whitham, 155 Ill. 514, 40 N. E. 1014, 28 L. R. A. 612, 46 Am. St. Rep. 355. The common-law disability, with respect to conveyances of real property, still exists in so far as it has not been swept away by express legislative enactments; Dean v. Ry. Co., 119 N. Y. 540, 23 N. E. 1054. Where a married woman, at the time an infant, had executed a note and a mortgage intended to convey her separate estate, the mortgage being void, because not executed in accordance with the statutes, she was not estopped to assert the invalidity of the mortgage, by representations at the time of its execution that she was twenty-one years of age; Carolina Interstate Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Black, 119 N. C. 323, 25 S. E. 975.

Mere silence by a married woman who knows her conveyance to be void does not estop her from asserting it; Coats v. Gordon, 144 Ind. 19, 41 N. E. 1044, 42 N. E. 1025; but in that state it is held that by statute a married woman may be bound by an estoppel in pais; Le Coil v. Armstrong-Landon-Hunt Co., 140 Ind. 256, 39 N. E. 922. The wife joining her husband in conveyances of his land is not bound by his covenants in the deed and is not estopped to assert a paramount lien in favor of herself; Curry v. Mtg. Co., 107 Ala. 429, 18 South. 328, 54 Am. St. Rep. 105.

Where the husband leased his wife's lands for a year with a privilege of four years more, the receipt of a share of the farm products reserved did not estop her from asserting that the lease was void, because not assented to in writing by her; Williams v. Mershon, 57 N. J. L. 242, 30 Atl. 619.

Where a married woman is unable to convey her separate estate without a deed in which her husband is joined, she cannot make a valid deed to him of such property; Trawick v. Davis, 85 Ala. 342, 5 South. 83.

Such was the case at common law and in like manner a deed from the husband directly to the wife was a nullity; Coates v. Gerlach, 44 Pa. 43; Fletcher v. Mansur, 5 Ind. 267; and a husband and wife could not separate their interests in common property by a partition deed; Frissell v. Rozier, 19 Mo. 448. There could not be a gift of chattels inter vivos from the husband to the wife; 15 Beav. 529; but later this doctrine was modified in England and it was held that it was merely a question of evidence and that the husband might be a trustee for his wife; 34 Beav. 623; and after the wife's separate personality began to be recognized by statute, the courts held gifts to her from the husband effectual; Dean v. Ry. Co., 119 N. Y. 540, 23 N. E. 1054; Cottrell v. Spiess, 23 Mo. App. 35. In equity both deeds; Appeal of Bedell, 87 Pa. 510; and gifts; Reed v. Reed, 52 N. Y. 651; 9 Ont. App. Rep. 374; Fourth Ecclesiastical Soc. in Middletown v. Mather, 15 Conn. 587; were upheld wherever the rights of creditors were not affected; see supra. As to the effect of gifts and conveyances by the husband to the wife, see Barnum v. Le Master, 110 Tenn. 638, 75 S. W. 1045, 69 L. R. A. 353, and note, where the cases are collected at large. That case held that marriage is a valuable consideration and that the conveyance of land to the wife was good.

A gift of personal property from the husband to the wife must be clearly proved, even under modern statutes, and the evidence must be clear of his intention to divest himself of all ownership and control of the property given, and the common-law rule that ornaments and wearing apparel given to the wife by the husband during coverture remained his personal property was held not to be abrogated by the married woman's act or any statute; Farrow v. Farrow, 72 N. J. Eq. 421, 65 Atl. 1009, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389, 129 Am. St. Rep. 714, 16 Ann. Cas. 507; Tllexan v. Wilson, 43 Me. 186; but in other states the right of the wife to her paraphernalia is treated as absolute; State v. Pitts, 12 S. C. 180, 32 Am. Rep. 508; McCormick v. R. Co., 99 N. Y. 65, 1 N. E. 99, 52 Am. Rep. 6.

Gifts by a wife to a husband are to be closely scrutinized, but if fairly made and free from coercion and undue influence they ought to be sustained; Farmer's Ex'r v. Farmer, 39 N. J. Eq. 216. The evidence must be clear and unequivocal, and the intention free from doubt; Brooks v. Fowler, 82 Ga. 329, 9 S. E. 1089; Johnson v. Jouchert, 124 Ind. 105, 24 N. E. 580, 8 L. R. A. 795. A conveyance by the husband directly to the wife creates in her an equitable estate, but is inoperative to pass a legal title; and he is left a trustee for her; Snediker v. Boylesston, 83 Ala. 408, 4 South. 33; Smith v. Seiberling, 35 Fed. 677; Miller v. Miller, 17 Or. 423, 21 Pac. 938. He may settle property upon his wife if it does not impair the claims of existing creditors and is not intended as a cover for future schemes of fraud; Bean v. Patterson, 122 U. S. 496, 7 Sup. Ct. 1298, 30 L. Ed. 1126.

A voluntary gift of personal property by a husband to another, although depriving his wife of her right to a share therein, cannot be set aside as a fraud against her; Hall v. Hall, 109 Va. 117, 63 S. E. 420, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 533; Robertson v. Robertson, 147 Ala. 311, 40 South. 104, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 774, and note, 10 Ann. Cas. 1051.

Threats of prosecution and imprisonment against her husband constitute duress sufficient to make void the deed or contract of a married woman; Central Bank of Frederick v. Copeland, 18 Md. 305, 81 Am. Dec. 597; First Nat. Bank of Nevada v. Bryan, 62 Ia. 42, 17 N. W. 165; Miller v. Lumber Co., 98 Mich. 163, 57 N. W. 101, 39 Am. St. Rep. 524; City Nat. Bank of Dayton v. Kusworm, 88 Wis. 188, 59 N. W. 564, 26 L. R. A. 48, 43 Am. St. Rep. 880; 62 L. T. (N. S.) 376.

Generally it is held that a married woman cannot become a partner with her husband, even under statutes which would authorize her to enter into partnership with any one else; Fairlee v. Bloomingdale, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 292; Miller v. Marx, 65 Tex. 131; Montgomery v. Sprankle, 31 Ind. 113; Payne v. Thompson, 44 Ohio St. 192, 5 N. E. 654; Board of Trade of City of Seattle v. Hayden, 4 Wash. 263, 30 Pac. 87, 32 Pac. 224, 16 L. R. A. 530, 31 Am. St. Rep. 919; contra, In re Kinkead, 3 Biss. 405, Fed. Cas. No. 7,824; Schlapback v. Long, 90 Ala. 525, 8 South. 113; Suau v. Caffe, 122 N. Y. 308, 25 N. E. 488, 9 L. R. A. 593 (see as to conflicting New York cases 16 L. R. A. 526, note); nor ordinarily with any one else; De Graum v. Jones, 23 Fla. 83, 6 South. 925; Bradstreet v. Baer, 41 Md. 19; if she have no separate estate; Dunifer v. Jecko, 87 Mo. 282. If, without capacity to become a partner, she does so, the property remains hers and the husband cannot assign it; Howard v. Stephens, 52 Miss. 239; nor can his creditors; Duress v. Horneffer, 15 Wis. 195; Danforth v. Woods, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 9. Where her partnership is a nullity the other partner may be sued alone; Carey v. Burruss, 20 W. Va. 571, 43 Am. Rep. 790. Where her husband borrows her separate property and uses it in a firm, she is the creditor of the firm; Huffman v. Copeland, 86 Ind. 224; Fox v. Johnson, 4 Del. Ch. 580; and her debt is provable in bankruptcy; Danforth v. Woods, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 9. If a married woman carries on a business under the assumed name of a partnership she may be sued in that name, and cannot plead her coverture; Le Grand v. Bank, 81 Ala. 123, 1 South. 460, 60 Am. Rep. 140; nor can her co-partners deny her capacity to sue alone for a dissolution; Bitter v. Rathman, 61 N. Y. 512. As to married women as partners, see, generally, 2 L. R. A. 343, note; 32 Cent. L. J. 128; 31 Am. St. Rep. 934, note; and as to partnerships between husband and wife, see 16 L. R. A. 526, note; 35 Cent. L. J. 328; 24 Am. L. Reg. 659.

See PARTNERSHIP.

The capacity of a married woman to become surety or guarantor will depend upon the construction of the statute, and the questions most frequently arise with respect to efforts to become surety for the husband. In some states this is expressly forbidden, and the prohibition has been held to prevent her from mortgaging her real estate to one who is surety for her husband or co-surety with him; McNeil v. Davis, 105 Ala. 657, 17 South. 101.

In others, it has been held that the power, not being expressly given, is not possessed, as it is not required for the complete enjoyment of the separate estate; Bank of Commerce, Ltd. v. Baldwin, 14 Idaho, 75, 93 Pac. 504, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 676 and not on her power to become surety for one, other than her husband.

In other states she may bind her separate estate as surety for her husband; Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 917; Watts v. Gantt, 42 Neb. 869, 61 N. W. 104; and where she makes a valid contract as surety she is entitled to all the rights of a surety; Filler v. Tyler, 91 Va. 458, 22 S. E. 235.

An assignment by a married woman of her separate estate to pay a note in which she has been joined with her husband for his debt has been held void; Livingston v. Shingler, 30 S. C. 159, 8 S. E. 842. Mortgages by a wife of her separate estate for the husband's benefit have been held null and void; Lippincott v. Mitchell, 94 U. S. 767, 24 L. Ed. 315; Goodjoin v. Vaughn, 32 S. C. 499, 11 S. E. 351; contra, Kaiser v. Stickney, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 118; Brodnax v. Ins. Co., 128 U. S. 236, 9 Sup. Ct. 61, 32 L. Ed. 445; Wells v. Foster, 64 N. H. 585, 15 Atl. 216; Hagenbuch v. Phillips, 112 Pa. 284, 3 Atl. 788.

A woman cannot after discoverture ratify by a new promise a debt for which she was not originally liable; Gilbert v. Brown, 123 Ky. 703, 97 S. W. 40, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1248, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053, and note where the cases are reviewed.

The right of the wife to sue the husband on a note executed to her by him has been upheld in Mathewson v. Mathewson, 79 Conn. 23, 63 Atl. 285, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 611, 6 Ann. Cas. 1027, and note, where the cases are collected, showing much variance in the view taken of the effect of the state statutes.

With respect to the right of the wife to sue the husband for a personal tort, the courts are not so divided, but have generally agreed that the various statutes will not give the right by implication, but that it must be expressly conferred; Strom v. Strom, 98 Minn. 427, 107 N. W. 1047, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 191, 116 Am. St. Rep. 387, and note, which reaches the conclusion from the cases as here stated.

While, at common law, a debt due by either husband or wife to the other was cancelled by marriage; Farley v. Farley, 91 Ky. 497, 16 S. W. 129; Fox v. Johnson, 4 Del. Ch. 580; under the modern statutes it is generally held that marriage does not extinguish such a debt; Flenner v. Flenner, 29 Ind. 564; Barton v. Barton, 32 Md. 214; Clark v. Clark, 49 Ill. App. 163; Power v. Lester, 23 N. Y. 527; and this was carried to the extent of permitting notes made by a man to his intended wife to be enforced against his estate; MacKeown v. Lacey, 200 Mass. 437, 86 N. E. 799, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 683, 16 Ann. Cas. 220, and note giving other cases. So a wife was allowed to prove, against her husband's estate in bankruptcy, money deposited with him; 2 Nat. B. Reg. 556; and there is an unreported decision by Judge Strong in the circuit court for the district of Delaware to the same effect.

A married woman has been held authorized to dispose of community property to supply the necessary wants of herself and children; Forbes v. Moore, 32 Tex. 195.

A personal judgment against a married woman at common law was void; Weil v. Simmons, 66 Mo. 617; Griffith v. Clarke, 18 Md. 457; White v. Mfg. Co., 29 W. Va. 385, 1 S. E. 572, 6 Am. St. Rep. 650; Green v. Page, 80 Ky. 368; if rendered by default it is in some jurisdictions held absolutely void; Shryock v. Buckman, 121 Pa. 248, 15 Atl. 480, 1 L. R. A. 533; Corrigan v. Bell, 73 Mo. 53; Parsons v. Spencer, 83 Ky. 305; Gambette v. Brock, 41 Cal. 78; Mallett v. Parham, 52 Miss. 921; in others merely voidable; 8 B. & C. 421; Mashburn v. Gouge, 61 Ga. 512; McCurdy v. Baughman, 43 Ohio St. 78, 1 N. E. 93; Wilson v. Coolidge, 42 Mich. 112, 3 N. W. 285; Burk v. Hill, 55 Ind. 419; and she is not estopped by a failure to plead coverture; Parsons v. Spencer, 83 Ky. 305. In the absence of fraud a consent decree is binding on a married woman; Winter v. Montgomery, 79 Ala. 481; Truesdail v. McCormick, 126 Mo. 39, 28 S. W. 885; and a judgment might be obtained against her for a debt contracted dum sola; Roosevelt v. Dale, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 581; Evans v. Lipscomb, 28 Ga. 71; 4 East 521; Travis v. Willis, 55 Miss. 557. Generally provision is made for such suits in the married woman's acts, and in some the husband and wife must be sued jointly, and in others, judgment may be recovered against her separately to bind her separate estate.

In some states the husband and wife are equally liable for expenses and children's education, and a married woman is liable for necessaries for herself and her children; in others such a debt is enforceable against her property after execution against the husband unsatisfied, while in others a judgment for necessaries against the husband may be enforced against the separate property of the wife, and in some jurisdictions for expenses incurred in the improvement of her separate property. See Stims. Am. St. L. § 6410 (c).

In many states there are statutory provisions authorizing the assumption of liability by a married woman for the family expenses; and in others, such liability has been held to arise under the statutes without her express consent; such expenses are made a charge upon the property of the husband and wife, or either of them, either jointly or severally. This is held to be a personal liability and not merely a property charge; Farrar & Wheeler v. Emery, 52 Ia. 725, 3 N. W. 50; Hayden v. Rogers, 22 Ill. App. 557; but her property may be pursued without obtaining a personal judgment against her; Frost v. Parker, 65 Ia. 180, 21 N. W. 507; and her liability is not dependent upon consent; Black v. Sippy, 15 Or. 574, 16 Pac. 418. Within these statutes family expenses include whatever is actually used in the family; Fitzgerald v. McCarty, 55 Ia. 702, 8 N. W. 646; rent of a house; Illingworth v. Burley, 33 Ill. App. 394; medical attendance; Blachley v. Laba, 63 Ia. 22, 18 N. W. 658, 50 Am. Rep. 724; whether necessary or not; Schrader v. Hoover, 80 Ia. 243, 45 N. W. 734; the servants' wages; Von Platen v. Krueger, 11 Ill. App. 627; a piano; Smedley v. Felt, 41 Ia. 588; an organ; Frost v. Parker, 65 Ia. 180, 21 N. W. 507; a cook stove and crockery; Finn v. Rose, 12 Ia. 565; the husband's clothing; Hudson v. King, 23 Ill. App. 118; jewelry purchased by the husband and presented to the wife; Marquardt v. Flaugher, 60 Ia. 148, 14 N. W. 214. The wife has been held not liable for money borrowed by the husband for household supplies; Davis v. Ritchey, 55 Ia. 719, 8 N. W. 669; a reaping machine; McCormick v. Muth, 49 Ia. 536; a breaking plough; Russell v. Long, 52 Ia. 250, 3 N. W. 75; a light farm wagon occasionally used by the family to ride to church and other places; Dunn v. Pickard, 24 Ill. App. 423; payments for the care of an insane husband; Delaware County v. McDonald, 46 Ia. 170.

Where the separate estate of the wife is made liable for necessaries by statute she must be a party to the suit to enforce payment; Gabriel v. Mullen, 30 Mo. App. 464. In Alabama a constitutional provision is not violated by a statute making the separate estate of the wife liable for necessaries; Bender v. Meyer & Co., 55 Ala. 576; see 2 Bish. Mar. W. § 610. In suits under such statute the existence of the separate estate must be alleged; Gabriel v. Mullen, 30 Mo. App. 464; Pippin v. Jones & Co., 52 Ala. 161. The separate estate of a married woman is liable for medical service to herself and children but not to children of her husband by a former marriage, though all live together; May v. Smith, 48 Ala. 485.

A married woman and her separate property are liable for her torts in many states, and in others, if not under her husband's coercion. When so committed they are jointly liable in some states, and in others a judgment against the husband for the wife's tort must be first enforced against her separate property. See Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 6414. See as to liability for torts, Blakeslee v. Tyler, 55 Conn. 397, 11 Atl. 855; State v. Kelly, 74 Ia. 589, 38 N. W. 503; State v. Houston, 29 S. C. 108, 6 S. E. 943; U. S. v. Terry, 42 Fed. 317; Prentiss v. Paisley, 25 Fla. 927, 7 South. 56, 7 L. R. A. 640; Mayhew v. Burns, 103 Ind. 328, 2 N. E. 793; Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260; Zeliff v. Jennings, 61 Tex. 458, 471. Such is also the tendency with respect to fraud, in view of the statutes authorizing married women to transact business independently; Troxell v. Silverthorn, 45 N. J. Eq. 330, 12 Atl. 614, 19 Atl. 622. In some jurisdictions the husband must be joined in an action for the tort of the wife unless it is in relation to her separate property; Fitzgerald v. Quann, 109 N. Y. 441, 17 N. E. 354. See 7 L. R. A. 640, n.

As to a married woman's liability connected with the use of premises owned by her there is a difference of opinion. Where the husband and wife resided on the premises she could not be convicted of keeping a gambling house; Bell v. State, 92 Ga. 49, 18 S. E. 186; but under similar circumstances the husband was held liable for violation of liquor laws; Com. v. Carroll, 124 Mass. 30; Com. v. Pratt, 126 Mass. 462; and for keeping a brothel; Com. v. Wood, 97 Mass. 225. In one case the wife was held liable for injuries resulting from harboring a vicious dog belonging to her husband; Quilty v. Battie, 135 N. Y. 201, 32 N. E. 47, 17 L. R. A. 521, contra, Strouse v. Leipf, 101 Ala. 433, 14 South. 667, 23 L. R. A. 622, 46 Am. St. Rep. 122. In other cases they have been held jointly liable; Hornbein v. Blanchard, 4 Colo. App. 92, 35 Pac. 187; and it was a question for the jury of the ownership of the animal; McLaughlin v. Kemp, 152 Mass. 7, 25 N. E. 18. Where a married woman set fire to a house owned by her and let to a tenant, the husband was not liable; Lansing v. Holdridge, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 449; and where the husband and wife were domiciled on premises which were the separate property of the latter, he was held not to be in control of the premises so as to be responsible for injury to a stranger resulting from carelessly leaving a pit uncovered; Rowe v. Smith, 45 N. Y. 230. The husband was also held not liable for torts committed on his wife's premises in Austin v. Cox, 118 Mass. 58, and Baumier v. Antiau, 65 Mich. 31, 31 N. W. 888.

With respect to the property and rights of the husband the relation of the wife to it appears not to be changed by the insanity of the husband; L. R. 5 Q. B. 51; she may bind the estate of the husband for necessaries; 1 DeG. J. & S. 465; Pearl v. McDowell, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 658, 20 Am.

Dec. 199; but not for the payment of debts generally; Sawyer v. Cutting, 23 Vt. 486; Alexander v. Miller, Reed & Co., 16 Pa. 215; nor can she sue for a debt due to him; 7 Dowl. P. C. 22.

A married woman is frequently held to have certain rights growing out of the insanity of her husband, as, to be regarded as the head of the family and to control the domicil of the husband; Robinson v. Frost, 54 Vt. 105, 41 Am. Rep. 835; Forbes v. Moore, 32 Tex. 195; to receive income belonging to him; 2 McN. & G. 134. In such case it has also been held that the wife is entitled to act with respect to her separate property as if her husband were civilly dead; Gustin v. Carpenter, 51 Vt. 585; Andover v. Merrimack County, 37 N. H. 437. The husband's insanity does not affect her right to bar her dower by joining in a deed with her husband which by reason of his insanity is invalid; Rannells v. Isgrigg, 99 Mo. 19, 12 S. W. 343; Brothers v. Bank, 84 Wis. 381, 54 N. W. 786, 36 Am. St. Rep. 932; Leggate v. Clark, 111 Mass. 308; but in some states, as Delaware, this contingency is provided for by statute; 14 Del. Laws, ch. 78.

The estate of a married woman is primarily liable for her funeral expenses, and where her husband pays them, he may recover them from her executor; Morrissey v. Mulhern, 168 Mass. 412, 47 N. E. 407. See FUNERAL EXPENSES.

It is a general rule which has come down from the earliest times and still prevails in almost all the states that the wife is not a competent witness against her husband in a criminal case; State v. Woodrow, 58 W. Va. 527, 52 S. E. 545, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862, and note, 112 Am. St. Rep. 1001, 6 Ann. Cas. 180. See WITNESS.

A married woman can acquire rights of a political character: these rights stand on the general principles of the law of nations; Shanks v. Dupont, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 242, 7 L. Ed. 666. See WOMAN.

As to the citizenship of married women, the effect of marriage upon the status of a woman as an alien, or her expatriation, see ALIEN; CITIZEN; NATURALIZATION. See an annotation on the subject in 22 L. R. A. 148.

As to the effect of ante-nuptial agreements, see that title. See RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS; DIVORCE; DOWER; FEME SOLE TRADER; ALIMONY; COVERTURE; ENTICE; ELOPEMENT.

HUSBAND OF A SHIP. See SHIP'S HUSBAND.

HUSBANDMAN. See FARMER.

HUSBRECE. Housebreaking; burglary.

HUSCARLE. A menial servant. Domesd.

HUSFASTNE. He that holdeth house and land. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

HUSGABLUM. House rent or house tax. Toml.

HUSH MONEY. A colloquial expression to designate a bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence. See BLACKMAIL.

HUSTINGS. In English Law. The name of a court held before the lord mayor and aldermen of London: it was the principal and supreme court of that city. See Co. 2d Inst. 327; St. Armand, Hist. Essay on the Legisl. Power of England 75.

A 'house-thing' as distinct from a 'thing' or court held in a borough in the open air. Maitl. Domesd. Book and Beyond 211.

The place of meeting to choose a member of parliament.

The term is used in Canadian as well as English law. Formerly the manner of conducting an election in Canada and England for a member of the legislative body was substantially as follows. Upon warrant from the proper officer, a writ issued from the clerk of the crown in chancery, directed to the sheriff, registrar, or other returning officer of the electoral division. He thereupon issued and posted in public places a proclamation appointing a day, place, and hour for his holding an election, and also fixing a day when a poll would be opened, if one were demanded and granted. The first day was called nomination day. On this day he proceeded to the hustings, which were in the open air and accessible to all the voters, proclaimed the purpose of the election, and called upon the electors present to name the person they required to represent them. The electors then made a show of hands, which might result in an election, or a poll might be demanded by a candidate or by any elector. On such demand, a poll was opened in each township, ward, or parish of the election district, at the places prescribed by statute. Now, however, by statute 35 & 36 Vict. c. 33, the votes are given by ballot in accordance with certain fixed rules.

It is also applied to a local court in Virginia. Va. Code, 1887, § 3072; Smith v. Com., 6 Gratt. (Va.) 696.

HUTESIUM ET CLAMOR. Hue and cry (q. v.).

HYDROMETER. An instrument for measuring the density of fluids: being immersed in fluids, as in water, brine, beer, brandy, etc., it determines the proportion of their density, or their specific gravity, and thence their quality. See Act of Congr. Jan. 12, 1825, 3 Story, Laws 1976.

HYPNOTISM. Artificial catalepsy; induced somnambulism; a method of artificially inducing sleep; artificial somnambulism.

The following summary of the physical manifestations accompanying hypnotism, is given in the International Cyclopædia:

"This is a term invented by the late Mr. Braid, of Manchester, to designate certain phenomena of the nervous system which in many respects resemble those which are induced by animal magnetism, but which clearly arise from the physical and psychical condition of the patient, and not from any emanation proceeding from others. The following are the directions of Mr. Braid, for inducing the phenomena, and especially the peculiar sleep-like condition of hypnotism. Take a silver lancet-case, or other, bright object, and hold it between the fingers of the left hand, about a foot from the eyes of the person experimented on, in such a position above the forehead as to produce the greatest strain on the eyes compatible with a steady fixed stare at the object. The patient must be directed to rivet his mind on the object at which he is gazing. His pupils will first contract, but soon dilate considerably; and if they are well dilated, the first and second fingers of the operator's right hand, extended and a little separated, are carried from the object towards the eyes; the eyelids will most probably close with a vibratory motion. After 10 or 15 seconds have elapsed, it will be found that the patient retains his arms and legs in any position in which the operator places them. It will also be found that all the special senses, excepting sight, are at first extremely exalted, as also are the muscular sense, and the sensibility of heat and cold; but after a time the exaltation of function is followed by a state of depression far greater than the torpor of natural sleep. The patient is now thoroughly hypnotized. The rigidity of the muscles and the profound torpor of the nervous system may be instantly removed and an opposite condition induced by directing a current of air against the muscles which we wish to render limber, or the organ we wish to excite to action; and then by mere repose the senses will speedily regain their original condition. If a current of air directed against the face is not sufficient to arouse the patient, pressure and friction should be applied to the eyelids, and the arm or leg sharply struck with an open hand.

"From the careful analysis of a large number of experiments Mr. Braid is led to the conclusion that by a continual fixation of the mental and visual eye upon an object, with absolute repose of body and general quietude, a feeling of stupor supervenes, which renders the patient liable to be readily affected in the manner already described."

Many of the minor operations of surgery have been performed on patients in the hypnotized state without pain, and hypnotism has been successfully employed as a therapeutic agent in numerous nervous and hysterical disorders in which no organic changes in the nervous system are demonstrable. Treatment by hypnotic influence has been shown to be a very dubious procedure and one capable of eventually doing more harm than good.

A committee of the British Medical Association made a report to the annual meeting in 1892, in the course of which they say:

"Test experiments which have been carried out by members of the committee have shown that this condition is attended by mental and physical phenomena, and that these differ widely in different cases.

"Among the mental phenomena are altered consciousness, temporary limitation of the will power, increased receptivity of suggestion from without, sometimes to the extent of producing passing delusions, illusions, and hallucinations, an exalted condition of the attention and post-hypnotic suggestions.

"Among the physical phenomena are vascular changes (such as flushings of the face and altered pulse rate), deepening of the respirations, increased frequency of deglutition, slight muscular tremors, inability to control suggested movements, altered muscular sense, anæsthesia, modified power of muscular contraction, catalepsy, and rigidity, often intense. It must, however, be understood that all these mental and physical phenomena are rarely present in any one case. The committee takes this opportunity of pointing out that the term hypnotism is somewhat misleading, inasmuch as sleep, as ordinarily understood, is not necessarily present. The committee are of opinion that, as a therapeutic agent, hypnotism is frequently effective in relieving pain, procuring sleep, and alleviating many functional ailments. As to its permanent efficacy in the treatment of drunkenness, the evidence before the committee is encouraging, but not conclusive."

The Encyclopedia Brit. title "Hypnotism" by W. McDougal treats the "dangers of hypnotism" as follows:

"Like all powerful agencies, chloroform or morphia, dynamite or strong electric currents, hypnotic suggestion can only be safely used by those who have special knowledge and experience, and, like them, is liable to abuse. There is little doubt that, if a subject is repeatedly hypnotized and made to entertain all kinds of absurd delusions and to carry out very frequently post-hypnotic suggestions, he may be liable to some ill-defined harm; also, that an unprincipled hypnotizer might secure an undue influence over a naturally weak subject.

"But there is no ground for the belief that hypnotic treatment, applied with good intentions and reasonable care and judgment, does or can produce deleterious effects, such as weakening of the will or liability to fall spontaneously into hypnosis. All physicians of large experience in hypnotic practice are in agreement in respect to this point. But some difference of opinion exists as to the possibility of deliberately inducing a subject to commit improper or criminal actions during hypnosis or by post-hypnotic suggestion. There is, however, no doubt that subjects retain even in deep hypnosis a very considerable power of resistance to any suggestion that is repugnant to their moral nature; and it has been shown that, on some cases in which a subject in hypnosis is made to perform some ostensibly criminal action, such as firing an unloaded pistol at a bystander or putting poison in a cup for him to drink, he is aware, however obscurely, of the unreal nature of the situation. Nevertheless it must be admitted that a person lacking in moral sentiments might be induced to commit actions from which in the normal state he would abstain, if only from fear of punishment; and it is probable that a skillful and evil-intentioned operator could in some cases so deceive a well-disposed subject as to lead him into wrong-doing. The proper precaution against such dangers is legislative regulation of the practice of hypnotism such as is already enforced in some countries." See also Tuckey, Hypnotism and Suggestion (1907); Bramwell, Hypnotism (1906), with bibliography; Moll, Hypnotism; Forel, Hypnotism (from the German).

Dr. Grashey, of Munich, thus defined hypnotic influence and suggestion.

"Suggestion means to suggest to somebody a certain thought, to persuade him that a certain idea transferred is his own. Suggestions play a great role in the intellectual life of men, and especially in education. Children have no independent judgment and rapidly adopt the thoughts suggested to them by their parents, teachers, and friends. But suggestive effect is due not merely to words, but also to example. A person can be suggested to go to sleep. Such a sleep, induced by suggestion, is called hypnosis, and the inducement of hypnosis is called hypnotism. The person who hypnotizes another is called a hypnotizer. Hypnosis, or sleep induced by suggestion, has the peculiarity that the subject remains in mental rapport with the hypnotizer, who can suggest or transfer thoughts to the hypnotized person, and then the latter can offer less resistance than in a wakeful state. Hypnosis has also the peculiarity that it can be produced easier and easier as the operation is repeated . . . According to my conception the grown man can be held devoid of his free will irresponsible then only when the action is exclusively or predominantly the product of abnormal or diseased factors, abnormal or diseased illusions, abnormal or diseased feelings, disposition, and will impulses . . . If, however, as it is generally assured, the suggestibility increases with every new production of hypnosis, the will power, as against the will of the hypnotizer, decreases by degrees, and the interference with the freedom of the subject will increase as well as the restriction of the power of will . . . And thus we see a hpynotizer attain finally such power over his subject that a single word, a single look, may put him to sleep . . . Not only in regard to the time of going to sleep, of the beginning of hypnosis, is the person hypnotized dependent upon the hypnotizer, but also in regard to thoughts and feelings. A thought which is slightly opposed during the first condition of hypnosis in a less decree than in the normal condition will meet with less opposition as the hypnotizing progress is continued; sentiments and dispositions which were but slightly indicated during the first operation will grow, become stronger and more intense as the process is repeated.

"Again a hypnotizer who has gained a certain power over an individual by a repetition of hypnotic procedures can suggest successfully a thought or a sentiment which in the commencement would hardly have been received, and thus the hypnotized individual falls into a condition of subserviency in ideas and sentiments at the cost of his own freedom of will;" 14 Med. Leg. J. 159-162.

The principal legal interest in the subject of hypnotism arises out of the question, whether, and if so to what extent, crime may be induced by hypnotic suggestion, or the will of the hypnotic subject sufficiently controlled to enable the hypnotizer to obtain the unconscious execution of papers such as wills or promises to pay money, without knowledge or consciousness on the part of the subject. Though the existence of this force cannot be questioned, it has been the subject of extended discussion, much of which is unprofitable and often based upon newspaper reports of legal proceedings which have proved to be entirely untrustworthy. The sensational character of much that has been written on the subject, even in influential legal journals, has tended to obscure the questions which really require consideration both by courts and by the legislature. These questions are carefully considered in an article on Hypnotism and the Law in 13 Med. Leg. J. 47, one on the same subject, 95 L. T. 500, and another on Hypnotism in the Criminal Courts, 13 Med. Leg. J. 351. The first article is based mainly on the answers received from leading scientists to four questions as follows: (1) Can crime be committed by the hyponotizer, the subject being the unconscious and innocent agent and instrument? (2) If the subject is unconscious, and even unwilling, has the hypnotizer such power and domination over the hypnotized as would control action to the extent of the commission of a crime? (3) Is it certain or possible to remove by hypnotic suggestion from the mind of the subject all memory of acts or occurrences which happen in the hypnotic state? (4) Would it be possible for a hypnotizer so to control a hypnotized subject as, for example, to make him sign (a) a will in the presence of third persons, declare it to be his will, and request them to sign their names as witnesses, without subsequent consciousness of the occurrence; (b) or a note of hand or a check?

The answers to these questions show a very decided difference of opinion among American scientific men who have given special attention to the subject, and the same difference appears to exist in a marked degree in European thought. It is impossible as yet to state any satisfactory conclusion from this diversity of opinion, and there has as yet been no recognition of the subject by the courts, notwithstanding the amount of discussion in the press,—much of it thoughtless and unprofitable,—of cases popularly, though erroneously supposed to touch the question of the procurement of crime by hypnotic suggestion. In spite of this difference, however, and leaving the questions above quoted to be answered by further investigations, so far as they may be, there is a practical question much mooted as to the necessity or propriety of any recognition of hypnotism by the law and of its legal regulation, at least to the extent of forbidding public exhibitions of it, or its use except by those skilled in the science to which it may be a legitimate adjunct; and even as to whether its use by physicians and surgeons may not be a proper subject of legal regulation. Another question raised is whether hypnotism is a justifiable inquisitorial agent. Such use of it is said to be permitted under the law of Holland; 95 L. T. 500; and it is quite possible that in countries accustomed to the inquisitorial character of investigations of crime, as in continental Europe, it may be thought proper. It may be assumed that it would be so entirely foreign to American and English ideas as to be unlikely to receive serious consideration in either country.

The consensus of medical opinion would seem to be in favor of regulation. The committee of the British Medical Association, in the report above quoted, stated that they had "satisfied themselves of the genuineness of the hypnotic state," and that dangers may arise in its use "from want of knowledge, carelessness, or intentional abuse, or from too continuous repetition of suggestions in unsuitable cases." And the conclusion was that, when used for therapeutic purposes, it should be confined to qualified medical men, and under no circumstances employed for female patients except in the presence of a relative or a person of their own sex. The report also expressed strong disapproval of public exhibitions of hypnotic phenomena, and a hope that some legal restrictions may be put upon them; 11 Med. Leg. J. 73. A report of a similar committee of the American Medico-Legal Society suggested the legal questions involved in the subject of Hypnotism and evoked a general discussion which may be found in 8 Med. Leg. J. 263, 353; 13 id. 47, 351. These references are valuable only to direct the inquirer to the variety and contrariety of opinion upon the subject. One of the best considered discussions from a legal point of view will be found in the paper on the forensic aspect of hypnotism in 8 Am. Lawy. 534, in which the writer, after carefully considering the cases with which hypnotism has been connected in the popular mind, reaches the conclusion that it has no place in the law. He contends that the person hypnotized cannot be compelled to commit an act which is repugnant and offensive to his sensé of morality or, as in case of signing a will, opposed to his instinct of self-preservation, although, under its influence, he may do many things inconsistent with his reason. This writer further considers that the mind of the patient while in a hypnotic state is clear as to what he is doing and his acts are performed in pursuance merely of a desire to please the hypnotizer. The restriction of its use to physicians is disapproved on the ground that, as a class, medical practitioners are not more familiar with its use than are any other class of scientists, and it would be unsafe for the legislature to assume the existence of a monopoly of virtue among medical men.

A very decided inclination towards the views thus summarized will be found among legal minds directed to the subject, as also a very weighty, if not the preponderance of, scientific opinion. The view that the commission of crime cannot be procured by hypnotic suggestion unless in the case of a person whose moral character is such that he might do the act in a normal state, will be found well reasoned and stated in a paper on Hypnotism and Crime; 13 Med. Leg. J. 240, to which reference may be made for authorities and opinions of great value. Dr. Cocke, an investigator of recognized authority, concludes that there are few cases in which the hypnotized subject will not refuse to do a wrong act or to submit to a wrong, no matter if it be suggested; 18 Crim. L. Mag. 100.

Considering the vast amount of discussion which this subject has evoked, it is surprising to find upon how slight a basis of actual legal proceedings it rests. Cases seriously discussed are found upon examination to have no connection with the subject.

Two cases in Europe have been much commented on in connection with hypnotism. The first of these, the Bompard case, excited such wide attention that the main facts of it are generally understood and the details of it were much confused by the theatrical accessories to the trial in the French courts. The effort was made to show that a murder was the result of hypnotic suggestion, and it is believed to be the general impression of those who have examined the case that that was, to a greater or less extent, an element in the crime. The character of the trial, however, greatly lessens its value as a factor in reaching conclusions either valuable or accurate. There was also so wide a difference of opinion among the experts that it has been very truly remarked: "This trial does not, therefore, clear the air of the difficulties of the medico-legal inquiry, whether crime can be committed by the suggestion of the hypnotizer, of which the subject is the innocent and also unconscious actor;" id. 353. For report of the case see Annales d'Hygiène Publique et de Mèdecine Légale, III Serie, tome V. (Paris 1881) p. 214; Jurid. Rev. Jan. 1890; see also Int. Cyc. N. Y. 1893, p. 763. Considerable research has failed to discover any other case involving the direct question.

The Czynski case, at Munich, seems to be the only authentic one in which a conviction of hypnotism was really secured. The prisoner was charged with having had recourse to hypnotic suggestions in order to win the affections of a woman of high social position and to obtain her consent to live with him in illicit intercourse, and, subsequently, after he had subjected her to his will, to inveigle her into a false marriage performed by a friend of the prisoner who personated a priest. The accused had given public exhibitions of his hypnotic powers in Dresden and claimed to be able to treat maladies by touching with his hands the parts of the body affected while the patient was in a hypnotized state. His arrest and trial in 1894 created a profound sensation throughout Europe. He was convicted and sentenced to three years' imprisonment. For a full report of the trial, see 14 Med. Leg. J. 150.

The Kansas case of State v. Gray was reported and extensively commented upon by the newspaper press and some influential legal journals (51 Alb. L. J. 87 and 3 Am. Lawy. 3) as having turned upon the ground of hypnotic influence, but this was clearly a misrepresentation, the actual decision being that one who aids, abets, counsels, or assists in the commission of a crime is equally guilty as one who actually commits the same; 55 Kan. 135, 39 Pac. 1050. One of the journals cited supra in a subsequent issue corrected its error as to the facts of that case and published a letter from the trial judges which states that, "The question of hypnotism was never raised, never insisted upon, either in the evidence, the arguments, or the instructions," and "the only reference, either direct or remote, during the whole trial that was made to the question of hypnotism," was the remark of counsel for the defence to the jury that "we might almost say that Gray possessed a hypnotic power over McDonald." McDonald as principal and Gray as accessory, being charged with murder, upon a severance, the latter was tried first and convicted and afterwards the former was acquitted on the ground of self-defense; 3 Am. Lawy. 45; 13 Med. Leg. J. 51.

The case of Hayward, tried at Minneapolis for the murder of Katherine Ging, and afterwards hanged, and the case at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, in which a young man named Pickens was charged with hypno-tizing two young girls, have both been shown to have no connection with hypnotism; 18 Crim. L. Mag. 100. The facts of both cases may be found in 13 Med. Leg. J. 241.

In a California case of a woman on trial for murder, in whose behalf it was alleged that she was hypnotized by her husband, it was held that evidence that she was told by her husband to commit the act does not tend to show that she was hypnotized, and does not render admissible evidence of the effect of hypnotism on persons subject to its influence; People v. Worthington, 105 Cal. 166, 38 Pac. 689.

Notwithstanding the drift of opinion indicated above there are writers of authority on medico-legal subjects who think differently. In discussing the possibility of rape committed upon a person in the hypnotic state, a late work, after alluding to the lack of attention given to hypnotism in England and America, continues: "Like other theories and investigations received at first with ridicule, hypnotism has been placed on a sure scientific basis, thanks to the labor of Charcot and his successors. It has found a place in French, Austrian, and Hungarian law, and must, sooner or later, creep into the Anglo-Saxon. The great French experts in legal medicine, so far as we know, without an exception (Tardieu, Devergie, Brouardel, Vibert, Tourdes, Tourette) recognize the possibility that the will may be entirely abolished under hypnotic influence." It is further asserted that the crime mentioned is not frequent, but that it undoubtedly exists in a small number of authentic cases. See 2 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 452, where these cases are narrated, and the authorities given. It will be found that they are all open to the criticism and doubt which affect the question of rape on a sleeping woman, and which are inherent in the nature of the crime. While finding no recently recorded case of the violation of a woman during hypnotic sleep, Taylor (2 Med. Leg. Jurispr. 115) is of opinion that "there can be no reasonable doubt about the possibility of such an occurrence."

HYPOBOLUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The bequest or legacy given by the husband to his wife, above her dowry. Tech. Dict.

HYPOTHEC. Used in Canada. See HYPOTHÈQUE.

HYPOTHECATION. A right which a creditor has over a thing belonging to another, and which consists in a power to cause it to be sold, in order to be paid his claim out of the proceeds.

There are two species of hypothecation, one called pledge, pignus, and the other properly denominated hypothecation. Pledge is that species of hypothecation which is contracted by the delivery by the debtor to the creditor of the thing hypothecated. Hypothecation, properly so called, is that which is contracted without delivery of the thing hypothecated; 2 Bell, Com. 25.

In the common law, cases of hypothecation, in the strict sense of the civil law, that is of a pledge of a chattel without possession by the pledgee, are scarcely to be found; cases of bottomry bonds and claims for seamen's wages against ships are the nearest approach to it; but these are liens and privileges, rather than hypothecations; Story, Bailm. § 288. It seems that chattels not in existence, though they cannot be pledged, can be hypothecated, so that the lien will attach as soon as the chattel has been produced; Macomber v. Parker, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 497.

In Scotland hypotheo is the landlord's right, independently of any stipulation, over the crop and stocking of his tenant, giving the landlord a security over the crop of each year for the rent of that year; Bell.

Conventional hypothecations are those which arise by agreement of the parties. Dig. 20. 1. 5.

General hypothecations are those by which the debtor hypothecates to his creditors all his estate which he has or may have.

Legal hypothecations are those which arise without any contract therefor between the parties, expressed or implied.

Special hypothecations are hypothecations of a particular estate.

Tacit hypothecations are such as the law gives in certain cases, without the consent of the parties, to secure the creditor. They are a species of legal hypothecation.

Thus, the public treasury has a lien over the property of public debtors; Code 8. 15. 1. The landlord has a lien on the goods in the house leased, for the payment of his rent; Dig. 20. 2. 2; Code 8. 15. 7. The builder has a lien, for his bill, on the house he has built; Dig. 20. 1. The pupil has a lien on the property of the curator for the balance of his account; Dig. 46. 6. 22; Code 5. 37. 20. There is hypothecation of the goods of a testator for the security of the legacy; Code 6. 43. 1.

HYPOTHÈQUE. In French Law. Hypothecation; the right acquired by the creditor over the immovable property which has been assigned to him by his debtor as security for his debt, although he be not placed in possession of it.

It thus corresponds to the mortgage of real property in English law, and is a real charge, following the property into whosesoever hands it comes. It may be légale, as in the case of the charge which the state has over the lands of its accountants, or which a married woman has over those of her husband; judiciaire, when it is the result of a judgment of a court of justice; and conventionelle, when it is the result of an agreement of the parties; Brown.

HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION. A question put to an expert witness containing a recital of facts assumed to have been proved or proof of which is offered in the case, and requiring the opinion of the witness thereon.

It must present fairly the state of facts which the counsel claims to have proved or which the testimony of the witnesses tends to prove; People v. Augsbury, 97 N. Y. 501; Veneman v. Jones, 118 Ind. 42, 20 N. E. 644, 10 Am. St. Rep. 100; State v. Hanley, 34 Minn. 430, 26 N. W. 397; Poole v. Dean, 152 Mass. 589, 26 N. E. 406; Hathaway's Adm'r v. Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335; Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Jordan, 87 Ga. 69, 13 S. E. 202; In re Will of Norman, 72 Ia. 84, 33 N. W. 374; Woolner v. Spalding, 65 Miss. 204, 3 South. 583; Baker v. State, 30 Fla. 41, 11 South. 492; State v. Anderson, 10 Or. 448; McFall v. Smith, 32 Ill. App. 463; Tingley v. Cowgill, 48 Mo. 291; Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 8 S. E. 493, 2 L. R. A. 668; Baltimore & L. T. Co. v. Cassell, 66 Md. 419, 7 Atl. 805, 59 Am. Rep. 175; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Compton, 75 Tex. 667, 13 S W. 667; Prentis v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567, 50 N. W. 637; Quinn v. Higgins, 63 Wis. 664, 24 N. W. 482, 53 Am. Rep. 305; People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 19 Pac. 161; and such state of facts must be relevant to the issue; Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398; Williams v. Brown, 28 Ohio St. 547; Barber's Appeal, 63 Conn. 393, 27 Atl. 973, 22 L. R. A. 90; North American Acc. Ass'n v. Woodson, 64 Fed. 689, 12 C. C. A. 392. The question must contain all the facts proved when it was put; Baer v. Koch, 2 Misc. 335, 21 N. Y. Supp. 974; Mammerberg v. R. Co., 62 Mo. App. 563; and the witness will not be allowed to answer a question which excludes from his consideration testimony which is essential to the formation of an intelligent opinion concerning the matter; Vosburg v. Putney, 80 Wis. 523, 50 N. W. 403, 14 L. R. A. 226, 27 Am. St. Rep. 47; but the authorities as to this point are conflicting, as it has been held that a question should not be rejected because it does not include all the facts in the case; Davidson v. State, 135 Ind. 254, 34 N. E. 972; Appeal of Barber, 63 Conn. 393, 27 Atl. 973, 22 L. R. A. 90; unless it thereby fails to present the case fairly; Appeal of Barber, 63 Conn. 393, 27 Atl. 973, 22 L. R. A. 90.

Where there is any evidence, a hypothetical question can be based upon it regardless of the preponderance of evidence on the fact; Catlin v. Ins. Co., 83 Ill. App. 40; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Wallace, 202 Ill. 129, 66 N. E. 1096; and the question may be asked where the hypothesis is based on facts supported by evidence though it does not include all the facts in evidence; Allison v. Parkinson, 108 Ia. 154, 78 N. W. 845; Cole v. Coal Co., 159 N. Y. 59, 53 N. E. 670; Swensen v. Bender, 114 Fed. 1, 51 C. C. A. 627; People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 Pac. 75; it need not embrace all the evidence but may be based on any facts within the range of the evidence; People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 562, 48 Pac. 711; or on an assumption of facts which the testimony tends to prove; Medill v. Snyder, 61 Kan. 15, 58 Pac. 962, 78 Am. St. Rep. 307.

A question put to an expert witness calling for his opinion may refer him to the testimony in the case if he has heard it, instead of stating the facts which the answer tends to prove, but in such a case the witness must assume the testimony to be true; Jones v. Ry. Co., 43 Minn. 279, 45 N. W. 444; Frankfort v. Ry. Co., 12 Misc. 13, 33 N. Y. Supp. 36; and it has been held that he may not base his opinion on the testimony but must confine himself to the hypothetical statement; Link v. Sheldon, 136 N. Y. 1, 32 N. E. 696. The witness may not assume for himself from the testimony the facts on which he bases his opinion without informing the jury what he supposes the facts to be; Connelly v. Ry. Co., 60 Hun 495, 15 N. Y. Supp. 176; he may, include as a basis of his opinion, facts known to be true as well as those stated in the question; Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 75 Tex. 501, 12 S. W. 742; Tebo v. City of Augusta, 90 Wis. 405, 63 N. W. 1045.

The truth of the facts assumed by the question is, in doubtful cases, a question for the jury, and if they find that the assumed facts are not proved, they should disregard the opinions based on such hypothetical questions, and the court will so instruct them; People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148, 31 N. W. 94; Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400, 37 N. W. 499; but the court is not required to submit the matter to the jury unless there is some substantial evidence tending to establish the hypothesis; Nave v. Tucker, 70 Ind. 15. If there is no testimony in the case tending to prove the facts assumed in the question, it is improper; the facts must be proved or proof of them must be offered; Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400, 37 N. W. 499; Hovey v. Chase, 52 Me. 304, 83 Am. Dec. 514; Muldowney v. R. Co., 39 Ia. 615; Reber v. Herring, 115 Pa. 599, 8 Atl. 830; Williams v. Brown, 28 Ohio St. 547; Quinn v. Higgins, 63 Wis. 664, 24 N. W. 482, 53 Am. Rep. 305; Woolner v. Spalding, 65 Miss. 204, 3 South. 583; Haish v. Payson, 107 Ill. 365.

The length of the question is to be regulated, largely, by the discretion of the trial judge; Forsyth v. Doolittle, 120 U. S. 73, 7 Sup. Ct. 408, 30 L. Ed. 586; it has been held an error to permit it to be so long and complicated as to confuse the witness or baffle his memory; People v. Brown, 53 Mich. 531, 19 N. W. 172; Haish v. Payson, 107 Ill. 365; but to obviate this difficulty the court may require the question to be reduced to writing; Jones v. Portland, 88 Mich. 598, 50 N. W. 731, 16 L. R. A. 437. If unfair and misleading, hypothetical cases assumed in framing questions are to be considered in determining whether or not a fair trial has been had; McFall v. Smith, 32 Ill. App. 463; but it cannot be expected that the interrogatory will include the proofs or theory of the adversary, since this would require a party to assume the truth of that which he generally denies; Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550. Hypothetical questions cannot be asked of an ordinary observer; State v. Klinger, 46 Mo. 224; Russell v. State, 53 Miss. 367; Appeal of Dunham, 27 Conn. 192. And, as to this, a professional man, in a matter of which he has not made special study is doubtless regarded as an ordinary observer.

HYSTEROTOMY. The cæsarian operation.

HYTHE. A port, wharf, or small haven used for the purpose of embarking or landing merchandise. Blount.

I

I. O. U. A memorandum of debt in use among merchants and others. It is not a promissory note, as it contains no direct promise to pay; 4 C. & P. 324; 1 Mann. & G. 46; but if words are superadded to the acknowledgment from which an intention to accompany it with an engagement to pay may be gathered, it will be construed as a promissory note; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 33; if it contains an agreement that it is to be paid on a given day it is a promissory note; Byles, Bills 19. It is evidence of an account stated but not of money lent; 16 M. & W. 449. A due bill has been held to be a promissory note; Finney v. Shirley, 7 Mo. 42; McGowen v. West, 7 Mo. 569, 38 Am. Dec. 468; Harrow v. Dugan, 6 Dana (Ky.) 341. A due bill to bearer without specifying the date of payment is a promissory note payable immediately; Sackett v. Spencer, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 180. An I. O. U. not addressed to any one will be evidence for the plaintiff if produced by him; 16 M. & W. 449; 1 M. & G. 46. It is evidence of an account stated with the addressee; L. R. 1 C. P. 297; or, if not addressed, then to the person producing it; 10 L. J. Q. B. 43. It imports a promise to pay; Buck v. Hurst, L. R. 1 C. P. 297.

IBIDEM (Lat.). The same. The same book or place. The same subject.

ICE. Ice formed in a stream not navigable is part of the realty, and belongs to the owner of the bed of the stream, who has a right to prevent its removal; State v. Pottmeyer, 33 Ind. 402, 5 Am. Rep. 224; Mill River Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 34 Conn. 462; Allen v. Weber, 80 Wis. 531, 50 N. W. 514, 14 L. R. A. 361, 27 Am. St. Rep. 51; Washington Ice Co. v. Shortall, 101 Ill. 46, 40 Am. Rep. 196; but see, contra, Higgins v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 318, 2 N. W. 13, 32 Am. Rep. 160, where it is said that the ephemeral character of ice renders it incapable of any permanent or beneficial use as part of the soil, and therefore a sale of ice already formed, as a distinct commodity, should be held a sale of personalty whether in the water or out of the water. See, also, 32 Am. Rep. 160, note; 32 Am. L. Reg. 166. Riparian owners on navigable streams have no title to the ice which forms on such streams, as an incident to their ownership of the bank; Marsh v. McNider, 88 Ia. 390, 55 N. W. 469, 20 L. R. A. 333, 45 Am. St. Rep. 240; and if a statute gives them title to the ice opposite their property, and prescribes a remedy for invasion of their rights therein, that remedy is exclusive; Briggs v. Ice Co., 11 Misc. 197, 32 N. Y. Supp. 95. The right of taking ice either for use or sale from a pond which is a public water, is a public right which may be exercised by any citizen who can obtain access to the pond without trespassing on the lands of other persons, or unreasonably interfering with their rights; Inhabitants of West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen (Mass.) 158; Hittinger v. Eames, 121 Mass. 539; Wood v. Fowler, 26 Kan. 682, 40 Am. Rep. 330.

This right is personal; to take a large amount for commercial purposes is an unreasonable exercise of it; Sanborn v. Ice Co., 82 Minn. 43, 84 N. W. 641, 51 L. R. A. 829, 83 Am. St. Rep. 401.

A landowner cannot cut ice for sale from a pond situated on his land, where its removal works an actual injury to one having a pondage right therein; Howe v. Andrews, 62 Conn. 398, 26 Atl. 394; but the owner of land abutting on a millpond may take ice from the pond if it does not interfere with the use of the mill; Eidemiller Ice Co. v. Guthrie, 42 Neb. 238, 60 N. W. 717, 28 L. R. A. 581. Ice in an ice-house is a subject of larceny, but before being gathered it is not, being part of the pond or river; Ward v. People, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 395; Ward v. People, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 144. See Bish. N. Cr. L. § 765, n. 2.

The legislature may forbid the taking of ice from a stream the title to which is in the public in favor of a public use for skating, etc.; Board of Park Com'rs of Des Moines v. Ice Co., 130 Ia. 603, 105 N. W. 203, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1103, 8 Ann. Cas. 28.

ICENI. The ancient name for the people of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, Huntingdonshire. Cowell.

ICONA. A figure or representation of a thing. Du Cange.

ICTUS. In Old English Law. A stroke or blow from a club or stone; a bruise, contusion, or swelling produced by such blow, as distinguished from "plaga" (a wound). Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, 3.

ICTUS ORBIS (Lat.). In Medical Jurisprudence. A maim, a bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin.

When the skin is cut, the injury is called a wound. Bracton, lib. 2, tr. 2, c. 5 and 24. Ictus is often used by medical authors in the sense of percussus. It is applied to the pulsation of the arteries, to any external lesion of the body produced by violence; also, to the wound inflicted by a scorpion or venomous reptile. Orbis is used in the sense of circle, circuit, rotundity. It is applied, also, to the eyeballs: oculi dicuntur orbes. Castelli, Lex. Med.

ID EST (Lat.). That is. Commonly abbreviated i. e.

IDAHO. One of the states of the United States.

It was a part of the Louisiana purchase but was included in the portion affected by the joint occupation of the United States and Great Britain under the treaty of 1818 which was terminated in 1846. It was a part of the Oregon territory organized under act of August 14, 1848, and afterwards of the territory of Washington organized under act of March 2, 1853; it was organized as a separate territory under its present name by act of March 3, 1863. It then included Montana and part of Wyoming, which were afterward separately organized, and the present boundaries of Idaho were settled by act of July 25, 1868, setting apart Wyoming as a territory. Under a constitution adopted August 6, and ratified November 2, 1889, it was admitted as a state July 3, 1890; U. S. Rev. Stat. 1. Supp. 754. In 1911, amendments provided for the initiative, referendum and recall.

IDEM (Lat.). The same. According to Lord Coke, "idem" has two significations, idem syllabis seu verbis (the same in syllables or words), and idem re et sensu (the same in substance and in sense). 10 Coke 124 a.

IDEM PER IDEM. The same for the same. An illustration of a kind that really adds no additional element to the consideration of the question.

IDEM SONANS (Lat.). Having the same sound.

In indictments and pleadings, when a name which it is material to state is wrongly spelled, yet if it be idem sonans with that proved, it is sufficient. The following have been held to be idem sonans, Segrave for Seagrave; 2 Stra. 889; Whyneard for Winyard; Russ. & R. 412; Benedetto for Beneditto; 2 Taunt. 401; Keen for Keene; Thach. Cr. Winchester, 85 Tenn. 171, 1 S. W. 781; Chegawgequay for Chegawgoquay; Brown v. Quinland, 75 Mich. 289, 42 N. W. 940; Keoliher, Kelliher, Kellier, Keolhier, Kelhier, are held sufficient for Kealiher; Millett v. Blake, 81 Me. 531, 18 Atl. 293, 10 Am. St. Rep. 275; Luckenbough for Luckenbach; Schee v. La Grange, 78 Ia. 101, 42 N. W. 616; Rooks for Rux; Rooks v. State, 83 Ala. 79, 3 South. 720; Tasso for Dasso; Napa State Hospital v. Dasso, 153 Cal. 698, 96 Pac. 355, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 643, 15 Ann. Cas. 910; Wadkins for Watkins; Bennett v. State, 62 Ark. 516, 36 S. W. 947; Gittings for Giddans; Woody v. State, 113 Ga. 927, 39 S. E. 297.

The rule seems to be that if names may be sounded alike without doing violence to the power of letters found in the various orthography, the variance is immaterial; Wilks v. State, 27 Tex. App. 381, 11 S. W. 415; 1 Whart. Cr. L. 309; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 688. Whether or not the names are idem sonantia was held a question for the jury, where the name was laid Darius C (pronounced in Dorset dialect D'rius) and it was in fact Trius; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 231; 3 Russ. Cr. Sharsw. ed. 317. See Kirk v. Suttle, 6 Ala. 679; Com. v. Brigham, 147 Mass. 414, 18 N. E. 167.

In the following cases the variances there mentioned were declared to be fatal; McCarn for McCann; Russ. & R. 351; Shakspeare for Shakepear; 10 East 83; Calver for Calvert and Day for Dax; 2 Cr. & M. 189; Moores for Mohr; State v. Mohr, 55 Mo. App. 325; Mulette for Merlette; Merlette v. State, 100 Ala. 42, 14 South. 562; Siemson for Simonson; Simonson v. Dolan, 114 Mo. 176, 21 S. W. 510; Bart for Bartholomew; Curtis v. Marrs, 29 Ill. 508; Comyns for Cummins; Cruikshank v. Comyns, 24 Ill. 602; Grautis for Gerardus; Mann v. Carley, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 148; Henry for Harry; Garrison v. People, 21 Ill. 535; Jeffery for Jeffries; Marshall v. Jeffries, 1 Hempst. 299, Fed. Cas. No. 9,128a.

The same principle applies to words as well as names, and a verdict is not vitiated by misspelling if the words are idem sonans, as mrder for murder, turn for term, too for two; but a verdict for damages was void when given for impunitive damages, or when a burglar was found guilty of bergellery, or where the defendant was found guity instead of guilty, there being no such words as the last three in English; Shaw v. State, 2 Tex. App. 487; Haney v. State, 2 Tex. App. 504; Keeller v. State, 4 Tex. App. 527; Dillon v. Rogers, 36 Tex. 152.

See, generally, 3 Chitty, Pr. 231, 232; 6 M. & S. 45; Tibbets v. Kiah, 2 N. H. 557; Com. v. Gillespie, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 479, 10 Am. Dec. 475; Petrie v. Woodworth, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 219; Gordon v. St. Rep. 785, note; 13 L. R. A. 541, note; Harris, Identification, Ch. III.

IDENTIFICATION. "Evidence of personal identity which is inconsistent with other evidence in the case" should be considered "with scrupulous care and caution;" Tisdale v. Ins. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 14,059. Where the witness has seen the person but once, and that several years before, his uncorroborated testimony would be insufficient; Reid v. Reid, 17 N. J. Eq. 101; and the identification of an adult person whom the witness had not seen since the former was a child would be entitled to but little weight; In re Jew Wong Loy, 91 Fed. 240.

Identification might be satisfactory, though the witness should not be able to describe the person's features; De Witt v. Barley, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 550; it would be strengthened if the witness could select the person's photograph from a number; Com. v. Connors, 156 Pa. 147, 27 Atl. 366. A witness may identify a person by his voice; Com. v. Hayes, 138 Mass. 185; Pilcher v. U. S., 113 Fed. 248, 51 C. C. A. 205. If the speaker were unseen and the acquaintance slight, the evidence would be weak; Ramsay v. Ryerson, 40 Fed. 739. The voice may have been heard on the telephone; Lord Electric Co. v. Morrill, 178 Mass. 304, 59 N. E. 807; such evidence was received where the witness did not know the person till afterwards; People v. Strollo, 191 N. Y. 42, 83 N. E. 573. In the Tichborne Case, Cockburn, C. J., charged that the identification of an adult son by a parent who had not seen him since childhood was much less satisfactory than that of persons who had brought him up. In Lee Sing Far v. U. S., 94 Fed. 834, 35 C. C. A. 327, it was held to be improbable, though not impossible, that a Chinese could identify his daughter of fifteen years of age whom he had not seen since she was two or three years old. See Moore, Facts, 1365.

As to the effect of variation in names with respect to records as notice, see Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Hesser, 77 Ia. 381, 42 N. W. 325, 4 L. R. A. 122, 14 Am. St. Rep. 297; Johnson v. Hess, 126 Ind. 298, 25 N. E. 445, 9 L. R. A. 471; Crouse v. Murphy, 140 Pa. 335, 21 Atl. 358, 12 L. R. A. 58, 23 Am. St. Rep. 232. And as to names in a record index, see 14 L. R. A. 393, note.

As to the identification of criminals, see ANTHROPOMETRY.

IDENTITATE NOMINIS (Lat.). In English Law. The name of a writ which lay for a person taken upon a capias or exigent, and committed to prison, for another man of the same name: this writ directs the sheriff to inquire whether he be the person against whom the action was brought, and if not, then to discharge him; Fitzh. N. B. 267. In practice, a party in this condition would be relieved by habeas corpus.

IDENTITY. Sameness. Identity of persons is a phrase applied especially to those cases in which the issue before the jury is, whether a man be the same person with one previously convicted or attainted. 4 Bla. Com. 396; 4 Steph. Com. 468.

In cases of larceny the question of the identity of property is for the jury and a verdict will be set aside where the court said in the charge that one of the stolen "bills was positively identified;" Hill v. State, 17 Wis. 675, 86 Am. Dec. 736.

The question of identity of a prisoner as well as of property may arise. In a case of larceny of a hog the question of identity both of prisoner and hog was submitted to the jury; Kelly v. State, 1 Tex. App. 628; and evidence of a confession given by a fellow-prisoner of the accused (who had conversed with him through soil pipes in the gaol) that he recognized him by his voice was allowed to go to the jury on the question of identity; Brown v. Com., 76 Pa. 319.

Generally a witness may be permitted to identify an accused solely from having heard his voice; Com. v. Kelly, 186 Mass. 403, 71 N. E. 807; Deal v. State, 140 Ind. 354, 39 N. E. 930; State v. Herbert, 63 Kan. 516, 66 Pac. 235; Mack v. State, 54 Fla. 55, 44 South. 706, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 373, 14 Ann. Cas. 78.

As to the modes of identifying different kinds of personal property, see Harris, Identification, Ch. XIII. And as to the different kinds of evidence resorted to for proving the identity of a prisoner, see id. Ch. IV.

As to the identity between an alien immigrant and the accused, descriptive matter in the report of the captain of the ship to the immigration officers, corresponding closely with other evidence relating to him, was allowed to go to the jury; McInerney v. U. S., 143 Fed. 729, 74 C. C. A. 655.

In cases of larceny, trover, and replevin, the things in question must be identified; 4 Bla. Com. 396. So, too, the identity of articles taken or injured must be proved in all indictments where taking property is the gist of the offence, and in actions of tort for damage to specific property. See State v. Vines, 34 La. Ann. 1082. Many other cases occur in which identity must be proved in regard either to persons or things. One case in which such questions arise under chattel mortgages, in which this identification need be such only as would enable identification by a third person aided by inquiry, and not such as would enable a stranger to select it; Jones, Chat. Mortg. § 54; Smith v. McLean, 24 Ia. 323; Tindall v. Wasson, 74 Ind. 495; Connally v. Spragins, 66 Ala. 258; Lawrence v. Evarts, 7 Ohio St. 194; Goulding v. Swett, 13 Gray (Mass.) 517. The question is sometimes one of great practical difficulty, as in case of the death of strangers, reappearance after a long absence, and the like. See Ryan, Med. Jur. 301; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 509; 6 C. & P. 677; Clark v. Pearson, 53 Ga. 496; 1 Hagg. Cons. 180; Shelf. Marr. & D. 226; Best, Pres. App. Case 4; Clark v. Robinson, 88 Ill. 498; Wills, Circ. Ev. 143; 4 Bla. Com. 396; 4 Steph. Com. 468; Harris, Identif.

Identity of the name of a grantor or grantee is prima facie evidence of identity of the person; Rupert v. Penner, 35 Neb. 587, 53 N. W. 598, 17 L. R. A. 824; and a conveyance by a grantee of the same name as the holder of the title is presumably sufficient; Gilman v. Sheets, 78 Ia. 499, 43 N. W. 299; even where the names are not identical in spelling, as Savery and Savory; Smith v. Gillum, 80 Tex. 120, 15 S. W. 794; Fink v. Ry. Co., 8 N. Y. Supp. 327. See IDEM SONANS. These cases apply a general principle, that a presumption of identity of persons arises from identity of name, and the former is recognized as prima facie evidence of the latter in a great variety of cases; Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 47, 2 Sup. Ct. 313, 27 L. Ed. 641; Long v. McDow, 87 Mo. 197; State v. McGuire, id. 642; 4 Q. B. 626; Hatcher v. Rocheleau, 18 N. Y. 86; Ward v. Dougherty, 75 Cal. 240, 17 Pac. 193, 7 Am. St. Rep. 151; Campbell v. Wallace, 46 Mich. 320, 9 N. W. 432; Grindle v. Stone, 78 Me. 176, 3 Atl. 183; Bogue v. Bigelow, 29 Vt. 179; Wilson v. Holt, 83 Ala. 528, 3 South. 321, 3 Am. St. Rep. 768; Robertson v. Du Bose, 76 Tex. 1, 13 S. W. 300; contra, 9 M. & W. 75; Robards v. Wolfe, 1 Dana (Ky.) 155; Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319; Ellsworth v. Moore, 5 Ia. 486; Mooers v. Bunker, 29 N. H. 420. But it has been held that it is a question for the jury to determine the identity of a grantor with the former grantee; Carleton v. Townsend, 28 Cal. 221; or whether a person pleading former conviction is the same party; State v. Robinson, 39 Me. 154; or a person bearing the name of a deceased is one of his heirs; Freeman v. Loftis, 51 N. C. 528. The identity of a family name and initials raises no presumption of identity; Bennett v. Libhart, 27 Mich. 489. As between father and son of the same name it is presumed that the former is intended if there is no distinguishing mark; Padgett v. Lawrence, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 170, 40 Am. Dec. 232; Graves v. Colwell, 90 Ill. 612; 1 Stark. 106; State v. Vittum, 9 N. H. 519.

IDEO (Lat.). Therefore. Calv. Lex.

IDEO CONSIDERATUM EST. Therefore it is considered. See CONSIDERATUM EST PER CURIAM.

IDEOT. An old form for idiot (q. v.).

IDES (Lat.). In Civil Law. A day in the month from which the computation of days was made.

The divisions of months adopted among the Romans were as follows: The calends occurred on the first day of every month, and were distinguished by adding the name of the month: as, calendæ Januarii, the first of January. The nones occurred on the fifth of each month, with the exception of March, July, October, and May, in which months they occurred on the seventh. The ides occurred always on the ninth day after the nones, thus dividing the month equally. In fact the ides would seem to have been the primal division, occurring in the middle of the month, nearly. Other days than the three designated were indicated by the number of days which would elapse before the next succeeding point of division. Thus, the second of April is the quarto nonas Aprilis; the second of March, the sexto nonas Martii; the eighth of March, octavius idus Martii; the eighth of April, sextus idus Aprilis; the sixteenth of March, decimus septimus calendas Aprilis.

This system is still used in some chanceries in Europe; and we therefore give the following Table of the Calends, Nones, and Ides.

	Jan., Aug. Dec., 31 days.	March, May, July, Oct., 31 days.	April, June, Sept. Nov., 30 days.	Feb. 28, bissextile, 29 days.

IDIOCHIRA (from Gr. ἰδιος, private, and χείρ, hand). In Civil Law. An instrument privately executed, as distinguished from one publicly executed. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

IDIOCY. In Medical Jurisprudence. Mental deficiency of varying grades down to extreme stupidity resulting from imperfect development or disease of the nervous centers either prenatal or occurring before the evolution of the mental faculties in childhood. Brush in Cyclopædia of Diseases of Children. A condition of defective brain-development. See 3 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 364 et seq.; 2 Ham. Leg. Med. 80 et seq.

It always implies some defect or disease of the brain, which is generally smaller than the standard size and irregular in its shape and proportions. Hydrocephalus is an occasional cause of idiocy. The senses are very imperfect at best, and one or more are often entirely wanting. None can articulate more than a few words; while many utter only cries or muttered sounds. Some make known their wants by signs or sounds which are intelligible to those who have charge of them. The head, the features, the expression, the movements,—all convey the idea of extreme mental deficiency. The reflective faculties are entirely wanting, whereby they are utterly incapable of any effort of reasoning. The perceptive faculties exist in a very limited degree, and hence they are rendered capable of being improved somewhat by education, and redeemed, in some measure, from their brutish condition. They have been led into habits of propriety and decency, have been taught some of the elements of learning, and have learned some of the coarser industrial occupations. The moral sentiments, such as self-esteem, love of approbation, veneration, benevolence, are not unfrequently manifested; while some propensities, such as cunning, destructiveness, sexual impulse, are particularly active.

In some parts of Europe a form of idiocy prevails endemically, called cretinism. It is associated with disease or defective development of other organs besides the head. Cretins are short in stature, their limbs are attenuated, the belly tumid, and the neck thick. The muscular system is feeble, and their voluntary movements restrained and undecided. The power of language is very imperfect, if not entirely wanting. In the least degraded forms of this disease the perceptive powers may be somewhat developed, and the individual may evince some talent at music or construction. In Switzerland they make parts of watches. Cretinism like idiocy is frequently congenital, and its causation is very obscure.

Absence of the internal secretion of the thyroid gland is a common cause of the so-called sporadic cretinism which exists the world over.

Both idiocy and cretinism exhibit various degrees of mental deficiency, but they never approximate to any description of men supposed to be rational, nor can any amount of education efface the chasm which separates them from their better-endowed fellow-men. The older law-writers, whose observation of mental manifestations was not very profound, thought it necessary to have some test of idiocy; and accordingly, Fitzherbert says, if he have sufficient understanding to know and understand his letters, and to read by teaching or information, he is not an idiot. Natura Brevium 583. Again, he says, a man is not an idiot if he hath any glimmering of reason, so that he can tell his parents, his age, or the like common matters. The inference was, no doubt, that such a man is responsible for his criminal acts. At the present day, such an idea would not be entertained for a moment, nor are we aware of any case on record of an idiot suffering capital punishment. See INSANITY; DEMENTIA; IMBECILITY.

IDIOT. A person who has been without understanding from his nativity, and whom the law, therefore, presumes never likely to attain any. Shelf. Lun. 2; 3 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 371.

It is an imbecility or sterility of mind, and not a perversion of the understanding; Chitty, Med. Jur. 327, 345; 1 Rus. Cr. 6; Bacon, Abr. Idiot (A); Brooke, Abr.; Co. Litt. 246, 247; 4 Co. 126; 1 Bla. Com. 302; Tayl. Med. Jur. 688. When a man cannot count or number twenty, nor tell his father's or mother's name, nor how old he is, having been frequently told of it, it is a fair presumption that he is devoid of understanding; Fitzh. N. B. 233. See 1 Dow, P. Cas. N. S. 392; 3 Bligh. N. S. 1. Persons born deaf, dumb, and blind were presumed to be idiots; for, the senses being the only inlets of knowledge, and these, the most important of them, being closed, all ideas and associations belonging to them are totally excluded from their minds; Co. Litt. 42; Shelf. Lun. 3. See State v. Howard, 118 Mo. 127, 24 S. W. 41. But this is a mere presumption, which, like most others, may be rebutted; and doubtless a person born deaf, dumb, and blind, who could be taught to read and write, would not be considered an idiot. Remarkable instances of such are found in the persons of Laura Bridgman and Helen Keller who have been taught how to converse, and even to write. See Locke, Hum. Und. b. 2, c. 11, §§ 12, 13; Ayliffe, Pand. 234; 4 Comyns, Dig. 610; 8 id. 644. See DEAF AND DUMB; DEAF, DUMB AND BLIND; IDIOCY.

Idiots are incapable of committing crimes, or entering into contracts. They cannot, of course, make a will; but they may acquire property by descent.

IDIOTA. In the Civil Law. An unlearned, illiterate, or simple person. Calv. Lex. A private man; one not in office.

In Common Law. An idiot or fool.

IDIOTA INQUIRENDO WRIT DE. This is the name of an old writ which directs the sheriff to enquire whether a man be an idiot or not. The inquisition is to be made by a jury of twelve men. Fitzh. N. B. 232.

IDONEUM SE FACERE. IDONEARE SE. To purge one's self by oath of a crime of which one is accused.

IDONEUS (Lat.). Sufficient; fit; adequate. He is said to be idoneus homo who hath these three things, honesty, knowledge, and civility; and if an officer, etc., be not idoneus, he may be discharged; 8 Co. 41. If a clerk presented to a living is not persona idonea, which includes ability in learning, honesty of conversation, etc., the bishop may refuse him. And to a quare impedit brought thereon, "in literatura minus sufficiens is a good plea, without setting forth the particular kind of learning;" 5 Co. 58; 6 id. 49 b; Co. 2d Inst. 631; Wood. Inst. 32.

So of things: idonea quantitas; Calvinus, Lex.; idonea paries, a wall sufficient or able to bear the weight.

In Civil Law. Rich; solvent; e. g. idoneus tutor, idoneus debitor. Calvinus, Lex.

IGLISE (L. Fr.). A church. Kelham. Another form of "église."

IGNIS JUDICIUM (Lat.). In Old English Law. The judicial trial by fire.

IGNITEGIUM. The curfew (q. v.). Cowell.

IGNOMINY. Public disgrace; infamy; reproach; dishonor. Ignominy is the opposite of esteem. Wolff § 145. See Brown v. Kingsley, 38 Ia. 220.

IGNORAMUS (Lat. we are ignorant or uninformed). The word which is written on a bill by a grand jury when they find that there is not sufficient evidence to authorize their finding it a true bill. They are said to ignore the bill, which is also said to be thrown out. The proceedings being now in English, the grand jury indorse on the bill, Not found, No bill, or, No true bill. 4 Bla. Com. 305.

IGNORANCE. The lack of knowledge.

Ignorance is distinguishable from error. Ignorance is want of knowledge; error is the nonconformity or opposition of ideas to the truth. Considered as a motive of actions, ignorance differs but little from error. They are generally found together, and what is said of one is said of both.

Essential ignorance is ignorance in relation to some essential circumstance so intimately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties that it induces them to act in the business; Pothier, Vente, nn. 3, 4; 2 Kent 367.

Non-essential or accidental ignorance is that which has nót of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract.

Ignorance of fact is the want of knowledge as to the fact in question; as if a man marry a married woman, supposing her unmarried; Com. v. Thompson, 11 Allen (Mass.) 23, 87 Am. Dec. 685.

It is not yet fully settled, at least in this country, whether a person who does a criminal act, supposing it to be lawful through ignorance of fact, can properly be convicted; 12 Am. L. Rev. 469. Such a conviction was held proper; Com. v. Thompson, 11 Allen (Mass.) 23, 87 Am. Dec. 685 (where a man was convicted of adultery, in innocently marrying a woman whose husband was living); Thompson v. Thompson, 114 Mass. 566; State v. Hartfiel, 24 Wis. 60; Beckham v. Nacke, 56 Mo. 546; contra, Stern v. State, 53 Ga. 229, 21 Am. Rep. 266; Brown v. State, 24 Ind. 113; Crabtree v. State, 30 Ohio St. 382. The doctrine was adhered to in a later Massachusetts case, where a belief that the husband was dead was held no defence in a prosecution for bigamy; Com. v. Hayden, 163 Mass. 453, 40 N. E. 846, 28 L. R. A. 318, 47 Am. St. Rep. 468. The opposite conclusion was reached in England by nine out of fourteen judges: 23 Q. B. D. 168; so in Foord (So. Afr.) 190.

The Massachusetts court took issue directly with the English case. Mr. Bishop severely criticises the Massachusetts doctrine and, reviewing the authorities, strongly approved the English rule; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 303 a, note. Nevertheless, it is generally well established that ignorance of facts is a defence, where a knowledge of certain facts is essential to an offence, but no defence where a statute makes an act indictable, irrespective of guilty knowledge. Thus there can be no conviction of murder, larceny, or burglary, without proof of the intention, mens rea, to commit these crimes; but where selling liquor to minors is by statute indictable, the mistaken belief that the vendee is of full age, is no defence; Com. v. Gould, 158 Mass. 499, 33 N. E. 656; see 1 Whar. Cr. L. § 88; 2 id. § 1704; State v. Meyer (Tex.) 23 S. W. 427; State v. Baer, 37 W. Va. 1, 16 S. E. 368; In re Carlson's License, 127 Pa. 330, 18 Atl. 8; but see Ross v. State, 116 Ind. 495, 19 N. E. 451; People v. Welch, 71 Mich. 548, 39 N. W. 747, 1 L. R. A. 385. Nor is it any defence that the party selling intoxicating liquor did not know that it was intoxicating; State v. Moulton, 52 Kan. 69, 34 Pac. 412; King v. State, 66 Miss. 502, 6 South. 188; Haynes v. State, 118 Tenn. 709, 105 S. W. 251, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 121 Am. St. Rep. 1055, 12 Ann. Cas. 470; Cox v. Thompson, 96 Tex. 468, 73 S. W. 950.

Ignorance of a fact extrinsic and not essential to a contract, but which, if known, might have influenced the actions of a party to the contract, is not such a mistake as will authorize equitable relief; Cleaveland v. Richardson, 132 U. S. 318, 10 Sup. Ct. 100, 33 L. Ed. 384. Nor is ignorance of facts a sufficient ground for equitable relief, if it appear that the requisite knowledge might have been obtained by reasonable diligence; U. S. v. Ames, 99 U. S. 35, 47, 25 L. Ed. 295.

See Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 84; MISTAKE.

Ignorance of the laws of a foreign government, or of another state, is ignorance of fact; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112, 19 Am. Dec. 353, where there will be found a discussion of the difference between ignorance of law and ignorance of fact. See also Clef des Lois Rom. Fait.

Ignorance of law consists of the want of knowledge of those laws which it is our duty to understand, and which every man is presumed to know.

The principle that ignorance of the law is no defence (ignorantia legis neminem excusat) is generally recognized. It was a maxim of the Roman law, in which this case was put, to illustrate the distinction between ignorance of law and fact:—If the heir is ignorant of the death of his ancestor, he is ignorant of a fact; but if, being aware of his death, and of his own relationship, he is, nevertheless, ignorant that certain rights have thereby become vested in himself, he is ignorant of the law; D. 22, 6. 1. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 632. The English rule is that every man is presumed to know the law, subject to certain qualifications with respect to questions of doubtful construction, practice, and the like; Broom, Leg. Max. 8th Am. ed. 254; 6 Cl. & Fin. 911; 11 Exch. 840. The court will only relieve against a payment of money under mistake of law, if there be some equitable ground which renders it inequitable that the party who received the money should retain it; 3 Ch. D. 351. This case is said to "contain probably the best statement . . . of the principles upon which the courts proceed in relieving or declining to relieve on the ground of mistake of law;" Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 80. The case itself proceeded upon the ground that an erroneous construction of an instrument was a mistake of law, and it was so held in several cases; L. R. 14 Eq. 85; 6 H. L. Cas. 798, 811; but for a dictum, contra, see L. R. 6 H. L. 223, 234; and see also 42 Ch. D. 98; [1893] 1 Ch. 101, 111. The same general rule is recognized by American courts. Tiglao v. Insular Government, 215 U. S. 410, 30 Sup. Ct. 129, 54 L. Ed. 257; though earlier cases indicate hesitation on the part of the courts before it was definitely settled. It was said in an early case that whether money paid through ignorance of the law can be recovered back, is a question much vexed and involved in no inconsiderable perplexity; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112, 19 Am. Dec. 353; and that when one makes a promise as an "expression of an opinion of what he should be obliged to allow, rather than of what he was willing to allow, and being under a mistake of his right, he is not bound by it;" Levy v. Bank, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 27, 37. But it may be considered as well established that money paid with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances cannot be recovered back upon the ground that the party supposed he was bound in law to pay it, when in truth he was not; Real Estate Saving Institution v. Linder, 74 Pa. 371; Hollingsworth v. Stone, 90 Ind. 244; Arnold v. Banking Co., 50 Ga. 304 (practically overruling Collier v. Perkerson, 31 Ga. 117; Eaton v. Eaton, 35 N. J. L. 290; Mutual Savings Institution v. Enslin, 46 Mo. 200; Gross v. Parrott, 16 Cal. 143; Johnson v. McGinness, 1 Or. 292; contra, City of Covington v. Powell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 226; and a person cannot be permitted to disavow or avoid the operation of an agreement entered into with a full knowledge of the facts, on the ground of ignorance of the legal consequences which flow from those facts; Shotwell v. Murray, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 512, 516. See 1 V. & B. 23, 30; Osburn v. Throckmorton, 90 Va. 311, 18 S. E. 285; Gefken v. Graef, 77 Ga. 340. Ignorance of one's legal right does not take a case out of the rule of equitable estoppel where one encourages a purchaser to take land from one having a color of title when otherwise he would be entitled to interpose an equitable bar to the latter's legal title; Butts v. Cuthbertson, 6 Ga. 166.

It has been said that whatever rule may prevail elsewhere, in the equity courts of the U. S., there is no relief from a mistake of law alone; Allen v. Galloway, 30 Fed. 466; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 50, 51, 23 L. Ed. 203; Lamborn v. Dickinson County, 97 U. S. 185, 24 L. Ed. 926; U. S. v. Ames, 99 U. S. 46, 25 L. Ed. 295; Utermehle v. Norment, 197 U. S. 40, 25 Sup. Ct. 291, 49 L. Ed. 655, 3 Ann. Cas. 520. But there is to be found by careful reading of the Federal cases the same disposition apparent in English cases, to avoid the establishment of an inflexible rule which shall preclude relief if there be any other circumstances or any feature of the case itself to warrant it. In Hunt v. Ennis, 2 Mas. 244, Fed. Cas. No. 6,889, Hunt v. Rousmanier's Adm'rs, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. Ed. 589, and Hunt v. Rhodes, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 7 L. Ed. 27, the United States supreme court said, where an instrument is executed by the parties, which contains a mistake of the draughtsman either of fact or law it may be reformed, but not when it was executed in the form agreed upon under a misapprehension of the law as to its nature or effect; that a mistake of law is not a ground for reforming a deed and the exceptions are both few and peculiar, but it was not the intention to lay down a rule that there might not be relief against a plain mistake arising from ignorance of law; and in a later case the court quoted this expression with approval and also the declaration from 1 Sto. Eq. Jur. Redf. ed. § 138 e, that established misapprehension of the law does afford a basis for relief resting on discretion and to be exercised only in flagrant and unquestionable cases; Snell v. Ins. Co., 98 U. S. 85, 91, 25 L. Ed. 52.

In some cases the laches of the other party affects the liability of one who promises under a mistake of law, as, when one, through a mistake of the law, as an endorser of a bill of exchange, acknowledges himself under an obligation which the law will not impose on him, as payment after failure of the holder to give seasonable notice of protest for non-acceptance, he shall not be bound thereby; Warder v. Tucker, 7 Mass. 452, 5 Am. Dec. 62. See also 2 J. & W. 263; 3 B. & C. 280; the operation of the rule is adjusted to the equitable conditions existing as between the parties. "If a man has actually paid what the law would not have compelled him to pay, but what in equity and conscience he ought, he cannot recover it back; Mowatt v. Wright, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 355, 19 Am. Dec. 508; Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 265, 79 Am. Dec. 176; Evans v. Gale, 17 N. H. 573, 43 Am. Dec. 614; Stewart v. Crosby, 50 Me. 130; but where money is paid under a mistake, which there was no ground to claim in conscience, the party may recover it back;" 1 Term 285; 15 Am. Rep. 171, 184, note.

"The maxim ignorantia legis neminem excusat is not universally applicable, but only when damages have been inflicted or crimes committed. It is true that the law will not permit the excuse of ignorance of the law to be pleaded for the purpose of exempting persons from damages for breach of contract, or from punishment for crimes committed by them, but on other occasions and for other purposes, it is evident that the fact that such ignorance existed will sometimes be recognized so as to affect a judicial decision;" Brock v. Weiss, 44 N. J. L. 244; "there is no maxim which says that for all intents and purposes a person must be taken to know the legal consequences of his acts;" L. R. 3 Q. B. 639; "it would be too much to impute knowledge of this rule of equity" (the doctrine of election); Westbury, Ld. Ch., in Spread v. Morgan, 11 H. L. Cas. 602.

According to Lord Westbury in Cooper v. Phibbs, L. R. 2 H. L. 170, the word jus in the maxim ignorantia juris haud excusat is used in the sense of "general law, the law of the country," not in the sense of "a private right." The true meaning of that maxim is that parties cannot excuse themselves from liability from all civil or criminal consequences of their acts by alleging ignorance of the law, but there is no presumption that parties must be taken to know all the legal consequences of their acts, and especially where difficult questions of law, or of the practice of the court are involved; Lord Fitz-Gerald, Seaton v. Seaton, in L. R. 13 Ap. Cas. 78.

"There is no presumption in this country that every person knows the law; it would be contrary to common sense and reason if it were so." 2 C. B. 719, per Maule, J. The maxim is said to be "a slovenly way of stating the truth that ignorance of the law is not in general an excuse." Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 160.

Ignorance was held no defence in the case of a woman convicted of illegal voting, who set up a defence that she believed she had a legal right to vote; U. S. v. Anthony, 11 Blatch. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 14,459; Hamilton v. People, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 625; so in an indictment for adultery, where defendant erroneously believed she had been legally divorced; State v. Goodenow, 65 Me. 30; so in the conviction of a man for polygamy, who, knowing that his wife was living, married again in Utah, and set up the Mormon doctrine as a defence; Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244. It was held not a defence that the defendant believed that, by reason of the absence of the first wife, the marriage was void and that he was released from it, as that was a mistake of law; Medrano v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. Rep. 214, 22 S. W. 684, 40 Am. St. Rep. 775.

If a man marries a woman he believes to be single, it is not adultery if she has a husband living; State v. Audette, 81 Vt. 400, 70 Atl. 833, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 527, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1061.

Belief that a minor was an adult is no defense; Cox v. Thompson, 96 Tex. 468, 73 S. W. 950; but it was held to be a defense in the case of a minor playing billiards; Stern v. State, 53 Ga. 229, 21 Am. Rep. 266.

A Jew may be indicted under a state law, for working on Sunday; Com. v. Has, 122 Mass. 40; so where one shoots another through criminal negligence, his ignorance of the law can form no basis for acquittal; People v. Kilvington, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 512, 36 Pac. 13.

An elector's ignorance of a law disqualifying a candidate at an election does not make his vote a nullity; he must have knowledge both of the law and the fact which constitutes the disqualification; People v. Clute, 50 N. Y. 463, 10 Am. Rep. 508; L. R. 3 Q. B. 629.

A statute takes effect even in localities so remote as to render any knowledge of its existence impossible; Rhodes v. Sargent, 17 Cal. App. 58, 118 Pac. 727, citing Matthews v. Zane, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 179, 5 L. Ed. 425.

Involuntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which cannot be overcome by the use of any means of knowledge known to a person and within his power: as, the ignorance of a law which has not yet been promulgated.

Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For example, every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated; Doctor & Stud. 1, 46; Plowd. 343.

IGNORANTIO ELENCHI. An overlooking of the adversary's counter position in an argument.

IGNORE. To be ignorant of. Webster, Dict. To pass over as if not in existence. A grand jury is said to ignore a bill when they do not find the evidence such as to induce them to make a presentment. Brande.

IKBAL. Acceptance (of a bond, etc.). Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

IKBAL DAWA. Confession of judgment. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

IKRAH. Compulsion; especially constraint exercised by one person over another to do an illegal act, or to act contrary to his inclination. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

IKRAR. Agreement, assent, or ratification. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

IKRAR NAMA. A deed of assent and acknowledgment. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

ILL. In Old Pleading. Bad; defective in law; null; naught; the opposite of good or valid.

ILL-FAME. A technical expression, which not only means bad character as generally understood, but applies to every person, whatever may be his conduct and character in life, who visits bawdy-houses, gaming-houses, and other places which are of ill-fame. Brockway v. People, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 558; Jennings v. Com., 17 Pick. (Mass.) 80; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 720, 767; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 44.

The common interpretation of the term "house of ill-fame" is as a mere synonym for "bawdy-house," having no reference to the fame of the place. See DISORDERLY HOUSE; HOUSE OF ILL-FAME.

ILLATA ET INVECTA. Things brought into the house for use by the tenants were so called, and were liable to the jus hypothecæ of Roman law, just as they are to the landlord's right of distress at common law.

ILLEGAL. Contrary to law; unlawful.

ILLEGAL CONDITIONS. All conditions that are impossible, or contrary to law, immoral, or repugnant to the nature of the transaction. See CONDITION.

ILLEGAL CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

ILLEGAL CONTRACT. See CONSIDERATION; CONTRACT; UNLAWFUL AGREEMENT; VOID; VOIDABLE.

ILLEGAL TRADE. That which is carried on in violation of law, municipal or international. See ILLICIT.

ILLEGALITY. That which is contrary to the principles of law, as contradistinguished from mere rules of procedure. It denotes a complete defect in the proceedings. Ex parte Scwartz, 2 Tex. App. 74; State v. Conover, 7 N. J. L. 203.

ILLEGITIMACY. The status of a child born of parents not legally married at the time of birth. In certain states and countries, a subsequent marriage of the parents legitimatizes their children born before marriage. See LEGITIMIZATION.

ILLEGITIMATE. That which is contrary to law; it is usually applied to children born out of lawful wedlock. 25 Alb. L. J. 131. He may be made legitimate by parliament for all purposes; 4 Inst. 36. Under the English Workmen's Compensation Act he may be a dependent of his parent and vice versa. See BASTARD; LEGITIMACY.

ILLEVIABLE. A debt or duty that cannot or ought not to be levied. Nihil set upon a debt is a mark for illeviable.

ILLICENCIATUS. In Old English Law. Without license. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 5. 12.

ILLICIT. What is unlawful; what is forbidden by the law.

This word is frequently used in policies of insurance, where the assured warrants against illicit trade. By illicit trade is understood that "which is made unlawful by the laws of the country to which the object is bound." It is distinguished from "contraband trade," though sometimes used interchangeably with it. 1 Pars. Mar. Ins. 614. The assured, having entered into this warranty, is required to do no act which will expose the vessel to be legally condemned; Dismukes v. Musgrove, 2 La. 337, 338. See INSURANCE; WARRANTY.

ILLICITE. Unlawfully.

This word has a technical meaning, and is requisite in an indictment where the act charged is unlawful: as, in the case of a riot; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 25, § 96.

ILLICITUM COLLEGIUM. An unlawful corporation.

ILLINOIS. One of the states of the United States, being the twenty-eighth admitted to the Union.

Civil government was organized under the jurisdiction of the United States, by the ordinance of the Continental Congress, in 1787, the present state being then a part of the northwestern territory. In 1800 that territory was divided, and a territorial government was created in the Indiana territory, including this present state. In 1809 the territory of Illinois was created, and continued under the same ordinance and the laws of the Indiana territory. For a fuller statement of the territorial history, see OHIO.

In 1818 Illinois formed a constitution and was admitted into the Union. A second constitution went into operation April 1, 1848; and a third August 8, 1870. In 1913, an amendment provided for woman suffrage.

ILLITERATE. Unacquainted with letters.

When an ignorant man, unable to read, signs a deed or agreement, or makes his mark instead of a signature, and he alleges and can prove that it was falsely read to him, he is not bound by it, in consequence of the fraud. And the same effect would result if the deed or agreement were falsely read to a blind man who could have read it before he lost his sight, or to a foreigner who did not understand the language. For a plea of "laymen and unlettered," see Bauer v. Roth, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 85, 94, 95.

To induce an illiterate man, by false representations and false reading, to sign a note for a greater amount than that agreed on, is indictable as a cheat; Hill v. State, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 76, 24 Am. Dec. 441. See, generally, 2 Nel. Abr. 946; 2 Co. 3; 11 id. 28; F. Moore 148; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 156.

ILLNESS. Pregnancy may create an illness within the meaning of 11 & 12 Vict. c.

42, § 17, so as to give the presiding judge discretionary power to admit in evidence upon a criminal trial the deposition of a witness, duly taken, who, owing to pregnancy is proved to be unable to travel; 3 Q. B. D. 426.

ILLOCABLE. Not capable of being let out or hired.

ILLUD (Lat.). That.

ILLUSION. A term loosely applied to both delusions and hallucinations, but more frequently to the latter (q. v.). By some it is restricted to the perception of objects in characters which they do not possess.

The patient is deceived by the false appearance of things, and his reason is not sufficiently active and powerful to correct the error; and this last particular is what distinguishes the sane from the insane. Illusions are not unfrequent in a state of health, but reason corrects the errors and dissipates them. A square tower seen from a distance may appear round, but on approaching it the error is corrected. A distant mountain may be taken for a cloud, but as we approach we discover the truth. To a person in the cabin of a vessel under sail, the shore appears to move; but reflection and a closer examination soon destroy this illusion. An insane individual is mistaken in the qualities, connections, and causes of the impressions he actually receives, and he forms wrong judgments as to his internal and external sensations; and his reason does not correct the error; 1 Beck. Med. Jur. 538; Tayl. Med. Jur. 683; Esquirol, Maladies Mentales, prém. partie, iii, tome 1, p. 202; Dict. des Sciences Médicales, Hallucination, tome 20, p. 64. See HALLUCINATION; INSANITY.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT. Such an appointment or disposition of property under a power as is merely nominal and not substantial.

Illusory appointments are void in equity; Sugd. Pow. 489; 1 Vern. 67; 1 Term 438, note; 4 Ves. 785. The rule at common law was, to require some allotment, however small, to each person, where the power was given to appoint to and among several persons; but the rule in equity requires a real substantial portion to each, a mere nominal allotment being deemed fraudulent and illusive; 4 Kent 342; Lines v. Darden, 5 Fla. 52; Lippincott v. Ridgway, 10 N. J. Eq. 164; Thrasher v. Ballard, 35 W. Va. 524, 14 S. E. 232; Degman v. Degman, 98 Ky. 717, 34 S. W. 523. The doctrine was repudiated in Cowles v. Brown, 4 Call (Va.) 477; Graeff v. De Turk, 44 Pa. 527.

In England equity jurisdiction on this point was ended by the statute 1 Wm. IV. c. 46, which declares that no appointment shall be impeached in equity, on the ground that it was unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal; but the entire exclusion of any object of a power not in terms exclusive was illegal, notwithstanding that act, until 1874, when a statute was passed, providing that, under a power to appoint among certain persons, appointments may be made excluding one or more objects of the power; Moz. & W. Dict.

IMAGINE. In English Law. In cases of treason the law makes it a crime to imagine the death of the king. In order to complete the offence, there must, however, be an overt act,—the terms compassing and imagining being synonymous. It has been justly remarked that the words to compass and imagine are too vague for a statute whose penalty affects the life of a subject. Barrington, Stat. 243. See FICTION.

IMBARGO. Obsolete for embargo (q. v.).

IMBASING OF MONEY. Mixing the species with an alloy below the standard of sterling, which the king by his prerogative may do. Toml.

IMBECILITY. In Medical Jurisprudence. A form of mental disease consisting in mental deficiency, either congenital or resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties supervening in infancy. Idiocy.

Generally, it is manifested both in the intellectual and moral faculties; but occasionally it is limited to the latter, the former being but little, if at all, below the ordinary standard. Hence it is distinguished into intellectual and moral. In the former there are seldom any of the repulsive features of idiocy, the head, face, limbs, and movements, being scarcely distinguishable, at first sight, from those of the race at large. The senses are not manifestly deficient nor the power of articulation; though the use of language may be very limited. The perceptive faculties exhibit some activity; and thus the more obvious qualities of things are observed and remembered. Simple industrial operations are well performed, and, generally, whatever requires but little intelligence is readily accomplished. For any process of reasoning, or any general observation or abstract ideas, imbeciles are totally incompetent. Of law, justice, morality, property, they have but a very imperfect notion. Some of the affective faculties are usually active, particularly those which lead to evil habits, thieving, incendiarism, drunkenness, homicide, assaults on women.

The kind of mental defect here mentioned is universal in imbecility, but it exists in different degrees in different individuals, some being hardly distinguishable, at first sight, from ordinary men of feeble endowments, while others encroach upon the ill-defined line which separates them from idiocy; Tayl. Jur. 689.

The various grades of imbecility, however interesting in a philosophical point of view, are not very closely considered by courts. They are governed in criminal cases solely by their tests of responsibility, and in civil cases by the amount of capacity in connection with the act in question, or the abstract question of soundness or unsoundness.

Touching the question of responsibility, the law makes no distinction between imbecility and insanity. See 1 C. & K. 129.

In civil cases, the effect of imbecility is differently estimated. In cases involving the validity of the contracts of imbecile persons, courts have declined to gauge the measure of their intellects, the only question with them being one of soundness or unsoundness, and "no distinction being made between important and common affairs, large or small property;" 4 Dane, Abr. 561. See Jackson v. King, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 207, 15 Am. Dec. 354. Courts of equity, also, have declined to invalidate the contracts of imbeciles, except on the ground of fraud; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 238. Of late years, however, courts have been governed by other considerations. If the contract were for necessaries, or showed no mark of fraud or unfair advantage, or if the other party, acting in good faith and ignorant of the other's mental infirmity, cannot be put in statu quo, the contract has been held to be valid; Chitty, Contr. 112; Story, Contr. § 27; Poll. Contr. 88; 4 Exch. 17.

The same principles have governed the courts in cases involving the validity of the marriage contract. If suitable to the condition and circumstances of the party, and manifestly tending to his benefit, it has been confirmed, notwithstanding a considerable degree of incompetency. If, on the other hand, it has been procured by improper influences, manifestly for the advantage of the other party, it has been invalidated; 1 Hagg. 355; Ray, Med. Jur. 100. The law has always shown more favor to the wills of imbeciles than to their contracts. "If a man be of a mean understanding, neither of the wise sort nor of the foolish, but indifferent, as it were, betwixt a wise man and a fool,—yea, though he rather inclined to the foolish sort, so that for his dull capacity he might worthily be called grossum caput, a dull pate, or a dunce,—such a one is not prohibited to make a testament;" Swinb. Wills, part 2, s. 4. Whether the testament be established or not, depends upon the circumstances of the case; and the English ecclesiastical courts have always assumed a great deal of liberty in their construction of these circumstances. The general principle is that if the will exhibits a wise and prudent disposition of property, and is unquestionably the will of the testator, and not another's, it should be established, in the face of no inconsiderable deficiency; 1 Hagg. 384. Very different views prevailed in a celebrated case in New York, Stewart's Ex'r v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 256. The mental capacity must be equal to the act; and if that fact be established, and no unfair advantage have been taken of the mental deficiency, the will, the marriage, the contract, or whatever it may be, is held to be valid.

The term moral imbecility is applied to a class of persons who, without any considerable, or even appreciable, deficiency of intellect, seem to have never been endowed with the higher moral sentiments. They are unable to appreciate fully the distinctions of right and wrong, and, according to their several opportunities and tastes, they indulge in mischief as if by an instinct of their nature. To vice and crime they have an irresistible proclivity, though able to discourse on the beauties of virtue and the claims of moral obligation. While young, many of them manifest a cruel and quarrelsome disposition, which leads them to torture brutes and bully their companions. They set all law and admonition at defiance, and become a pest and a terror to the neighborhood. It is worthy of notice, because the fact throws much light on the nature of this condition, that a very large proportion of this class of persons labor under some organic defect. They are scrofulous, rickety, or epileptic, or, if not obviously suffering from such diseases themselves, they are born of parents who did. Their progenitors may have been insane, or eccentric, or highly nervous, and this morbid peculiarity has become, unquestionably, by hereditary transmission, the efficient cause of the moral defect under consideration. Thus lamentably constituted, wanting in one of the essential elements of moral responsibility, they are certainly not fit objects of punishment; for though they may recognize the distinctions of right and wrong in the abstract, yet they have been denied by nature those faculties which prompt men more happily endowed to pursue the one and avoid the other. In practice, however, they have been regarded with no favor by the courts; Ray, Med. Jur. 112. See INSANITY; DEMENTIA.

IMBLADARE. To plant or sow grain. Bract. fol. 176 b.

IMBRACERY. See EMBRACERY.

IMBROCUS. A gutter; a brook; a water passage. Cowell.

IMMATERIAL. Unnecessary or non-essential; impertinent (q. v.); indecisive.

IMMATERIAL AVERMENT. A statement of unnecessary particulars in connection with, and as descriptive of, what is material. Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 186. Such averments must, however, be proved as laid, it is said; Dougl. 665; though not if they may be struck out without striking out at the same time the cause of action, and when there is no variance; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 188. See 1 Chitty, Pl. 282.

IMMATERIAL ISSUE. An issue taken upon some collateral matter, the decision of which will not settle the question in dispute between the parties in action. For example, if, in an action of debt on bond, conditioned for the payment of ten dollars and fifty cents at a certain day, the defendant pleads the payment of ten dollars according to the form of the condition, and the plaintiff, instead of demurring, tenders issue upon the payment, it is manifest that, whether this issue be found for the plaintiff or the defendant, it will remain equally uncertain whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintain his action, or not; for, in an action for the penalty of a bond, conditioned to pay a certain sum, the only material question is whether the exact sum were paid or not, and the question of payment of a part is a question quite beside the legal merits; Hob. 113; 5 Taunt. 386; Cro. Jac. 585; 2 Wms. Saund. 319 b. A repleader will be ordered when an immaterial issue is reached, either before or after verdict; 2 Wms. Saund. 319 b, note;

1 Rolle, Abr. 86; Cro. Jac. 585. See REPLEADER.

IMMEDIATE. As to time. Present; without delay or postponement. Strictly it implies not deferred by any lapse of time, but as usually employed, it is rather within reasonable time having due regard to the nature and circumstances of the case. This word and immediately (q. v.) are of no very definite signification and are much dependent on the context. In legal proceedings they do not impart the exclusion of any interval of time; Howell v. Gaddis, 31 N. J. L. 313. As to immediate delivery, see Neldon v. Smith, 36 N. J. L. 148. "Immediate" notice may be construed as meaning "reasonable notice;" McFarland v. Acc. Ass'n, 124 Mo. 204, 27 S. W. 436.

As to place, etc. Not separated by any intervening space, cause, right, object, or relation. See 7 Mann. & G. 493; Trask v. Ins. Co., 29 Pa. 198, 72 Am. Dec. 622; Richardson v. End, 43 Wis. 316; Hepler v. State, id. 479; IMMEDIATELY; FORTHWITH.

As to descent. Judge Story says it may be mediate or immediate with respect to the estate or right, or with respect to the pedigree or degrees of consanguinity; Levy v. McCartee, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 112, 8 L. Ed. 334.

IMMEDIATELY. The words "forthwith" and "immediately" have the same meaning. They are stronger than the expression "within a reasonable time," and imply prompt, vigorous action, without any delay, and whether there has been such action is a question of fact, having regard to the circumstances of the particular case; 4 Q. B. Div. 471.

IMMEMORIAL POSSESSION. In Louisiana. Possession of which no man living has seen the beginning, and the existence of which he has learned from his elders. Orleans Nav. Co. v. Mayor, 2 Mart. (O. S. La.) 214, 3 Toullier p. 410; Poth. Contr. de Société, n. 244.

IMMEMORIAL USAGE. Prescription; custom which has existed so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. See PRESCRIPTION.

IMMEUBLES. In French Law. Immovables. They derive their character as such (1) from their own nature as lands, etc.; (2) from their destination, as animals or implements furnished to a tenant by his landlord; and (3) by the object to which they are annexed.

IMMIGRATION LAWS. The act of March 3, 1903, was comprehensive and superseded almost entirely the previous legislation, and that act was in turn superseded by the act of February 20, 1907. It provided for a tax of four dollars for every alien entering the United States, which is to go into an "Immigrant Fund" to defray the expense of regulating immigration, etc. This tax is a lien upon the vessel or other means of carriage. It is not levied upon aliens who shall enter after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year immediately preceding such entering in Canada, Cuba, Newfoundland or Mexico, nor upon otherwise admissible residents of any United States possession, nor aliens in transit, nor aliens passing from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

Among the classes excluded are idiots, imbeciles, epileptics, feeble minded, and insane persons who have been insane within five years previous or who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously, paupers and those likely to become a public charge, professional beggars, those afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, mentally or physically defective persons, such defect being of a nature which may affect their ability to earn a living, those convicted of a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude or admitting that they had committed the same, persons admitting their belief in polygamy, anarchists, prostitutes or women or girls coming here for the purpose of prostitution or any other immoral purpose, those supported in whole or in part by the proceeds of prostitution, those who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women for such purposes, contract laborers, persons who within a year have been deported as having been induced to migrate as above, those whose ticket or passage is paid for by money of another or who are assisted to come here, children under sixteen unaccompanied by one or both parents, at the discretion of the Secretary, but not persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude, nor aliens passing through the country to foreign contiguous territory, nor skilled labor if such kind unemployed cannot be found in this country. Contract labor does not include professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers, professors and those belonging to any recognized learned profession, or personal or domestic servants. Section 3 applies to the importation of aliens for prostitution, etc. Section 4 provides that no corporation, etc., shall prepay the transportation or in any other way assist in the importation of contract laborers unless belonging to the above excepted classes. By section 6, encouraging immigration by advertising abroad with promise of employment is forbidden. Masters of vessels bringing in aliens are required to furnish to the immigration officer full lists of alien passengers. Amended March 26, 1910.

See ALIEN; CHINESE; DEPORTATION.

But where a Chinese person claimed citizenship and had been arbitrarily denied such a hearing as the exclusion acts demand, it was held that a writ of habeas corpus should be granted by the federal courts; Chin Yow

v. U. S., 208 U. S. 8, 28 Sup. Ct. 201, 52 L. Ed. 369. See LEGISLATIVE POWER.

IMMISCERE (Lat.). In Civil Law. To put or let into, as a beam into a wall. Calv. Lex.

In Old English Law. To turn cattle out on a common. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 20, § 7.

IMMOBILIS (Lat.). Immovable. Immobilia, or res immobiles, immovables (q. v.).

IMMORAL CONSIDERATION. One contrary to good morals, and therefore invalid. Contracts based upon an immoral consideration are generally void; Poll. Con. 286. An agreement in consideration of future illicit cohabitation between the parties; 3 Burr. 1568; 1 B. & P. 340; an agreement for the value of libelous and immoral pictures; 4 Esp. 97; or for printing a libel; 2 Stark. 107; or for an immoral wager; Chitty, Contr. 156; cannot, therefore, be enforced. For whatever arises from an immoral or illegal consideration is void; quid turpi ex causa promissum est non valet; Inst. 3. 20. 24.

It is a general rule that whenever an agreement appears to be illegal, immoral, or against public policy, a court of justice leaves the parties where it finds them; when the agreement has been executed, the court will not rescind it; when executory, the court will not help the execution; Roll v. Raguet, 4 Ohio 419, 22 Am. Dec. 759; Jackson v. Babcock, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 419. See CONSIDERATION.

IMMORALITY. That which is contra bonos mores.

In England, it is not punishable, in some cases, at the common law, on account of the ecclesiastical jurisdictions: e. g. adultery. But except in cases belonging to the ecclesiastical courts, the court of king's bench is the custos morum, and may punish delicta contra bonos mores; 3 Burr. 1438; 1 W. Blackst. 94.

IMMOVABLES. In Civil Law. Property which, from its nature, destination, or the object to which it is applied, cannot move itself or be removed. Pothier, des Choses, § 1; Clef des Lois Rom. Immeubles.

IMMUNITY. An exemption from serving in an office, or performing duties which the law generally requires other citizens to perform. See Dig. lib. 50. t. 6; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 821; Ward v. Morris, 4 H. & M'H. (Md.) 341. See INCRIMINATION.

IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS. By article First, Section 10, Clause 1, of the Constitution of the United States "No state shall pass . . . any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts."

There has been much discussion as to the reasons which led the Convention of 1787 to insert this clause in the constitution. They seem to have intended that it should prevent the states from passing stay laws and bankrupt laws (Bradley, J., Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 745, 25 L. Ed. 496), and other acts which would interfere with private contracts or engagements previously formed. Stay laws to prevent the collection of debts had been passed in many of the states, especially in the South. In the Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629, Chief Justice Marshall said that he thought it more than possible that the convention had not intended by the clause to preserve the integrity of the charters of corporations. But in Pennsylvania the legislature had revoked the charter of the College of Philadelphia and virtually confiscated its property by taking it away from its trustees and giving it to another set of trustees who were of the political party which controlled the legislature. The same legislature had annulled the charter of the Bank of North America to which it was hostile, and would have succeeded in wrecking it, if the bank had not had another charter from congress, and soon after obtained one from the state of Delaware. These acts of spoliation alarmed all men of property, and James Wilson, a Pennsylvania member of the convention, who had been interested in both the bank and the college, was most active in procuring the adoption of the clause. Fisher's "Pennsylvania: Colony and Commonwealth" 375, 383; Fisher's "Evolution of the Constitution" 262; Shirley's "Dartmouth College Case" 213, 220; Alfred Russell's Address before Grafton and Coos Bar Association of New Hampshire, 1895 (reprinted Am. Law Rev. vol. 30, p. 321).

This article of the constitution forbids only the states to pass laws impairing the obligation of contracts, and there is no express provision prohibiting congress from passing such laws. It would seem, moreover, as some have argued, that there is an implied power in congress to pass such laws, for we find in the constitution a number of general prohibitions in which both congress and the states are prohibited from passing bills of attainder and ex post facto laws. The omission of the prohibition in one case and the expression of it in the other might seem to imply that the power to pass laws impairing the obligation of contracts remained in congress; and congress is expressly given power to pass bankrupt laws which impair the obligation of contracts between debtors and creditors; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; and with respect to this provision the argument expressio unius est exclusio alterius may also be invoked as against a similar limitation of the power of congress. So under the decisions of the supreme court, congress may issue notes as legal tender in satisfaction of antecedently contracted debts. But the general exercise of such a power by congress has been said to be contrary to the first principles of the social compact and to every principle of sound legislation; Federalist No. 44. Bradley, J., in a dissenting opinion in the Sinking-Fund Cases (Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S.) 99 U. S. 746, 25 L. Ed. 496, took the same view of the origin of this provision, and said further that it fully explained the fact that no such inhibition was laid upon the national legislature, and he was further of opinion that the absence of such inhibition furnished no ground of argument in favor of the proposition that congress can pass arbitrary and despotic laws with regard to contracts any more than with regard to any other subject-matter of legislation.

As to the power of congress to impair the obligation of a contract, see Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 603, 622, 19 L. Ed. 513; Knox v. Lee, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 20 L. Ed. 287 (and specially Clarkson N. Potter, arguendo at p. 501, and Strong, J., at p. 547); Juilliard v. Greenman, 110 U. S. 421, 4 Sup. Ct. 122, 28 L. Ed. 204.

The provision of the constitution is, however, not applicable to laws enacted by the states before the first Wednesday in March, 1789; Owings v. Speed, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 420, 5 L. Ed. 124.

Contracts are made subject to the exercise of the rightful authority of the government and no obligation of a contract can defeat lawful government authority; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, 31 Sup. Ct. 265, 55 L. Ed. 297, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 671, where a contract to issue passes to a person for life could not be enforced after the passage of an act of congress forbidding the issue of passes by any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce. An act of congress rendering contracts in regard to interstate commerce invalid does not infringe the constitutional liberty of the citizen to make contracts; and an act otherwise constitutional is not unconstitutional under the Vth Amendment, as taking private property without compensation because it invalidates contracts between individuals which conflict with the public policy declared in the act; id.

In the application of this constitutional prohibition there is an exception to the general rule that the United States supreme court will accept the construction placed by a state court upon its own constitution, when the question of contract or no contract is presented in the construction of a state statute; in such case there is imposed upon the United States supreme court the duty of exercising an independent judgment upon the question whether there is a contract, though it will lean towards the interpretation of the state court; Stearns v. Minnesota, 179 U. S. 223, 232, 21 Sup. Ct. 73, 45 L. Ed. 162; Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 193 U. S. 532, 24 Sup. Ct. 576, 48 L. Ed. 778.

Where there is no contract protected by the impairment clause, whether a statutory exemption has been repealed by a subsequent statute is a question of state law in which the decisions of the highest court of the state are binding; and it is only where an irrepealable contract exists that it is the duty of the federal court to decide for itself whether a subsequent act impairs the obligation of such contract; Wicomico County v. Bancroft, 203 U. S. 112, 27 Sup. Ct. 21, 51 L. Ed. 112, where it was held that a proviso in a state statute, taxing all property of railroads, that no irrepealable contract of exemption shall be affected, must be construed as expressing the legislative intent to repeal all exemptions not protected by binding contracts beyond legislative control.

Where the highest court of a state decided that bonds were invalid and the decision is in conformity with prior decisions, the bonds are not protected, having been illegally issued; Zane v. Hamilton County, 189 U. S. 370, 23 Sup. Ct. 538, 47 L. Ed. 858.

Contracts made after a law is passed are made subject to it; Abilene Nat. Bank v. Dolley, 228 U. S. 1, 33 Sup. Ct. 409, 57 L. Ed. 707; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cram, 228 U. S. 70, 33 Sup. Ct. 437, 57 L. Ed. 734.

All contracts, whether executed or executory, express or implied, are within the prohibition; New Jersey v. Wilson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 164, 3 L. Ed. 303; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. Ed. 547; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936; State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 300, 21 L. Ed. 179; and also judgments founded upon contracts; Wolff v. New Orleans, 103 U. S. 358, 26 L. Ed. 395; Warren v. Stoddart, 105 U. S. 228, 26 L. Ed. 1117; Ralls County v. U. S., 105 U. S. 733, 26 L. Ed. 957.

A violation of the prohibition may be by city ordinance; Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Memphis, 198 Fed. 956, citing New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Refining Co., 125 U. S. 18, 31, 8 Sup. Ct. 741, 31 L. Ed. 607; St. Paul Gaslight Co. v. St. Paul, 181 U. S. 142, 21 Sup. Ct. 575, 45 L. Ed. 788; or any action of a municipality exercising delegated legislative power; Grand Trunk W. R. Co. v. City of South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 33 Sup. Ct. 303, 57 L. Ed. 633; or to the action of any state instrumentality exercising such delegated authority as a railroad commission; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. R. R. Commission, 221 U. S. 400, 31 Sup. Ct. 537, 55 L. Ed. 786; Prentis v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 211 U. S. 210, 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150; to land grants of a state; McGehee v. Mathis, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 143, 18 L. Ed. 314; or by state legislature; Terret v. Taylor, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 43, 3 L. Ed. 650; Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 292, 3 L. Ed. 735; Franklin County Grammar School v. Bailey, 62 Vt. 467, 20 Atl. 820, 10 L. R. A. 405; to a law which is in its nature a contract under which absolute rights have vested; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 87, 3 L. Ed. 162.

A state law annulling private conveyances is also within the prohibition, as are laws repealing grants and corporate franchises; Bailey v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669; Lowry v. Francis, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 534; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 656, 4 L. Ed. 629.

A state constitution is not a contract, the obligation of which the state is prohibited by the federal constitution from impairing; Church v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 282, 7 Sup. Ct. 897, 30 L. Ed. 960; nor is a judgment for a tort; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936; Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405, 9 Sup. Ct. 763, 33 L. Ed. 193. But the prohibition applies to state constitutions as well as to the laws of a state; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 511, 19 L. Ed. 997; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Light & Heat Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 631, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 203, 21 L. Ed. 447; Fisk v. Jefferson, 116 U. S. 131, 6 Sup. Ct. 329, 29 L. Ed. 587.

Contracts to which a state is a party are within the protection of this constitutional prohibition; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 87, 3 L. Ed. 162; and a provision in a charter of a toll bridge company that it shall not be lawful for any person to erect another bridge within a specified distance of the bridge authorized by said charter constitutes a contract which binds the state not to authorize the construction of such other bridge; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137. A contract between a state and a party, whereby he is to perform certain duties for a specified period for a stipulated compensation, is within the protection of the constitution; Hall v. Wisconsin, 103 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 302. It being held that where a state descends from the plane of its sovereignty, it is regarded, pro hac vice, as a private person itself and is bound accordingly.

A state is bound by its grants of franchises and exclusive privileges, such as the privilege of supplying a municipality with water; New Orleans Water Works Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674, 6 Sup. Ct. 273, 29 L. Ed. 525; or gas; New Orleans Gas Co. v. Light Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516; Louisville Gas Co. v. Gas Co., 115 U. S. 683, 6 Sup. Ct. 265, 29 L. Ed. 510. A state is bound by the issue of bonds and coupons under the terms of an act which provided that such coupons should be receivable for taxes, etc., and a subsequent act which forbids the receipt of these coupons for taxes is a violation of the contract and void as against coupon-holders; Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270, 5 Sup. Ct. 903, 962, 29 L. Ed. 185; Royall v. Virginia, 116 U. S. 572, 6 Sup. Ct. 510, 29 L. Ed. 735.

A state, when it borrows money and promises to pay it with interest, cannot, by its own ordinance, relieve itself from performing to the letter all that it has expressly promised to its creditors; Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 433, 24 L. Ed. 760. But with regard to grants, this clause of the constitution was not intended to control the exercise of the ordinary functions of government. It was not intended to apply to public property, to the discharge of public duties, to the exercise or possession of public rights, or to any changes or qualifications in these which the legislature of a state may at any time deem expedient; Knoup v. Bank, 1 Ohio St. 603, 609; Bank of Toledo v. Bond, id. 657; President, etc., of Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 225, 41 Am. Dec. 549; Town of East Hartford v. Bridge Co., 17 Conn. 79.

The prohibition does not apply to judicial decisions or the acts of state tribunals or officers under statutes in force at the time of making the contract; Hanford v. Davies, 163 U. S. 273, 16 Sup. Ct. 1051, 41 L. Ed. 157, citing Wood v. Brady, 150 U. S. 18, 14 Sup. Ct. 6, 37 L. Ed. 981; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91.

The constitutional guaranty applies only to legislation subsequent to the contract and not to a state law in force at its inception; Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 489, 9 Sup. Ct. 134, 32 L. Ed. 491; Powell v. City of Madison, 107 Ind. 106, 8 N. E. 31; if valid when made, under the constitution and laws of the state, as then declared by its highest court, it cannot subsequently be impaired by any legislative or judicial action. The supreme court has jurisdiction only when the legislation was subsequent and effect has been given to it by the judgment sought to be reviewed; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 215 U. S. 170, 30 Sup. Ct. 40, 54 L. Ed. 144. This was the principle settled by the much discussed case of Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 17 L. Ed. 520, affirmed and enforced in Havemeyer v. Iowa County, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 294, 18 L. Ed. 38, where it was said that "the rule was established upon the most careful consideration."

What has come to be known as the doctrine of that case was first declared by Taney, C. J., in Ohio Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Debolt, 16 How. (U. S.) 416, 14 L. Ed. 997: "The sound and the true rule is that, if the contract, when made, was valid by the laws of the state, as then expounded by all the departments of its government and administered in its courts of justice its validity and obligation cannot be impaired by any subsequent act of the legislature of the state, or decision of its courts, altering the construction of the law."

That case was decided in 1853. In 1864, the case of Gelpcke v. Dubuque, which presented the precise situation described by Taney, C. J., was decided. Municipal bonds had been issued in aid of railroads under acts which had been declared constitutional in seven decisions of the state supreme court, on the faith of which the bonds were purchased; a later decision of the same court overruled the previous ones and declared the act unconstitutional, and, upon a case originating in a federal court, the supreme court declined to follow the Iowa decision and the bonds were held valid, upon the ground that a contrary decision would impair the obligation of the contract; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 17 L. Ed. 520.

This decision, the subject of much discussion both in the courts and by legal writers, has not been construed to have the effect of treating a judicial decision in the state court as "law" within the constitutional inhibition. The doctrine of the case applies only where the state decision, which is considered as impairing the obligation of the contract, is based on the construction of a statute or a determination as to its constitutionality; Ray v. Gas Co., 138 Pa. 591, 20 Atl. 1065, 12 L. R. A. 290, 21 Am. St. Rep. 922; Boyd v. Alabama, 94 U. S. 645, 24 L. Ed. 302; Ralls County v. Douglass, 105 U. S. 728, 26 L. Ed. 957; Hill v. Hite, 85 Fed. 268, 29 C. C. A. 549, and note. The distinction is thus stated: "After a statute has been settled by judicial construction, the construction becomes, so far as contract rights acquired under it are concerned, as much a part of the statute as the text itself, and a change of decisions is, to all intents and purposes, the same in its effect on contracts as an amendment of the law by means of a legislative enactment;" Douglass v. County of Pike, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. Ed. 968.

Again in Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91, it was said: "In order to come within the provision of the constitution . . . not only must the obligation of a contract have been impaired, but it must have been impaired by some act of the legislative power of the state, and not by a decision of its judicial department only." This case decided that the supreme court would not review on writ of error the decision of a state court on the form of acknowledgment of a married woman's deed of real estate under the code of that state, which was a re-enactment of the Virginia code. The case clearly expounds what had become well-settled principles, which have been frequently repeated, and it was restated in National Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Brahan, 193 U. S. 635, 24 Sup. Ct. 532, 48 L. Ed. 823.

The judgment of a state court declaring a contract invalid does not impair the obligation of the contract, unless such judgment gives effect to some provision of the state constitution, or some act which is claimed by the unsuccessful party to impair the obligation of the contract in question; Lehigh Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 7 Sup. Ct. 916, 30 L. Ed. 1059. In such cases, the supreme court of the United States does not accept as conclusive the judgment of the state court as to the non-impairment of the contract; Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. S. 791, 25 L. Ed. 921; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Palmes, 109 U. S. 244, 3 Sup. Ct. 193, 27 L. Ed. 922.

Where the supreme court of the state had affirmed the constitutional validity of a legislative act to authorize contracts for services to the public, and a contract had been entered into and services performed, the contractor was entitled to receive his compensation notwithstanding a subsequent decision that the act was unconstitutional; Thomas v. State, 76 Ohio St. 341, 81 N. E. 437, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1112, 118 Am. St. Rep. 884. The decision is based largely on Douglas v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. Ed. 968; which in Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91, is said to have been based upon the doctrine that in actions originating in the federal courts the United States supreme court will, or at least, may adhere to the earlier decisions of the state court and refuse to adopt later ones when contracts have been entered into before the change and relying upon the former.

It is sometimes said that the doctrine thus apparently settled was departed from in what were known as the Elevated Railway Cases of New York, which came before the supreme court in Muhlker v. R. Co., 197 U. S. 544, 25 Sup. Ct. 522, 49 L. Ed. 872; and a subsequent case in which the Muhlker Case seemed to be modified, Sauer v. New York, 206 U. S. 536, 27 Sup. Ct. 686, 51 L. Ed. 1176.

A careful examination of these cases, however, seems to lead to the conclusion that the court has not intended to alter or seriously modify the effect of the Laidley Case, but that where the court apparently treated the decision of the state court as impairing the obligation of the contract, it did, in fact, treat the last decision of the court of last resort as a construction of the statute, which made that, and not the decision itself, an impairment of the contract. This view is confirmed by the language of McKenna, J., who delivered the opinion of the court in the Muhlker Case, where in his preliminary statement, he says, "the case is therefore presented to us as to the effect of the deed . . . as constituting a contract, and the effect of the act of 1892 as an impairment of that contract." In the Sauer Case, Moody, J., who delivered the opinion of the court, said that "when the court of appeals has once interpreted the contract existing between the land-owner and the city, that interpretation becomes a part of the contract upon which one acquiring land may rely; and that any subsequent change of it to his injury impairs the obligation of the contract." Presumably, as the question before the court was whether the statute had impaired the obligation of the contract, he must be understood as meaning any subsequent change by statute as interpreted by the court. But it is not left to inference what was actually meant by the court, since Justice Moody expressly states the question as a complaint, "that the law which authorized the construction of the viaduct, as interpreted by the court of appeals of New York impaired the obligation of the contract." This view of the effect of the Muhlker and Sauer Cases, as not to be considered as in any way conflicting with the Laidley Case, is also the conclusion reached in an instructive note on the subject in 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500.

The supreme court has quite uniformly in other cases, as in the Laidley Case, refused to allow a writ of error to the state court, to reverse its decision, as impairing the obligation of a contract, on the general ground that the decision was not the "law" of the state, within the constitutional prohibition; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Rock, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 177, 18 L. Ed. 381; Lehigh Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 7 Sup. Ct. 916, 30 L. Ed. 1059; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Refining Co., 125 U. S. 18, 8 Sup. Ct. 741, 31 L. Ed. 607; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91; Bacon v. Texas, 163 U. S. 207, 16 Sup. Ct. 1023, 41 L. Ed. 132; Weber v. Rogan, 188 U. S. 10, 23 Sup. Ct. 263, 47 L. Ed. 363. In most if not all of the cases cited, the ground of dismissing the writ of error was that the decision did not of itself give jurisdiction, but only its construction of a state statute, as was also the case in Consumers' Co. v. Hatch, 224 U. S. 148, 32 Sup. Ct. 465, 56 L. Ed. 703. This construction of the term "laws" agrees with that of Story, J., in Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 865, where he was considering the meaning of the term in section 34 of the Judiciary Act. In a dissenting opinion in Kuhn v. Coal Co., 215 U. S. 349, 371, 30 Sup. Ct. 140, 54 L. Ed. 228, Holmes, J., says: "Whether Swift v. Tyson can be reconciled with Gelpcke v. Dubuque, I do not care to inquire. I assume both cases to represent settled doctrines, whether reconciled or not."

Numerous decisions confirm the view above expressed as to the precise effect of the rule of Gelpcke v. Dubuque, as understood by the supreme court, but only a few can be here referred to. It was said that the impairment clause cannot be invoked against what is merely a change of decision in the state court, but only by reason of a statute enacted subsequently to the alleged contract which has been upheld or effect given to it by the state court; National Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Brahan, 193 U. S. 635, 24 Sup. Ct. 532, 48 L. Ed. 823. It is "definitely settled that . the contract can only be impaired . . . by some subsequent statute of the state which has been upheld or effect given it by the state court." McCullough v. Virginia, 172 U. S. 102, 116, 19 Sup. Ct. 134, 43 L. Ed. 382, citing the prior cases. "If the judgment of the state court gives no effect to the subsequent law of the state, and the state court decides the case upon grounds independent of that law," there is no federal case of impairment of contract; id.

"In order to come within the provision of the constitution of the United States, which declares that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, not only must the obligation of a contract have been impaired, but it must have been impaired by a law of the state. The prohibition is aimed at the legislative power of the state, and not at the decisions of its courts, or the acts of administrative, or executive boards or officers, or the doings of corporations or individuals;" New Orleans Water Works Co. v. Refining Co., 125 U. S. 18, 8 Sup. Ct. 741, 31 L. Ed. 607, per Gray, J., quoted with approval in Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Hewes, 183 U. S. 66, 22 Sup. Ct. 26, 46 L. Ed. 86.

The law, as declared by a decision of the supreme court, when not a construction of a statute, does not enter into contracts made thereafter, and the subsequent reversal of the decision does not, therefore, impair the obligation of contracts; Lehigh Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 7 Sup. Ct. 916, 30 L. Ed. 1059; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91. See 2 Hare, Am. Const. L. 726.

"The constitutional inhibition applies only to the legislative enactments of the state and not to judicial decisions or the acts of state tribunals, or officers under statutes in force at the time of the making of the contract, the obligation of which is alleged to have been impaired." Hanford v. Davies, 163 U. S. 273, 16 Sup. Ct. 1051, 41 L. Ed. 157; nor is there federal jurisdiction on this ground when the validity of the statute, under which the contract was made, is admitted and the only question is as to its construction by the state court; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91, both of which cases are approved in Weber v. Rogan, 188 U. S. 10, 23 Sup. Ct. 263, 47 L. Ed. 363.

There has been much discussion of the doctrine of Gelpcke v. Dubuque, of which a considerable part has been based upon an assumed inconsistency in the decisions of the United States supreme court in its treatment of the decisions of the state courts. This has led to difference of opinion as to the principle upon which the case was based. It is believed, however, that most, if not all, of this supposed inconsistency disappears under careful analysis of the decisions of the supreme court here cited. For general discussions of the subject, see White, "Gelpcke v.

Dubuque"; J. B. Thayer in 4 Harv. L. Rev. 311, and in 2 Cas. Cons. L. 1547; 14 Am. L. Rev. 211; 23 id. 190; 9 id. 381; 8 Harv. L. Rev. 328; Wambaugh, Study of Cases 78, 315; W. F. Dodd in 4 Ill. L. Rev. 155, 327; 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860; 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1081.

One of the first applications of the doctrine of the impairment of contracts was to the charter of a corporation in the Dartmouth College Case; 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. Ed. 629; which held that the charter was a contract the obligation of which could not afterwards be impaired by the legislature without the corporation's consent. Since then charters of incorporation which are granted for the private benefit or purposes of the corporation have always been held to be contracts between the legislature and the corporation, having for their consideration or liability the duties which the corporation assumes by accepting them; Cooley, Const. Lim. 279; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 1044; Hare, Am. Const. L. 421, 527; Hamilton Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 258, 13 Sup. Ct. 90, 36 L. Ed. 963; and the doctrine is settled that charters of private corporations were within the constitutional guaranty; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137; Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 514, 7 L. Ed. 939; Piqua Branch of State Bank v. Knoop, 16 How. (U. S.) 369, 14 L. Ed. 977.

To guard against the danger which the growth of great corporations, under the protection of this principle, has developed, the new constitutions of many of the states forbid the granting of corporate powers except subject to amendment and repeal. Provisions of this sort have become so general that the effect of the doctrine that a state cannot pass an act impairing the obligation of a contract has been largely modified. The decisions of the supreme court of the United States have also worked further modifications. The first was in the famous Charles River Bridge Case in 1837, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773, where the court held that when the legislature had chartered a bridge company with the right to take tolls there was no implied contract that they would not charter another company to build a bridge alongside of the first which would in effect destroy the profits of the first by competition. The next modification was in the Granger Cases in 1876; 94 U. S. 113 to 187, 24 L. Ed. 77 to 97; which held that the regulation by the legislature of the rates to be charged by railroads and elevators was not an impairment of the obligation of a contract. See also Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 12 Sup. Ct. 400, 36 L. Ed. 176. This doctrine having been carried to great lengths in allowing the legislature to regulate the rates to be charged, the supreme court has now modified the doctrine by declaring that the power to regulate is not a power to destroy, and that a legislature, under the pretence of regulating fares and freights, cannot require a railroad to carry persons and property without profit; Covington & L. Turnpike Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 593, 17 Sup. Ct. 198, 41 L. Ed. 560.

In most if not all of the states there is, when a charter of incorporation is granted, a reserved power, either in the constitution or charter, to revoke, alter or repeal, and there has been much controversy and contrariety of decision as to how far this saves a legislative amendment from conflict with the impairment clause as applied to corporations under the Dartmouth College Case and those following it. While the reserved power to amend charters is subject to reasonable limitation, it includes any amendment which does not defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant or vested rights; Berea College v. Kentucky, 211 U. S. 45, 29 Sup. Ct. 33, 53 L. Ed. 81; Polk v. Life Ass'n, 207 U. S. 310, 28 Sup. Ct. 65, 52 L. Ed. 222; Wright v. Ins. Co., 193 U. S. 657, 24 Sup. Ct. 549, 48 L. Ed. 832. Provisions of a general law of a state for the creation of a new corporation on the reorganization of a railroad by a purchaser at a foreclosure sale, do not constitute a contract within the impairment clause; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Osborn, 193 U. S. 17, 24 Sup. Ct. 310, 48 L. Ed. 598, where it was said that the question was concluded by People v. Cook, 148 U. S. 397, 13 Sup. Ct. 645, 37 L. Ed. 498.

On the general subject of the power of the legislature under its right reserved to alter, amend, and repeal, see Worcester v. R. Co., 109 Mass. 103; Prentiss v. County Com'rs, 63 Me. 569; Rodemacher v. R. Co., 41 Ia. 297, 20 Am. Rep. 592; Gardner v. Ins. Co., 9 R. I. 194, 11 Am. Rep. 238; Cooley, Const. Lim. 279, note; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 1093; Hamilton Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 258, 13 Sup. Ct. 90, 36 L. Ed. 963; Wheeling & B. Bridge Co. v. Bridge Co., 138 U. S. 287, 11 Sup. Ct. 301, 34 L. Ed. 967.

In general, only contracts are embraced in this provision which respect property or some object of value and confer rights which can be asserted in a court of justice. Debts are not property. A non-resident creditor of a state cannot be said to be, by virtue of a debt which it owes him, a holder of property within its limits; Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. Ed. 760.

The following acts have been held void as impairing the obligation of a contract: The insolvent act of 1812 of Pennsylvania, so far as it attempted to discharge the contract; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Smith, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 131, 5 L. Ed. 224; the insolvent law of Indiana affecting debts to citizens of other states; Cook v. Moffat, 5 How. (U. S.) 295, 12 L. Ed. 159; the act of Maryland of 1841 taxing stockholders in banks impaired the obligation in the act of 1821 organizing banks; Gordon v. Tax Court, 3 How. (U. S.) 133, 11 L. Ed. 529; the act of Ohio of 1851, taxing the state bank; Piqua Branch of State Bank v. Knoop, 16 How. (U. S.) 369, 14 L. Ed. 977; general tax law of North Carolina as applied to a railroad whose charter exempted it from taxation; Wilmington & W. R. v. Reid, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 264, 20 L. Ed. 568; the same in South Carolina; Humphrey v. Pegues, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 244, 21 L. Ed. 326; the same in New Jersey; New Jersey v. Yard, 95 U. S. 104, 24 L. Ed. 352; the same in Illinois as applied to the charter of a university; Northwestern University v. Illinois, 99 U. S. 309, 25 L. Ed. 387; the same in Louisiana applied to the charter of an asylum; St. Anna's Asylum v. New Orleans, 105 U. S. 362, 26 L. Ed. 1128; the act of Illinois of 1841 restricting mortgage sales impaired the obligation of a mortgage contract; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. (U. S.) 311, 11 L. Ed. 143; the acts of Arkansas withholding assets of state banks from creditors impaired contracts with creditors; Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How. (U. S.) 304, 14 L. Ed. 705; the act of New York of 1855 authorizing a bridge to be built impaired the obligation in a charter to another company; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137; the act of Georgia of 1868 exempting property from execution impaired the obligation of a prior judgment; White v. Hart, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 646, 20 L. Ed. 685; the same in Georgia; Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 212; the same in North Carolina; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. Ed. 793; the act of Virginia of 1876 as to the deduction of taxes from coupons on state bonds impaired the obligation to the state bondholders under the funding act of 1871; Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S. 672, 26 L. Ed. 271; the ordinance of New Orleans of 1881 authorizing a light company to furnish New Orleans with gas impaired the obligation to another company under another act; Thompson v. Allen County, 115 U. S. 550, 6 Sup. Ct. 140, 29 L. Ed. 472; so in Kentucky; Louisville Gas Co. v. Gas Co., 115 U. S. 683, 6 Sup. Ct. 265, 29 L. Ed. 510; the action of a city council, under statutory authority given to it to contract with street railway companies as to the use of streets and the length of time which the franchise was to continue; Cleveland Electric Ry. Co. v. Cleveland, 204 U. S. 116, 27 Sup. Ct. 202, 51 L. Ed. 399; an act providing that no execution sale shall be made unless the property brings two-thirds of its valuation according to the opinion of three householders; McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. (U. S.) 608, 11 L. Ed. 397; the increase of assessment in a fraternal benefit association contrary to the condition of the application; Wright v. Knights of Maccabees, 196 N. Y. 391, 89 N. E. 1078, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 423, 134 Am. St. Rep. 838; or to a provision of the constitution of the association; Dowdall v. Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 196 N. Y. 405, 89 N. E. 1075, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 417; a legislative act which postpones an existing valid mortgage lien and makes a subsequently created lien superior to it; National Bank of Commerce v. Jones, 18 Okl. 555, 91 Pac. 191, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 310 and note, 11 Ann. Cas. 1041, where the cases on this point are collected. The new lien created was one in favor of a livery stable keeper upon animals in his charge. In the note, which collects many authorities, the conclusion is reached that upon the weight of authority the lien for feeding and caring for domestic animals is not superior to a lien created by a valid prior recorded mortgage, though the mortgagee may be estopped by consent to the proceedings by which the other lien is obtained. A few cases are cited in the note which hold the agister's lien superior; and for specific cases on the subject which are very numerous the note cited may be referred to.

The adjudication of a federal court establishing a contract exempting from taxation, although based upon the judgment of a state court, is equally effectual as res judicata between the parties as though the federal court had reached its conclusion as upon an original question; and where the state law, under which taxes were levied, has been declared in a federal court to be unconstitutional, because impairing a contract which exempted from all taxation, the question is res judicata, as to the right to levy the tax under such law in any other year, although it may have been established by the highest court of that state that an adjudication concerning taxes for one year cannot be pleaded as an estoppel in a suit involving taxes in other years; Deposit Bank v. Frankfort, 191 U. S. 499, 24 Sup. Ct. 154, 48 L. Ed. 276.

A dedication of land as a common for the use and benefit of a town forever as shown on a plan and the acceptance thereof, and the sale of lots under the plan constitutes a contract, the obligation of which is protected by the contract laws of the federal constitution; City of Cincinnati v. R. Co., 223 U. S. 390, 32 Sup. Ct. 267, 56 L. Ed. 481.

Although a state law may impose different liabilities on foreign corporations and domestic ones, a statute providing that foreign corporations pay a fee based on their capital stock for the privilege of entering the state, constitutes a contract, and a subsequent statute imposing higher annual license fees on foreign corporations than on domestic corporations is void; nor can it be justified under the power to alter, amend and repeal; American Smelting & Refining Co. v. Colorado, 204 U. S. 103, 27 Sup. Ct. 198, 51 L. Ed. 393, 9 Ann. Cas. 978. A Canadian statute (as to life insurance) impairing the obligation of a contract will not be enforced in this country under comity; Simmelink v. Independent Order of Foresters, 71 Misc. 535, 130 N. Y. Supp. 803.

Acts held not to impair the obligation of a contract are a state law authorizing prohibition of sale of liquor on Sunday which did not violate the contract of the license to sell during the year; State v. Bott, 31 La. Ann. 663, 33 Am. Rep. 224; a state statute establishing method of fixing water rates did not impair the contract of a water company with municipality under a previous ordinance fixing different rates; Murray v. City of Pocatello, 226 U. S. 318, 33 Sup. Ct. 107, 57 L. Ed. 239 (but a state statute changing the mode of fixing the charges of a water company where the contract provided a mode of changing the charges from time to time impairs the obligation of contract; City of Pocatello v. Murray, 173 Fed. 382); a state statute requiring transfers of corporation stock to be registered in the office of the secretary of state (and it is valid as against purchasers of stock prior to the act); Henley v. Myers, 215 U. S. 373, 30 Sup. Ct. 148, 54 L. Ed. 240.

The Oklahoma bank guaranty act does not impair the obligation of a contract; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 22 Okl. 48, 97 Pac. 590, affirmed in 219 U. S. 575, 31 Sup. Ct. 299, 55 L. Ed. 341 (see GUARANTY FUND); nor does an act forbidding extensions of life insurance business; Boswell v. Ins. Co., 193 N. Y. 465; nor one authorizing a change of the plan of business from the assessment plan to the legal reserve, flat insurance plan of old line insurance; Wright v. Ins. Co., 193 U. S. 657, 24 Sup. Ct. 549, 48 L. Ed. 832; nor acts requiring railroads to fence their tracks; People v. R. Co., 235 Ill. 374, 85 N. E. 606, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 915.

Where a railroad has a contract with a city, exempting it from municipal taxation, and a new state constitution is adopted, providing for the taxation of all corporate franchises, such railroad by consolidation with another road is brought within the new constitution and cannot claim the exemption; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. City of Vicksburg, 209 U. S. 358, 28 Sup. Ct. 510, 52 L. Ed. 833.

The erection of a viaduct upon a street was held to be a legitimate street improvement equivalent to a change of grade, and the owner of land abutting on the street was not entitled to damages for the impairment of access to his land and the lessening of the circulation of light and air over it; Sauer v. City of New York, 206 U. S. 536, 27 Sup. Ct. 686, 51 L. Ed. 1176 (see discussion of this case supra).

The contract exemption from taxation granted to the University of the South by its charter to continue so long as the land so exempted belongs to that institution is not impaired by taxing by legislative enactment the interests of the lessees of such land; Jetton v. University, 208 U. S. 489, 28 Sup. Ct. 375, 52 L. Ed. 584. The admission of an attorney is not a contract and an act prohibiting practice without taking the test oath is not invalid as impairing the obligation of a contract, though it was held ex post facto and void; In re Baxter, Fed. Cas. No. 1118.

Grants of exclusive privileges by state governments are subject to the exercise of the right of eminent domain by the state. The legislature has full authority to exercise an unlimited power as to the management, employment, and use of the eminent domain of the state, and to make all provisions necessary to the exercise of this right or power, but no authority whatever to give it away or take it out of the people directly or indirectly; Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 17 Conn. 61, 42 Am. Dec. 716; Boston Water Power Co. v. R. R. Corp., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 360; Armington v. Town of Barnet, 15 Vt. 745, 40 Am. Dec. 705; Barber v. Andover, 8 N. H. 398; Tait's Ex'r v. Central Lunatic Asylum, 84 Va. 271. See EMINENT DOMAIN; FRANCHISES.

The power of one legislature to exempt altogether from taxation certain lands or property, and in this way to bind subsequent legislatures and take from the people one of their sovereign rights, may, where a consideration has been given, be considered now as distinctly settled by the supreme court of the United States, though not without remonstrance on the part of state courts; and the abandonment of this taxing power is not to be presumed where the deliberate purpose of the state does not appear; Capen v. Glover, 4 Mass. 305; Brewster v. Hough, 10 N. H. 138; Gordon v. Baltimore, 5 Gill (Md.) 231; Herrick v. Randolph, 13 Vt. 525; Debolt v. Ins. Co., 1 Ohio St. 563; New Jersey v. Wilson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 164, 3 L. Ed. 303; Parker v. Redfield, 10 Conn. 495; Home of the Friendless v. Rouse, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 430, 19 L. Ed. 495; Pacific R. Co. v. Maguire, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 22 L. Ed. 282. See New Orleans City & Lake R. Co. v. New Orleans, 143 U. S. 192, 12 Sup. Ct. 406, 36 L. Ed. 121; Louisville Water Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 346, 36 L. Ed. 55; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Board of Levee Com'rs, 37 Fed. 24; State v. Butler, 86 Tenn. 614, 8 S. W. 586. The grant of the power of taxation by the legislature to a municipal corporation is not a contract, but is subject to revocation, modification, and control by the legislature; Williamson v. New Jersey, 130 U. S. 189, 9 Sup. Ct. 453, 32 L. Ed. 915.

In relation to marriage and divorce, it is now settled that this clause does not operate. The obligation of the marriage contract is created by the public law, subject to the public will, and to that of the parties; Maguire v. Maguire, 7 Dana (Ky.) 181; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31

L. Ed. 654; 1 Bish. Mar. & D. § 9. The prevailing doctrine seems to be that the legislature has complete control of the subject of granting divorces, unless restrained by the constitution of the state; but in a majority of the states the constitutions contain this prohibition; Cooley, Const. Lim. 133; and there the jurisdiction in matter of divorce is confined exclusively to the judicial tribunals, under the limitations prescribed by law; 2 Kent 106. But where the legislature has power to act, its reasons cannot be inquired into; marriage is not a contract but a status; the parties cannot have vested rights of property in a domestic relation; therefore the legislative act does not come under condemnation as depriving parties of rights contrary to the law of the land; Starr v. Pease, 8 Conn. 541; Cooley, Const. Lim. 112.

In relation to bankruptcy and insolvency, the constitution, art. 1, § 8, cl. 4, gives to congress the power of making a bankrupt law. But it seems to be settled that this power is not exclusive; because the several states may also make distinct bankrupt laws, —though they have generally been called insolvency laws,—which will only be superseded when congress chooses to exercise its power by passing a bankruptcy law; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606; Blanchard v. Russell, 13 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 106. See supra.

A law does not impair the obligation of a contract if neither party is relieved thereby from performing anything which he obligated himself to do, otherwise the obligation is impaired whether the absolution of the party from performance is affected directly and expressly or indirectly; State v. Krahmer, 105 Minn. 422, 117 N. W. 780, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157, where a statute was held valid providing that a lien upon land by the holder of a tax certificate should ripen into a fee simple title upon the expiration of the time for redemption without notice of the expiration of the time of redemption to be given which had been required within a specified time under a prior statute.

There is a broad distinction taken as to the obligation of a contract and the remedy upon it. The abolition of all remedies by a law operating in præsenti is, of course, an impairing of the obligation of the contract. But it is admitted that the legislature may vary the nature and extent of remedies, as well as the times and modes in which these remedies may be pursued, and bar suits not brought within such times as may be prescribed. A reasonable time within which rights are to be enforced must be given by laws which bar certain suits; Call v. Hagger, 8 Mass. 430; Blackford v. Peltier, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 36; Beal v. Nason, 14 Me. 344; Griffin v. McKenzie, 7 Ga. 163, 50 Am. Dec. 389; West Feliciana R. Co. v. Stockett, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 395; Pearce's Heirs v. Patton, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 162, 45 Am. Dec. 61; Duvoll v. Wilson, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 489.

The meaning of obligation is important with regard to the distinction taken between the laws existing at the time the contract is entered into and those which are enacted afterwards. The former are said to have been in contemplation of the parties, and so far entered into their contract. The latter are said to impair, provided they affect the contract at all. See cases infra.

The term "obligation of the contract" includes the means which are legally afforded for its enforcement; Louisiana v. St. Martin's Parish, 111 U. S. 716, 4 Sup. Ct. 648, 28 L. Ed. 574; both the remedy and the validity of the contract are within the constitutional guaranty; Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 314, 21 L. Ed. 357; Seaine v. Inhabitants of Belleville, 39 N. J. L. 526; Davis v. Rupe, 114 Ind. 588, 17 N. E. 163; Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524; Walker v. Whitehead, 43 Ga. 538. The remedies are essential parts of the contract and such as exist at the time the debt is incurred must be preserved in substance; Rees v. City of Watertown, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 107, 22 L. Ed. 72; and a repeal or change of remedies which does this is valid; Harrison v. Paper Co., 140 Fed. 385, 72 C. C. A. 405, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954, 5 Ann. Cas. 314, where the cases are collected; but any subsequent law which so affects the remedy as substantially to impair and lessen the value of the contract is void; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 607, 24 L. Ed. 793, quoted in Seibert v. Lewis, 122 U. S. 284, 7 Sup. Ct. 1190, 30 L. Ed. 1161. This includes all cases where the substitution of a different remedy is of one in substance more difficult, more burdensome, or uncertain than that which is repealed; one which appreciably lessens the value of the contract; City of Cleveland v. U. S., 166 Fed. 677, 93 C. C. A. 274. See an extended note on the remedy as part of the obligation of the contract, 1 L. R. A. 356.

The remedy may be altered or modified, or a new remedy provided, though possibly less convenient or speedy, and the remedy may be changed from equity to law; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Hecht, 95 U. S. 168, 24 L. Ed. 423; Tennessee v. Sneed, 96 U. S. 69, 24 L. Ed. 610; Penrose v. Canal Co., 56 Pa. 46, 93 Am. Dec. 778; and if the modification or substitute leaves a sufficient remedy, or otherwise provides a sufficient one it will be valid; Memphis v. U. S., 97 U. S. 293, 24 L. Ed. 920; Savings Inst. v. Makin, 23 Me. 360; In re Trustees of New York Protestant Episcopal Public School, 31 N. Y. 574. A reasonable change in the mode of enforcement is not a violation of the obligation of the contract; Mason v. Haile, 12

Wheat. (U. S.) 370, 6 L. Ed. 660; Richardson v. Akin, 87 Ill. 141; Morse v. Goold, 11 N. Y. 281, 62 Am. Dec. 103. A statute may change the remedy if it enlarges it; Waggoner v. Flack, 188 U. S. 595, 23 Sup. Ct. 345, 47 L. Ed. 609; and one providing for the condemnation of minority shares of stock in corporations where the majority of shares are held by another railroad corporation, if public interest demands, impairs neither the contract rights of one corporation under a lease to the other, or those of the stockholders; Offield v. R. Co., 203 U. S. 372, 27 Sup. Ct. 72, 51 L. Ed. 231.

Methods of procedure in actions on contract, that do not affect substantially rights of the parties, are within the control of the state, and the obligation of a stockholder's contract is not impaired within the meaning of the constitution by substituting, for individual actions for statutory liability, a suit in equity by the receiver of the insolvent corporation; Henley v. Myers, 215 U. S. 373 30 Sup. Ct. 148, 54 L. Ed. 240, affirming 76 Kan. 736, 93 Pac. 168, 173, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779; Miners' & Merchants' Bank v. Snyder, 100 Md. 57, 59 Atl. 707, 68 L. R. A. 312, 108 Am. St. Rep. 390.

In becoming a stockholder of a corporation one does not acquire as against the state any vested right in a particular mode of procedure for the enforcement of liability, but it is assumed that parties make their contracts with reference to the existence of the power in the state to regulate such procedure; Henley v. Myers, 215 U. S. 373, 30 Sup. Ct. 148, 54 L. Ed. 240.

There is a broad distinction between laws impairing the obligation of contracts and those giving a more efficient remedy, as where, in lieu of a right of creditors to enforce a liability against individual stockholders, it was provided that it should be enforced by a receiver in the interest of all creditors; Bernheimer v. Converse, 206 U. S. 516, 27 Sup. Ct. 755, 51 L. Ed. 1163, where it was said that a state statute changing the remedy does not impair the contract if it gives a more efficacious one; or does not impair it so materially as to affect the creditor's rights, citing Pittsburg Steel Co. v. Equitable Society, 226 U. S. 455, 33 Sup. Ct. 167, 57 L. Ed. 297; McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 10 Sup. Ct. 972, 34 L. Ed. 304.

Prior to these decisions, acts making such changes in the remedy had, in several cases, been held unconstitutional, as to creditors whose rights accrued prior to the change of remedy; Evans v. Nellis, 101 Fed. 920; Webster v. Bowers, 104 Fed. 627; Harrison v. Paper Co., 140 Fed. 385, 72 C. C. A. 405, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954, 5 Ann. Cas. 314; Pusey & Jones Co. v. Love, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 80, 66 Atl. 1013, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 130 Am. St. Rep. 144; Woodworth v. Bowles, 61 Kan. 569, 60 Pac. 331; Converse v. Bank, 79 Conn. 603, 65 Atl. 1065, reversed in 212 U. S. 567, 29 Sup. Ct. 691, 53 L. Ed. 654.

If there are two remedies, a change in one does not affect the contract; Watts v. Everett, 47 Ia. 269; Heyward v. Judd, 4 Minn. 483 (Gil. 375); and while the statute may change the remedies before judgment, it may not alter those after judgment, if the change materially affects rights under the contract; Read v. Bank, 23 Me. 318; Oliver v. McClure, 28 Ark. 555; Lockett v. Usry, 28 Ga. 345. So the statute may prescribe a remedy, if there is none, or provide a new one as good as that taken away; Longfellow v. Patrick, 25 Me. 18; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. (U. S.) 311, 11 L. Ed. 143; In re Trustees of New York Protestant Episcopal Public School, 31 N. Y. 574. The test is whether the change diminishes or destroys the remedy by postponing the enforcement of the contract or lessening the efficiency of the remedy; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 203, 26 L. Ed. 132; or by burdening the proceedings with new and unreasonable restrictions or conditions, or by anything that amounts to a deprivation of the remedy; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137; Western Sav. Fund Soc. of Philadelphia v. City of Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 175, 72 Am. Dec. 730; but if the ordinary and regular course of justice continues to operate upon the contract with the preservation of existing remedies, in substance, the obligation is not impaired; Holmes v. Lansing, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 73.

The statute giving the remedy may be repealed, if passed subsequent to the contract; Young v. Territory, 1 Or. 213; or laws may be passed providing for more efficient enforcement of the contract; Bryson v. McCreary, 102 Ind. 1, 1 N. E. 55; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Hill, 86 Mo. 466. Any state statute which impairs the obligation of the contract will be treated by the courts which enforce it as null and void, and the remedies will be applied without respect to it; Louisiana v. Pilsbury, 105 U. S. 278, 26 L. Ed. 1090; any impairment is fatal and the degree is immaterial; Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 314, 21 L. Ed. 357. See extended notes on the effect of legislation as to the remedy in 1 L. R. A. 356 and 4 L. R. A. 348.

Changes which have been held not to impair the contract are, in the remedy on a judgment; Livingston v. Moore, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 469, 8 L. Ed. 751; Grosvenor v. Chesley, 48 Me. 369; the enforcement of forfeiture of a charter; Danley v. Bank, 15 Ark. 16; Klaus v. City of Green Bay, 34 Wis. 628; Van Rensselaer v. Snyder, 13 N. Y. 299; lessening the period of publication of notice in foreclosure proceedings; Webb v. Moore, 25 Ind. 4; extending time for advertisement of mortgage sales; Starkweather v. Hawes, 10 Wis. 126; lessening the force of a penalty in a bond; Wood v. Kennedy, 19 Ind. 68; Potter v. Sturdivant, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 154; repealing usury laws, taking away that defense under existing contracts; Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 143, 2 Sup. Ct. 408, 27 L. Ed. 682; providing that service of process may be made on any officer or agent of a corporation; Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Hecht, 95 U. S. 168, 24 L. Ed. 423; abolishing imprisonment for debt as a remedy for breach of contract; Penniman's Case, 103 U. S. 714, 26 L. Ed. 602; invalidating technically defective mortgages; Gross v. Mortgage Co., 108 U. S. 477, 2 Sup. Ct. 940, 27 L. Ed. 795; or conveyances by femes covert; Randall v. Krieger, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 137, 23 L. Ed. 124; granting new trials; League v. De Young, 11 How. (U. S.) 202, 13 L. Ed. 657; reducing the period of limitation for bringing suits, if it leaves a reasonable period for suits for breaches of existing contracts; St. Louis v. Knapp, S. & Co., 104 U. S. 660, 26 L. Ed. 883; requiring the recording of existing mortgages, if it allow a reasonable time before the act takes effect; Vance v. Vance, 108 U. S. 514, 2 Sup. Ct. 854, 27 L. Ed. 808; providing for the re-organization of an insolvent corporation and binding creditors with notice who do not dissent; Gilfillan v. Canal Co., 109 U. S. 401, 3 Sup. Ct. 304, 27 L. Ed. 977.

An act is invalid which, after a contract is made, changes the measure of damages to be recovered for a breach; Effinger v. Kenney, 115 U. S. 566, 6 Sup. Ct. 179, 29 L. Ed. 495; also, which imposes as a condition precedent to enforcing a right that the plaintiff shall prove that he never aided the rebellion against the United States; Pierce v. Carskadon, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 234, 21 L. Ed. 276. So is an act which, after a judgment has been enrolled, materially increases the debtor's exemption; Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 212; and an act which, after the execution of a mortgage, increases the period of redemption after foreclosure; Howard v. Bugbee, 24 How. (U. S.) 461, 16 L. Ed. 753; and an act which forbids a sale on the foreclosure of a mortgage at which less than two-thirds of the appraised value of the mortgage premises is realized; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. (U. S.) 311, 11 L. Ed. 143.

Stay laws which abridge the remedy are not valid as against existing contracts, but those which affect the remedy and not the right are valid; Aycock v. Martin, 37 Ga. 124, 92 Am. Dec. 56; Coffman v. Bank, 40 Miss. 29, 90 Am. Dec. 311; Jacobs v. Smallwood, 63 N. C. 112, Fed. Cas. No. 7,163; Breitenbach v. Bush, 44 Pa. 313, 84 Am. Dec. 442. So also statutes of limitation, if not retroactive, do not impair the obligation, and an act may be passed reducing the time, if a reasonable time continues; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. Ed. 365; Wheeler v. Jackson, 137 U. S. 245, 11 Sup. Ct. 76, 34 L. Ed. 659; MacFarland v. Jackson, 137 U. S. 258, note, 11 Sup. Ct. 79, 34 L. Ed. 664. McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 10 Sup. Ct. 972, 34 L. Ed. 304; but if the change is unreasonable it will not be valid; Pereles v. Watertown, 6 Biss. 79, Fed. Cas. No. 10,980; Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 81, 70 Am. Dec. 638; Osborn v. Jaines, 17 Wis. 574; unless the remedy remains substantially; Von Baumbach v. Bade, 9 Wis. 560, 76 Am. Dec. 283; so exemption laws, if reasonable and not materially affecting the remedy, are valid; but otherwise they impair the obligation of prior contracts; Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 535, 18 L. Ed. 403; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. Ed. 793; Morse v. Goold, 11 N. Y. 281, 62 Am. Dec. 103; Hardeman v. Downer, 39 Ga. 425; Hawthorne v. Calef, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 23, 17 L. Ed. 776; contra, Rockwell v. Hubbell's Adm'rs, 2 Doug. (Mich.) 197, 45 Am. Dec. 246, 5 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 82.

An insolvent law is valid as to discharges from future debt when both debtor and creditor reside in the same state, but not if the creditor is a citizen of a different state, or if the law releases the debtor from prior debts; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606; Baldwin v. Hale, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 223, 17 L. Ed. 531; Betts v. Bagley, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 572; Boardman v. De Forest, 5 Conn. 1; Post v. Riley, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 54; Donnelly v. Corbett, 7 N. Y. 500. Those are said to be valid which are in the nature of a cessio bonorum, leaving the debt still existing, or which provide for the discharge of the debt, but refer only to subsequent contracts, or which merely modify or affect the remedy, as by exempting the person from arrest, but still leave means of enforcing. But a law exempting the person from arrest and the goods from attachment on mesne process or execution would be void, as against the constitution of the United States; Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 6 How. (U. S.) 328, 12 L. Ed. 447; Kimberly v. Ely, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 440; Norton v. Cook, 9 Conn. 314, 23 Am. Dec. 342; Smith v. Parsons, 1 Ohio, 236, 13 Am. Dec. 608; the rights of antecedent creditors are protected by the constitution; Shreveport v. Cole, 129 U. S. 36, 9 Sup. Ct. 210, 32 L. Ed. 589. The state insolvent laws in practice operate in favor of the citizens of the particular state only, as to other citizens of the same state, and not against citizens of other states, unless they have assented to the relief or discharge of the debtor expressly, or by some equivalent act, as by becoming a party to the process against him under the law, taking a dividend, and the like; Van Reimsdyk v. Kane, 1 Gall. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 16,871; Hinkley v. Marean, 3 Mas. 88, Fed. Cas. No. 6,523; Baker v. Wheaton, 5 Mass. 509, 4 Am. Dec. 71; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 366; but the mere circumstance that the contract is made payable in the state where the insolvent law exists will not render such contract subject to be discharged under the law; Baldwin v. Hale, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 223, 17 L. Ed. 531; Baldwin v. Bank, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 234, 17 L. Ed. 534; Gilman v. Lockwood, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 409, 18 L. Ed. 432.

Some states refuse to aid a citizen of another state in enforcing a debt against a citizen of their own state, when the debt was discharged by their insolvent law. In such cases the creditor must resort to the court of the United States within the state; Babcock v. Weston, 1 Gall. 168, Fed. Cas. No. 703; Braynard v. Marshall, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 194; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 394; Woodhull v. Wagner, Baldw. 296, Fed. Cas. No. 17,975; Browne v. Stackpole, 9 N. H. 478. See INSOLVENT LAWS.

Exemption from arrest affects only the remedy, while exemption from attachment of the property, or a subjection of it to a stay law or appraisement law, impairs the obligation of the contract. Such a statute can only be enforced as to contracts made subsequently to the law; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. (U. S.) 311, 11 L. Ed. 143; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 75, 5 L. Ed. 547; Beers v. Haughton, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 359, 9 L. Ed. 145; U. S. v. Quincy, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 535, 18 L. Ed. 403; Tennessee v. Sneed, 96 U. S. 69, 24 L. Ed. 610; but a law abolishing distress for rent has been held to be applicable to cases in force at its passage; Conkey v. Hart, 14 N. Y. 22. With regard to exemption from arrest the supreme court holds that in modes of proceeding and forms to enforce the contract the legislature has the control, and may enlarge, limit, or alter them, provided it does not deny a remedy, or so embarrass it with conditions or restrictions as seriously to impair the value of the right; Penniman's Case, 103 U. S. 720, 26 L. Ed. 602. See McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 10 Sup. Ct. 972, 34 L. Ed. 304. Whatever belongs, merely, to the remedy may be altered according to the will of the state, provided the alteration does not impair the obligation of a contract; Hill v. Ins. Co., 134 U. S. 515, 10 Sup. Ct. 589, 33 L. Ed. 994.

It is admitted that a state may make partial exemptions of property, as of furniture, food, apparel, or even a homestead; Quackenbush v. Danks, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 128; Danks v. Quackenbush, 1 N. Y. 129; Bronson v. Newberry, 2 Dough. (Mich.) 38; Evans v. Montgomery, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 218; Tarpley v. Hamer, 9 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 310. A homestead exemption may be made applicable to previously existing contracts; Ladd v. Adams, 66 N. C. 164; contra, Homestead Cases, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 266, 12 Am. Rep. 507; Hannum v. McInturf, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 225. But a law preventing all legal remedy upon a contract would be void; State v. Bank, 1 S. C. 63; Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 212. An act providing that dower or right of dower shall not be subject to seizure or execution for the husband's debts during his lifetime, cannot affect the rights of creditors whose claims arose before the passage of the act; Patton v. Asheville, 109 N. C. 685, 14 S. E. 92. See Gilmore v. Bright, 101 N. C. 382, 7 S. E. 751.

Nothing in the constitution prevents a state from passing a valid statute, to divest rights which have been vested by law in an individual, provided it does not impair the obligation of a contract; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 386, 1 L. Ed. 648; Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 89, 8 L. Ed. 876; Grinder v. Nelson, 9 Gill (Md.) 299, 52 Am. Dec. 694; Wilson v. Hardesty, 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 66. See In re Copenhaver, 54 Fed. 660; Shreveport v. Cole, 129 U. S. 36, 9 Sup. Ct. 210, 32 L. Ed. 589. This inhibition in the constitution is wholly prospective, and the states may legislate as to contracts thereafter made as they see fit; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 603, 24 L. Ed. 793; Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 489, 9 Sup. Ct. 134, 32 L. Ed. 491; Lehigh Water Co. v. Borough of Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 7 Sup. Ct. 916, 30 L. Ed. 1059; Brown v. Smart, 145 U. S. 454, 12 Sup. Ct. 958, 36 L. Ed. 773.

The law of place acts upon a contract, and governs its construction, validity, and obligation, but constitutes no part of it. The law explains the stipulations of parties, but never supersedes or varies them.

This is very different from supposing that every law is applicable to the subject-matter, as statutes of limitation and insolvency, or enters into and becomes a part of the contract. This can neither be drawn from the terms of the contract, nor presumed to be contemplated by the parties.

The weight of authority is that this clause of the constitution, like that which relates to the regulation of commerce by congress, does not limit the power of a state to enact general police regulations for the preservation of public health and morals; Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How. (U. S.) 163, 12 L. Ed. 1030; Hirn v. State, 1 Ohio St. 15; Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 194, 22 Am. Dec. 421; Vanderbilt v. Adams, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 349; Coates v. New York, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 585; Thorpe v. R. Co., 27 Vt. 149, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Platte & D. C. & M. Co. v. Dowell, 17 Colo. 376, 30 Pac. 68. See Freleigh v. State, 8 Mo. 607; State v. Sterling, id. 697; State v. Phalen, 3 Harr. (Del.) 442; New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 102, 9 L. Ed. 648. See, generally, Hare, Am. Const. L. 768; Rawle, Const.; Dane, Abr. Index; Com. v. IMPALARE. To impound. Du Cange.

IMPANEL. To write the names of jurors on a panel (q. v.), which is a schedule or list, in England, of parchment: this is done by the sheriff, or other officer lawfully authorized.

In American practice, the word is used of a jury drawn for trial of a particular cause by the clerk, as well as of the general list of jurors returned by the sheriff. Grah. Pr. 275. See 1 Archb. Pr. 365; 3 Bla. Com. 354; Porter v. People, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 441, Strictly speaking and at common law, juries are impanelled when the jurymen are selected and ready to be sworn; Clough v. U. S., 55 Fed. 928.

IMPARCATUS. Imprisoned. Spell. Gloss.

IMPARLANCE (from Fr. parler, to speak). Time given by the court to either party to answer the pleading of his opponent: as, either to plead, reply, rejoin, etc.

It is said to be nothing else but the continuance of the cause till a further day; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (C). In this sense imparlances are no longer allowed in English practice; Andr. Steph. Pl. 162.

Time to plead. This is the common signification of the word; 2 Wms. Saund. 1, n. 2; 2 Show. 310; Barnes 346. In this sense imparlances are not recognized in American law, the common practice being for the defendant to enter an appearance, when the cause stands continued, until a fixed time has elapsed within which he may file his plea. In the act of congress of May 19, 1828, § 2, the word imparlance was originally used for "stay of execution," but the latter phrase has been substituted for it; Rev. Stat. § 988. See CONTINUANCE.

A general imparlance is the entry of a general prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception; so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any matter in abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another.

A general special imparlance contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abatement, but he may also plead a plea which affects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea; Tidd, Pr. 418.

A special imparlance reserves to the defendant all exception to the writ, bill, or count; and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court.

See Comyns, Dig. Abatement (I) 19, 20, 21, Pleader (D); 1 Chitty, Pl. 420; 1 Sell. Pr. 265; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (C).

IMPARSONEE. A clergyman who by induction (q. v.) is in possession of a benefice. He is then termed persona impersonata—a parson imparsonee. 1 Bla. Com. 391; Co. Litt. 300.

IMPARTIALLY. See FAITHFULLY.

IMPEACHMENT. A written accusation usually by the house of representatives of a state or of the United States to the senate of the state or of the United States against an officer.

The United States constitution declares that the house of representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment; art. 1, s. 2, cl. 5; and that the senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments; art. 1, s. 3, cl. 6.

The persons liable to impeachment are the president, vice-president, and all civil officers of the United States; art. 2, s. 4. A question arose upon an impeachment before the senate, in 1799, whether a senator was a civil officer of the United States within the purview of this section of the constitution; and it was decided by the senate, by a vote of fourteen against eleven, that he was not; Senate Jour. Jan. 10, 1799; Story, Const. § 791; Rawle, Const. 213; Von Holst Const. Hist. 160. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

The offences for which a guilty officer may be impeached are treason, bribery, and other high crimes and misdemeanors; art. 2, s. 4. The constitution defines the crime of treason; art. 3, s. 3. Recourse must be had to the common law for a definition of bribery. Not having particularly mentioned what is to be understood by "other high crimes and misdemeanors," resort, it is presumed, must be had to parliamentary practice and the common law in order to ascertain what they are; Story, Const. § 795. It is said that impeachment may be brought to bear on any offense against the constitution or the laws which is deserving of punishment in this manner or is of such a character as to render the officer unfit to hold his office. It is primarily directed against official misconduct, and is not restricted to political crimes alone. The decision rests really with the senate; Black, Const. L. 121. The guilt of the accused must be established beyond a reasonable doubt; State v. Hastings, 37 Neb. 96, 55 N. W. 774.

The mode of proceeding in the institution and trial of impeachments is as follows: When a person who may be legally impeached has been guilty, or is supposed to have been guilty, of some malversation in office, a resolution is generally brought forward by a member of the house of representatives, either to accuse the party, or for a committee of inquiry. If the committee report adversely to the party accused, they give a statement of the charges and recommend that he be impeached. When the resolution is adopted by the house, a committee is appointed to impeach the party at the bar of the senate, and to state that the articles of impeachment against him will be exhibited in due time and made good before the senate, and to demand that the senate take order for the appearance of the party to answer to the impeachment. The house then agree upon the articles of impeachment, and they are presented to the senate by a committee appointed by the house to prosecute the impeachment. The senate then issues process, summoning the party to appear at a given day before them, to answer to the articles. The process is served by the sergeant-at-arms of the senate, and a return is made of it to the senate under oath. On the return-day of the process, the senate resolves itself into a court of impeachment, and the senators are sworn to do justice according to the constitution and laws. The person impeached is called to answer, and either appears or does not appear. If he does not appear, his default is recorded, and the senate may proceed ex parte. If he does appear, either by himself or attorney, the parties are required to form an issue, and a time is then assigned for the trial. The final decision is given by yeas and nays; but no person can be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present; Const. art. 1, s. 2, cl. 6. See "Chase's Trial," and "Trial of Judge Peck;" also proceedings against Judge Humphreys, June 26, 1862, Congress. Globe, pt. 4, 3d sess., 32d Congress, pp. 2942–2953; and Trial of President Johnson, March 5, 1868, Congress. Globe, pt. 5, supplement, 40th Congress, 2d sess.; Lecture by Prof. Theo. W. Dwight, before Columbia Coll. Law School, 6 Am. Law Reg. 257; Article by Judge Lawrence, of Ohio, same volume, p. 641.

When the president is tried, the chief justice presides. The judgment, in cases of impeachment, does not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States. Disqualification, as a punishment, is discretionary with the senate; Black, Const. L. 122. The party impeached remains liable to trial and punishment according to law. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

Proceedings on impeachments under the state constitutions are somewhat similar.

As to the impeachment of a judge, see JUDGE.

In England, the articles of impeachment are a kind of indictment found by the house of commons, and tried by the house of lords. It has always been settled that a peer could be impeached for any crime. There has been none since (1806) 29 St. Tr. 549. It was formerly believed that a commoner could only be impeached for high misdemeanors, not for capital offences; 4 Bla. Com. 260; but it seems now settled they may be impeached for high treason; May's Parl. Prac. Ch. 23. Impeachments have been very rare in England in modern times.

In Evidence. An allegation, supported by proof, that a witness who has been examined is unworthy of credit.

Every witness is liable to be impeached as to his reputation for truth and veracity; and, if his general character is good, he is presumed at all times to be ready to support it; Baker v. Robinson, 49 Ill. 299. See McDaniel v. State, 97 Ala. 14, 12 South. 241.

Negative evidence is admissible to establish a good reputation; People v. Van Gaasbeck, 189 N. Y. 408, 82 N. E. 718, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 650, 12 Ann. Cas. 745; Day v. Ross, 154 Mass. 13, 27 N. E. 676. See CHARACTER; REPUTATION.

It is not admissible to impeach a defendant's testimony by showing that at a former trial for a like offence, he raised a similar issue and was contradicted; Com. v. Lannan, 155 Mass. 168, 29 N. E. 467. An accused person who testifies in his own behalf, is subject to impeachment, as other witnesses, by evidence of previous contradictory statements; Com. v. Racco, 225 Pa. 113, 73 Atl. 1067, 133 Am. St. Rep. 872; Peck v. State, 86 Tenn. 259, 6 S. W. 389. A witness cannot be impeached by the contradiction of immaterial statements; Jones v. Lumber Co., 58 Ark. 125, 23 S. W. 679; nor can he be as to collateral and irrelevant matter on which he was cross-examined; Garman v. State, 66 Miss. 196, 5 South. 385; People v. Dye, 75 Cal. 108, 16 Pac. 537; Kuhns v. Ry. Co., 76 Ia. 67, 40 N. W. 92; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Townsend, 39 Kan. 115, 17 Pac. 804; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Coon, 69 Tex. 730, 7 S. W. 492; Alger v. Castle, 61 Vt. 53, 17 Atl. 727; State v. Goodwin, 32 W. Va. 177, 9 S. E. 85.

On cross examination an accused person may be questioned as to other offenses in order to impeach his credibility; State v. Manuel (La.) 63 South. 174. Statements out of court inconsistent with those made by a witness in court are admissible to impeach him, where the proper foundation has been laid; Leahey v. Ry. Co., 97 Mo. 165, 10 S. W. 58, 10 Am. St. Rep. 300; Milligan & Co. v. Butcher, 23 Neb. 683, 37 N. W. 596; State v. Barrett, 40 Minn. 65, 77, 41 N. W. 459, 463; State v. Porter, 74 Ia. 623, 38 N. W. 514; Howard v. State, 25 Tex.

App. 686, 8 S. W. 929. See CROSS-EXAMINATION.

See ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT.

One who has called a witness and is surprised by his adverse testimony may, in the discretion of the trial court, be allowed to cross-examine him and show that he had previously made statements contrary to his testimony; Lindquist v. Dickson, 98 Minn. 369, 107 N. W. 958, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727, 8 Ann. Cas. 1024. See DISCREDIT; EVIDENCE; WITNESS.

IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE. A restraint from committing waste upon lands or tenements; or, a demand of compensation for waste done by a tenant who has but a particular estate in the land granted, and, therefore, no right to commit waste.

All tenants for life or any less estate are liable to be impeached for waste, unless they hold without impeachment of waste; in the latter case they may commit waste without being questioned, or any demand for compensation for the waste done; 11 Co. 82. See WASTE.

Wanton acts of waste will be restrained; 2 Vern. 738; or will be the ground of recovery of damages in England under the Judicature Acts. These are usually called equitable waste.

IMPECHIARE. To impeach, accuse, or prosecute for felony or treason. Cowell.

IMPEDIATUS. Disabled from mischief by expeditation (q. v.). Cowell.

IMPEDIENS. One who hinders; the defendant or deforciant in a fine. Cowell.

IMPEDIMENTO. In Spanish Law. A prohibition to contract marriage, established by law between certain persons.

The disabilities arising from this clause are twofold, viz.:—

Impedimento Dirimente. Such disabilities as render the marriage null, although contracted with the usual legal solemnities. The disabilities arising from this source are enumerated in the following Latin verses (Esriche, Dict. 833):

"Error, conditio, votum, cognatio, crimen,
Cultus disparitas, vis, ordo, ligamen, honestas,
Si sis affinis, si forte coire nequibis,
Si parochi et duplicis desit præsentia testis,
Raptave sit mulier, nec parti reddita tutæ,
Hæc facienda vetant connubia, facta retractant."

Among these impediments, some are absolute, other relative. The former cannot be cured, and render the marriage radically null; others may be removed by previous dispensation.

In Spain, marriage is regarded in the twofold aspect of a civil and a religious contract. Hence the disabilities are of two kinds, viz.: those created by the local law and those imposed by the church.

In the earlier ages of the church, the emperors prohibited certain marriages: thus, Theodosius the Great forbade marriages between cousins-german; Justinian, between spiritual relations; Valentinian, Valens, Theodosius, and Arcadius, between persons of different religions.

The Catholic church adopted and extended the disabilities thus created, and by the third canon at the twenty-fourth session of the Council of Trent, the church reserved to itself the power of dispensation. As the Council of Trent did not determine, being divided, who had the power of granting dispensation, it is accorded in Italy to the pope, and in France and Spain, with few exceptions, to the bishops. The dispositions of the Council of Trent being in force in Spain (see Schmidt, Civ. Law of Spain, p. 6, note a), the ecclesiastical authority is alone invested with this power in Spain.

For the cases in which it may be granted, see Schmidt, Civ. Law c. 2, s. 14.

Impedimento, Impediente, or Prohibitivo.—Such disabilities as impede the contracting of a marriage, but do not annul it when contracted.

IMPEDIMENTS. Legal hindrances to making contracts. Some of these impediments are minority, want of reason, coverture, and the like. See CONTRACT; INCAPACITY.

In Civil Law. Bars to marriage.

Absolute impediments are those which prevent the person subject to them from marrying at all, without either the nullity of marriage or its being punishable.

Dirimant impediments are those which render a marriage void: as, where one of the contracting parties is already married to another person.

Prohibitive impediments are those which do not render the marriage null, but subject the parties to a punishment.

Relative impediments are those which regard only certain persons with regard to each other: as, the marriage of a brother to a sister.

See IMPEDIMENTO.

IMPENSÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Expense; outlay. Divided into necessariæ, for necessity, utiles, for use, and voluptuariæ, for luxury; Dig. 79. 6. 14; Voc. Jur.

IMPERATIVE. Mandatory as opposed to directory, as used of a statute (q. v.).

IMPERATOR. Emperor. The title of the Emperor in Rome and used also for the Kings of England in charters, before the conquest. 1 Bla. Com. 242.

IMPERFECT OBLIGATIONS. Those which are not, in view of the law, of binding force.

IMPERFECT RIGHTS. See RIGHTS.

IMPERFECT TRUST. An executory trust (q. v.).

IMPERIUM. The right to command, which includes the right to employ the force of the state to enforce the laws: this is one of the principal attributes of the power of the executive. 1 Toullier, n. 58.

IMPERSONALITAS. Impersonality. An expression used where no particular person is referred to, as where the words ut dicitur are used. Co. Litt. 352 b.

IMPERTINENT (Lat. in, not, pertinens, pertaining or relating to).

In Pleading. IN EQUITY. A term applied to matters introduced into a bill, answer, or other proceeding in a suit which are not properly before the court for decision at that particular stage of the suit. Spencer v. Van Duzen, 1 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 555; Barbee v. Inman, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 439; Wells v. Ry. Co., 15 Fed. 561. Impertinent matter is not necessarily scandalous; but all scandalous matter is impertinent.

The rule against admitting impertinent matter is designed to prevent oppression, not to become oppressive; 1 T. & R. 489; 6 Beav. 444; Tucker v. R. Co., 21 N. H. 38. No matter is to be deemed impertinent which is material in establishing the rights of the parties or ascertaining the relief to be granted; Mechanics' Bank v. Levy, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 606; 12 Beav. 44; 10 Sim. 345.

A pleading may be referred to a master to have impertinent matter expugned at the cost of the offending party; Story, Eq. Pl. § 266; Langdon v. Pickering, 19 Me. 214; Mason v. Mason, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 414; Camden & A. R. Co. v. Stewart, 19 N. J. Eq. 343; but a bill may not be after the defendant has answered; Coop. Eq. Pl. 19. In England, the practice of excepting to bills, answers, and other proceedings for impertinence has been abolished.

The new United States Supreme Court equity rule 21 (33 Sup. Ct. xxiv) forbids exceptions for scandal or impertinence, but the court may, upon motion or its own initiative, strike out such.

Such matter is not put in issue by general plea, need not be proven at the trial, and cannot be proven against defendant's objection. The court has power to strike out impertinent matter, but this power is sparingly exercised and should not be encouraged. There is no reported case in Pennsylvania in which matter was stricken out of a declaration on the mere ground of impertinency; Astrich v. Ins. Co., 13 Pa. Dist. R. 350. See SCANDALOUS MATTER.

AT LAW. A term applied to matter not necessary to constitute the cause of action or ground of defence. Tucker v. Randall, 2 Mass. 283.

It constitutes surplusage, which see.

In Practice. A term applied to evidence of facts which do not belong to the matter in question. That which is immaterial is, in general, impertinent, and that which is material is not, in general, impertinent. 1 McC. & Y. 337. Impertinent matter in the interrogatories to witnesses or their answers, in equity, will be expugned after reference to a master at the cost of the offending party; 2 Y. & C. 445.

IMPESCARE. To impeach or accuse. Impescatus, impeached. Jac.; Blount.

IMPETITIO VASTI. Impeachment of waste, which title see.

IMPETRATION. The obtaining any thing by prayer or petition. In the ancient English statutes it signifies a pre-obtaining of church benefices in England from the church of Rome which belonged to the gift of the king or other lay patrons.

IMPIER. Umpire (q. v.).

IMPIERMENT. Impairing or prejudicing. Jac. L. Dict.

IMPIGNORATA. Pledged; given in pledge (pignori data); mortgaged. A term applied in Bracton to land. Fol. 20.

IMPIGNORATION. The act of pawning or pledging.

IMPLACITARE (Lat.). To implead; to sue.

IMPLEAD. To sue or prosecute by due course of law. Bell v. Bell, 9 Watts (Pa.) 47.

IMPLEMENTS (Lat. impleo, to fill). Such things as are used or employed for a trade, or furniture of a house. Coolidge v. Choate, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 82.

Whatever may supply wants: particularly applied to tools, utensils, vessels, instruments of labor: as, the implements of trade or of husbandry. Webster, Dict.; Meyer v. Meyer, 23 Ia. 359, 92 Am. Dec. 432; Smith v. Gibbs, 6 Gray (Mass.) 298; or a music teacher's piano; Amend v. Murphy, 69 Ill. 338. The word does not include horses or other animals; Coolidge v. Choate, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 79; Wallace v. Collins, 5 Ark. 41, 39 Am. Dec. 359; Enscoe v. Dunn, 44 Conn. 93, 26 Am. Rep. 430.

IMPLICATA (Lat.). Small adventures for which the freight contracted for is to be received although the cargo may be lost. Targa, c. 34; Emerigon, Mar. Loans § 5.

IMPLICATION. An inference of something not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed.

It may be founded upon either of two grounds: It may arise from an elliptical form of expression which involves and implies something else as contemplated by the person using the expression; or upon the form of the gift, or upon a direction to do something which cannot be carried into effect without of necessity involving something else . . . which is a consequence necessarily resulting from that direction; Lord Westbury, in 11 H. L. Cas. 143. In order to prevent a will from failing of effect altogether, a gift will be implied if there be anything to designate the person to take; Thomas v. Thomas, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 112. It is but another term for meaning and intention apparent in the writing on judicial inspection; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 657, 9 L. Ed. 1233, cited in Lake Michigan Car Ferry Transp. Co. v. Crosby, 107 Fed. 724; North Point Consol. Irr. Co. v. Canal Co., 14 Utah 164, 46 Pac. 824.

See CONTRACT; DEED; EASEMENT; INTERPRETATION; WAY; WILL.

IMPLIED. This word is used in law as contrasted with "express;" i. e., where the intention in regard to the subject-matter is not manifested by explicit and direct words, but is gathered by implication or necessary deduction from the circumstances, the general language, or the conduct of the parties. See IMPLICATION.

IMPLIED ABROGATION. See ABROGATION.

IMPLIED ASSUMPSIT. See ASSUMPSIT.

IMPLIED COLOR. See COLOR.

IMPLIED CONSENT. See CONSENT.

IMPLIED CONSIDERATION. One that is implied by law, or presumed to exist, in contradistinction to an expressed consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

IMPLIED CONTRACT. See CONTRACT.

IMPLIED COVENANT. See COVENANT.

IMPLIED MALICE. See MALICE.

IMPLIED TRUST. See TRUST.

IMPLIED USES. See RESULTING USE; USE.

IMPLIED WARRANTY. The use of this term was condemned by Lord Abinger in Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 M. & W. 404, and it has been omitted from the English Bill of Sales Act.

See CAVEAT EMPTOR; SALE; WARRANTY.

IMPORTATION. The act of bringing goods and merchandise into the United States from a foreign country. U. S. v. Vowell, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 368, 3 L. Ed. 128; Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cra. (U. S.) 104, 3 L. Ed. 671; 2 M. & G. 155. See IMPORTS.

IMPORTED. This word, in general, has the same meaning in the tariff laws that its etymology shows, in porto, to carry in. To "import" is to bear or carry into. An "imported" article is one brought or carried into a country from abroad. The Conqueror, 49 Fed. 99. See IMPORTS.

IMPORTS. Goods or other property imported or brought into the country from foreign territory. Story, Const. § 949. See U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8; 1, § 10; Smith v. Turner, 7 How. (U. S.) 477, 12 L. Ed. 703; Marriott v. Brune, 9 How. (U. S.) 619, 13 L. Ed. 282; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 48 L. Ed. 538.

In a constitutional sense they embrace only goods brought from a foreign country and do not include merchandise shipped from one state to another; American Exp. Co. v. Iowa, 196 U. S. 146, 25 Sup. Ct. 182, 49 L. Ed. 417.

It may be noted that although the word "imports" as used in the federal constitution applies only to goods brought into the United States from a foreign country, and not to such as are transported from one state to another; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 382 (where Miller, J., discusses the subject at large, and the same distinction is emphatically asserted by White, J., in American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 48 L. Ed. 538, and was recognized by Day, J., in New York v. Wells, 208 U. S. 14, 28 Sup. Ct. 193, 52 L. Ed. 370); yet in many cases the term has been incidentally used by that court with reference to goods transported into one state from another; see Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 5 How. (U. S.) 504, 12 L. Ed. 256; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Bowman v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 757, 43 L. Ed. 49; Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S. 343, 21 Sup. Ct. 132, 45 L. Ed. 224; Williams v. Walsh, 222 U. S. 415, 32 Sup. Ct. 137, 56 L. Ed. 253.

To prevent the mischievous interference of the several states with the national commerce, the constitution of the United States, art. 1, § 10, provides as follows: "No state shall, without the consent of congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws; and the net produce of all duties and imposts laid by any state on imports or exports shall be for the use of the treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of congress;" Story, Const. § 1616. Under this section it has been held that a state law imposing a license tax on importers of foreign liquors was unconstitutional; the importer by the payment of the duty purchases the right to dispose of his merchandise as well as to bring it into the country; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 678; but the provision against taxing imports by the states does not extend to articles brought from another state, but only to articles imported from foreign countries; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 382; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091, 29 L. Ed. 257; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 48 L. Ed. 538. Imports from foreign countries are not subject to state taxation while remaining in the original cases in the hands of the importer, unbroken and unsold; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 678; People v. Barker, 155 N. Y. 330, 49 N. E. 940; Gerdan v. Davis, 67 N. J. L. 88, 50 Atl. 586; State v. Board of Assessors, 46 La. Ann. 145, 15 South. 10, 49 Am. St. Rep. 318; In re Doane, 197 Ill. 376, 64 N. E. 377; and while they are in that condition the state cannot impose any tax upon them, as the right to sell without restriction is a necessary incident of the right to import without restriction; Low v. Austin, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 29, 20 L. Ed. 517; Oberteuffer v. Robertson, 116 U. S. 517, 6 Sup. Ct. 462, 29 L. Ed. 706. See Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 5 How. (U. S.) 504, 12 L. Ed. 256; Smith v. Turner, 7 How. (U. S.) 283, 12 L. Ed. 702; Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 12 How. (U. S.) 299, 13 L. Ed. 996; New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 102, 9 L. Ed. 648.

After the cases, boxes or bales in which the goods are shipped are opened and the separate packages contained therein offered for sale, they cease to be "imported articles"; Wynne v. Wright, 18 N. C. 19; and become subject to local taxation; May v. New Orleans, 178 U. S. 496, 20 Sup. Ct. 976, 44 L. Ed. 1165; after the sale by the importer they lose their distinctive character as imports and are taxable in the hands of the buyer; Pervear v. Massachusetts, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 479, 18 L. Ed. 608; Waring v. Mobile, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 110, 19 L. Ed. 342.

The original packages of imported goods which cannot be so taxed are the boxes, cases or bales in which the goods are shipped, and not the smaller packages therein contained, although the latter are the packages in which the goods were put up by the manufacturer; May v. New Orleans, 178 U. S. 496, 20 Sup. Ct. 976, 44 L. Ed. 1165. A tax on auction sales of imported goods in the original packages is invalid; Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566, 24 L. Ed. 1015. So a tax on the uncollected price of imported goods was invalid; Gelpi v. Schenck, 48 La. Ann. 1535, 21 South. 115; as is a state law imposing a tax on the tonnage of vessels entering her ports; Inman S. S. Co. v. Tinker, 94 U. S. 238, 24 L. Ed. 118. But a state tax on the gross receipts of a railroad company, where freights are received partly from another state, is not a tax on imports; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 382; State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 284, 21 L. Ed. 164.

An importation is not complete, within the revenue laws, until a voluntary arrival within some port of entry; Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cra. (U. S.) 104, 3 L. Ed. 671; Meredith v. U. S., 13 Pet. (U. S.) 486, 10 L. Ed. 258; The Mary, 1 Gall. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 9,183; but see Perots v. U. S., 1 Pet. C. C. 256, Fed. Cas. No. 10,993; and the duties accrue at the time of such arrival; U. S. v. Dodge, 1 Deady 124, Fed. Cas. No. 14,973; but the importation, as between the importer and the government, is not complete as long as the goods remain in the custody of the officers of the customs, and until delivered to the importer, they are subject to any duties on imports which congress may see fit to impose; U. S. v. Benzon, 2 Cliff. 512, Fed. Cas. No. 14,577.

See ORIGINAL PACKAGE.

Free human beings are not imports or exports within the meaning of the United States constitution. The words refer only to property. Persons are not the subject of commerce and do not fall within the reasoning founded upon the construction of the power given to Congress to regulate commerce, and of the prohibition on the states against imposing a duty on imported goods; New York v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 59, 2 Sup. Ct. 87, 27 L. Ed. 383; but in the Passenger Cases, 7 How. (U. S.) 283, 412, 12 L. Ed. 702, it was held "that the commerce of the United States includes an intercourse of persons, as well as the importation of merchandise"; and the "head tax" statutes of New York and Massachusetts were held unconstitutional (so far as appears from the opinions there being no "opinion of the court") as repugnant both to the commerce clause and that prohibiting the laying of import duties by the states. It is the settled construction of the commerce clause that interstate commerce includes the "movement of persons as well as of property"; Hoke v. U. S., 227 U. S. 308, 33 Sup. Ct. 281, 57 L. Ed. 523, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 906; and the reasoning by which that conclusion is supported would seem to apply equally well to the constitutional safeguards of foreign commerce. Yachts are not imports. See TONNAGE.

IMPORTUNITY. Urgent solicitation, with troublesome frequency and pertinacity.

Wills and devises are sometimes set aside in consequence of the importunity of those who have procured them. Whenever the importunity is such as to deprive the testator of the freedom of his will, the will becomes fraudulent and void; Dane, Abr. c. 127, a. 14, s. 5, 6, 7; 2 Phill. Eccl. 551.

IMPOSITIONS. Imposts, taxes, or contributions. See Harvard College v. City of Boston, 104 Mass. 470.

IMPOSSIBILITY. A thing which under the law or according to the due course of nature cannot be done or performed.

Impossibility of performance is an important head of the law of contract, and the questions arising as to its effect may be affected by the classification to which the impossibility is assigned, the time at which it arises, and whether it affects the promise or the consideration for it.

There may be an impossibility of fact, existing in the nature of things, or arising out of the circumstances of the case or a legal impossibility created by law.

Of the first kind there may be a contradiction in the contract resulting from promises inconsistent with each other when made. There may also be a physical impossibility as when the thing contracted for is against the course of nature. Of the latter class examples are suggested of an agreement "to make two spheres of the same substance, but one twice the size of the other of which the greater should fall twice as fast as the smaller when they were both dropped from a height; or to construct a perpetual motion;" the former having been considered an elementary fact before Galileo's experiment and the latter being still attempted. Wald, Poll. Contr. 350.

A physical impossibility may be either absolute, which means impossible in any case, as if one should contract to reach the moon; or relative, as to make a payment to one who is dead. Of this kind is what is termed practical impossibility, as when a ship is so injured that it cannot be repaired except at an excessive or unreasonable cost; in this case it is treated as a total loss, being physically but not practically possible to repair. Certain accidents occurring from death, tempests, and the like are characterized by the phrase "impossibility arising by the act of God" (q. v.).

A contract or condition, the performance of which is made impossible by a rule of law, is termed a legal impossibility; as if one should give a bond to secure a simple contract with a collateral agreement that there should be no merger of the contract debt. A logical impossibility exists when the agreement is inconsistent with the nature of the transaction, as where a gift is made to one expressly for his own benefit with a condition that he immediately transfer it to a third person.

The impossibility may exist at the time of making the agreement, in which case it is said to be original; or it may be caused by matter arising ex post facto, as where the party to be benefited dies after the contract to be executed though before the performance. Such subsequent impossibility may be caused by the act of the party making the promise or the party to be benefited, or of a stranger, as a public enemy (q. v.), or by the act of God (q. v.).

An agreement to perform an impossibility whether in law or in fact is void; Wald, Poll. Contr. 352; Leake, Contr. 358; Harr. Contr. 34, 174. See L. R. 5 C. P. 577; Board of Com'rs of Mahoning County v. Young, 59 Fed. 96, 8 C. C. A. 27. There may, however, be the liability in damages for the breach of an unqualified undertaking to perform an impossibility; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Hoyt, 149 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 779, 37 L. Ed. 625; the real question in such a case is the existence of the liability; 2 Q. B. 680; it is a question of construction, whether the language of the contract is to be treated as not applying to a situation which renders its literal performance impossible; Harriman, Contr. 176. A contract to perform a notorious impossibility known to the parties to be such at the time of making the contract is void; 15 M. & W. 253; L. R. 6 Q. B. 124; L. R. 5 C. P. 577; if the impossibility has arisen after the making of the contract, although without any fault of the covenantor, he is not discharged from liability under it; Jacksonville, M., P. Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Hooper, 160 U. S. 514, 16 Sup. Ct. 379, 40 L. Ed. 515; an impossibility is no defence if occasioned by the act of a stranger; 2 Ld. Raym. 1164; 2 El. & Bl. 688; or of alien enemies; Aleyn 26.

It is held to be an excuse when caused by the non-continuance either of the subject-matter of the contract or of the conditions essential to its performance; Stewart v. Stone, 127 N. Y. 500, 28 N. E. 595, 14 L. R. A. 215; Buffalo & L. Land Co. v. Improvement Co., 165 N. Y. 247, 59 N. E. 5, 51 L. R. A. 951.

Certain contracts are construed as containing an implied exception of impossible events, and even general words in the contract will not be held to apply to the possibility of the particular contingency which afterwards happened; Leake, Contr. 702; L. R. 4 Q. B. 185; Walker v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527; Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 7 Am. Rep. 415.

Where, in an action of breach of promise of marriage, a plea that consummation had become impossible by reason of bodily disease endangering the life of the defendant, was held by four judges to three in the exchequer chamber to be no defence, the court of the queen's bench having been equally divided; El. Bl. & El. 748, 29 L. J. Q. B. 45; but of this case it is said that "it is so much against the tendency of the latter cases that it is of little or no authority beyond the point actually decided;" Wald, Poll. Contr. 378; and in an American case upon analogous facts the court approved the criticism upon the English case and refused to follow it.

Where the contract is for personal services, there is an implied condition that the parties should be alive to perform them; Blakely v. Sousa, 197 Pa. 305, 47 Atl. 286, 80 Am. St. Rep. 821. Likewise where a party becomes, without his own fault, incapable of fulfilling the contract in his lifetime; Dickey v. Linscott, 20 Me. 453, 37 Am. Dec. 66; Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7; Green v. Gilbert, 21 Wis. 395. Impossibility may arise by the default of either party. Default of promisor is breach of the contract; default of promisee discharges promisor and may be treated as breach; U. S. v. Peck, 102 U. S. 64, 26 L. Ed. 46. Where the existence of a contract is made to depend on a future contingent event assigned by the will of the parties, then the subsequent impossibility of the same discharges the contract. Unexpected difficulty or inconvenience short of impossibility is no excuse; U. S. v. Gleason, 175 U. S. 588, 20 Sup. Ct. 228, 44 L. Ed. 284; Harlow v. Borough of Homestead, 194 Pa. 57, 45 Atl. 87; Butterfield v. Byron, 153 Mass. 517, 27 N. E. 667, 12 L. R. A. 571, 25 Am. St. Rep. 654.

The cases upon this subject are necessarily of infinite variety, as is natural where the question is so largely one of construction. To examine them in detail would be impossible within the scope of this title, but they will be found collected and classified in the various works on contracts.

See CONTRACT; UNLAWFUL AGREEMENT; CONDITION; PERFORMANCE; ACT OF GOD.

IMPOSSIBLE CONTRACT. One which the law will not hold binding upon the parties because of the natural or legal impossibility of the performance by one party of that which is the consideration for the promise of the other. 7 Wait, Act. & D. 124. See IMPOSSIBILITY.

IMPOSTS. Taxes, duties, or impositions. A duty on imported goods or merchandise. Federalist, no. 30; Elliott, Deb. 289; Story, Const. § 949; Cooley, Tax. 3.

The Constitution of the United States gives congress power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, excises, and imposts," and prohibits the states from laying "any imposts or duties on exports or imports" without the consent of congress; U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, n. 1; art. 1, § 10, n. 2. The words "duties, excises, and imposts" are used comprehensively to cover customs and excise duties imposed on importation, consumption, manufacture and sale of certain commodities, privileges, business transactions, vocations, occupations, and the like; Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363, 24 Sup. Ct. 305, 48 L. Ed. 481.

See Bacon, Abr. Smuggling; Co. 2d Inst. 62; Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 433, 19 L. Ed. 95; Worsley v. Second Municipality of New Orleans, 9 Rob. (La.) 324, 41 Am. Dec. 333.

See TAX; IMPORTS; EXCISE.

IMPOTENCE. In Medical Jurisprudence. Inability on the part of the male organ of copulation to perform its proper function. Impotence applies only to disorders affecting the function of the organ of copulation, while sterility applies only to lack of fertility in the reproductive elements of either sex. Dennis, System of Surgery.

Impotence may be considered as incurable, curable, accidental, or temporary. Absolute or incurable impotence is that for which there is no known relief, principally originating in some malformation or defect of the genital organs. Its existence or nonexistence is not to be determined by mere anatomical appearances, and the mere fact of age alone is never sufficient to imply absence of the procreative power; 2 Witth. & Beck. 396. It may also be the result of infirmity rather than of age or deformity, as the effect of vicious habits; id. 398. As a general rule, diseases which do not affect the brain or spinal cord, and which are not attended with great debility, do not on the part of the male prevent intercourse. In acute febrile diseases temporary impotence is, beyond question, the rule; but the power is rapidly regained, on convalescence. Mumps is occasionally followed by impotence. Habits of drunkenness and the abuse of drugs may act in a similar manner. Emotion is an exceedingly common cause of temporary impotence. Deformity or defects of development in the organs, as well as disease of such organs, are likewise cause of impotence. 2 Taylor, Med. Leg. Jurispr. 1.

Ability to procreate is not the test; it is enough if the parties are able to have sexual intercourse; Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774; Devanbagh v. Devanbagh, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 554, 28 Am. Dec. 443; 3 Phill. Ecc. 325; and impotency arising after the marriage does not avoid it; 30 L. J. Prob. Mat. & Adm. 73. Unless otherwise by statute, impotence renders a marriage voidable, not void; L. R. 1 Ex. 246; Anonymous, 24 N. J. Eq. 19.

It has been held that, in a divorce case, an examination may be ordered of a defendant alleged to be impotent; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Thul, 29 Kan. 466, 474, 44 Am. Rep. 659. See also 19 Cent. L. J. 144, and 2 Bish. M. & D. § 590.

Impotence is a statutory ground of divorce in most states, and in some courts it is held that jurisdiction of suits for nullity, is impliedly conferred with jurisdiction in divorce; Tiffany, Pers. & Dom. Rel. 39. See Le Barron v. Le Barron, 35 Vt. 365; J. G. v. H. G., 33 Md. 401, 3 Am. Rep. 183. Where this defect existed at the time of the marriage and was incurable, by the ecclesiastical law and the law of several of the American states, the marriage may be declared void ab initio; Com. Dig. Baron and Femme (C 3); Bacon, Abr. Marriage, etc. (E 3); 1 Bla. Com. 440; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 67; Code, 5. 17. 10; Devanbagh v. Devanbagh, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 554, 28 Am. Dec. 443; Bascomb v. Bascomb, 25 N. H. 267; but see Burtis v. Burtis, Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 557, 14 Am. Dec. 563. Impotency arising from idiocy intervening after the marriage is no ground for divorce in Vermont; Norton v. Norton, 2 Aik. 188. See Merlin, Rep. impuissance. But it seems the party naturally impotent cannot allege that fact for the purpose of obtaining a divorce; 3 Phill. Eccl. 147. See 2 Phill. Eccl. 10; 3 id. 325; 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 377; Bish. Marr. & D.; 1 Bla. Com. 440; 1 Hagg. 725. See, as to the signs of impotence, 1 Briand, Méd. Leg. c. 2, art. 2, § 2, n. 1; Dictionnaire des Sciences medicales, art. Impuissance; and generally, Trebuchet, Jur. de la Méd. 100; 1 State Tr. 315; 8 id. App. no. 1, p. 23; 3 Phill. 147; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 523; Foderé, Méd. Lég. § 237.

See STERILITY.

IMPOTENTIAM, PROPERTY PROPTER. A qualified property, which may subsist in animals feræ naturæ, on account of their inability, as where hawks, herons, or other birds build in a person's trees, or coneys, etc., make their nests or burrows in a person's land, and have young there, such person has a qualified property in them till they can fly or run away, and then such property expires. 2 Steph. Com. 7th ed. 8.

IMPOUND. To place in a pound goods or cattle distrained or astray. 3 Bla. Com. 12; Newhouse v. Hatch, 126 Mass. 364. See ANIMAL.

Also, to retain in the custody of the law. A suspicious instrument produced at a trial is said to be impounded, when it is ordered by the court to be retained, in case criminal proceedings should be taken.

IMPRESCRIPTIBILITY. The state of being incapable of prescription.

A property which is held in trust is imprescriptible: that is, the trustee cannot acquire a title to it by prescription; nor can the borrower of a thing get a right to it by any lapse of time, unless he claims an adverse right to it during the time required by law.

IMPRESCRIPTIBLE RIGHTS. Such as a person may use or not, at pleasure, since they cannot be lost to him by the claims of another founded on prescription.

IMPRESSION. A case involving a new state of facts or a question yet undetermined and therefore without precedent is usually termed a "case of first impression."

IMPRESSMENT. The arresting and retaining mariners for the king's service. 1 Bla. Com. 420; 3 Steph. Com. 594.

It was "the mode formerly resorted to of manning the British navy. The practice had not only the sanction of custom; but the force of law, for many acts of parliament, from the reign of Philip and Mary to that of George III., had been passed to regulate the system of impressment. Impressment consisted in seizing by force, for service in the royal navy, seamen, river-watermen, and at times landsmen, when state emergencies rendered them necessary. An armed party of reliable men, commanded by officers, usually proceeded to such houses in the seaport towns as were supposed to be the resort of the seafaring population, laid violent hands on all eligible men and conveyed them forcibly to the ships of war in the harbor. As it was not in the nature of sailors to yield without a struggle, many terrible fights took place between the press-gangs and their intended victims—combats in which lives were often lost. In point of justice there is little, if anything, to be said for impressment, which had not even the merit of an impartial selection from the whole available population;" Int. Cyc.

IMPREST MONEY. Money paid on enlisting or impressing soldiers or sailors.

In Old English Law. Money given out for a certain purpose to be afterwards accounted for. Money advanced by the crown to be employed for its own purpose in connection with the government, as in the case of secret service money. See Man. Exch. Pr. 17; 13 Eliz. c. 4; 6 Price 424 a. See PRESS-GANG.

IMPRETIABILIS (Lat.). Beyond price; invaluable.

IMPRIMATUR (Lat.). A license or allowance to one to print.

At one time, before a book could be printed in England, it was requisite that a permission should be obtained; that permission was called an imprimatur. In some countries where the press is liable to censorship, an imprimatur is required.

IMPRIMERE. To impress or press; to imprint or print.

IMPRIMERY. In some of the ancient English statutes this word is used to signify a printing office; the art of printing; a print or impression.

IMPRIMIS (Lat.). In the first place. It is commonly used to denote the first clause in an instrument, especially in wills, item being used to denote the subsequent clauses. This is also its classical and literal meaning. Ainsworth, Dict. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54. Imprimitus and imprimum also occur. Du Cange; Prec. Ch. 430; Cases temp. Talb. 110; 6 Madd. 31; Magna Cart. 9 Hen. III.; 2 Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. The use of imprimis does not import a precedence of the bequest to which it is prefixed; Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 325; 1 Rop. Leg. 426.

IMPRISON. To confine; to put in prison; to detain in custody.

IMPRISONMENT. The restraint of a man's liberty.

The restraint of a person contrary to his will. Co. 2d Inst. 589; U. S. v. Benner, Baldw. 239, Fed. Cas. No. 14,568; Johnson v. Tompkins, Baldw. 600, Fed. Cas. No. 7,416.

It may be in a place made use of for purposes of imprisonment generally, or in one used only on the particular occasion, or by words and an array of force, without bolts or bars, in any locality whatever; Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491; Smith v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 43; Webb, Poll. Torts 259; 7 Q. B. 742; but it cannot be applied to the detention of a youth in a reform school; State v. Brown, 50 Minn. 353, 52 N. W. 935, 16 L. R. A. 691, 36 Am. St. Rep. 651. A forcible detention in the street, or the touching of a person by a peace-officer by way of arrest, are also imprisonments; Bac. Abr. Trespass (D 3); Lawson v. Buzines, 3 Harr. (Del.) 416. See Smith v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 43; Coman v. Storm, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 84. It is not necessary to touch the person, but it is enough if he is within the power of the officer and submits; Mowry v. Chase, 100 Mass. 79. Forcibly taking a person in an omnibus across a city; Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498, 52 N. W. 1000; or where a person is constantly guarded by detectives so that he is at no time free to come and go as he pleases, but his movements are at all times subject to the control and direction of those who have him in charge; Fotheringham v. Express Co., 36 Fed. 252, 1 L. R. A. 474; constitute imprisonment. It has been decided that lifting up a person in his chair and carrying him out of the room in which he was sitting with others, and excluding him from the room, was not an imprisonment; 1 Chitty, Pr. 48; and the merely giving charge of a person to a peace-officer, not followed by any actual apprehension of the person, does not amount to an imprisonment, though the party, to avoid it, next day attend at a police court; 1 C. & P. 153; and if, in consequence of a message from a sheriff's officer holding a writ, the defendant execute and send him a bail bond, such submission to the process will not constitute an arrest; 6 B. & C. 528; D. & R. 233. No other warrant is necessary for the detention of a prisoner than a certified copy of the judgment against him; In re Brown, 32 Cal. 48; or of the precept on which the arrest was made; Atherton v. Gilmore, 9 N. H. 185.

Where there is a constitutional provision that there shall be no imprisonment for debt except in cases of fraud, fraud must be found by a jury and judgment entered in conformity therewith, in order to warrant such imprisonment; Ledford v. Emerson, 143 N. C. 527, 55 S. E. 969, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362. An act authorizing imprisonment of one who obtains food and lodging without paying therefor is not an unconstitutional imprisonment for debt; In re Milecke, 52 Wash. 312, 100 Pac. 743, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 259, 132 Am. St. Rep. 968; Ex parte King, 102 Ala. 182, 15 South. 524; State v. Yardley, 95 Tenn. 546, 32 S. W. 481, 34 L. R. A. 656; nor for contempt for wilful refusal to obey an order to pay suit money and temporary alimony pending a divorce suit; Ex parte Davis, 101 Tex. 607, 111 S. W. 394, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1140; Daly v. Daly, 80 Conn. 609, 69 Atl. 1021; State v. Cook, 66 Ohio St. 566, 64 N. E. 567, 58 L. R. A. 625; Bronk v. State, 43 Fla. 461, 31 South. 248, 99 Am. St. Rep. 119. But contra of a statute providing for the imprisonment of one who after receiving advances commits a breach of contract for farm labor; Ex parte Hollman, 79 S. C. 9, 60 S. E. 19, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105. See PEONAGE.

See FALSE IMPRISONMENT; ARREST; INFAMY; FELONY; ACCUMULATIVE SENTENCES; POOR DEBTORS.

IMPRISTI. Followers; partisans; adherents; supporters. Those who take the part of or side with another in attack or defence.

IMPROPER. Not suitable; unfit; not suited to the character, time, and place. Chadbourne v. Newcastle, 48 N. H. 196.

IMPROPER FEUD. "Under the title of improper or derivative feuds were comprised all such as do not fall within the other descriptions; such, for instance, as were originally bartered and sold to the feudatory for a price; such as were held upon base or less honorable service, or upon a rent, in lieu of military services; such as were in themselves, alienable, without mutual license; and such as might descend indifferently either to males or females. But, where a difference was not expressed in the creation, such new created feuds did in all respects follow the nature of an original, genuine, and proper feud." 1 Bla. Com. 58. See FEUDUM.

IMPROPER NAVIGATION. The navigation of a ship without due care and skill. It includes anything wrongly done with a ship, or any part of it, in the course of the voyage. L. R. 6 C. P. 563.

IMPROPRIATION. The act of employing the revenues of a church living to one's own use: it is also a parsonage or ecclesiastical living in the hands of a layman, or which descends by inheritance. Techn. Dict.

The transfer to a layman of a benefice to which the cure of souls is annexed with an obligation to provide with a performance of the spiritual duties attached to the benefice is said to be nearly the same as an appropriation. Holth. Before the Reformation the terms were used without a very clear distinction, and appropriations by spiritual persons and incorporation were termed impropriation. Later the use of the latter word was restricted by Spelman and others to appropriation by laymen. Moz. & W.

The distinction is thus clearly stated: The practice of impropriation differs from the somewhat similar but more ancient usage of appropriation, inasmuch as the latter supposes the revenues of the appropriated benefice to be transferred to ecclesiastical or quasi-ecclesiastical persons or bodies, as to a certain dignitary in a convent, a college, a hospital; while impropriation applies that the temporalities of the benefice are enjoyed by a layman; the name, according to Spelman, being given in consequence of their thus being improperly applied, diverted from their legitimate use. The practice of impropriation, and still more that of appropriation, as in the case of monasteries, etc., and other religious houses, prevailed extensively in England before the Reformation; and on the suppression of the monasteries, all such rights were (by 27 Henry VIII. c. 28, and 31 Henry VIII. c. 13) vested in the crown, and were by the crown freely transferred to laymen, to whose heirs have thus descended, not only the right to the tithes, but also in many cases the entire property of rectories. The spiritual duties of such rectories are discharged by a clergyman, who is called a vicar, and who receives a certain portion of the emoluments of the living, generally consisting of a part of the glebe-land of the parsonage, together with what are called the "small tithes" of the parish. Int. Cyc.

The word impropriation is said to be derived from in proprietatem, because the living is held as a lay property. Phill. Ecc. L. 275.

An impropriate rector was the term applied to a lay rector as opposed to a spiritual rector; and tithes in the hands of a lay owner were called impropriate tithes, as those in the hands of a spiritual owner were termed appropriate tithes.

See 1 Bla. Com. 384; 2 Steph. Com. 678; Brown, Dict.; APPROPRIATION.

IMPROVE. To cultivate; to reclaim. Clark v. Phelps, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 190.

"Improved" land may mean simply land "occupied;" it is not a precise technical word; Bond v. Fay, 8 Allen (Mass.) 213; it includes ground appropriated for a railroad; Road in Lancaster City, 68 Pa. 396.

Land on which there are three dwelling-houses, besides suitable farm buildings, which has been farmed for the last twenty years, and from which, in the last eighteen years, there has been received $12,000 in rents, besides a share of the landlord in the growing crops, is not "unimproved real estate," as that phrase is used in a will; Murphy v. Taylor, 173 Pa. 320, 33 Atl. 1041; and the fact that the property was bought by the testator for the purpose of being cut into city lots, and sold as such, does not render it "unimproved" land; id.

IMPROVEMENT. An amelioration in the condition of real or personal property effected by the expenditure of labor or money for the purpose of rendering it useful for other purposes than those for which it was originally used, or more useful for the same purposes. It includes repairs or addition to buildings, and the erection of fences, barns, etc.; Appeal of Schenley, 70 Pa. 98; French v. New York, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 220; Wimberly v. Mayberry, 94 Ala. 240, 10 South. 157, 14 L. R. A. 305; Fay v. Fay, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 93; Hartford & N. Y. Steamboat Co. v. City, 78 N. Y. 1; Nicoll v. Burke, id. 581; or a windmill; Phelps & Bigelow Windmill Co. v. Baker, 49 Kan. 434, 30 Pac. 472.

As between the rightful owner of lands and an occupant who in good faith has put on improvements, the land with its improvements belongs to the rightful owner of the land, without compensation for the increased value at common law; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. Ed. 547; McCoy v. Grandy, 3 Ohio St. 463; Frear v. Hardenbergh, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 272, 4 Am. Dec. 356; Albee v. May, 2 Paine 74, Fed. Cas. No. 134; Stewart v. Matheny, 66 Miss. 21, 5 South. 387, 14 Am. St. Rep. 538; Mull v. Graham, 7 Ind. App. 561, 35 N. E. 134; though the rule may be otherwise in equity; 3 Atk. 134; Humphreys v. Holtsinger, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 228; Nelson v. Allen, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 360; Murray v. Gouverneur, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 441, 1 Am. Dec. 177; Searl v. School Dist. No. 2, 133 U. S. 553, 10 Sup. Ct. 374, 33 L. Ed. 740; see Case v. Kelly, 133 U. S. 21, 10 Sup. Ct. 216, 33 L. Ed. 513; and by statute in some of the states; Baggot v. Fleming, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 451; Withington v. Corey, 2 N. H. 115; Strong v. Hunt, 20 Vt. 614; Lamar v. Minter, 13 Ala. 31; Lombard v. Ruggles, 9 Greenl. (Me.) 62; Davis' Lessee v. Powell, 13 Ohio 308; Bryant v. Hambrick, 9 Ga. 133; Roberts' Heirs v. Long, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 195; Jewell v. Truhn, 38 Minn. 433, 38 N. W. 106; Van Bibber v. Williamson, 37 Fed. 756; and their value may be offset to an action for mesne profits at common law; Hylton v. Brown, 2 Wash. C. C. 165, Fed. Cas. No. 6,983; Jackson v. Loomis, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 168, 15 Am. Dec. 347; Dowd v. Faucett, 15 N. C. 95; Bright v. Boyd, 1 Sto. 478, Fed. Cas. No. 1,875. A life tenant is not entitled to payment for improvements made by him without the consent of the remaindermen; Appeal of Datesman, 127 Pa. 348, 17 Atl. 1086, 1100; Van Bibber v. Williamson, 37 Fed. 756; Smalley v. Isaacson, 40 Minn. 450, 42 N. W. 352. In determining the right to recover for improvements placed on land, ordinary repairs necessary for the enjoyment of the object sold cannot be classed as improvements; McKenzie v. Bacon, 41 La. Ann. 6, 5 South. 640.

As to dower in improvements, see DOWER, and as to improvement in Patent Law, see PATENT.

As to improvements of streets and assessments therefor, see ASSESSMENT.

IMPROVIDENCE. Such want of care and foresight in the management of property as would be likely to render it less valuable and impair the interests of those who may be or become entitled to it. Such is the construction of the word in a statute excluding one found incompetent by reason of improvidence, to perform the duties of an administrator; Coope v. Lowerre, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 45. See also Emerson v. Bowers, 14 N. Y. 449; Freeman v. Kellogg, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 218.

IMPUBES (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who is more than seven years old, or out of infancy, and who has not attained the age of puberty; that is, if a boy, till he has attained his full age of fourteen years, and if a girl, her full age of twelve years. Domat, Liv. Prél. t. 2, s. 2, n. 8.

IMPUNITY. Freedom or safety from punishment. The phrase impunitive damages was said to be unintelligible; Dillon v. Rogers, 36 Tex. 153.

IMPUTATIO. In Civil Law. Legal liability.

IMPUTATION OF PAYMENT. In Civil Law. The application of a payment made by a debtor to his creditor.

The rules covering this subject are thus stated, substantially, in Howe, Studies in the Civil Law, 156:

1. The debtor may apply his payment as he pleases, with the exception that in case of a debt carrying interest it must be first applied to discharging the interest.

2. If the debtor makes no application, the creditor may apply the funds by informing the debtor at the time of payment.

3. The law imputes in the neglect of the parties to do so, and it will be made by the law in favor of the debtor. It directs that imputation which would have been best for the debtor at the time of payment. Hence it applies the funds to obligations most burdensome to the debtor: e. g. to a debt which is not disputed, rather than to one that is; to a debt that is due rather than to one that is not; to one on which the debtor may be arrested, rather than to one on which he cannot; to a debt for which the debtor has given sureties, rather than to one which he owes singly; to a debt for which the debtor is principal obligor, rather than one of which he is merely surety; to a mortgage rather than to an unsecured debt, and to a debt which would render the debtor insolvent if unpaid, rather than to any less important one.

4. Of debts of equal grade, if there be no imputation by the parties, the application will be to that of the longest standing.

5. To debts of the same date, and in other respects equal, the application will be pro rata.

6. As to debts bearing interest, the imputation is to interest before principal.

When the creditor is to pay himself out of a fund realized,—for example, from the sale of property pledged,—he should apply the money to the debt secured by the pledge, rather than to some other; to interest before principal; to the debt of the highest rank, rather than to those of lower rank; and if there are several of equal rank then pro rata.

Some of these rules have been followed in England and America, some decisions following the exact language of the Roman law. See 1 Sto. Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 459; but see APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

In Louisiana the preceding civil law rules are in force. The statutory enactment, Civ. Code, art. 2159, is a translation of the Code Napoléon, art. 1253–1256, slightly altered. See Pothier, Obl. n. 528, by Evans, and notes. Payment is imputed first to the discharge of interest; Hynson v. Maddens, 1 Mart. N. S. (La.) 571; Estebene v. Estebene, 5 La. Ann. 738. But if the interest was not binding, being usurious, the payment must go to the principal; Hynes v. Cobb, 2 La. Ann. 363; Compton's Ex'rs v. Compton, 5 La. Ann. 616. The law applies a payment to the most burdensome debt; Hanse & Hepp v. Ins. Co., 10 La. 1, 29 Am. Dec. 456; Pargoud v. Griffings' Adm'r, 10 La. 357; Louisiana State Bank v. Barrow, 2 La. Ann. 405; McElrath v. Dupuy, 2 La. Ann. 520. A creditor's receipt is an irrevocable imputation, except in cases of surprise or fraud; Bloodworth v. Jacobs, 2 La. Ann. 24; Adams v. Bank, 3 La. Ann. 351. See APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE. See NEGLIGENCE.

IN. A preposition which is used in real estate law to designate title, seisin, or possession, or when one is said to be "in by lease of his lessor." It may be as an abbreviation of invested or intitled, or of in possession.

IN ACTION. A thing is said to be in action when it is not in possession, and for its recovery, the possessor unwilling, an action is necessary. 2 Bla. Com. 396. See CHOSE IN ACTION.

IN ADVERSUM. Where a decree is obtained against one who resists, it is termed "a decree not by consent but in adversum." Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Sto. C. C. 318, Fed. Cas. No. 7,267.

IN ÆQUA MANU. In equal hand. Fleta, l. 3, c. 14, § 2.

IN ÆQUALI JURE (Lat.). In equal right. See MAXIMS.

IN ÆQUALI MANU. In equal hand; held indifferently between two parties.

Where an instrument was deposited by the parties to it, in the hands of a third person, to hold it under certain conditions or stipulations it was said to be held in æquali manu. Reg. Orig. 28.

IN ALIENO SOLO. On another's land. 2 Steph. Com. 20.

IN ALIO LOCO. See CEPIT IN ALIO LOCO.

IN AMBIGUO. In doubt.

IN APERTA LUCE. In open daylight; in the day-time. 9 Co. 65 b.

IN APICIBUS JURIS. Among the subtleties or extreme doctrines of the law. 1 Kames, Eq. 190.

IN ARBITRIUM JUDICIS. At the pleasure of the judge.

IN ARCTA ET SALVA CUSTODIA. In close and safe custody. 3 Bla. Com. 415.

IN ARTICULO. In a moment; immediately. C. 1, 34, 2.

IN ARTICULO MORTIS. At the point of death.

IN AUTRE, or AUTER, DROIT (L. Fr.). In another's right. As representing another. An executor, administrator, or trustee sues in autre droit. See ESTATE PUR AUTRE VIE.

IN BANCO. In banc (q. v.).

IN BLANK. Without restriction. Applied to indorsements on promissory notes where no indorsee is named. See INDORSEMENT.

IN BONIS. Among the goods, or property; in actual possession. Inst. 4, 2, 2. In bonis defuncti, among the goods of the deceased.

IN CAMERA. A case is said to be heard in camera when the doors of the court are closed and only persons concerned in the case are admitted. This is done when the facts are such as to make a private hearing expedient, as in some divorce cases. The term belongs rather to the English practice in which the power to grant private hearings in certain cases is established, though there has been a difference of opinion as to its exact limitations. The term is not much used in the United States. See OPEN COURT.

IN CAPITA (Lat.). To or by the heads or polls. Thus, where persons succeed to estates in capita, they take each an equal share; so, where a challenge to a jury is in capita, it is to the polls, or to the jurors individually, as opposed to a challenge to the array. 3 Bla.

Com. 361. Per capita is more commonly used in the former instance.

IN CAPITE (Lat.). In chief. A tenant in capite was one who held directly of the crown, 2 Bla. Com. 60, whether by knight's service or socage. Chal. R. P. 5. But tenure in capite was of two kinds, general and special; the first from the king (caput regni), the second from a lord (caput feudi). A holding of an honor in the king's lands, but not immediately of him, was yet a holding in capite; Kitch. 127; Dy. 44; Fitzh. N. B. 5. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

IN CASU PROVISO. In a (or the) case provided. In tali casu editum et provisum, in such case made and provided. Touch. Pl. 164, 165.

IN CHIEF. Principal; primary; directly obtained. A term applied to the evidence obtained from a witness upon his examination in court by the party producing him, in relation to the matter in issue at the trial. The examination so conducted for this purpose.

Evidence or examination in chief is to be distinguished from evidence given on cross-examination and from evidence given upon the voir dire.

Evidence in chief should be confined to such matters as the pleadings and the opening warrant; and a departure from this rule will be sometimes highly inconvenient, if not fatal. Suppose, for example, that two assaults have been committed, one in January and the other in February, and the plaintiff prove his cause of action to have been the assault in January; he cannot abandon that, and afterwards prove another committed in February, unless the pleadings and openings extend to both; 1 Campb. 473. See, also, 6 C. & P. 73; 1 Mood. & R. 282.

This matter, however, is one of practice; and a great variety of rules exist in the different states of the United States, the leading object, however, being in all cases the same,—to prevent the plaintiff from introducing in evidence a different case from the one which he had prepared the defendant to expect from the pleadings.

IN COMMENDAM. See COMMENDAM.

IN COMMUNI. In common. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 4, § 2.

IN CONSIDERATIONE EJUS. In his sight or view. 12 Mod. 95.

IN CONSIDERATIONE INDE. In consideration thereof. 3 Salk. 64, pl. 5.

IN CONSIDERATIONE LEGIS. In consideration or contemplation of law; in abeyance. Dyer 102 b.

IN CONSIDERATIONE PRÆMISSORUM. In consideration of the premises. 1 Strange 535.

IN CONSIMILI CASU. See CONSIMILI CASU.

IN CONTINENTI. Immediately; without any interval or intermission. Dig. 44, 5, 1. Sometimes written in one word, "incontinenti."

IN CONTUMACIAM. See EXTRADITION.

IN CORPORE. In body or substance; in a material thing or object.

IN CRASTINO. On the morrow. In crastino Animarum, on the morrow of All Souls. 1 Bla. Com. 342.

IN CUJUS REI TESTIMONIUM. In testimony whereof; q. v.

IN CUSTODIA LEGIS (Lat.). In the custody of the law. In general, when things are in custodia legis, they cannot be distrained, nor otherwise interfered with by a private person, or by another officer acting under authority of a different court or jurisdiction; Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 400, 9 L. Ed. 470; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. (U. S.) 583, 15 L. Ed. 1028, and cases cited; Brady v. Johnson, 75 Md. 445, 26 Atl. 49, 20 L. R. A. 737. See CUSTODIA LEGIS.

IN DELICTO. In fault. See IN PARI DELICTO.

IN DIEM. For a day; for the space of a day. Calv. Lex.

IN DOMINICO. In demesne. In dominico suo ut de feodo, in his demesne as of fee.

IN DORSO. On the back, from which come indorse, indorsement. 2 Bla. Com. 468. In dorso recordi, on the back of the record. 5 Co. 45.

IN DUBIO. In doubt; either in a condition of uncertainty, or in a doubtful case.

IN DUPLO. In double. Damna in duplo, double damages. Fleta, 4. 10. 1.

IN EADEM CAUSA. In the same state or condition. Calv. Lex.

IN EMULATIONEM VICINI. In hatred or envy of a neighbor. Where an act is done or action brought, solely to hurt or distress another, it is said to be in emulationem vicini. 1 Kames, Eq. 56.

IN EQUITY. In a court of chancery in contra-distinction to a court of law; within the contemplation or purview of equity jurisprudence; according to the doctrine of equity.

IN ESSE (Lat.). In being. In existence. An event which may happen is in posse; when it has happened, it is in esse. The term is often used of liens or estates. A child in its mother's womb is, for some purposes, regarded as in esse; Hone v. Van Schaick, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 488.

IN EST DE JURE (Lat.). It is implied of right or by law.

IN EVIDENCE. The proofs in a cause which have been offered and admitted are said to be in evidence.

IN EXCAMBIA. In exchange. The technical and formal words in an old deed of exchange.

IN EXECUTION AND PURSUANCE OF. Words used to express the fact that the instrument is intended to carry into effect some other instrument, as in case of a deed in execution of a power. They are said to be synonymous with "to effect the object of;" U. S. v. Nunnemacher, 7 Biss. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 15,903.

IN EXITU. In issue. De materia in exitu, of the matter in issue. 12 Mod. 372.

IN EXTENSO. Fully; at length; a copy of a document made verbatim.

IN EXTREMIS (Lat.). At the very end. In the last moments; on the point of death.

IN FACIE CURIÆ. In the face of the court. Dyer 28.

IN FACIE ECCLESIÆ (Lat.). In the face or presence of the church. A marriage is said to be made in facie ecclesiæ when made in a consecrated church or chapel, or by a clerk in orders elsewhere; and one of these two things is necessary to a marriage in England in order to the wife's having dower, unless there be a dispensation or license; 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 404. But see 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 85; 1 Vict. c. 22; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 72. It was anciently the practice to marry at the church door, and there make a verbal assignment of dower. These verbal assignments, to prevent fraud, were necessarily held valid only when made in facie et ad ostium ecclesiæ. See 2 Bla. Com. 103; Taylor, Gloss.

IN FACIENDO (Lat.). In doing. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1308.

IN FACT. Words used in pleading to introduce an amount of fact,—as "the said plaintiff (or defendant) further in fact saith,"—indicating that what follows is a statement of acts of parties as distinguished from a legal conclusion or intendment. The latter in equity pleading, when it may frequently be proper, after a statement of the facts on which the conclusion rests, begins,—"and the defendant is advised that, etc." When pleadings were in Latin the words in facto were used, thus in facto dicit, he, in fact, says. See 1 Salk. 22 Pl. 1.

IN FAVOREM LIBERTATIS (Lat.). In favor of liberty.

IN FAVOREM VITÆ (Lat.). In favor of life.

IN FEODO. In fee. Bract. f. 207; Fleta, l. 2, c. 64, § 15. Seisitus in feodo, seised in fee. Id. 8. 7. 1.

IN FIERI (Lat.). In process of completion. A thing is said to rest in fieri when it is not yet complete: e. g. the records of a court were anciently held to be in fieri, or incomplete, till they were recorded on parchment, but now till the giving of judgment, after which they can be amended only during the same term. 2 B. & Ad. 791; 3 Bla. Com. 407. It is also used of contracts.

IN FINE (Lat. at the end). A term used with a citation to denote that it is at the end of the section, chapter, book, law, or paragraph.

IN FORMA PAUPERIS (Lat.). In the character or form of a poor man.

When a person is so poor that he cannot bear the charges of suing at law or in equity, upon making oath that he is not worth five pounds, and bringing a certificate from a counsellor at law that he believes him to have a just cause, he is permitted to sue in forma pauperis, in the manner of a pauper; that is, he is allowed to have original writs and subpœnas gratis, and counsel assigned him without fee; 3 Bla. Com. 400. See Williams v. Wilkins, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 65; Brown v. Story, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 588; Bolton v. Gardner, 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 273; Richardson v. Richardson, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 58; 2 Moll. 475. This applies (Act of July 20, 1892) to the circuit court, but not to an appeal to the circuit court of appeals; Taylor v. Express Co., 164 Fed. 616, 90 C. C. A. 526; nor to the supreme court; Bradford v. R. Co., 195 U. S. 243, 25 Sup. Ct. 55, 49 L. Ed. 178.

See PAUPER.

IN FORO. In the forum (q. v.); before the tribunal or court.

IN FORO CONSCIENTIÆ (Lat.). Before the tribunal of conscience; conscientiously. The term is applied to moral obligations as distinct from the obligations which the law enforces. In the sale of property, for example, the concealment of facts by the vendee which may enhance the price is wrong in foro conscientiæ, but there is no legal obligation on the part of the vendee to disclose them, and the contract will be good if not vitiated by fraud; Pothier, Vent. part 2, c. 2, n. 233; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 185, note c.

IN FORO CONTENTIOSO. In the tribunal or forum of litigation.

IN FORO ECCLESIASTICO. In an ecclesiastical forum, tribunal, or court. Fleta, l. 2, c. 57, § 14. Early in the reign of Henry III., the Episcopal constitutions were published, forbidding all ecclesiastics to appear as advocates in foro sæculari, nor did they long continue to act as judges there, not caring to take the oath of office which was found necessary. 1 Bla. Com. 20.

IN FORO SÆCULARI. In a secular court. See last title; 1 Bla. Com. 20; Fleta 2. 57. 14.

IN FRAUDEM CREDITORUM (Lat.). In fraud of creditors or with an intent to defraud them. Inst. 1. 6. 3.

IN FRAUDEM LEGIS (Lat.). In fraud of the law; contrary to law. Taylor, Gloss. Using process of law for a fraudulent purpose.

If a person gets an affidavit of service of declaration in ejectment, and thereupon gets judgment and turns the tenant out, when he has no manner of title in a house, he is liable as a felon, for he used the process of law in fraudem legis; 1 Ld. Raym. 276; Sid. 254.

An act done in fraudem legis cannot give a right of action in the courts of the country whose laws are evaded; Mumford v. Hallett, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 433.

IN FULL. Complete, or without abbreviation, e. g. a copy of a paper. Of the entire amount due, as used in a receipt for money.

IN FULL LIFE. Neither physically nor civilly dead. The term life alone has also been taken in the same sense, as including natural and civil life: e. g. a lease made to a person during life is determined by a civil death, but if during natural life it would be otherwise. 2 Co. 48. It is a translation of the French phrase en plein vie. Law Fr. & L. Lat. Dict.

IN FUTURO. At a future time. The alternative expressions are in præsenti and in esse. 2 Bla. Com. 166, 175.

IN GENERALI PASSAGIO (L. Lat.). In the general passage; passagium being a journey, or, more properly, a voyage, and especially when used alone or with the adjectives magnum, generale, etc.,—the journey to Jerusalem of a crusader, especially of a king. 36 Hen. III.; 3 Prynne, Collect. 767; Du Cange.

In generali passagio was an excuse for non-appearance in a suit, which put off the hearing sine die; but in simplici peregrinatione or passagio—i. e. being absent on a private pilgrimage to the Holy Land—put off the hearing for a shorter time. Bracton 338.

IN GENERE (Lat.). In kind; of the same kind. Things which when bailed may be restored in genere, as distinguished from those which must be returned in specie, or specifically, are called fungibles. Kaufman's Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 148, note.

Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 619, defines genus as what the philosophers call species, viz.: a kind. See Dig. 12. 1. 2. 1. See LOAN FOR CONSUMPTION.

IN GREMIO LEGIS (Lat.). In the bosom of the law. This is a figurative expression, by which is meant that the subject is under the protection of the law: as, where the title to land is in abeyance. See GREMIUM; IN NUBIBUS; ABEYANCE.

IN GROSS. At large; not appurtenant or appendant, but annexed to a man's person: e. g. common granted to a man and his heirs by deed is common in gross; or common in gross may be claimed by prescriptive right. 2 Bla. Com. 34. See EASEMENT.

IN HAC PARTE. In this behalf; on this part or side.

IN HOC. In this.

IN IISDEM TERMINIS, IN IISDEM VERBIS. In the same terms. 9 East 487.

IN INDIVIDUO. In the distinct individual, specific, or identical form. Sto. Bailm. § 97.

IN INFINITUM. Indefinitely; imports to infinity.

IN INITIALIBUS (Lat.). In Scotch Law. In the preliminaries. Before a witness is examined as to the cause in which he is to testify, he must deny bearing malice or ill-will, being instructed what to say, or having been bribed, and these matters are called initialia testimonii, and the examination on them is said to be in initialibus: it is similar to our voir dire. Bell, Dict. Initialia Testimonii; Erskine, Inst. p. 451; Halkerston, Tech. Terms.

IN INITIO. At the beginning; in the beginning, as in initio legis, at the outset of the suit. Bract. f. 400.

IN INTEGRUM (Lat.). The original condition. See RESTITUTIO IN INTEGRUM. Vicat, Voc. Jur. integer.

IN INVITUM (Lat.). Unwillingly. Taylor, Gloss. Against an unwilling party (or one who has not given his consent); by operation of law. Wharton, Dict.

IN IPSIS FAUCIBUS. In the very throat. A vessel just entering a port is said to be in ipsis faucibus portæ.

IN ITINERE (Lat.). On a journey; on the way. Justices in itinere were justices in eyre, who went on circuit through the kingdom for the purpose of hearing causes. 3 Bla. Com. 351; Spelman, Gloss. In itinere is used in the law of lien, and is there equivalent to in transitu; that is, not yet delivered to vendee.

IN JUDGMENT. In a court of justice.

A case is said to be in judgment when it has proceeded so far as that the successful party is entitled to judgment.

In a judgment seat; Lord Hale was characterized "one of the greatest and best men who ever sat in judgment." 1 East 306.

IN JUDICIO (Lat.). In or by a judicial proceeding; in court. In judicio non creditur nisi juratis, in judicial proceedings no one is believed unless on oath. Cro. Car. 64. See Bracton, fol. 98 b, 106, 287 b.

In Civil Law. The proceedings before a prætor, from the bringing the action till issue joined, were said to be in jure; but after issue joined, when the cause came before the judex, the proceedings were said to be in judicio. See JUDEX.

IN JURE (Lat. in law). In Civil Law. A phrase which denotes the proceedings in a cause before the prætor, up to the time when it is laid before a judex; that is, till issue joined (litis contestatio); also, the proceedings in causes tried throughout by the prætor (cognitiones extraordinariæ). Vicat, Voc. Jur. Jus.

In English Law. In law; rightfully; in right; thus, in jure, non remota causa, sed proxima, spectatur.

IN JURE ALTERIUS. In another's right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JURE PROPRIO. In one's right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JUS VOCARE. To call, cite, or summon to court. Inst. 4, 16, 3; Calv. Lex. In jus vocando, summoning to court. 3 Bla. Com. 279.

IN KIND. Of the same class, description, or kind of property, as a deposit, mandate, or loan which is said to be returnable in kind where the terms and character of the transaction do not require the return of the identical money, security, or thing, but only its equivalent in amount or kind. See IN GENERE.

IN LAW. In contemplation of law; implied by law; subsisting by force of law. See IN FACT.

IN LECTO MORTALI. On a deathbed. Fleta, 5, 28, 12.

IN LIBERAM ELEMOSINAM. In free alms. Land given for a charitable motive was said to be so given. See FRANKALMOIN.

IN LIMINE (Lat.). In or at the beginning. This phrase is frequently used: as, the courts are anxious to check crimes in limine.

IN LITEM (Lat.). For a suit; to the suit. Greenl. Ev. § 348.

IN LOCO. In place; in lieu; instead; in the place or stead. Townsh. Pl. 38.

IN LOCO PARENTIS (Lat.). In the place of a parent: as, the master stands towards his apprentice in loco parentis. See APPRENTICESHIP; GUARDIAN.

IN MAJOREM CAUTELAM. For greater security. 1 Stra. 105.

IN MALAM PARTEM. In a bad sense; so as to wear an evil appearance.

IN MEDIAS RES (Lat.). In the middle of things; into the heart of the subject, without preface or introduction.

IN MEDIO. Intermediate.

IN MERCY. To be in mercy is to be at the discretion of the king, lord, or judge in punishing any offence not directly censured by the law. Thus, to be in the grievous mercy of the king is to be in hazard of a great penalty; 11 Hen. VI. c. 6. So, where the plaintiff failed in his suit, he and his pledges were in the mercy of the lord, pro falso clamore suo. This is retained nominally on the record; 3 Bla. Com. 376. So the defendant is in mercy if he fail in his defence; id. 398. See MERCY; Cunningham.

IN MISERICORDIA (Lat. in mercy). The entry on the record where a party was in mercy was, Ideo in misericordia, etc. The phrase was used because the punishment in such cases ought to be moderate. See Magna Cart. c. 14; Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 5, c. 6. Sometimes misericordia means the being quit of all amercements (q. v.).

IN MITIORI SENSU (Lat. in a milder acceptation).

A phrase denoting a rule of construction formerly adopted in slander suits, the object of which was to construe phrases, if possible, so that they would not support an action. Ingenuity was continually exercised to devise or discover a meaning which by some remote possibility the speaker might have intended; and some ludicrous examples of this ingenuity may be found. To say of a man who was making his livelihood by buying and selling merchandise, "He is a base, broken rascal; he has broken twice, and I'll make him break a third time," was gravely asserted not to be actionable,—"ne poet dar porter action, car poet estre intend de burstness de belly." Latch 114. And to call a man a thief was declared to be no slander for this reason: "perhaps the speaker might mean he had stolen a lady's heart."

The rule now is to construe words agreeably to the meaning usually attached to them. It was long, however, before this rule, rational as it is, and supported by every legal analogy, prevailed in actions for words, and before the favorite doctrine of construing words in their mildest sense, in direct opposition to the finding of the jury, was finally abandoned by the courts. "For some inscrutable reason," said Gibson, J., "the earlier English judges discouraged the action of slander by all sorts of evasions, such as the doctrine of mitiori sensu, and by requiring the slanderous charge to have been uttered with the technical precision of an indictment. But, as this discouragement of the remedy by process of law was found inversely to encourage the remedy by battery, it has been gradually falling into disrepute, inasmuch that the precedents in Croke's Reports are beginning to be considered apocryphal." Bash v. Sommer, 20 Pa. 162; Walton v. Singleton, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 451, 10 Am. Dec. 472; Wilson v. Hogg, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 217; Walker v. Winn, 8 Mass. 248; Hoyle v. Young, 1 Wash. (Va.) 152, 1 Am. Dec. 446; Heard, Lib. & Sl. § 162.

IN MODUM ASSISÆ. In the manner or form of an assize. Bract. fol. 183 b. In modum juratæ, in manner of a jury. Id. fol. 181 b.

IN MORA (Lat.). In delay; in default. In the civil law a borrower in mora is one who fails to return the thing borrowed at the proper time; Sto. Bailm. § 254. In Scotch law a creditor is in mora who has failed in respect to the diligence required in levying an attachment on the property of the debtor. Bell, Dict.

IN MORTUA MANU (Lat. in a dead hand). Property owned by religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were civiliter mortui. 1 Bla. Com. 479; Taylor, Gloss.

IN NOMINE DEI, AMEN. In the name of God, Amen. A phrase, anciently used in wills and many other instruments, the translation of which is often used in wills at the present day, but chiefly by ignorant draughtsmen or testators.

IN NOTIS. In the notes.

IN NUBIBUS (Lat.). In the clouds; in abeyance; in custody of law. In nubibus, in mare, in terra vel, in custodia legis: in the air, sea, or earth, or in the custody of the law. Taylor, Gloss. In case of abeyance, the inheritance is figuratively said to rest in nubibus, or in gremio legis: e. g. in case of a grant of life estate to A, and afterwards to heirs of Richard, Richard in this case, being alive, has no heirs until his death, and, consequently, the inheritance is considered as resting in nubibus, or in the clouds, till the death of A, when the contingent remainder either vests or is lost and the inheritance goes over. See 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 107, n.; 1 Co. 137; ABEYANCE.

IN NULLIUS BONIS. Among the goods or property of no person; belonging to no person, as treasure-trove and wreck were anciently considered.

IN NULLO EST ERRATUM (Lat.). A plea to errors assigned on proceedings in error, by which the defendant in error affirms there is no error in the record. As to the effect of such plea, see Whiting v. Cochran, 9 Mass. 532; 1 Burr. 410. It is a general rule that the plea in nullo est erratum confesses the fact assigned for error; Dane, Abr. Index; but not a matter assigned contrary to the record; Moody v. Vreeland, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 55; Bacon, Abr. Error (G).

IN ODIUM SPOLIATORIS (Lat.). In hatred of a despoiler. All things are presumed against a despoiler or wrongdoer: in odium spoliatoris omnia præsumuntur. See MAXIMS.

If a man wrongfully opened a bundle of papers, sealed and left in his hands, so that he may have altered them or abstracted some, all presumptions will be taken against him in settling an account depending on the papers; 1 Vern. 452; the same rule is applied if one withhold evidence bearing on the case; 18 Jur. 703; or an agreement with which he is charged; 9 Cl. & F. 775. See at large 1 Sm. L. Cas. 9th Am. ed. 638; Br. Leg. Max. 8th Am. ed. 938; SPOLIATION.

IN OMNIBUS. In all things; on all points. "A case parallel in omnibus;" 10 Mod. 104. A modern phrase to the same effect is "on all fours" (q. v.).

IN PACATO SOLO. In a country which is at peace.

IN PACE DEI ET REGIS. In the peace of God and the king. Fleta 1, c. 31, § 6. Formal words in old appeals of murder.

IN PAIS. This phrase, as applied to a legal transaction, primarily means that it has taken place without legal formalities or proceedings. Thus a widow was said to make a request in pais for her dower when she simply applied to the heir without issuing a writ; Co. Litt. 32 b. So conveyances are divided into those by matter of record and those by matter in pais. In some cases, however, "matters in pais" are opposed not only to "matters of record," but also to "matters in writing," i. e. deeds, as where estoppel by deed is distinguished from estoppel by matter in pais; id. 352 a; 4 Kent 260. See ESTOPPEL.

IN PAPER. In English Practice. A term used of a record until its final enrolment on the parchment record. 3 Bla. Com. 406; 10 Mod. 88; 2 Lilly, Abr. 322.

IN PARI CAUSA (Lat.). In an equal cause. It is a rule that when two persons have equal rights in relation to a particular thing, the party in possession is considered as having the better right: in pari causa possessor potior est. Dig. 50, 17, 128; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 952. See MAXIMS; PRESUMPTION.

IN PARI DELICTO (Lat.). In equal fault; equal in guilt. Neither courts of law nor of equity will interpose to grant relief to the parties, when an illegal agreement has been made and both parties stand in pari delicto. The law leaves them where it finds them, according to the maxim, in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis (or, possidentis). Setter v. Alvey, 15 Kan. 157. See MAXIMS; DELICTUM.

IN PARI MATERIA (Lat.). Upon the same matter or subject. Statutes in pari materia are to be construed together; Union Soc. v. Bank, 7 Conn. 456.

IN PATIENDO. In suffering, permitting, or allowing.

IN PECTORE JUDICIS. In the breast of the judge. Latch 180. A term applied to a judgment.

IN PEJOREM PARTEM. In the worst part; on the worst side. Latch 159.

IN PERPETUAM REI MEMORIAM (Lat.). For the perpetual memory or remembrance of a thing. Gilbert, For. Rom. 118.

IN PERPETUUM REI TESTIMONIUM. In perpetual testimony of a matter; for the purpose of declaring and settling a thing forever. 1 Bla. Com. 86.

IN PERSON. A party, plaintiff or defendant, who sues out a writ or other process, or appears to conduct his case in court himself, instead of through a solicitor or counsel, is said to act and appear in person. Any suitor but one suing in forma pauperis may do this.

IN PERSONAM (Lat.). A remedy where the proceedings are against the person, in contradistinction to those which are against specific things, or in rem (q. v.). See EQUITY.

IN PIOS USUS. For pious uses; for religious purposes. 2 Bla. Com. 505.

IN PLENO COMITATU. In full county court. 3 Bla. Com. 36.

IN PLENO LUMINE. In public; in common knowledge; in the light of day.

IN PLENO VITA. In full life. Yearb. P. 18 Hen. VI. 2.

IN POSSE (Lat.). In possibility; not in actual existence; used in contradistinction to in esse.

IN POTESTATE PARENTIS. In the power of a parent. Inst. 1, 8, pr.; id. 1, 9; 2 Bla. Com. 498.

IN PRÆMISSORUM FIDEM. In confirmation or attestation of the premises. A notarial phrase.

IN PRÆSENTI (Lat.). At the present time: used in opposition to in futuro. A marriage contracted per verba de præsenti is good: as, I take Paul to be my husband, is a good marriage; but words de futuro would not be sufficient, unless the ceremony was followed by consummation. Succession of Prevost, 4 La. Ann. 347; Hantz v. Sealy, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 405.

IN PRENDER (L. Fr.). In taking. Such incorporeal hereditaments as a party entitled to them was to take for himself were said to be in prender. Such was a right of common. 2 Steph. Com. 15.

IN PRIMIS. In the foremost place. A term used in argument. Usually written imprimis (q. v.).

IN PRINCIPIO (Lat.). At the beginning. This is frequently used in citations: as, Bacon, Abr. Legacies, in pr.

IN PROMPTU. In readiness; at hand. Usually written impromptu.

IN PROPRIA PERSONA (Lat.). In his own person; himself: as, the defendant appeared in propria persona; the plaintiff argued the cause in propria persona. Sometimes abbreviated on the printed court lists, P. P.

IN RE (Lat.). In the matter: as, in re A B, in the matter of A B. In the headings of legal reports these words are used more especially to designate proceedings in bankruptcy or insolvency, or the winding up of estates or companies.

IN REBUS (Lat.). In things, cases, or matters.

IN REM (Lat.). A technical term used to designate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to personal actions, which are said to be in personam.

Proceedings in rem include not only those instituted to obtain decrees or judgments against property as forfeited in the admiralty or the English exchequer, or as prize, but also suits against property to enforce a lien or privilege in the admiralty courts, and suits to obtain the sentence, judgment, or decree of other courts upon the personal status or relations of the party, such as marriage, divorce, bastardy, settlement, or the like. 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 625, 541; 2 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 14, 24.

Courts of admiralty enforce the performance of a contract, when its performance is secured by a maritime lien or privilege, by seizing into their custody the very subject of hypothecation. In these suits, generally, the parties are not personally bound, and the proceedings are confined to the thing in specie; Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law 98. See Bened. Ad. 270, 362; The Jerusalem, 2 Gall. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 7,293; 3 Term 269.

There are cases, however, where the remedy is either in personam or in rem. Seamen, for example, may proceed against the ship or freight for their wages, and this is the most expeditious mode; or they may proceed against the master or owners; 4 Burr. 1944; 2 Bro. Civ. & Adm. Law, 396. See, generally, 1 Phill. Ev. 254; 1 Stark. Ev. 228; Dane, Abr.; Bened. Adm. 503. No action in rem lies for damages incurred by loss of life; The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, 12 Sup. Ct. 949, 36 L. Ed. 727. A contract for launching a vessel carried some distance up the beach by a storm, is a maritime contract, for which the vessel is liable in rem; The Ella, 48 Fed. 569. See ADMIRALTY; BOTTOMRY; LIEN.

IN RENDER. A thing in a manor is said to lie in render when it must be rendered or given by the tenant, e. g. rent; to lie in prender, when it may be taken by the lord or his officer when it chance. West, Symbol. pt. 2, Fines, § 126.

IN RERUM NATURA (Lat.). In the nature (or order) of things; in existence. Not in rerum natura is a dilatory plea, importing that the plaintiff is a fictitious person.

In Civil Law. A broader term than in rebus humanis: e. g. before quickening, an infant is in rerum natura, but not in rebus humanis; after quickening, he is in rebus humanis as well as in rerum natura. Calvinus, Lex.

IN SCRINIO JUDICIS. In the writing-case of the judge; among the judge's papers. "That is a thing that rests in scrinio judicis, and does not appear in the body of the decree." Hardr. 51.

IN SEPARALI. In several; in severalty. Fleta 2, c. 54, 20.

IN SIMILI MATERIA. Dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter.

IN SIMPLICI PEREGRINATIONE. In simple pilgrimage. Bract. fol. 338. A phrase in the old law of essoins. See IN GENERALI PASSAGIO.

IN SOLIDUM, IN SOLIDO (Lat.). In Civil Law. For the whole; as a whole. An obligation or contract is said to be in solido or in solidum when each is liable for the whole, but so that a payment by one is payment for all: i. e. it is a joint and several contract. 1 W. Bla. 388.

Possession is said to be in solidum when it is exclusive. "Duo in solidum precario habere non magis possunt quam duo in solidum vi possidere aut clam; nam neque justæ neque injustæ possessiones duæ concurrere possunt." Savigny, lib. 3, § 11. The phrase is commonly used in Louisiana.

IN SOLO. On the soil or ground. In solo alieno, on another's ground. In solo proprio, on one's ground. 2 Steph. Com. 20.

IN SPECIE (Lat.). In the same form: e. g. a ship is said to no longer exist in specie when she no longer exists as a ship, but as a mere congeries of planks. 8 B. & C. 561; Arnould, Ins. 1012. To decree a thing in specie is to decree the performance of that thing specifically.

IN STATU QUO (Lat.). In the same situation as, in the same condition as (before).

IN STIRPES. In the law of descent, according to roots or stocks; by representation as distinguished from succession per capita. More commonly written per stirpes (q. v.).

IN TANTUM. In so much; so much; so far; so greatly. Reg. Orig. 97, 106.

IN TERMINIS TERMINANTIBUS. In terms of determination; exactly in point. 11 Co. 40 b. In express or determinate terms. 1 Leon. 93.

IN TERROREM (Lat.). By way of threat, terror, or warning. For example, when a legacy is given to a person upon condition not to dispute the validity or the dispositions in wills and testaments, the conditions are not, in general, obligatory, but only in terrorem: if, therefore, there exist probabilis causa litigandi, the nonobservance of the conditions will not be a forfeiture. 1 Hill, Abr. 253; 3 P. Wms. 344; 1 Atk. 404. But when the acquiescence of the legatee appears to be a material ingredient in the gift, the bequest is only so long as the legatee shall refrain from disturbing the will; 2 P. Wms. 52; 2 Ventr. 352. See DURESS.

IN TERROREM POPULI (Lat. to the terror of the people). A technical phrase necessary in indictments for riots. 4 C. & P. 373.

Lord Holt has given a distinction between those indictments in which the words in terrorem populi are essential, and those wherein they may be omitted. He says that, in indictments for that species of riots which consists in going about armed, etc., without committing any act, the words are necessary, because the offence consists in terrifying the public; but in those riots in which an unlawful act is committed, the words are useless; 11 Mod. 116; Com. v. Runnels, 10 Mass. 518, 6 Am. Dec. 148.

IN TESTIMONIUM. In witness or in evidence whereof. The first words of the attestation clause of certain legal instruments. See IN WITNESS WHEREOF.

IN TOTIDEM VERBIS (Lat.). In just so many words: as, the legislature has declared this to be a crime in totidem verbis.

IN TOTO (Lat.). In the whole; wholly; completely: as, the award is void in toto. In the whole the part is contained; in toto et pars continetur. Dig. 50. 17. 123.

IN TRAJECTU. In the passage over; on the voyage over. 3 C. Rob. Adm. 338.

IN TRANSITU (Lat.). During the transit, or removal from one place to another. See STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

IN UTROQUE JURE. In both laws; i. e., the civil and canon law.

IN VACUO (Lat. in what is empty). Without concomitants or coherence. Whart.

IN VADIO (Lat.). In pledge; in gage.

IN VENTRE SA MERE (L. F.). In his mother's womb. It is written indifferently in this form, or en ventre sa mere (q. v.). See POSTHUMOUS CHILD; CURTESY; DOWER; INFANT; INJUNCTION.

IN VINCULIS. In chains; in actual custody. Gilb. For. Rom. 97.

Applied also, figuratively, to the condition of a person who is compelled to submit to terms which oppression and his necessities impose on him. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 302.

IN VIRIDI OBSERVANTIA. Present to the minds of men, and in full force and operation.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF. These words, which, when conveyancing was in the Latin language, were in cujus rei testimonium, are the initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: "In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands," etc. See IN TESTIMONIUM.

INADEQUATE PRICE. A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as, under ordinary circumstances, would be considered insufficient.

Inadequacy of price is generally connected with fraud, gross misrepresentations, or an intentional concealment of defects in the thing sold. In these cases it is clear that the vendor cannot compel the buyer to fulfil the contract; L. R. 12 Eq. 320; Willson v. Foree, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 110, 5 Am. Dec. 195; McFerran v. Taylor, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 270, 2 L. Ed. 436; Randle v. Harris, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 508; Sampson v. Swift, 11 Vt. 315; Hubbard v. Coolidge, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 93; Chick v. Trevett, 20 Me. 462, 37 Am. Dec. 68.

In general, however, inadequacy of price is not sufficient ground to avoid an executed contract, particularly when the property has been sold by auction; 3 Bro. C. C. 228; Lee v. Kirby, 104 Mass. 420; if there is no fraud and the parties deal at arm's length, upon their independent judgment, it will be held good; Judge v. Wilkins, 19 Ala. 765; Nash v. Lull, 102 Mass. 60, 3 Am. Rep. 435; Williams v. Jensen, 75 Mo. 681. But if an uncertain consideration, as a life annuity, be given for an estate, and the contract be executory, equity, it seems, will enter into the adequacy of the consideration; 7 Bro. P. C. 184. See Sugd. Vend. 189; 1 B. & B. 165; McCants v. Bee, 1 McCord, Ch. (S. C.) 383, 16 Am. Dec. 610; Butler v. Haskell, 4 Des. Ch. (S. C.) 651; Powers v. Mayo, 97 Mass. 180. And if the price be so grossly inadequate and given under such circumstances as to afford a necessary presumption of fraud or imposition, a court of equity will grant relief; Robinson v. Schly, 6 Ga. 515; Simonton v. Bacon, 49 Miss. 582; Waller v. Cralle, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 11; Stewart v. State, 2 Harr. & G. (Md.) 114; Bedel v. Loomis, 11 N. H. 9; Follett v. Rose, 3 McLean 332, Fed. Cas. No. 4,900; Hoyt v. Inst. for Savings, 110 Ill. 390; Gainer v. Russ, 20 Fla. 157; Herron v. Herron, 71 Ia. 428, 32 N. W. 407; French v. Allen, 50 Me. 438; Griffith v. Godey, 113 U. S. 89, 5 Sup. Ct. 383, 28 L. Ed. 934; Story, Eq. Jur. § 244; Leake, Contr. 1150. As to cases of sales of their interests by heirs and reversioners for inadequate price, see CATCHING BARGAIN; EXPECTANCY.

See CONSIDERATION; POST OBIT; MACEDONIAN DECREE; JUDICIAL SALE.

INADMISSIBLE. What cannot be received. Parol evidence, for example, is ordinarily inadmissible to contradict a written agreement.

INÆDIFICATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Building on another's land with one's own materials, or on one's own land with another's materials. L. 7, §§ 10, 18, D. de Acquis. Rer. Domin.; Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 363. The word is especially used of a private person's building so as to encroach upon the public land. Calvinus, Lex. The right of possession of the materials yields to the right to what is on the soil. Id. See ACCRETION.

INALIENABLE. A word denoting the condition of those things the property in which cannot be lawfully transferred from one person to another. Public highways and rivers are inalienable. There are also many rights which are inalienable, as the rights of liberty or of speech.

INAUGURATION. A word applied by the Romans to the ceremony of dedicating a temple, or raising a man to the priesthood, after the augurs had been consulted.

It was afterwards applied to the installation of emperors, kings, and prelates, in imitation of the ceremonies of the Romans when they entered the temple of the augurs. It is applied in the United States to the installation of the chief magistrate of the republic, and of the governors of the several states.

INBLAURA. Profit or product of the ground. Cowell.

INBOROW. A forecourt or gate-house. A certain barony was inborow and outborow between England and Scotland. Cowell.

INCAPACITY. The want of a quality legally to do, give, transmit, or receive something.

In general, the incapacity ceases with the cause which produces it. If the idiot should obtain his senses, or the married woman's husband die, their incapacity would be at an end.

INCASTELLARE. To make a building serve the purpose of a castle. Jacob.

INCENDIARY (Lat. incendium, a kindling). One who maliciously and wilfully sets another person's building on fire; one guilty of the crime of arson. See ARSON; BURNING.

INCEPTION. The commencement; the beginning. In making a will, for example, the writing is its inception. 3 Co. 31 b; Plowd. 343.

INCERTÆ PERSONÆ. Uncertain persons, as posthumous heirs, a corporation, the poor, a juristic person, or persons who cannot be ascertained until after the execution of a will. Sohm. Inst. Rom. L. 104, 458.

INCEST. The carnal copulation of a man and a woman related to each other in any of the degrees within which marriage is prohibited by law. 1 Bish. Marr. & D. 112, 376, 442. It involves the assent of both parties; De Groat v. People, 39 Mich. 124; but it is held that it may exist as to the man although without the consent of the woman; State v. Chambers, 87 Ia. 1, 53 N. W. 1090, 43 Am. St. Rep. 349; People v. Gleason, 99 Cal. 359, 33 Pac. 1111, 37 Am. St. Rep. 56. It is punished by fine and imprisonment, under the laws of most, if not all, of the states, but seems not at common law to be an indictable offence; 4 Bla. Com. 64; State v. Keesler, 78 N. C.

469. See Simon v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 186, 20 S. W. 399, 716, 37 Am. St. Rep. 802; 18 So. Afr. 360.

Preparations for an attempted incestuous marriage have been held not indictable; People v. Murray, 14 Cal. 159. A man indicted for rape may be convicted of incest; Com. v. Goodhue, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 193; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 419. See Dane, Abr. Index; State v. Roswell, 6 Conn. 446; Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410; People v. Harriden, 1 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 344. See State v. Jarvis, 20 Or. 437, 26 Pac. 302, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141. And as to whether the crime is rape or incest may be left to the jury; People v. Skutt, 96 Mich. 449, 56 N. W. 11. Proof of a single commission of the offence is sufficient for conviction; Mathis v. Com. (Ky.) 13 S. W. 360.

INCESTUOSI. Those offspring incestuously begotten. Mack. Rom. L. § 143.

INCH (Lat. uncia). A measure of length, containing one-twelfth part of a foot; originally supposed equal to three grains of barley laid end to end.

INCHOATE. That which is not yet completed or finished. Contracts are considered inchoate until they are executed by all the parties. During the husband's life, a wife has an inchoate right of dower; 2 Bla. Com. 130; so with the right of an unborn child to take by descent; Marsellis v. Thalhimer, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 35, 21 Am. Dec. 66; and a covenant which purports to be tripartite, and is executed by only two of the parties, is incomplete, and no one is bound by it; Emery v. Neighbour, 7 N. J. L. 142, 11 Am. Dec. 541. See LOCUS PŒNITENTIÆ.

INCIDENT. This term is used both substantively and adjectively of a thing which, either usually or naturally and inseparably depends upon, appertains to, or follows another that is more worthy. For example, rent is usually incident to a reversion. 1 Hill. R. P. 243; while the right of alienation is necessarily incident to a fee-simple at common law, and cannot be separated by a grant; 1 Washb. R. P. 54. So a court baron is inseparably incident to a manor, in England; Co. Litt. 151. All nominate contracts and all estates known to common law, have certain incidents which they draw with them and which it is not necessary to reserve in words. So the costs incurred in a legal proceeding are said to be incidental thereto. See Jacob, Law Dict.

INCIPITUR (Lat. it is begun). The commencement of the entry on the roll on signing judgment, etc. The custom is no longer necessary in England, and was unknown here. But see 3 Steph. Com. 566, n.

INCLOSURE. The extinction of common rights in fields and waste lands. 1 Steph. Com. 655.

The separation and appropriation of land by means of a fence, hedge, etc., together with such fence or hedge. Taylor v. Welbey, 36 Wis. 44; Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 331; Gundy v. State, 63 Ind. 530; Pope v. Hanmer, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 269; where, in a will, the executors were directed to inclose with an iron fence meeting-house grounds, schoolhouse grounds, and burial ground, it was held that the intention was clear to inclose each of the grounds on all sides; Appeal of Hall, 112 Pa. 52, 3 Atl. 783.

A paper or letter inclosed with another in an envelope.

INCLOSURE ACTS. English statutes regulating the subject of inclosure. The most notable was that of 1801.

INCLOSURE COMMISSION ACT, 1845. The statute 8 and 9 Vict. c. 118, establishing a board of commissioners for England and Wales and empowering them, on the application of persons interested to the amount of one-third of the value of the land, and provided the consent of persons interested to the amount of two-thirds of the land and of the lord of the manor (in case the land be waste of a manor) be ultimately obtained, to inquire into the case and to report to parliament as to the expediency of making the inclosure. 1 Steph. Com. 655.

INCLUDE (Lat. in claudere to shut in, keep within). In a legacy of "one hundred dollars including money trusteed" at a bank, it was held that the word "including" extended only to a gift of one hundred dollars; Brainard v. Darling, 132 Mass. 218; but in a bequest of a sum of money inclusive of a note of the legatee, it was held that the note was included in the legacy; Pepper's Estate, 154 Pa. 340, 25 Atl. 1063.

INCLUSIVE. Comprehended in computation. In computing time, as ten days from a particular time, the last day is generally to be included and the first excluded. See EXCLUSIVE; TIME; Estate of Pepper, 154 Pa. 340, 25 Atl. 1063, as to its use in a legacy.

INCOME. The gain which proceeds from property, labor, or business. It is applied particularly to individuals. The income of the state or government is usually called revenue. The word is sometimes considered synonymous with "profits," the gain as between receipts and payments; People v. Board of Supervisors, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 23; "rent, and profits," "income," and "net income" of the estate are equivalent expressions; Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 203; it may mean "money" or the expectation of receiving money; U. S. v. Schillinger, 14 Blatch. 71, Fed. Cas. No. 16,228; Gray v. Darlington, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 63, 21 L. Ed. 45; and a note is ground for expecting income, and in the sense of a statute taxing incomes the amount thereof is to be returned when paid; Portland Co. v. U. S., 15 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 21 L. Ed. 113. See Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 637. In the ordinary commercial sense "income" especially when connected with the word "rent," may mean clear or net income. "Produce" or "product" as a substituted word may relieve a will from obscurity; Appeal of Thompson, 100 Pa. 481. In a gift of the income, etc., of shares of stock, it is not synonymous with increase, and while it will include dividends from the stock, will not embrace the sum by which the stock has increased; Spooner v. Phillips, 62 Conn. 62, 24 Atl. 524, 16 L. R. A. 461. As to when dividends are to be considered as income, see 31 A. & E. Corp. Cas. 386, n.; DIVIDEND.

It has been held that a devise of the income of land is in effect the same as a devise of the land itself; Reed v. Reed, 9 Mass. 372; Monarque v. Monarque, 80 N. Y. 320; Cooper v. Pogue, 92 Pa. 254, 37 Am. Rep. 681; Sampson v. Randall, 72 Me. 109; and a gift of the income of a fund is a gift of the fund; Earl v. Grim, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 494; Huston v. Read, 32 N. J. Eq. 591; and of the income of property is a gift of the property; Bristol v. Bristol, 53 Conn. 259, 5 Atl. 687; Appeal of Sproul, 105 Pa. 441; 2 Rop. Leg. 371.

INCOME TAX. See TAX.

INCOMMUNICATION. In Spanish Law. The condition of a prisoner who is not permitted to see or to speak with any person visiting him during his confinement.

INCOMPATIBILITY. Incapability of existing or being exercised together.

Thus the relations of landlord and of tenant cannot exist in one man at the same time in reference to the same land. Two offices may be incompatible either from their nature or by statutory provisions. See U. S. Const. art. 6, § 3, n. 5, art. 1, § 6, n. 2; Com. v. Sheriff & Keeper of Jail, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 277; People v. Green, 46 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 170; State v. Buttz, 9 S. C. 179; OFFICE.

Incompatibility is ordinarily not a ground for divorce; Trowbridge v. Carlin, 12 La. Ann. 882; Pinkney v. Pinkney, 4 G. Greene (Ia.) 324; though in some states it is. See DIVORCE.

INCOMPETENCY. Lack of ability or fitness to discharge the required duty.

Judges and jurors are said to be incompetent from having an interest in the subject-matter. See JUDGE; JURY.

In Evidence. A witness may be at common law incompetent on account of a want of understanding, a defect of religious belief, a conviction of certain crimes, infamy of character, or interest; 1 Phill. Ev. 15. The last ground of incompetency is removed to a considerable degree in most states; and the second is greatly limited in modern practice. See WITNESS.

INCONCLUSIVE. Not finally decisive. Inconclusive presumptions are capable of being overcome by opposing proof.

INCONSULTO. In the Civil Law. Unadvisedly; unintentionally. Dig. 28, 4, 1.

INCONTINENCE. Impudicity; indulgence in unlawful carnal connection.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY. A society of attorneys and solicitors whose function it is to carry out the acts of parliament and orders of court with reference to articled clerks; to keep an alphabetical roll of solicitors; to issue certificates to persons duly admitted and enrolled, and to exercise a general control over the conduct of solicitors in practice, and to bring cases of misconduct before the judges. 3 Steph. Com. 217. See SOLICITORS.

INCORPORATION. The act of creating a corporation; that which is incorporated. A legal or political body formed by the union of individuals under certain conditions, rules, and laws, and having certain privileges and partial or perpetual succession. See CORPORATION.

INCORPORATION BY REFERENCE. The bringing into one document in legal effect, of the contents of another by referring to the latter in such manner as to adopt it.

INCORPOREAL CHATTELS. The incorporeal rights or interests growing out of personal property, such as copyrights and patent rights, stocks and personal annuities. Boreel v. City of New York, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 552, 559; 2 Steph. Com. 9.

INCORPOREAL HEREDITAMENT. Anything, the subject of property, which is inheritable and not tangible or visible. 2 Woodd. Lect. 4. A right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal) or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same. 2 Bla. Com. 20; Walker v. Daly, 80 Wis. 222, 49 N. W. 812; 1 Washb. R. P. 10; Chal. R. P. 47; Wyatt v. Irrigation Co., 18 Colo. 298, 33 Pac. 144, 36 Am. St. Rep. 280.

Their existence is merely in idea and abstract contemplation, though their effects and profits may be frequently the object of the bodily senses; Co. Litt. 9 a; Pothier, Traité des Choses § 2. According to Blackstone, there are ten kinds of incorporeal hereditaments: viz. advowsons, tithes, commons, ways, offices, dignities, franchises, corodies, annuities, and rents. 2 Com. 20. In the United States there are no advowsons, tithes, dignities, nor corodies, commons are rare, offices rare or unknown, and annuities have no necessary connection with land. 3 Kent 402, 454. And there are other incorporeal hereditaments not included in this list, as remainders and reversions dependent on a particular estate of freehold, easements of light, air, etc., and equities of redemption; 1 Washb. R. P. *11.

Incorporeal hereditaments were said to be in grant; corporeal, in livery; since a simple deed or grant would pass the former, of which livery was impossible, while livery was necessary to a transfer of the latter. But this distinction is now done away with, even in England. See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 2; 1 Washb. R. P. 10; Will. R. P. 279, 364, 370.

See ABANDONMENT.

INCORPOREAL PROPERTY. In Civil Law. That which consists in legal right merely. The same as choses in action at common law.

INCORRIGIBLE. Incapable of being corrected, amended, or improved.

Under the statute 17 Geo. II. c. 5, incorrigible rogues were subjected to two years' imprisonment in the house of correction, and for escaping from confinement therein were made felons and liable to transportation for seven years. A similar breach and escape by a vagabond or rogue constituted him an incorrigible rogue; 4 Bla. Com. 169.

INCORRUPTIBLE. That which cannot be affected by immoral or debasing influences, such as bribery or the hope of gain or advancement.

INCREASE. That which grows out of land or is produced by the cultivation of it. De Blane v. Lynch, 23 Tex. 27. The word is frequently used in connection with the young of domestic animals; the increase of a flock. See ACCESSION.

INCREASE, COSTS OF. See COSTS DE INCREMENTO.

INCRIMINATION. The Vth Amendment of the United States constitution provides that no person "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be witness against himself." A witness may refuse to furnish evidence which will incriminate himself; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110. That the seizure or compulsory production of a man's private papers to be used in evidence against him is equivalent to compelling him to be a witness against himself was held in Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; U. S. v. Wong Quong Wong, 94 Fed. 832. Schedules filed in bankruptcy proceedings are within the operation of U. S. R. S. § 860, forbidding the admission in any criminal proceeding of any pleading of a party or discovery or evidence obtained from a party by means of a judicial proceeding; Johnson v. U. S., 163 Fed. 30, 89 C. C. A. 508, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1194. Prescriptions of druggists are not within that class of private papers shielded from inspection for the purpose of obtaining evidence against the druggist; State v. Davis, 108 Mo. 666, 18 S. W. 894, 32 Am. St. Rep. 640.

Forcibly taking shoes from an accused person for the purpose of comparison with footprints; State v. Fuller, 34 Mont. 12, 85 Pac. 369, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762, 9 Ann. Cas. 648; seizing private papers of a defendant found in the execution of a search warrant; Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. Ed. 575, affirming People v. Adams, 176 N. Y. 351, 68 N. E. 636, 63 L. R. A. 406, 98 Am. St. Rep. 675; the use of an envelope containing pictures as evidence to show that the conduct of an accused in respect to such articles was incriminating; State v. Griswold, 67 Conn. 290, 34 Atl. 1046, 33 L. R. A. 227; seizing lottery tickets and lottery paraphernalia under a search warrant; Com. v. Dana, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 329; or jugs and bottles at the time of making an arrest for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors; State v. O'Connor, 3 Kan. App. 594, 43 Pac. 859; do not violate the constitutional protection against self-incrimination. The accused may not be compelled to furnish the evidence, but, if he or his belongings are searched by another, although without authority, the evidence may be used against him; Duren v. City of Thomasville, 125 Ga. 1, 53 S. E. 814; State v. Burroughs, 72 Me. 479; Com. v. Henderson, 140 Mass. 303, 5 N. E. 832.

In extradition proceedings, the evidence of the party charged as to his identity cannot be admitted, being incriminatory; Ex parte La Mantia, 206 Fed. 330.

The Vth Amendment does not apply where the criminality is taken away, as in the anti-trust law, which secures a person from prosecution or penalty or forfeiture on account of any transaction concerning which he may testify; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 66, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652. A pardon takes away the privilege of refusing, though not accepted; U. S. v. Burdick, 211 Fed. 492.

Self-incrimination does not apply to a witness subpœnaed to produce corporate books; Wilson v. U. S., 221 U. S. 361, 31 Sup. Ct. 538, 55 L. Ed. 771, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 558; Dreier v. U. S., 221 U. S. 394, 31 Sup. Ct. 550, 55 L. Ed. 784. Even though he wrote or signed them; the early English cases (1 W. Bl. 37; 7 St. Tr. N. S. 979) were not followed.

The mere statement by an officer of a corporation, who has been directed to turn its books over to a receiver, that he has been indicted for an offense connected with the management of the corporation, and that the contents of the books may tend to incriminate him, is not sufficient to excuse him from obeying the order of the court; Manning v. Securities Co., 242 Ill. 584, 90 N. E. 238, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 725; Tolleson v. Greene, 83 Ga. 499, 10 S. E. 120.

Where the corporate misconduct involves also the claimant's misconduct (as well as that of the corporation), or where the document is in reality the personal act of the claimant, though nominally that of the corporation, its disclosures are virtually his own and to that extent his privilege protects him from producing them; Wigmore, Ev. § 2259; Ex parte Chapman, 153 Fed. 371; and see Blum v. State, 94 Md. 375, 51 Atl. 26, 56 L. R. A. 322; In re Kanter, 117 Fed. 356; but where the president of a banking corporation was indicted for receiving a deposit with knowledge that he and the corporation were insolvent, and with intent to embezzle, the district attorney and another were permitted to examine the books of the corporation then in the hands of a receiver to secure evidence for the prosecution of the president for embezzlement; McElree v. Darlington, 187 Pa. 593, 41 Atl. 456, 67 Am. St. Rep. 592. To the same effect State v. Strait, 94 Minn. 384, 102 N. W. 913.

The purpose of the act of February 25, 1903, granting to witnesses in investigations of violations of the Sherman act immunity against prosecution for matters testified to, was to obtain evidence that otherwise could not be obtained; the act was not intended as a gratuity to crime and is to be construed, as far as possible, as coterminous with the privilege of the person concerned; Virtue v. Mfg. Co., 227 U. S. 13, 33 Sup. Ct. 202, 57 L. Ed. 393.

There is a clear distinction between an amnesty under the statute and the constitutional protection (Vth Amendment) of a party from being compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself; Heike v. U. S., 227 U. S. 142, 33 Sup. Ct. 226, 57 L. Ed. 450.

See CRIMINATE; PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Exemption from compulsory self-incrimination did not form part of the law of the land prior to the separation of the colonies from the mother country, nor is it one of the fundamental rights, immunities and privileges of citizens of the United States or an element of due process of law within the meaning of the constitution or the XIVth Amendment; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 53 L. Ed. 97, affirming State v. Twining, 73 N. J. L. 683, 67 Atl. 1073, 1135.

See CONSTITUTION.

INCULPATE. To accuse of crime; to impute guilt to; to bring or expose to blame; to censure. Webster.

INCUMBENT. In Ecclesiastical Law. A clerk resident on his benefice with cure. In common parlance, it signifies one who is in possession of an office: as, the present incumbent. One does not become the incumbent of an office, until legally authorized to discharge its duties, by receiving his commission and taking the official oath; State v. McCollister, 11 Ohio 46.

INCUMBRANCE. Any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in third persons, to the diminution of the value of the estate of the tenant, but consistently with the passing of the fee. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 242; Prescott v. Trueman, 4 Mass. 629, 3 Am. Dec. 246; Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 81, 20 N. E. 581, 3 L. R. A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432.

"Every right to or interest in the land which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the land, but consistent with the passing of the fee by the conveyance." Rawle, Cov. for Title, § 25, approved in Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. 466, 29 Atl. 868.

Incumbrance, when used in reference to real estate, includes every right to or interest in the land granted, to the diminution of the value of the land, but consistent with the passing of the fee by the owner thereof; Westerlund v. Mining Co., 203 Fed. 599, 121 C. C. A. 627, citing this work. The following are incumbrances: An ordinary lease; Clark v. Fisher, 54 Kan. 403, 38 Pac. 493; an attachment; Thatcher v. Valentine, 22 Colo. 201, 43 Pac. 1031; the lien of a judgment; Willsie v. Ranch Co., 7 S. D. 114, 63 N. W. 546; taxes and municipal claims; In re Gerry, 112 Fed. 958; an execution sale subject to redemption; Post v. Campau, 42 Mich. 94, 3 N. W. 272; a restriction on the use of land for a brewery or blacksmith shop; Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. 460, 29 Atl. 868; an easement for a party wall; Westerlund v. Min. Co., 203 Fed. 606, 121 C. C. A. 627; Mackey v. Harmon, 34 Minn. 168, 24 N. W. 702; an inchoate right of dower; Bigelow v. Hubbard, 97 Mass. 195; a private right of way, Harlow v. Thomas, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 66; a railroad right of way; Barlow v. McKinley, 24 Ia. 69; an attachment; Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. 466, 29 Atl. 870; a right of removal of timber from land; Cathcart v. Bowman, 5 Pa. 317; a reservation of minerals; Adams v. Henderson, 168 U. S. 573, 18 Sup. Ct. 179, 42 L. Ed. 584; Adams v. Reed, 11 Utah 480, 40 Pac. 720.

A public highway; Kellogg v. Ingersoll, 2 Mass. 97; Prichard v. Atkinson, 3 N. H. 335; Hubbard v. Norton, 10 Conn. 431; Butler v. Gale, 27 Vt. 739; Copeland v. McAdory, 100 Ala. 553, 13 South. 545; Schmisseur v. Penn, 47 Ill. App. 278 (but see Scribner v. Holmes, 16 Ind. 142; Kutz v. McCune, 22 Wis. 628, 99 Am. Dec. 85; Moore v. Johnston, 87 Ala. 220, 6 South. 50; Harrison v. R. Co., 91 Ia. 114, 58 N. W. 1081; even though it has been practically abandoned by the public years before; Howell v. Northampton R. Co., 211 Pa. 284, 60 Atl. 793; a private right of way; Harlow v. Thomas, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 68; Mitchell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 497; an easement which is open, visible, and well known; Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 81, 20 N. E. 581, 3 L. R. A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432; a claim of dower; Prescott v. Trueman, 4 Mass. 630, 3 Am. Dec. 246; Thrasher v.

Pinckard's Heirs, 23 Ala. 616; though inchoate only; Porter v. Noyes, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 22, 11 Am. Dec. 30; Shearer v. Ranger, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 447; an outstanding mortgage; Bean v. Mayo, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 94; Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 10 Sup. Ct. 494, 33 L. Ed. 667 (other than one which the covenantee is bound to pay; Watts v. Welman, 2 N. H. 458; Wyman v. Ballard, 12 Mass. 304; Funk v. Voneida, 11 S. & R. [Pa.] 109, 14 Am. Dec. 617; Stewart v. Drake, 9 N. J. L. 139; see Olney v. Ins. Co., 88 Mich. 94, 50 N. W. 100, 13 L. R. A. 684, 26 Am. St. Rep. 281); a liability under the tax laws; Hutchins v. Moody, 30 Vt. 655; Long v. Moler, 5 Ohio St. 271; Mitchell v. Pillsbury, 5 Wis. 407; see Tibbetts v. Leeson, 148 Mass. 102, 18 N. E. 679 (but no tax or assessment can exist so as to be an incumbrance, until the amount is ascertained or determined; Harper v. Dowdney, 113 N. Y. 644, 21 N. E. 63); an attachment resting upon land; Kelsey v. Remer, 43 Conn. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 638; Johnson v. Collins, 116 Mass. 392; a condition, the non-performance of which by the grantee may work a forfeiture of the estate; Jenks v. Ward, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 412; restriction as to the kind of building which may be erected on land; Doctor v. Darling, 68 Hun 70, 22 N. Y. Supp. 594; a mechanic's lien; Redmon v. Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 293, 8 N. W. 226, 37 Am. Rep. 830; have been held incumbrances within the meaning of the covenant against incumbrances, contained in conveyances. The term does not include a condition on which an estate is held; Estabrook v. Smith, 6 Gray (Mass.) 572, 66 Am. Dec. 443.

A restriction against wooden structures, but which were prohibited by law, is not an incumbrance; Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. 466, 29 Atl. 868.

The vendor of real estate is bound in England to disclose incumbrances, and to deliver to the purchaser the instruments by which they were created, or on which the defects arise; and the neglect of this is to be considered fraud; Sudg. Vend. 6; 1 Ves. Sen. 96. See Kauffelt v. Bower, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 73, 10 Am. Dec. 428.

The interest on incumbrances is to be kept down by the tenant for life; 1 Washb. R. P. 95, 257, 573; Swaine v. Perine, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 482, 9 Am. Dec. 318; Lessee of McMillan v. Robbins, 5 Ohio 28; to the extent of rents accruing; 31 E. L. & Eq. 345; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 60; and for any sum paid beyond that he becomes a creditor of the estate; Warley v. Warley, Bail. Eq. (S. C.) 397.

When the whole incumbrance is removed by a single payment, the share of the tenant for life is the present worth of an annuity for the life of the tenant equal to the annual amount of the interest which he would be obliged to pay; 1 Washb. R. P. 96, 573. The rule applies to estates held in dower; Estabrook v. Hapgood, 10 Mass. 315; Bell v. New York, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 71; House v. House, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 158; Abercrombie v. Riddle, 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 324; in curtesy; 1 Washb. R. P. 142; in tail only in special cases; 1 Washb. R. P. 80; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 613; 3 P. Wms. 229. See COVENANT AGAINST INCUMBRANCES.

INCUR. To have liabilities cast upon one by act or operation of law, as distinguished from contract, where the party acts affirmatively. Crandall v. Bryan, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 56.

INDEBITATUS ASSUMPSIT (Lat.). That species of the action of assumpsit in which the plaintiff alleges, in his declaration, first a debt, and then a promise in consideration of the debt to pay the amount to the plaintiff.

It is so called from the words in which the promise is laid in the Latin form, translated in the modern form, being indebted he promised. The promise so laid is generally an implied one only. See Steph. Pl. 318; 4 Co. 92 b. This form of action is brought to recover in damages the amount of the debt or demand; upon the trial the jury will, according to evidence, give verdict for whole or part of that sum; 3 Bla. Com. 155; Selw. N. P. 68.

Indebitatus assumpsit is in this distinguished from debt and covenant, which proceed directly for the debt, damages being given only for the detention of the debt. Debt lies on contracts by specialty as well as by parol, while indebitatus assumpsit lies only on parol contracts, whether express or implied; Bro. Act. at Law 317.

For the history of this form of action, see 3 Reeve, Hist. Com. Law; 2 Com. Contr. 549; 3 Bla. Com. 154; J. B. Ames, 2 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 53, 377. See ASSUMPSIT.

INDEBITI SOLUTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The payment to one of what is not due to him. If the payment was made by mistake, the civilians recovered it back by an action called condictio indebiti; with us, such money may be recovered by an action of assumpsit.

INDEBTEDNESS. The state of being in debt, without regard to the ability or inability of the party to pay the same. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 343; 2 Hill, Abr. 421.

But in order to create an indebtedness there must be an actual liability at the time, either to pay then or at a future time. If, for example, a person were to enter and become surety for another, who enters into a rule of reference, he does not thereby become a debtor to the opposite party until the rendition of the judgment on the award; Fales v. Thompson, 1 Mass. 134. As to indebtedness of a municipality, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

INDECENCY. An act against good behavior and a just delicacy. Com. v. Sharpless, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 91, 7 Am. Dec. 632.

The law, in general, will repress indecency as being contrary to good morals; but, when the public good requires it, the mere indecency of disclosures does not suffice to exclude them from being given in evidence; Tayl. Ev. 816.

The following are examples of indecency: the exposure by a man of his naked person on a balcony, to public view, or bathing in public; 2 Campb. 89; Knowles v. State, 3 Day (Conn.) 103; State v. Roper, 18 N. C. 208; State v. Millard, 18 Vt. 574, 46 Am. Dec. 170; Van Houten v. State, 46 N. J. L. 16, 50 Am. Rep. 397; or in the house of another in the presence of a young girl; Com. v. Wardell, 128 Mass. 52, 35 Am. Rep. 357; or the exhibition of bawdy pictures; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 42; Com. v. Sharpless, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 91, 7 Am. Dec. 632. This indecency is punishable by indictment. See Brooks v. State, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 482; Grisham v. State, id. 589; Com. v. Catlin, 1 Mass. 8; 1 Russ. Cr. 302; 4 Bla. Com. 65, n.; Burn, Just. Lewdness. And an ordinance making such exposure an offence without reference to the intent which accompanies the act, is a valid exercise of police power; City of Grand Rapids v. Bateman, 93 Mich. 135, 53 N. W. 6.

INDECENT ASSAULT. See ASSAULT.

INDECENT EXHIBITION. Any exhibition contra bonos mores, as the taking a dead body for the purpose of dissection or public exhibition. 2 T. R. 734.

INDECENT EXPOSURE. It must be in a public place; Com. v. Hardin, 2 Ky. L. R. 59; if accidental, it is not an offence; City of Grand Rapids v. Bateman, 93 Mich. 135, 53 N. W. 6; nor is exposure to one woman in a field near a highway; Morris v. State, 109 Ga. 351, 34 S. E. 577. See EXPOSURE OF PERSON; INDECENCY.

INDECENT LIBERTIES. See ASSAULT.

INDECENT PUBLICATIONS. Statutes forbidding the keeping, exhibiting, or sale of indecent books or pictures, and providing for their destruction, if seized, are within the police power of a state, and are constitutional. Cooley, Const. Lim. 748. See OBSCENITY; MAIL.

INDECIMABLE. Not tithable.

INDEFEASIBLE. That which cannot be defeated or undone. This epithet is usually applied to an estate or right which cannot be defeated. "A perfect title." Douglass v. Lewis, 131 U. S. 75, 9 Sup. Ct. 634, 33 L. Ed. 53.

INDEFENSUS (Lat.). One sued or impleaded who refuses or has nothing to answer.

INDEFINITE FAILURE OF ISSUE. See FAILURE OF ISSUE.

INDEFINITE NUMBER. A number which may be increased or diminished at pleasure.

When a corporation is composed of an indefinite number of persons, any number of them consisting of a majority of those present may do any act, unless it be otherwise regulated by the charter or by-laws.

INDEFINITE PAYMENT. That which a debtor who owes several debts to a creditor makes without making an appropriation: in that case the creditor has a right to make such appropriation.

INDEMNIFY. To secure or save harmless against loss or damage, of a specified character, which may happen in the future.

To compensate or reimburse one for a loss previously incurred; L. R. 14 Eq. 479. See Weller v. Eames, 15 Minn. 467 (Gil. 376), 2 Am. Rep. 150.

To indemnify is said to be synonymous with "to save harmless." Brentnal v. Holmes, 1 Root (Conn.) 292, 1 Am. Dec. 44.

Indemnification is the act of indemnifying or making good a loss. Indemnificatus, indemnified. Indemnis (formerly indempnis), without damage; harmless. Indemnitor, one who enters into a contract of indemnity for the benefit of another; indemnitee, one who is to be benefited by such a contract.

INDEMNITY. That which is given to a person to prevent his suffering damage. Peck v. Wakely, 2 McCord (S. C.) 279.

It is a rule established in all just governments that when private property is required for public use, indemnity shall be given by the public to the owner. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

Contracts made for the purpose of indemnifying a person for doing an act for which he could be indicted, or to compensate a public officer for doing an act which is forbidden by law, or for omitting to do one which the law commands, are absolutely void. But when the agreement with an officer was not to induce him to neglect his duty, but to test a legal right, as to indemnify him for not executing a writ of execution, it was held to be good; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 780.

In general, a mere promise of indemnity to a third person is not within the statute of frauds; [1894] 2 Q. B. 885, 19 L. R. Eq. 198; George v. Hoskins (Ky.) 30 S. W. 406; Boyer v. Soules, 105 Mich. 31, 62 N. W. 1000; and this rule applies to a promise to indemnify the surety on a liquor-dealer's bond; Smith v. Delaney, 64 Conn. 264, 29 Atl. 496, 42 Am. St. Rep. 181; to a contract of agency, by which the agent agrees to be responsible for the non-payment of debts which may thereafter become due by others; 69 L. T. N. S. 354; to a promise to indemnify one if he will indorse K.'s notes, so that K. can have them discounted; Jones v. Bacon, 145 N. Y. 446, 40 N. E. 216; and to a verbal promise of A to B to indemnify him if he will become surety for C for a debt of the latter to D; Minick v. Huff, 41 Neb. 516, 59 N. W. 795. But it is held in Illinois, that a guarantee of indemnity to a surety is within the statute; Waterman v. Pesseter, 45 Ill. App. 155. See GUARANTY; SURETYSHIP; INSURANCE.

INDEMNITY LANDS. Those lands which are, by the grant in aid of a railroad, allowed to be selected in lieu of parcels lost by previous disposition or reservation for other purposes, and the title to which accrues only from the time of their selection. Barney v. R. Co., 117 U. S. 232, 6 Sup. Ct. 654, 29 L. Ed. 858; Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U. S. 513, 10 Sup. Ct. 341, 33 L. Ed. 687.

Title to indemnity lands does not vest in a railroad company until they are actually selected and the selection approved by the secretary of the interior; U. S. v. R. Co., 141 U. S. 358, 12 Sup. Ct. 13, 35 L. Ed. 766.

INDENT. To cut in the shape of teeth.

Deeds of indenture were anciently written on the same parchment or paper as many times as there were parties to the instrument, the word chirographum being written between, and then the several copies cut apart in a zigzag or notched line (whence the name), part of the word chirographum (q. v.) being on either side of it; and each party kept a copy. The later practice was to cut the top or side of the deed in a waving or notched line; 2 Bla. Com. 295.

To bind by indentures; to apprentice: as, to indent a young man to a shoemaker. Webster, Dict.

In American Law. An indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the revolution for the principal or interest of the public debt. Ramsay, Hamilton, Webster; Eliot, Funding System 35; U. S. v. Irwin, 5 McLean 178, Fed. Cas. No. 15,445; Acts of April 30, 1790, sess. 2, c. 9, § 14, and of March 3, 1825, sess. 2, c. 65, § 17. The word is no longer in use in this sense.

INDENTURE. A formal written instrument made between two or more persons in different interests, as opposed to a deed poll, which is one made by a single person, or by several having similar interests.

Its name comes from a practice of indenting or scalloping such an instrument on the top or side in a waving line. This is not necessary in England at the present day, by stat. 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, § 5, but was in Lord Coke's time, when no words of indenture would supply its place; 5 Co. 20. In this country it is a mere formal act, not necessary to the deed's being an indenture. See Bac. Abr. Leases, etc. (E 2); Com. Dig. Fait (C, and note d); Littleton, § 370; Co. Litt. 143 b, 229 a; Cruise, Dig. t. 32, c. 1, s. 24; 2 Bla. Com. 294; 1 Steph. Com. 447.

For the method used, see INDENT; DEED POLL.

The form now in use, "this indenture, made between A. and B.," was used as early as Edward III. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 193.

INDENTURE OF A FINE. Indentures made and engrossed at the chirographer's office and delivered to the cognizor and the cognizee, usually beginning with the words: "Hæc est finalis concordia." And then reciting the whole proceedings at length. 2 Bla. Com. 351.

INDEPENDENCE. A state of perfect irresponsibility to any superior. The United States are free and independent of all earthly power.

Independence may be divided into political and natural independence. By the former is to be understood that we have contracted no ties except those which flow from the three great natural rights of safety, liberty, and property. The latter consists in the power of being able to enjoy a permanent well-being, whatever may be the disposition of those from whom we call ourselves independent. In that sense a nation may be independent with regard to most people, but not independent of the whole world. See DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Questions as to the power of municipalities to appropriate money for the celebration of the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence have arisen. It has been held that no such power exists; Hodges v. City of Buffalo, 2 Denio (N. Y.) 110; Hood v. Lynn, 1 Allen (Mass.) 103.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR. One who, exercising an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods, and without being subject to the control of his employer, except as to the result of his work. Powell v. Construction Co., 88 Tenn. 692, 13 S. W. 691, 17 Am. St. Rep. 925.

The term is also defined to denote one who has the right to select, employ, and control the action of the workmen; Bennett v. Truebody, 66 Cal. 509, 6 Pac. 329, 56 Am. Rep. 117; Gay v. Kohlsaat, 80 Ill. App. 185; one who is subject to his employer as to the results of his work only; Knoxville Iron Co. v. Dobson, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 367.

A still broader definition has been given as follows: "Where a person is employed to perform a certain kind of work, in the nature of repairs or improvements to a building, by the owner thereof, which requires the exercise of skill and judgment as a mechanic, the execution of which is left entirely to his discretion, without any restriction as to its exercise, and no limitation as to the authority conferred in respect to the same, and no provision is especially made as to the time in which the work is to be done, or as to the payment for the services rendered, and the compensation is dependent upon the value thereof, such person does not occupy the relation of servant under the control of the master, but is an independent contractor." Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 4 N. E. 755, 54 Am. Rep. 703.

Any one who follows a recognized independent calling has been held to be an independent contractor; as a slater; McCarthy v. Second Parish in Town of Portland, 71 Me. 318, 36 Am. Rep. 320; an architect; De Ford v. State, 30 Md. 179; a horse trainer; Arasmith v. Temple, 11 Ill. App. 39; a manufacturer of shingles; Whitney v. Clifford, 46 Wis. 138, 49 N. W. 835, 32 Am. Rep. 703; a builder; Robinson v. Webb, 11 Bush (Ky.) 464; a licensed public carman; McMullen v. Hoyt, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 271; a drayman; De Forrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368; a drover; 12 Ad. & El. 737; a plumber; Meany v. Abbott, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 256; and a stevedore; The Rheola, 19 Fed. 926; Hass v. S. S. Co., 88 Pa. 269, 32 Am. Rep. 462; 6 L. R. C. P. 24; Burke v. De Castro, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 354; Riley v. S. S. Co., 29 La. Ann. 791, 29 Am. Rep. 249; and the mode of payment and the fact that materials are furnished by the employer have been held to have but little weight in determining whether the employé is an independent contractor or not; Fuller v. Bank, 15 Fed. 875; New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Reese, 61 Miss. 581. The rule is that where a person is under the entire direction and control of another he is to be considered his servant, no matter who pays him; 5 B. & C. 560. The test to determine whether one who renders service to another does so as a contractor or not is to ascertain whether he renders the service in the course of an independent occupation representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work and not as to the means by which it was accomplished; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 385, 4 N. E. 755, 54 Am. Rep. 703.

In cases of an independent contract, the employer is not responsible; Kimball v. Cushman, 103 Mass. 194, 4 Am. Rep. 528; Young v. R. Co., 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 229; Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304; Smith v. Simmons, 103 Pa. 32, 49 Am. Rep. 113; Kepperly v. Ramsden, 83 Ill. 354; Rome & D. R. Co. v. Chasteen, 88 Ala. 591, 7 South. 94; Bennett v. Truebody, 66 Cal. 509, 6 Pac. 329, 56 Am. Rep. 117; Gallagher v. Exposition Ass'n, 28 La. Ann. 943; 7 H. & N. 826; 2 C. P. Div. 369; Bailey v. R. Co., 57 Vt. 252, 52 Am. Rep. 129; Hitte v. R. Co., 19 Neb. 620, 28 N. W. 284; New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Reese, 61 Miss. 581; Pierce v. O'Keefe, 11 Wis. 180. In 1 Bos. & P. 404, the rule was laid down that not only was the employer liable for the negligence of a contractor, but for that of a servant of a sub-contractor. This decision was followed in some of the earlier English and American cases, but the weight of authority in both countries has overruled it, the question of its authority having been decisively settled in each country, in what have become leading cases; 4 Exch. 244; Hilliard v. Richardson, 3 Gray (Mass.) 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743. But see 6 H. & N. 488, and Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black (U. S.) 418, 17 L. Ed. 298, with the criticism of these cases in Bibb's Adm'r v. R. Co., 87 Va. 711, 14 S. E. 163.

A like rule governs the question of the liability of the employer and the contractor for the negligence and torts of the sub-contractor or his servants; 7 H. & N. 826; 11 C. B. 867; 2 C. P. Div. 369; Wray v. Evans, 80 Pa. 102; Slater v. Mersereau, 64 N. Y. 138.

If he undertakes to provide the material, he is liable for an injury caused by his failure to provide it; Gilbert v. Beach, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 447; and generally, he is liable if the contract reserves to him such a power of supervision or control of the work as will destroy the free agency of the contractor, whether the supervision be exercised by himself or by persons designated by him; Vogel v. City of New York, 92 N. Y. 10, 44 Am. Rep. 349; Hughes v. Ry. Co., 39 Ohio St. 466; Edmundson v. R. Co., 111 Pa. 316, 2 Atl. 404; Harper v. City of Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365; City of Chicago v. Dermody, 61 Ill. 431; Camp v. Church Wardens of Church of St. Louis, 7 La. Ann. 321; City of Denver v. Rhodes, 9 Colo. 554, 13 Pac. 729; but not if the power of supervision reserved is not such as to interfere with the discretion of the contractor in the manner of executing the work, but is confined to seeing that the intended result is produced; Nevins v. City of Peoria, 41 Ill. 502, 89 Am. Dec. 392; Vincennes Water Supply Co. v. White, 124 Ind. 376, 24 N. E. 747. The exact rule as to supervision is said to be that the employer, through its chief engineer, may reserve the right to criticise the work but not to control it; Bibb's Adm'r v. R. Co., 87 Va. 711, 14 S. E. 163.

The employer will be held liable if the injurious act complained of was contemplated by the contract; Whitney v. Clifford, 46 Wis. 138, 49 N. W. 835, 32 Am. Rep. 703; St. Louis & C. Ry. Co. v. Drennan, 26 Ill. App. 263; or if the contract work is necessarily dangerous or harmful; Mayor, etc., of Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 South. 630; Circleville v. Neuding, 41 Ohio St. 465; Wilson v. City of Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Haniford v. Kansas City, 103 Mo. 172, 15 S. W. 753; 3 L. R. H. L. 330. Where a man orders work to be done, upon which injurious consequences must be expected to arise, he is bound to see to the doing of that which is necessary to prevent the mischief and cannot relieve himself by employing some one else; 1 Q. B. Div. 321.

Where the employé of an independent contractor was, under contract of a tenant, cleaning the windows of a building flush on the street, and having no safety appliances, though the work was inherently dangerous, and he fell to the street and injured a passer-by, it was held that he must be regarded as the servant of the tenant and that the tenant was liable, regardless of the employment by an independent contractor; Doll & Sons v. Ribetti, 203 Fed. 593, 121 C. C. A. 621, following 1 Q. B. D. 321, supra. In such case the occupier of the building cannot discharge himself by employing an independent contractor; Poll. Torts 477. When a person is engaged in work, in the ordinary doing of which a nuisance occurs, he is liable for any injury to third persons for negligence, though the work may be done by a contractor; Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 566, 21 L. Ed. 485.

A general contractor, having control for the purpose of erecting buildings for the owner of a property, cannot relieve himself from liability for a dangerous situation, though created by the independent contractor; Wilson v. Hibbert, 194 Fed. 838, 114 C. C. A. 542.

The independent contractor rule was applied in Deyo v. R. Co., 94 App. Div. 578, 88 N. Y. Supp. 487, where defendant owning a park engaged a company to exhibit fireworks. Defendant was held not liable to a spectator who was injured by a rocket negligently discharged by a workman under control of the contractor company. One who invites others to come upon his premises must use due care to render them safe, and cannot avoid this duty under cover of an independent contractor; Curtis v. Kiley, 153 Mass. 123, 26 N. E. 421. Where the work is of a dangerous nature, one is bound not only to due care in selecting a contractor, but also to see that due precautions are taken. The liability of the owner is based upon failure to keep his premises reasonably safe, and not to the negligence of the contractor; Thompson v. R. Co., 170 Mass. 577, 49 N. E. 913, 40 L. R. A. 345, 64 Am. St. Rep. 323. Compare Sebeck v. Plattdeutsche Volkfest Verein, 64 N. J. L. 624, 46 Atl. 631, 50 L. R. A. 199, 81 Am. St. Rep. 512.

When work is per se dangerous and the employer does not stipulate that the contractor shall use proper precautions to avoid injury to others, the employer is liable; Matheny v. Wolffs, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 137; Sulzbacher v. Dickie, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 469; or when the work contracted for becomes or occasions a public nuisance, unless it be due solely to the negligence of the contractor; Wood v. School Dist., 44 Ia. 27; Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Farver, 111 Ind. 195, 12 N. E. 296, 60 Am. Rep. 696; Kepperly v. Ramsden, 83 Ill. 354; Edmundson v. R. Co., 111 Pa. 316, 2 Atl. 404; Conners v. Hennessey, 112 Mass. 96; or when the contractor is incompetent; Cuff v. R. Co., 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205; and that the employer was ignorant of such incompetency will not excuse him; id.; but see Brannock v. Elmore, 114 Mo. 55, 21 S. W. 451. But it was held that when the defendants employed a carpenter and bridge builder of experience to build a bridge, it was not enough for the plaintiff to show that the work was unskilfully done; it must appear that the defendants were guilty of negligence in selecting him; that they either knew, or with proper diligence ought to have known, his incompetency; Mansfield Coal & Coke Co. v. Mc Enery, 91 Pa. 185, 191, 36 Am. Rep. 662.
